Free grant of a plot of Government ground for building a new church in place of the Trinity Church situate at Sonápur, Bombay: Strong disapproval of the — and a request to Sir James Fergusson to abstain from so doing 15
Honorary Assistant Coroner for the city of Bombay: Suggestion for the creation of the post of— 17
Natives of India and the inhabitants of Ireland: Comparison between the conduct of the — towards their English rulers 7
Police: Complaint regarding the arbitrary conduct of the Bombay — at the Márwádi Bazár 18
State grants to charitable dispensaries and hospitals: Disapproval of the amended rules for giving— 14
Vernacular Press: Misrepresentation of the opinions of the — by Anglo-Indian newspapers 3
Want of patriotism and nationality among the natives of India: Description of how the — has resulted in the loss of their liberty... ... 7
War in Egypt: Expression of a hope that the cost of the expeditionary force about to be despatched to Egypt from India will not be thrown on India... 9

PART II.—Education—

Technical Education Commission for India: Suggestion for the appointment of a— 18

PART III.—Railways—

Construction of Railways in India: Disapproval of the proposal for the utilization of the local funds for the— 18

Page.

PART IV.—Municipalities—

Bombay: Want of commodious and airy dwellings for the labouring poor of— 18

Surat: Approval of the resolution of the Bombay Government on the subject of the electric lights at Surat and Broach, and advice to Government to decide the question of putting a stop to the electric lights at— 19

PART V.—Native States—

Gondal: Complaint that Major Nutt has advanced his favourites in the service of the — State without due cause 19

PART VI.—Berár Affairs—

Destruction of venomous serpents and other animals: Expression of opinion that the municipalities and the district officers in Berár should take special steps for the— 20

Municipal franchise: Concession of the right of — to the municipalities of Akola and Umráwati 21

C. R.
26549
INDIA OFFICE
14 JUL 1884

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 21st June 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
16	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	MARA'THI
17	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
18	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
19	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
20	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
21	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*24	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
25	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*26	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
27	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
28	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
29	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
30	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
31	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
32	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
33	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
34	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
35	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
36	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*37	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*38	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
39	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
40	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
41	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
42	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*43	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
44	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
45	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
46	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
47	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*48	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
49	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
50	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
51	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*52	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
53	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*54	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*55	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*56	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*57	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
58	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
59	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
60	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*65	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	Mara'thi—continued.
*69	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
70	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
71	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	Anglo-Gujara'ti.
79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
83	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	Gujara'ti.
84	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
85	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
86	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
87	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*88	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
89	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,090
90	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
91	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
92	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
93	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
94	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
95	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
96	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
97	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
98	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
99	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*100	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
101	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*102	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
103	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
104	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
105	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*106	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
*107	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
108	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
109	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
110	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
111	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
112	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
113	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
114	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
115	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*116	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
117	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
118	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*119	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
120	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*121	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
122	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
123	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
124	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
125	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
126	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	Ka'narese.
127	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*128	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
129	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	225
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	Sanskrit.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	Ūrdu.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
134	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	Persian.
135	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	English, Mara'thi and Urdu.
*136	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
	Sindi.
*137	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name,

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Complains that the pledges given by Government regarding the employment of Natives in high offices have remained unredeemed.

In an article headed "Words and Deeds," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 15th June says:—We have repeatedly observed in these columns that one of the bitterest grievances of the Natives of India against the ruling authorities in the country is the almost total disregard of the fulfilment of pledges and promises solemnly proclaimed in State documents. For full fifty years Indians have been publicly told that there is nothing to deter them from entering the State service and rising to high offices in the administration to which they may become entitled by their ability and integrity. The East India Charter of 1833 declared so in unmistakable terms; and yet what was the practical outcome of that declaration? Those solemn words were simply written in water. Between that year and 1858, barring the exertions of the good Lord Bentick, no honest desire was shown, much less an attempt ever made, to encourage the natural aspirations of the children of the soil. But the stern lessons taught by the mutiny once more aroused the conscience of the British nation; and once more the Crown and Parliament renewed, and that most emphatically, the pledges made in the Charter of 1833. And though another quarter of a century has since elapsed, the efforts made by their responsible servants in India cannot be said to have been of a very satisfactory nature. No doubt owing to the better appreciation of the policy of governing India, Parliament has from time to time wisely interposed its authority in getting the pledges fulfilled to some extent. Again the eloquent appeals of Mr. Bright and the persevering efforts of Mr. Fawcett, supported by the individual influence of a sympathising Viceroy now and then, have been instrumental in according justice, however scant, to the Natives. But much yet remains to be done. The ratio which unfulfilled pledges bear to accomplished facts is indeed great. They have at the best allowed ninety per cent. of their promises to exist on paper as of yore. The most disheartening fact is that the omnipotent bureaucracy, which is really the master, has no sincere wish to advance the interests of Indians even by an inch, if it can help it. Whatever concessions Indians have been able to wring out have been the result more of moral compulsion brought to bear on the selfish party in power than any generous sympathy or statesmanship. It is not difficult to seek the cause of this absolute disregard for the orders of the Crown and Parliament. It has undoubtedly its origin in the want of what Mill sagaciously calls "the complete and ever operative identity of interest with the governed." The Government of the East India Company was a Government of monopolists, an entirely selfish class of traders bent on appropriating to themselves, by means fair or foul, the products of the soil. The bureaucracy which has succeeded them has in no way departed from the traditions of its predecessors. If at all, it has by cunning devices—legislative, executive, and administrative—so forged the chains of Government as to leave hardly any opening for the children of the soil to enter its sacred precincts. The only check on the rapacity and unrighteousness of this class of State servants is the control that may be exercised when India has the good fortune to have for a time at the head of her government a benevolent despot. It is by means of good rulers, free from class prejudices and untainted by the poisonous atmosphere in which the bureaucrats live, move and have their being, that the British nation can do their duty towards the two hundred millions of subject races, almost voiceless as a whole. But even the best of Governors-General, hedged in as he is by an oligarchy of confidential advisers who have the arrogance to assume that their opinions must be received by the Indian public with the unqualified deference which good Catholics pay to the decision of the Pope, can do but little if he does not possess force of character and marked individuality essential to make his influence felt for good. So that after all much depends on the agents of the Government employed in various capacities in different parts of the empire. And inasmuch as these agents are confident enough that their acts, however arbitrary or high-handed and however unjust, will be upheld or condoned by the same influential and confidential advisers—men of their own class and fully sharing their own interests and prejudices—it goes without saying that the chief despot, however good and sympathetic, however anxious to carry out the policy of the Crown and Parliament in its true spirit, is after all scarcely able to avert the mischief or minimise the evil. It is to these confidential advisers, these men of infallibility, both here and at Westminster, that Indians owe the present reduction in the limit of age for candidates for the Civil Service. These are the class of officials who have from time to time persistently baulked the gracious efforts of the British Parliament to allow Natives to have a greater share in the superior administrative work. At every stage in the material and political advancement of the Indians these men have offered the greatest obstacles, as any number of State despatches and Parliamentary papers will testify. But the bureaucracy all over the country is not content with reserving to its own members the most lucrative and highly paid offices. It never loses an opportunity to encroach on the field which the State has specially reserved for Natives only. Class interests are so powerful that no head of Government is strong enough to repair injustice. The abuse of patronage is as rampant now as it was in the days of the East India Company. Nepotism and jobbery are to be daily discovered in every provincial administration, and the worst of it is that the appointments of the nature we have just referred to—the small official crumbs that are reserved by rules, regulations, charters and proclamations for Indians alone—are now and then conferred on foreigners without the least scruple. The British nation are fond of talking about doing justice to the Natives. But they little know how a handful of their countrymen in power here have lowered by their selfishness their reputation as men of honour. It is no use reminding them that in India the servants of the Crown, a most potential and yet wholly irresponsible and alien class, have converted royal promises into pie crusts and made British faith a bye word of reproach, nearly synonymous with Punic faith. Says Mr. Mill :—" It cannot be too often repeated that in a country like India everything depends on the personal qualities and capacities of the agents of Government. This truth is the cardinal principle of Indian administration." Has that principle been faithfully observed? We say, and say it emphatically, that it has been cast to the winds. Whatever the personal qualities and capacities of the agents, their interests are in great many cases diametrically opposed to those of the Indians. Of what use are their abilities and attainments when in every act we find that the sense of moral wrong is benumbed, if not quite deadened? Why is this so? We give the cause of this moral obliquity of the officials in the words of England's greatest orator—words almost prophetic, for they are as true today as they were when uttered by him in Parliament just a century ago. " As English youths in India drink the intoxicating draught of authority and dominion before their heads are able to bear it, and as they are full grown in fortune long before they are ripe in principle, neither nature nor reason have opportunity to exert themselves for remedy of the excesses of their premature power." So said Burke. These are the personal qualities and capacities of the majority of our numerous Government agents. But Mill further observed as follows regarding the danger of appointments made from motives of convenience or self-interest. " The day when it comes to be thought that the appointment of persons to situations of trust from motives of convenience can be practised with impunity in India, will be the beginning of the decline and fall of our empire there. Even with a sincere intention of preferring the best candidate, it will not do to rely on chance for supplying fit persons." Now it may be said that Mill had here in mind the higher appointments of foreigners. But how much force does his observation derive when we consider: (1) the jobbery practised by the aliens in high situation themselves, and (2) the utter disregard of the principle to reserve subordinate appointments for Natives only. The nomination of Europeans, and that from motives of self-interest, chance or convenience, to places reserved for Natives is now-a-days practised with impunity. Cases now and then crop up here there and everywhere which lead to much ill-feeling between classes. And more than anything else these instances serve to throw doubt on the honesty of our rulers. Faithlessness is the offence of which they are accused wherever infringements of the rights of Natives prescribed by rules and resolutions are brought to the surface. Now if such infringement were exceptional it might be put down as an occasional vagary. But such is not the case. The infringements are frequent, as frequent as the cowardly assaults of a certain class of Europeans on helpless Natives, male and female. Here the Spectator alludes to the memorial of Mr. Rangaya Naidu Gáru to the Secretary of State against the appointment of two European gentlemen to two places of Assistant Directors of Revenue Settlement in the Madras Presidency and proceeds:—It is to be hoped the matter will receive serious consideration at the hands of the present Secretary of State. If that experienced Whig nobleman makes an effort to rise above the prejudices of the interested confidential advisers who surround him at the India Council Board, and if he has the manliness and conscience ascribed to the average Englishman, he ought to lose no time in insisting upon the cancellation of the objectionable appointments and their being conferred on those who have the best right. Indians in that case will have at least the comfort to know that though their rights for the time being may be trampled upon by interested Europeans here, there is a final Court of appeal where the injustice will be substantially repaired and all infringements of rights promptly and vigorously punished. Nay more, such a righteous act will go a great way to restore the daily diminishing confidence of the people in the honesty of the rulers to abide faithfully by their promises. We also trust that the leading citizens in every important city of the empire will follow Mr. Gáru's laudable example and bring similar cases of injustice, whenever they happen, to the notice of the Secretary of State. In the long run such exposure cannot but have the most salutary effect on the class of irresponsible servants who virtually rule this country.

Comments on the administration of India by the British.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 15th June in an article headed "India won by conquest or fraud," refers to the article in the Nineteenth Century contributed by Mr. Seymour Keay on the Spoliation of India, and remarks:—If the British deprived others of their possessions by fraud and violence, did their predecessors acquire their respective kingdoms by measures more creditable than those denounced by Mr. Seymour Keay? The answer to this question will surely not leave much ground for doubt or discussion. Very many of the Native potentates in India will be found to be as great intruders as the British. Besides the career of the former has been marked with greater unscrupulousness than the latter have been guilty of. Mr. Keay deliberately cites instances of corruption, bribery, treachery, &c., employed by British agents in India in acquiring many parts of this country. It is possible that some of them were personally depraved, though, on the whole, they must have been better persons than the agents of the Native princes who one by one fell before the British like a pack of cards. Fair as well as unfair means were certainly employed by the first British interlopers whose forte was the exercise of arbitrary power. The consolidation of a foreign power could not have been possible without the use of both cunning and force. But the effects of their acts have been salutary. Universal peace has been established and every one is safe in his home, and what is more, with his reputation and property rendered inviolate. Measures of national welfare have been carried out, while the aspect of the country has been transformed into one of repose and contentment. Such are the large results of the daring exploits or the vigorous rule of the past British officials.

Says that the Natives of India should be appointed members of the India Council and advises the people to agitate in the matter.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 16th June, in alluding to the nomination of Mr. Bullen Smith as a member of the India Council, points out the advantages of appointing Natives of India as members of that Council, and observes that the experiment of appointing Natives to the Indian Legislative Councils has proved so very successful that it would not be unreasonable to forward their claims to appointments in the India Council. The representation of India in the India Council will be much more advantageous than her representation in Parliament, which by the bye is a very distant prospect. Though the Parliament exercises some control over the Secretary of State for India, its constitution cannot allow of interference in matters pertaining to India. But as the India Council is the real Parliament of India, representatives from this country can exercise some sort of control over the prejudices of the Anglo-Indian officials and the one-sided views of the independent members composing the Council. When Native trade and prosperity are increasing and when education has already spread very widely, it behoves the Home Government that it should no longer withhold this privilege from the people of India. Mr. Slagg's motion for the abolition of the India Council has been negatived; but if the Council desires to establish its usefulness it should admit Native element and thus show that it is useful in so far as it gives an opportunity to the Natives to vent their grievances through their representatives. For the present only one Native may be appointed for the whole of India; and if this experiment proves successful, the privilege should be gradually extended to every Presidency in India. The Jáme then advises the different political associations in India to agitate in the matter.

Inadvisability of maintaining the duty on Indian silver-ware and tobacco imported into England.

In an article headed "India's political connection with England," the Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 15th June says:—Among the principal reasons that justify the present foreign domination over India and the excessively costly administration of its affairs by foreigners, are two, viz., the security of life and property which this country is enabled to enjoy under such domination, and the progress in material prosperity vouchsafed to its people in spite of the costly administration. And it is the progress of the material prosperity of the country that is above all others emphatically put forth by the advocates of the existence of the British rule in this country as its best justification. They point to the rapid strides made everywhere to foster this progress as the surest ground-work of the general and permanent well-being of the people. Nor can it be denied that the stand thus taken by the advocates of the British rule in India proves eminently effective for the intended purpose. This manner of advocacy happily falls in exactly with the sentiment and feeling as well as the deliberate judgment of the more intelligent classes of the people who are given to reflect on the advantages and disadvantages of the British rule in India. It has been shown over and over again by competent authorities that the connection now subsisting between the two countries serves to immensely benefit both, and that it can last only so long as the reciprocity of their interests will endure. It will be generally conceded that nothing tends to do greater discredit to the present Liberal Ministry than its treatment of India in the matter of the customs-tariffs. That treatment has been extremely arbitrary, inconsistent, and unjust. The high-handed repeal of the unobjectionable Indian import duties and the obstinate maintenance of the highly objectionable English import duties on Indian industrial products must ever form a blot on the present British administration. As regards the true and practical free trade principles the members of the said administration have appeared as mere interested, and time-serving mountebanks. We are sorry to have to speak thus of an administration that has doubtless great claims on the gratitude of England as well as of India in respect of other matters. But while on the particular subject of the commercial regulations and customs' tariffs of England and India, influenced, adopted, or carried out by the present Ministry, we are painfully reminded that India has much to complain. The full force of the complaint has been admitted by independent English politicians and journalists in respect of the repeal of the Indian import duties, the maintenance of the English import duties on Indian gold and silver ware, and the duties on other Indian industrial products as, for instance, Indian tobacco. The Chronicle then refers to the recent discussion in the House of Commons on the subject of the English import duty on Indian tobacco and proceeds:—The Liberal members and Liberal ministers will go on doing injustice to India to their hearts' content as long as they find this country tamely or silently suffering the effects of their high-handed and arbitrary proceedings. The only way to make them retreat from their unjust course would be constant and powerful remonstrance against the same and persevering appeal for relief to the British nation at large. [The Poona Vaibhav (53) of the 15th June states that Indian trade in tobacco is suffering on account of the heavy duty imposed on that commodity, and points out the propriety of giving encouragement to that trade with a view to enable India to compete successfully with America.]

Says that strong measures should be adopted against the advance of Russia towards India.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 21st June says:—Though the Russians have taken Merv and conquered Sarakhs and the territory belonging to the Sarik Turcomans, only the appointment of a Commission for the demarcation of North Afghánistan is talked of. Though they are making rapid approaches towards India, the Home Government have not adopted strong measures against them. This has caused surprise amongst the English as well as the Asiatic people. Where is the guarantee that the Russians will be prevented from advancing in Central Asia after the demarcation of the frontier lines? On what covenant can we rely as affording the guarantee that the English Government will not continue their policy of neutrality when the Russians step over the frontier lines? The English have not openly taken Afghánistan into their protection and therefore their anxiety for the settlement of frontier lines does not appear to be very genuine. Looking to the rapid strides the Russians have made towards India within the last two or three years, it is necessary that speedy and stringent measures should be adopted against their further advance, which is likely to prove dangerous to the British sway over this country. The most effective remedy will be to warn the Russians that a further advance will lead to hostilities. Arrangements should also now be made with the Amir of Afghánistan to prevent any possible obstruction from him in the event of a crisis approaching. The friendship of the Amir towards the English has been doubted by the English public, and it is no use being at ease in the matter. His friendship ought to be tested. A writer in one of the periodicals published in England suggests that the Amir should be invited to a Darbár to be held in the Panjab; that if he attends the Darbár the relations of the English with him should be strengthened, otherwise he should be left alone and arrangements should be made for the occupation of some important positions beyond Quetta. This suggestion involves some risk. Even if the Amir comes to the Darbár, what guarantee is there that he will ever remain faithful? Some other measures should be adopted to try his friendship. Endeavours should be made to locate English officers at Herat, Maimane and other important places on the Russian frontiers and also at places with which the Amir may be in communication. If the Amir objects to this, it will be unwise to place trust in him. [The Yajdán Parast (126) of the 15th June says that the Russians have come very near Herat by taking the Sarik Turcomans under their rule. It is foolish to suppose that they will resist the temptation of subduing Herat. If they see the English further involved in their affairs in the Soudan, they will not delay their attack upon Herat. Perhaps they are making arrangements for that purpose even from this time. The Russians have striven very hard to realize their object of punishing England for the events of the Crimean war and they have nearly succeeded. This state of things foreshadows great anxiety and trouble to the British in the future. As long as the British do not boldly and firmly confront the Russians, the latter will not desist from taking full advantage of their embarassments and their vacillating policy. The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the same date also points out the necessity of taking prompt measures against Russia.]

Suggests that a Pársi gentleman should be appointed a member of the Anglo-Russian Commission to demarcate the northern frontier of Afghánistan.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 15th June expresses satisfaction at the appointment of an Anglo-Russian Commission for the demarcation of the northern frontier of Afghánistan, and says:—The Indian part of the Commission will hardly be complete unless a large-minded administrator like the present Public Works Minister is appointed President of the Indian deputation. The escort will no doubt be composed of able Natives possessed of local knowledge and endowed with integrity. One of these at least should be a genuine Persian claiming the confidence of Government.

Comments on Lord Lytton's despatch regarding the Civil Service.

In an article headed "A few more words about the despatch of Lord Lytton regarding the Civil Service," the Mahrátta (2) of the 15th June says:—In the concluding portion of the despatch the conservative Viceroy proposes that the ordinary Civil Service should not be open to the Natives after the Native branch has once been established. There is nothing strange in the proposal. It is the doctrine of the gospel of conservatism, and as a member of that race of political thinkers who belong to the Beaconsfield school he was bound to preach it. This so-called principle has been enunciated and put forth for the thousandth time and will be put forth as many times hereafter. It is here that we have always been at war with our conservative Governors. With the Liberals also we have sometimes to wage war but upon a different ground; and the Radicals too we may say are not at one with us on all points. Thus in India we have always to be in the opposition whether the responsible officers of State are Radicals, Liberals or Conservatives. With the Conservatives we have to fight on the ground that there can be no ultimate point beyond which the Indian Native cannot go. In our contest with the Liberals we have to show that having reached a particular point circumstances demand that we should be allowed to go further; and to the Radicals we have to say that our political condition being wholly different from that of Englishmen, we cannot afford to march so fast as they wish, though at the same time we cannot lose sight of the summum bonum which they hold forth as our goal. Now that we have a liberal Government over us, we cannot prudently preach the radical doctrine. The doors of the covenanted service were thrown open with the object of affording Natives the opportunity of entering the Civil Service; changes were introduced in the rules for affording greater facilities; and it is the avowed object of Government that as large a number of Natives as possible should enter the service. The facts of the case prove that none of these objects have been carried out although the capacity of Natives for such work has been proved; that the financial strain on the State has not been less, the number of Europeans in the service not having been reduced; and that the wants and aspirations of Natives have not been satisfied. We therefore ask our liberal Governors to introduce a change in the Civil Service rules such as will secure to us what we claim with justice under the altered circumstances of the Native society. The changes that we wish ought to be introduced as embodying the next immediate step in advance, are well embodied in the recommendations of Lord Lytton and we therefore approve of that part of the despatch. As to the recommendations which Lord Lytton makes about the final settlement of the question we have to say that no other recommendation can be more mischievous, more fatal, and more suicidal to the interests of England and India, and it being so, the author deserves the greatest censure which the English and Indian nations can bestow.

Advises the people of India to send fresh memorials to the Home Government asking for the extension of Lord Ripon's term of office.

The Rást Goftár (113) of the 15th June says:—Only eleven months remain of Lord Ripon's term of office, but it is quite necessary that he should continue in his high post in order that he may successfully carry out the noble policy he has inaugurated. His retirement after the expiry of his period of office will be greatly injurious to this country. Unless a loud public cry is raised from India his term of office will not be extended. It is true that the whole of India did make this demand a year and a half ago, but all the memorials then sent have by this time been forgotten. The people of India should not hesitate to revive the demand which was untimely when first made. The present is the proper time for renewing it. The Home Government are now in search of a successor and this very fact shows that the memorials of the people of India have been forgotten. The Home Government have no evidence to show them that the regard of the people for Lord Ripon has not now abated. Lord Ripon's opponents urge that he is not liked by the Native public owing to the weakness he manifested in the matter of the Ilbert Bill. This insinuation is false. The people of India should assure the Home Government that they are willing to give up one hundred Ilbert Bills for the sake of having a just and philanthropic Viceroy like Lord Ripon.

Comments on the periodical visits to Sanitaria paid by the Supreme and Local Governments.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 15th June says:—As to the Viceregal exodus we must condemn it in toto. For twenty years past this annual migration to Simla has been the subject of denunciation in the press. But it seems no impression has yet been made. We think that on principle it is wrong that the head of the Imperial Government should confine himself for nine months of the year on snow-clad hills shut up from the rest of the empire, thus cutting himself off personally from the politics of the plains below. We believe the Viceregal functions are best fulfilled in the interests of the people at large when the Viceroy's camp is moved from year to year to the capital of some province or other. In fact the Government of India should be more of a peripatetic body, visible at stated periods in each part of the vast empire. For instance it may encamp for one full season at Poona or Bombay, at another time at Madras, a third year in Oudh and North-West Provinces and so on. It may freely hold its Councils wherever it may be located for the time. It may invite Native and European leaders to submit their grievances or to state their suggestions for the better government of the Presidency to which they belong. Again the Viceroy and some of his Councillors may even visit important districts of the particular Presidency where they may have established themselves. If at Bombay, a visit may be paid to Gujarát, to Sind, to the Deccan and so on, arranging the programme in a way to be able to move from one place to another with the greatest facility and the least cost. There need be no tamásha or tomfoolery. A Governor-General is enshrined in the memory of a grateful people more by acts of justice and grace, leading to their political and material advancement, than by passing through the city in the compass of a few short hours, holding a levée, giving a dinner and ball and indulging in other State inanities. Very often the people may have solid grounds of complaint against the Governor or some minor district potentate. The Viceroy may hear their grievance patiently or receive a memorial on the subject couched in constitutional language. Care must be had too that the memorial or interview is allowed to be submitted or held without official interference. At present the Viceroy is generally kept at arm's length, more like a State prisoner than the most exalted personage in the realm. For instance look at the way in which the Madras autocrat tried might and main the other day to keep the Viceroy as far as possible from the leading representatives of the people. This is a baneful practice. It is the way of the bureaucrat, but a curse and a plague to the people. And we are anxious, in the name of freedom and good government, that such practice should be proscribed. A Viceroy during his five years' tenure of office can thus quietly see the whole of India and do immense good, if he is desirous of seeing the subject races well and happy. Greater confidence and respect may thus be inspired, while the flame of loyalty may be kept burning more brightly than ever. Viceregal progresses of this character are much needed, and it will be a sign of good when some far-seeing and statesmanlike Viceroy inaugurates the reform. Lord Ripon himself would be the proper person if he only deigned to extend his Viceroyalty for at least three, if not five, years more, as India to a man has so long clamoured for. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the 18th June says that Bombay should join Madras and Calcutta in protesting against the annual visits of the Viceroys and the Provincial Governors to the hills. The Native Opinion (11) of the 15th June says that the question deserves to be placed before the Parliament. The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 20th June regrets that some Natives of Bengal should have joined with the Defence Association in protesting against the annual visits of Viceroys to the hills and advises the general public to abstain from so doing. The Bengalis should remember that no able statesman would come out as Viceroy of India to spend five years in exile and remain in Calcutta in the severe heat of the sun. As only one year remains of Lord Ripon's term of office, the Bengalis should wait for that period before moving in the matter. They should of course protest against the migration to the hills of their Lieutenant-Governor.]

Complains of the stringency of forest laws.

The Shiváji (65) of the 13th June complains that the present forest laws are unreasonably severe. There is a prohibition against the felling of certain kinds of trees in Government land without the permission of Government. There is a similar prohibition in the case of the same kinds of trees growing in lands owned by private persons. Inámdárs and others have a right to fell trees in their lands if they have a proprietary right in the trees, but still they are required to secure a permit from Government before doing so. In the same manner if an occupant plants some trees in his soil he is allowed to cut them, but he must give information to the authorities of his intention to plant before doing so. These restrictions are very unreasonable, and the last of them appears to rest more on authority than on justice. An occupant has a right to grow in his soil a crop that is most profitable to him. What is the meaning of the restriction that the people should not grow particular kinds of trees in their soil simply because Government have grown them in their forests? Government do not profess to monopolize the trade in firewood and timber; why then should there be any necessity for securing permits from Government? It is only proper that Government should put a stop to this state of things, but if they do not, those that suffer ought to lodge a complaint against the injustice done to them. In conclusion the Shiváji exhorts the leaders of the people and the representative associations like the Sárvajanik Sabha to agitate in the matter in order to secure redress.

Supports the proposals made by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce for the prevention of frauds in Indian cotton.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 19th June alludes to the feeling recently prevailing among the cotton merchants of Bombay for the revival of the Cotton Frauds Act and to the proposals brought forward by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce for the prevention of frauds in Indian cotton, and remarks:—It is to be hoped that the Secretary of State for India, to whom the proposals were to be submitted by the Chamber, will in the interests of India carefully consider them. No honest merchant will object to the carrying out with a few alterations of the proposals made by the Liverpool Chamber, instead of reviving the defunct Act and thereby obstructing an important rising trade. Complaints are also rife regarding frauds in Indian wheat imported into England. It is disappointing to the friends of India that her goods should thus lose their stability in the English market owing to the dishonesty of a few merchants. But why does not the Indian commercial community remove these immoral and dishonest traders from its circle?

Comments on the Sind Village Officers' Act.

In an article headed "The Sind Village Officers' Act," the Sind Times (5) of the 10th June summarizes the conclusions arrived at by the Conference assembled in 1883 on the subject of the introduction of the Village Officers' Act into Sind, and remarks:—The Act was not framed for giving titles to zemindárs, or for creating a body of trackers—for these last are to be found in abundance everywhere in Sind, as is testified to by every traveller and by every one acquainted with the internal economy of village life in Sind. The legitimate conclusion to be drawn from the report of the Conference is that the village cess is a mistake. They talk of diverting the cess to increasing the pay and number of the Tapádárs. As at present advised all we can say is that this would be distinctly illegal. The statement of objects and reasons attached to the Village Officers' Bill is torn to pieces by the report of the Conference; and we earnestly ask the Government even at this eleventh hour to retrace their steps, and to efface the obnoxious Act and the tax it imposes from their Statute book.

Requests Sir James Fergusson to appoint a Native barrister to the Bench of the High Court during the absence of the Honourable Mr. Bayley on leave.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 21st June approves of the suggestion made by the Times of India for the appointment of Mr. Serjeant Atkinson as Acting Judge in the place of the Honourable Mr. Bayley who is proceeding on leave to England, and says:—But why should not Sir James Fergusson nominate an able Native barrister to the post in compliance with the frequently expressed wish of the Natives? Hitherto whenever acting Judgeships have fallen vacant, European barristers have been given the places, but why should not a competent Native barrister be tried this time? Sir James has removed a long-standing "scandal" by the permanent elevation of Mr. Nánábhai Haridás to the High Court Bench; and by appointing a Native barrister as Acting Judge he should now show that he is not swayed by caste prejudices in bestowing high offices. The Jáme then recommends Mr. Badrudin Táyabji and Phirozsháh Merwánji Mehta for the post.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 15th June publishes a letter from a correspondent writing from Surat under the Nom de plume of "A Lover of Justice" who states that the people of that city have been sorry on account of the transfer of Mr. Adarji Jivanji, First Class Magistrate, to the Panch Mahâls, and tries to show that the charges laid against him in the matter of the frauds in the Surat distillery were not well founded, and remarks:—This appeal came quite in time to be inserted last week. But we wanted to inquire if "a lover of justice" expressed the sentiments of the Surat public. This we find to be so. There is a very strong impression both in official as well as non-official circles that Mr. Adarji has been cruelly dealt with. If the authorities can justify their action, they will do well to do so soon. Mr. Adarji seems to have enjoyed universal popularity in Gujarát, though it is possible he may have fallen a victim to official vagary before now.

Disapproves of the transfer of Mr. Adarji Jivanji from Surat to the Panch Mahâls.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 15th June says:—Last Thursday's Government Gazette announces that Mr. T. D. Mackenzie, Collector of Thána, has delivered over charge of the office of the Collector and District Magistrate of Thána to Mr. W. A. East; but the place of Mr. Mackenzie's paka destination is not yet known. However, the reasons of this sudden transfer have got wind, and it is now openly said, though we cannot yet vouch for the truth of the statement, that Mr. Mackenzie has been relieved of his duties for his pertinaciously placing before Government the hardships of the people of Thána with respect to the working of the forest laws in that district. We hope the assertion is contradicted, but if it turns out to be true, then any one may say that the Government of Sir James Fergusson is more of a zealous custodian of Her Majesty's treasury than that of the well-wisher and seeker of the prosperity of Her Majesty's subjects. The genius of a custodian may fatten the treasury, but Government must not forget that this process of fattening may one of these days kill the bird that produces gold eggs.

Comments on the transfer of Mr. T. D. Mackenzie from Thána.

The Bakul (19) of the 15th June says that the present multifarious nature of the duties of the revenue officers of Government have a baneful effect on their efficiency. A revenue officer, however clever, painstaking, upright and just, generally finds it difficult to cope with his work, and this circumstance seriously interferes with a conscientious discharge of the magisterial portion of his duties. Though it cannot be said that taken as a whole the duties of revenue officers are heavy, still their variegated and intricate nature serves to distract their minds. The result of this state of things is that the work is done perfunctorily, that the labour and vaxation entailed thereby prompts the officers to treat their subordinates and others in a high-handed fashion, and thus with all their desire to do good to others they are obliged to silently hear the charges of oppression and severity pronounced against them. As a remedy for this state of things the Bakul suggests that the magisterial and other functions of revenue officers should be separated and the officers held responsible for the portion of work specially entrusted to them.

Advocates the separation of the magisterial from the other functions of revenue officers.

A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (113) of the 15th June, signing himself "A wholesale liquor seller" and writing from Poona, complains of the enhancement in the fees charged for issuing licenses to liquor sellers and of the stringency of the conditions inserted in the licenses. The third clause of the conditions inserted in the licenses enjoins that the person in whose name the license is issued should always be present in his shop, and that if it is necessary that he should remain absent he should take the permission of the Collector before so doing, for which a fee of Rs. 5 is charged. This condition is very stringent and the practical effect of it is that the person in whose name the license is issued puts himself under the yoke of slavery and pays Rs. 100 in addition. Clause 8 directs that the keeper should keep a detailed account in the book furnished to him by the Collector of the quantity and proof of the liquor brought and sold by him, and this book should be open to inspection at any time by the Collector and the A'bkári Inspector or any other officer appointed for that purpose. Clause 9 enjoins that every shopkeeper should furnish himself with a hydrometer with glass and book, which should be shown to any customer who may like to see it and to all revenue and police officers of the division of a higher grade than a Havåldár whenever they may wish to inspect it. Now this clause places eccentric customers in a position to harass shopkeepers by having bottles of different kinds of liquors opened, while it helps the police officers, such as Jamádárs, Dafedárs and Constables, whose integrity is generally not quite unimpeachable and who are always in search of prey, to secure their private objects by enabling them to bring the shopkeepers into scrapes? Clause 10 enjoins that the shopkeeper should always allow the Collector or the officer appointed by him, and the Police and the A'bkári Inspector, to inspect the whole of his shop, and thus places the shopkeeper at the mercy of those officers. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the 18th June refers to the conditions inserted in the licenses for the sale of liquor issued by the Collector of Bombay and styles them arbitrary and ruinous for the liquor trade. Great severity is used towards the liquor sellers and especially those who sell country liquor. The levy of a fee of Rs. 25 from hawkers of nirá (unfermented toddy) is also very hard. If it is intended to reduce intoxication, why should only country liquor be placed under these heavy restrictions and why should the poor be deprived of their pleasure? The complaints and lamentations of country liquor sellers are certainly unbearable.]

Complains of the stringency of the conditions inserted in the licenses issued to wholesale dealers in liquors.

Says that the brokers who do their business amongst the Mahomedan pilgrims proceeding from Bombay to Mecca should be required to furnish themselves with licenses.

The Káside Mumbai (108) of the 18th June says that the season for undertaking pilgrimages to Mecca has commenced, complains of the trouble and inconvenience caused to Mahomedan pilgrims by the intrigues of brokers, and suggests that the latter should be required to take licenses for carrying on their business in the same way as brokers who do their business in the custom house are required to furnish security for so doing. This arrangement will remove the cause of the complaints regarding the intrigues practised by pilgrim brokers and will save the police a good deal of trouble. It is to be hoped therefore that the Protector of Pilgrims will adopt such measures as will prevent pilgrims from being deceived by the brokers.

Suggests the adoption of precautionary measures for preventing accidents in docks.

In a paragraph headed "Accidents at the Prince's Dock," the Native Opinion (11) of the 15th June says:—It is very surprising that while no stone has been left unturned to bring the working of our cotton-mills under control, no effort should have hitherto been made to compel the shipping masters in docks to take all precautions for the safety of coolies employed there. Complaints have been rife as to the character of the gear and tackle which the shippers use in loading and unloading goods, and an inspection of this apparatus is as necessary as the inspection of mill-boilers. It is said that the matter is before Government, and we earnestly hope some effective measure will be adopted to enforce the security of the lives of hungry coolies, who even in the teeth of certain danger resort to the dock to gain a day's living. We believe the necessity for a legislative enactment in this matter is greater than for checking the use and consumption of mhowra flowers which are the staple food of the lower classes in the Deccan.

Says that minute enquiries should be made into the causes of accidents occurring in factories.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 16th June says that accidents to labourers employed in factories frequently occur but minute enquiries are not made into them. It is necessary that enquiries should first be made into their causes, whether they are preventible or not, and whether the victims suffer owing to their own neglect or otherwise. Owing to the large supply of labour and want of work, labourers are to be had in plenty, and no sooner one is dismissed than another quite ignorant of the work is brought in his place. It is likely that the new man being unacquainted with the machinery should break his hand or foot. These and similar other causes must be at the bottom of accidents, and if proper remedies are used against them, their number will at any rate be somewhat lessened.

The Suryá Prakásh (83) of the 14th June refers to the rumoured transfer of the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Surat to Bárdoli and of that at Olpád to Ránder, and says:—We are aware that the people of Mándvi have been complaining of the hardship they suffer owing to their being placed under the jurisdiction of the Olpád Court; and it is not unreasonable to suppose that Government may be contemplating the rumoured transfer in order to silence their cry. On considering the matter from all sides we are strongly of opinion that the removal of either of the courts from their present stations would be a great mistake. The Second Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Surat cannot be removed because its jurisdiction extends over the Chorási Táluka. Most of the people of the city have dealings with the people of this táluka, and if the Court were removed to Bárdoli or Mándvi the people of Surat as well as of the Chorási Táluka would be put to considerable inconvenience and hardship, which would greatly exceed the hardship at present caused to the Mándvi people; and the natural result would be that the new arrangement would be viewed with considerable dissatisfaction and Government would be put to trouble again. Besides, the Surat Assistant Judge's Court has been abolished by Government; so that the only Court to which cases can conveniently be transferred from the heavy file of the First Class Subordinate Judge is the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge here; and it was suggested by the newspapers here that some urgent cases should be transferred from the First Class Subordinate Judge's file to that of the Second Class Subordinate Judge. In the face of all these circumstances the transfer of the Second Class Subordinate Judge's Court cannot be made, and we request Mr. Fulton, our present energetic Judge, to consider well before he expresses any opinion in favour of the transfer. As for the Olpád Court, we think it would be better to keep it where it is. For some years the people of Olpád were deprived of a Court and were obliged to come over to Surat, and it was after strong representations that they got back their Court in 1875. Its removal to Ránder is not at all desirable, inasmuch as it will put Olpád people to great inconvenience. Ránder is now within half an hour's drive from Surat, and hence no Court is required at Ránder. The best course in the circumstances would be to direct the Subordinate Judge of Olpád, in whose jurisdiction the Táluka of Mándvi is, to hold his Court for a certain number of days in a month at Mándvi or in some other better place near it, and for a certain number of days at Olpád. The only thing the people of Mándvi require is, we think, that they may not be obliged to travel over to Olpád and this suggestion is calculated to meet their wishes. This course may be adopted as an experimental measure for some time, and if it suit the convenience of all the people concerned, it may permanently be followed as in the case of Dhandhuka and Gogha. We trust that Mr. Fulton and Government will see the justice of our observations and allow the Second Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Surat at any rate to remain here and adopt the modification indicated above in regard to the Olpád Court.

Does not approve of the rumoured transfer of the Second Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Surat to Bárdoli and of that at Olpád to Ránder.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 15th June complains of the great scarcity of water at present experienced by the people of Gogha and says that water-famine occurs every year in the town. If the current of the Bádi Padva stream be diverted into the precincts of Rájpur, it would meet the sea on the west of the town of Gogha. This measure would increase the fertility of the soil, bring prosperity to the villages, increase the Government revenue and remove the scarcity of water. The scheme would cost Government from twenty-five to thirty thousand rupees. Government will earn the blessings of their subjects by putting an end to the constant water-famine in Gogha.

Scarcity of water at Gogha.

In an article headed "The Sehwán Police—and our District Superintendent," the Sind Times (5) of the 10th June says:—It so happens that a Hindu wife violently snatched away from her husband a month ago while on her way with him from a village in the Sehwán Táluka to a village in the Hyderabad district, has not yet been found. On the 9th of May last a party of about forty men assaulted a few Baniás and their wives travelling between Bijar and Mira's village, wounded several, and violently laying hands on a woman Khimal, wife of one Udha, rode away with her. It was a moonlight night, and the Baniás recognised some of their assailants, whose ringleaders appeared to be some well-known Sayads. Now every Magistrate in Sind knows how difficult it is to get evidence against a criminal who happens to be a Sayad and as such is revered by the Mahomedan community. The Police Inspector of Sehwán, who has been for eleven years in that táluka, is a Mulla, and we can very well understand his reluctance to prove the case against the Sayads. Under such circumstances the presence of the District Superintendent on the spot was urgently necessary; and yet during the whole month during which time the Sayads and some of their accomplices have been, we hear, on bail, Colonel Simpson has not thought it fit to visit the locality, nor endeavoured personally to ferret out all the abductors and the abducted woman. He has been long enough in Sind to know that the greater the period this unfortunate woman is forced to remain with her Mahomedan captors, the less chance she has of being admitted to her caste, and he knows what excommunication means amongst the Hindus. We appeal to his good sense to say whether in a case like this his apathy and indifference are at all justifiable. The District Magistrate of Karáchi, on an application by the woman's relations, has now issued a warrant for the production of the woman, and we have no doubt that Colonel Simpson now fully realises the gravity of the case. But the public has a right to ask why he did not bestir himself actively in the matter during the past month, and to demand what services he renders for the permanent allowance of Rs. 200 he obtains every month in addition to his salary.

Complaint against the District Superintendent of Police of Karáchi.

Describes the cruel treatment of a European sailor by some officers of the Bombay Police along the Kálbádevi Road.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 21st June, signing himself "Sympathy," says:—On the evening of (date not given, it is possibly the 19th of June as the correspondent says "yesterday") two constables and four or five sepoys were carrying a European sailor along the Kálbádevi Road. He appeared to be drunk and was handcuffed. But the way in which he was dragged to the police chauki at Dhobi Taláv could not but excite pity. Both his legs were firmly held by two sepoys, one of his hands being held by another sepoy and the other by a European constable. His body was dangling in the air. When the sailor tried to lift himself up, the constable struck blows on his face. The result was that a stream of blood flowed from his nose and face; and the constable's dress, specially his trousers, were soiled with spots of blood. As the poor sailor struggled a good deal while passing the lane adjoining the chauki, the police officers let go their hold and he was dashed against the ground. In their endeavours to lift him up, his head was dashed against the ground. The chauki was reached at last and he was thrown near the entrance after having been roughly dragged along the steps. He was then thrust into a small room, where he was left crying bitterly. How painful it is that a human being should be subjected to such cruel treatment in a civilized city like Bombay?

Recommends a reduction in the commission charged on money orders for Rs. 5.

The Gujaráti (99) of the 15th June recommends the Post Master General to reduce the commission at present charged on money orders for Rs. 5 to one anna. The writer remarks that when postal notes were introduced the Postal authorities thought that the inconvenience in the matter of the commission charged on money orders for Rs. 5 would be removed by these notes. But now that postal notes have well nigh proved a failure, it is advisable that the commission charged for money orders for Rs. 5 should be reduced to one anna and the issue of postal notes stopped. The use of these notes is inconvenient while that of money orders is very easy. The object of the introduction of postal notes will be served by the reduction in commission suggested above and the income from money orders will increase. Several persons at present use postal stamps as a means of sending money and other tricks are also resorted to with the view of avoiding the somewhat heavy charge of commission, but the reduction of one anna in the commission will discourage these practices. It is to be hoped that the Postal authorities will effect this reduction of commission along with the changes that are to take place from August next in the money order system.

Delay in the payment of money orders in the Post Office at Ahmedabad.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 19th June says that when people go to the local post office to receive payment of money orders, the clerk employed in that department either keeps them waiting until money is received or calls them on the following day on the plea that he has no money left with him. This is very prejudicial to the spread of the money order system. The people ought to receive payment after the money orders have been duly examined and noted. It is to be hoped that the local post-master will speedily attend to this complaint. To defer the payment of sums ranging from a rupee or two to Rs. 150 to the next day and put the persons who call at the post office to the trouble of coming on the following day does not speak well for the credit of Government.

Complains of the inconvenience caused by the discontinuance of the contract with the B. I. S. N. Company for the carriage of letters, &c., to the coast of Ratnágiri.

A correspondent of the Jagan Mitră (35) of the 16th June complains that great inconvenience has been caused to the people of the Ratnágiri district by the recent discontinuance of the arrangements hitherto in force with the B. I. S. N. Company for the carriage of letters, &c., to the bandars on the coast. Ratnágiri is daily rising in importance on account of the commercial facilities vouchsafed by the commendable efforts of Mr. Arthur Crawford and the present is a decidedly retrograde step inasmuch as it will serve to dishearten the people generally. It is therefore proper that Government should extend a helping hand in order to remove the cause of complaint.

Points out the necessity of constructing a permanent road from Vengurla to Shiravde vià Ubha Dánda.

The Vengurla Vritt (73) of the 12th June says that it is very surprising that in spite of the considerable sums of money credited to the Local Funds on account of the villages of Ubha Dánda, Arauli and Shiravde, the road from Vengurla to Shiravde vià Ubha Dánda should have been neglected by the authorities. This road is an important communication and is much used by passengers and carts. It is likely that the people of these parts will contribute their share towards the construction of a permanent road, and it is to be hoped that the Mámlatdár will arrange to secure the necessary assistance from the Local Funds.

Railways.

Disapproves of the extension of railways in India.

The Yajdán Parast (126) of the 15th June disapproves of the extension of railways in India, and observes that the Natives do not attach as much importance to the extension of railways as a means of developing the trade of their country as some Europeans would like to represent. The Natives believe that in agitating for the extension of railways in India Europeans are swayed by a desire to increase the demand for railway stores that are imported from England. The latter thus give themselves the airs of disinterested workers for the good of India but virtually they have a keen eye to their private interests. Unfortunately for them however the Natives have seen through their motives and therefore they do not care to take any interest in the agitation for railway extension. The Natives understand that there is much room for other reforms in India. What India wants at the present time is the development of her arts and industries. She depends for the satisfaction of all her wants on the countries of Europe and her arts and industries have been almost ruined by supplies of articles from foreign countries. The greater portion of the people of this country depends on agriculture and this very fact speak for her miserable condition. In these circumstances all the money expended on the development of indigenous manufactures would be well-spent while any expenditure on railways would be a mere waste of public money. (The same paper expresses disapproval of the suggestion made in the Times of India that local funds should be utilized towards the construction of branch lines of railways in India, and says that the people in the mofussil would not be able to improve their present condition if the local funds were used for other than their legitimate purposes).

Comments on the proposed amalgamation of the B.B. & C. I. and Rájputána-Málwa Railway lines.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 16th June, in a paragraph headed "The amalgamation of the B. B. & C. I. and Rájputana-Málwa lines", says:—The amalgamation of the working staff of these two lines has long been in the air. As conducive to economic working of the two railways we welcome the amalgamation. But one term in the contract for the amalgamation which Government impose upon the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company is calculated to have the effect of throwing many servants of the Company out of employment. Government insist that the Company should accept as agent for the two lines a nominee of theirs, General Bisset, the present Manager of the Rájputána line. It is feared that the gallant general with his sympathies for Northern India will make a clean sweep of the offices of the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company. Some of our contemporaries have already put in a good word for Mr. Duxbury and some of his European subordinates. We fully share in the appreciation of Mr. Duxbury's services to the Company which the Bombay Gazette and the Indian Spectator (1) have expressed. But let us remind the authorities that there are many Native subordinates in the Company's service who have done honest and useful work for the Company for the greater portion of their lives. If the amalgamation should come off, we trust the claims of old servants, European and Native, will be well considered. [The Suryá Prakásh (83) of the 14th and the Gujaráti (99), the Rást Goftár (113) and the Yajdán Parast (126) of the 15th June express a wish for the retention of Mr. Duxbury after the amalgamation of the Rájputána with the B. B. & C. I. Railway.]

Draws attention to certain inconveniences suffered by passengers on the stations of the B. B. &. C. I. Railway in the suburbs of Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 18th June revives the complaint regarding the inconveniences caused by want of protection from rain, insufficiency of benches, want of waiting rooms and arrangements for the comfort of Native female passengers on the stations of the B. B. &. C. I. Railway in the suburbs of Bombay. The new station at Parel, which was constructed at a cost of Rs. 75,000 is leaking and is in no way better than the Marine Lines and Charni Road stations. The retiring Manager of the B. B. &. C. I. Railway ought to remove the cause of these complaints. But if the Railway authorities continue to be unmindful of these suggestions as hitherto, it is the duty either of the Government Railway Engineer or of the Secretary to Government to draw the Company's attention to them.

Accidents on the Pátri Branch line of railway near Bhojva.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 19th June, writing from Bhojva, Táluka Viramgám, says that accidents are frequent near the gate at the place where the Pátri Railway line crosses the main road from Viramgám to Mándal, Rádhanpur, &c., within the limits of Bhojva, on account of the descent being precipitate, and at other gates within the limits of the same village on account of there being no permanent gatemen, and requests the attention of the authorities of the Pátri Railway to the matter.

Municipalities.

Says that the power of nominating their presidents should be delegated to Municipal Boards.

The Shiváji (65) of the 13th June says:—It is a matter for deep regret that the district officers should set at naught the views of the Supreme and Local Governments which have found unmistakable expression in some recently published correspondence on the subject of the appointment of non-official presidents to Municipal Boards. From various instances it is now clear that the district officers instead of being pleased with Native gentlemen for the efficient discharge of their duties in connection with municipal affairs, are internally dissatisfied with them. The appointment of a Native to the chair of a Managing Committee, which is evidently a less responsible and less important office than that of a President of the General Committee, is looked upon by the officials with displeasure. We have a specimen of this state of things in our own city (Poona). It appears that many of the officials are dissatisfied with the appointment of a Native to the chair of the Managing Committee to the exclusion of the City Magistrate. Such dissatisfaction would have been justified if objection could be taken to the appointment on the ground of inefficiency. But in the absence of any such ground how can we account for the wish that is being expressed that the City Magistrate, who is a member of the Committee and who is moreover a clever and an experienced European officer, should be the chairman. How can the capacity of Natives for the management of municipal affairs be put to the test unless they are given up an opportunity of proving it? Moreover if so much objection is raised to the appointment of Natives to the chairs of Managing Committees then it would be too much to expect that they could ever be appointed Presidents of the General Committees. The officials would not be able to find a single Native gentleman up to the mark, and as Government cannot see except through official eyes the result is clear enough. All regret for this state of things is in vain. The official classes will continue to be as unfavourable as ever and they will continue to set at defiance the noble objects of Government. Their superiors cannot control them. The circumstance that officers are frequently transferred from one place to another also adds to the various causes that have served to set the official classes against Natives. The only remedy for this state of things is that the power of nominating the Presidents of Municipal Boards should be delegated to the boards themselves. Considering the obstinacy evinced by district officers there appears to be no other mode of giving effect to the views of Government.

Insufficiency of water-supply at the recent fire in Ahmedabad and the want of a steam-engine for extinguishing fire in that city.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 19th June, in giving an account of the recent fire in that city, remarks that it is said that municipal and police aid was not speedily forthcoming on the occasion. The police aid was not, it is said, as much as could be desired on such occasions. Had it not been for the assistance rendered by the military and the men of the Swáminárayan Maháráj, the fire would have spread to the whole street and to the houses situated on the opposite side. There was great insufficiency of water for extinguishing the fire. The same difficulties as were experienced about five or seven years ago on the occasion of the fire in Taliya Pol were experienced on this occasion. The Hitechchhu expresses strong disapproval of the failure of the Municipal authorities to secure a copious supply of water for extinguishing fires in the city. The head of the fire brigade is an old and an infirm man and the brigade itself is in a state of disorder and does not work with the necessary vigour. Many advantages would result by appointing an active, able-bodied and efficient man at the head of the brigade. The fire brigade should be made to work at the pumps and the spectators should not be forced to work at them. The Hitechchhu points out the advisability of having a steam-engine in the city for extinguishing fires and advises the municipality to supply this want before spending money on other works.

Points out the defects in the bridge over the new road at Ahmedabad and complains of the heavy sums spent on it.

The same newspaper in referring to the completion of the iron bridge over the new road at Ahmedabad, says that it has cost about twenty or twenty-five thousand rupees. If any wisdom has been shown in thus wasting money, it is that of putting large sums into the pockets of the manufacturers of England. A bridge at Surat similar to the one here cost Rs. 5,000 in the time of Mr. Hope. It cannot be understood what wisdom the Municipal Commissioners of Ahmedabad and Messrs. Richey and Fernandez have shown in spending more than Rs. 20,000 over this bridge. A work which ought to have cost from 5,000 to 6,000 rupees has cost about Rs. 25,000. No better example could be found of the waste of public money. The Hitechchhu finds fault with the Municipal Secretary, who wishes to pass off as an engineer, for constructing stone walls, instead of having only about 6 feet of the walls built with stone and the remaining portion with mortar and bricks. This would have saved about eight or nine thousand rupees. Moreover the height of the bridge is insufficient. The Municipal Secretary and the Chairman still wish to spend from 70 to 80,000 rupees for constructing a new night-soil depôt and a tramway for removing the night-soil. This state of things is lamentable. While Ahmedabad wished to be relieved of the old chairman with a view to escape the burden of debt, it has got no better officer in the new chairman. When a chairman is elected every month by the Municipality of Surat, why should a chairman hold office in Ahmedabad for a period of three years or twelve months? The local Municipal Committee ought to attend to this matter.

Native States.

Advises Native Princes not to repeat the mistake committed by English rulers of ignoring Native institutions and introducing foreign ones.

In an article headed "Colonel Osborne on Native rule in India," the Native Opinion (11) of the 15th June says:—Colonel Osborne has done a great service to India by his lecture entitled "India under her Native Princes." It has been a customary belief not only with our foreign rulers but with many of us, imbued as we have been with western education, that before the advent of the British to this country India was for centuries steeped in despotism, brigandage and official and local tyranny. The English new comers, partly through ignorance of the antecedents of the country and partly through self-interest, sedulously put forward this view of our previous condition at all times and in all seasons, and ultimately managed to bring the whole of England to agree with them. The histories written by Englishmen and the predilections of our teachers constantly rung that view in our ears and in the end we, the sons of India, who ought to have known better but whose mind was taught to think as our masters thought, were unhesitatingly made to believe that our country did never know peace and that the first taste of that blessed condition was given us by the English. For this delusion, however, there was considerable excuse. Just at the nick of English conquest India presented a State of wild political confusion. There was no rule in the land deserving the name. Such a state of things naturally created in the minds of Englishmen a very unfavourable impression regarding our Native rulers and they fell an easy prey to the fallacy of generalising over centuries what they saw only at a particular time. On this hypothesis were built all their ideas of administration and there were but few who saw the real state of affairs. The generality of British officers who came to India came with the notion that they were going to rule over a nation of barbarians who had never tasted the sweets of a peaceful administration, and inexperienced as they were, began to administer to the country drastic doses of European ideas, and went on blundering in proportion to the length of time they continued the remedies. Indeed the condition of the country as it changed under this treatment confirmed our rulers in their delusion, and led them more and more astray. The country, where formerly a lie was almost unknown and was regarded as the greatest sin a man could commit, was dubbed the country of liars, and so in every respect we were misunderstood. And for this we have but to thank the new fangled innovations introduced among us for our regeneration. To persons who care to think, India's commercial prosperity in ante-British times could and does serve as a guide to judge of our antecedents. The great trade that was carried on throughout the whole of the land could never have flourished unless there had been considerable security of property, and that security could never have been attained unless there had been peaceful government in the country. The whole of our past history shows that this country enjoyed for centuries a profound peace and that people could enjoy their own with as much composure as they do now. What the secret of this peace was the British failed to see. Even in the times of the Mogals, when the work of fighting was being pursued pertty well hotly, the internal state of the country remained tranquil. So long only as any actual warfare was taking place, business was suspended; but the very moment war ceased, it established itself again without delay. This stable equillibrium of peace was secured to this country by that peculiar arrangement called the village system. Nowhere in the world has this system shown its power better than in India and had that system been fostered and encouraged it might have formed a sound basis for any sort of free political organizations. Even so early as the 15th century this system produced something like boroughs in upper India, and who knows what degree it would have attained had the free-born Briton recognised it early enough. Now however its recognition is too late. It is no longer living except in obscure places and what now is left of it is but the corpse from which the soul has fled. It is a sad irony of fate that the very children of freedom have through ignorance trampled to death the kin of their mother, and are now striving hard by municipalities and local boards to supply the place of that revered institution. The vigour and the vitality which this system enabled our village communities to preserve even under the most adverse circumstances is truly astonishing. In this connection we might also refer to certain Native States where even so late as this the same mistakes as the British committed are being repeated over again. Dazzled by the glowing exterior of British India and desirous of being patted on the back by the paramount power, some of our Native Princes under a false notion of reform are importing wholesale the English method of administration. We might well excuse the British for their ignorance but what excuse can we find for those who are yet blundering though the consequences of the same blunders have been rendered obvious after a trial. A pure and simple desire of imitating the British administration even with all its faults seems to have entered their infatuated heads and we should not be surprised to see ere long their territories plunged into greater agricultural distress than that prevailing in the Deccan provinces, unless they get rid of this infatuation soon enough. Departments on the style of those of British India with English officers at their head seem to be a mania with some, and unless they take care they are sure to awake too late from their delusion. While gentlemen like Colonel Osborne are urging the British Government to return at least partially to the old lines and reduce expenditure by employment of native machinery, these princes are just doing the reverse and are supplanting native machinery by importing foreigners into their service. We wish our princes learn to view things correctly and steer clear of the dangers which beset the path which many of them have so blindly chosen.

Gives the particulars of a highway robbery in Káthiáwár.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 15th June gives the particulars, received from a student of the Ahmedabad Training College, of a highway robbery committed about the 7th of June by a band of 40 horsemen headed by a man named Mor, on the way from Mathak near Morvi to Sara in the State of Sáela, and remarks:—We call the attention of the Political Agent of Káthiáwár and the Government of Bombay to the case which is not the first of its kind. Colonel Barton could have dispersed this gang of desperadoes in the beginning. But he was for large game, such as the Maiya massacre. It is to be hoped his successor will appreciate his duty better. We thought Káthiáwár was practically free from highway men. The robbers ought to be at once pursued. Where is Mr. Bairámji Karáka of Morvi? That energetic police officer will not take long to apprehend the men. Mor and his companions may have grievances. But robbery and murder of innocent travellers will not help them to redress. Government will do well to take the matter in hand. Highway robbery in the interior has undoubtedly increased since the passing of the Arms Act. People cannot carry arms in self-defence, and their lives and property are therefore at the mercy of free-booters. So it appears that the Arms Act exists for the good of robbers and of wild beasts. What a commentary that most wretched Act is on the British administration of India! [The Hitechchhu of the 19th June also gives some particulars of the robbery and points out the necessity of taking prompt action in the matter.]

Retracts the articles that appeared in the Gujarát Mitră newspaper regarding the oppression exercised by the Thákor of Rájkot.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 15th June, in an article headed, "An explanation for His Highness the Thákor of Rájkot," retracts the articles that appeared in its issues of the 13th April and 11th and 18th May 1884 and noticed in the reports on Native Papers for the weeks ending 19th April and 17th and 24th May, complaining of the oppression exercised by the Thákor. The Thákor in a letter dated 11th instant says that the articles in question are entirely false. Though the writers of the said articles are very respectable and trustworthy, the Mitră had stated in those very articles that it would do justice to the Thákor by publishing his explanation. The Mitră is very sorry that its correspondents should have placed confidence in the statements of others.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press, 25th June 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Complaint against the stringency of the conditions inserted in the licenses issued to wholesale dealers in liquors 11
Accidents:
  Expression of opinion that minute enquiries should be made into the causes of — occurring in factories 12
  Suggestion regarding the adoption of precautionary measures for preventing — in docks 12
Administration of India by the British: Comments on the— ... 5
Advance of Russia in Central Asia:
  Expression of opinion that strong measures should be adopted against the— 7
  Suggestion that a Pársi gentleman should be nominated a member of the Anglo-Russian Commission to demarcate the northern frontier of Afghánistan 7
Annual visits of the Viceroys and Provincial Governors to the hills: Comments on the— 8
Appointment of a Native barrister to the Bench of the Bombay High Court: Request to Sir James Fergusson for the — during the absence of the Honourable Mr. Bayley on leave 10
Civil Service of India: Comments on Lord Lytton's despatch regarding the— 7
Duty on Indian silver-ware and tobacco imported into England: Inadvisability of maintaining the—... 6
Employment of Natives in high offices: Complaint that the pledges given by Government regarding the — have remained unredeemed . 3
Forest Laws: Complaint regarding the stringency of— 9
Frauds in Indian cotton: Approval of the proposals made by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce for the prevention of— 10
India Council: Expression of opinion that the Natives of India should be appointed members of the— 5
Judicial matters: Disapproval of the rumoured transfer of the Second Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Surat to Bárdoli and of that at Olpád to Ránder 13
Lord Ripon's term of office: Advice to the people of India to send fresh memorials to the Home Government asking for the extension of— . 8
Pilgrims: Expression of opinion that the brokers who do their business amongst the Mahomedan — proceeding from Bombay to Mecca should be required to furnish themselves with licenses... ... 12
Police:
  Complaint against the District Superintendent of — Karáchi ... 13
  Complaint regarding the cruel treatment of a European sailor by some officers of the Bombay— 14
Postal matters:
  Complaint regarding the inconvenience caused by the discontinuance of the contract with the B. I. S. N. Company for the carriage of letters, &c., to the coast of Ratnágiri 15
  Delay in the payment of sums due on account of money orders in the Post Office at Ahmedabad... 15
  Recommendation for a reduction in the commission charged on money orders for Rs. 5 14
Public Service:
  Comments on the transfer of Mr. T. D. Mackenzie from Thána ... 11
  Disapproval of Mr. Adarji Jivanji's transfer from Surat to the Panch Maháls 11
Roads: Necessity of constructing a permanent road from Vengurla to Shiravde viâ Ubha Dánda 15
Scarcity of water: At Gogha— 13
Separation of the magisterial from the other functions of revenue officers: Advocacy of the— 11
Sind Village Officers' Act: Comments on the— 10

Page.

PART II.—Railways—

Amalgamation of the B. B. & C. I. and Rájputána-Málwa Railway lines: Comments on the proposed— 16
B. B. & C. I. Railway: Complaint regarding the inconveniences suffered by passengers on the stations of the — in the suburbs of Bombay ... 16
Extension of railways in India: Disapproval of the— 15
Pátri Branch Railway: Accidents on the — near Bhojva in Viramgám Táluka 16

PART III.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad:
  Defects in the bridge over the new road at — and complaint regarding the heavy sums spent on it 17
  Insufficiency of water-supply at the recent fire in — and the want of a steam-engine for extinguishing fires in that city... ... 17
Municipal Boards: Expression of opinion that the power of nominating their presidents should be delegated to— 16

PART IV.—Native States—

Káthiáwár: Particulars of a highway robbery in— 19
Native Princes: Advice to — not to repeat the mistake committed by English rulers of ignoring Native institutions and introducing foreign ones 18
Rájkot: Retraction of the articles that appeared in the Gujarát Mitră newspaper regarding the oppression exercised by the Thákor of—... 19

---

27 465
INDIA OFFICE
21 JUL

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 28th June 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
16	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
17	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
18	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
19	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
20	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
21	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*24	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
25	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*26	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
27	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
28	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
29	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
30	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
31	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
32	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
33	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
34	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
35	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
36	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*37	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*38	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
39	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
40	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
41	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
42	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*43	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
44	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
45	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
46	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
47	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*48	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
49	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
50	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
51	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*52	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
53	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*54	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*55	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*56	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*57	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
58	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
59	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
60	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*65	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	96
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

2579
INDIA OFFICE
29 JUL 1884

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*69	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
70	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
71	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
83	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
84	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
85	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
86	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
87	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*88	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
89	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,090
90	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
91	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
92	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
93	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
94	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
95	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
96	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
97	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
98	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
99	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*100	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
101	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*102	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
103	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
104	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
105	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*106	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
*107	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
108	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
109	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
110	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
111	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
112	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
113	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
114	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
115	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*116	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
117	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
118	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*119	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
120	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*121	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
122	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
123	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
124	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
125	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
126	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
127	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*128	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
129	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	225
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
134	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
135	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*136	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
	SINDI.
*137	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that an increase in the revenues of India is not a reliable index of an increase in her prosperity.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 23rd June says that increasing revenues are not a reliable index of the increasing prosperity of a country like India in which the interests of the rulers are not identical with the interests of the ruled. In his last financial statement Sir Auckland Colvin tried to show by means of figures that the condition of the country gave unmistakable indications of improvement. We neither deny the conclusions arrived at by the Finance Minister, nor do we doubt the correctness of the figures quoted in support of those conclusions. But we ask how can these conclusions be reconciled with the statement made by men like Dr. Hunter on the authority of Government records and by the help of their personal knowledge of the country that at the present day there are several people who try to eke out a miserable existence by eating one, and that even insufficient, meal a day? The figures given by Sir Auckland make it clear that Government revenues are increasing, but it cannot be inferred therefrom that the people are making a sure march towards happiness. A general consideration of the condition of the people of the type above described tends to show that a scarcity of the means of subsistence for all classes of people is imminent. A man with ten times the education that some time before would have been sufficient to enable him to support a family of ten persons now finds it difficult to support himself and his wife. A petty vacancy in a Government office attracts a thousand applicants, who use their best endeavours to secure it. It is within our memory that in the early days of the British rule it required great efforts to induce a man of ordinary parts to accept the post of a Subhedár. What a contrast between those and the present times! The reason, however, is not far to seek. In those days the people of different classes followed their legitimate avocations, which were then paying and thus served to make them happy. But circumstances have now combined to bring about a revolution in that state of things. Excessive enhancement of land revenue assessments by Government and the exorbitant rates of interest charged by money-lenders have served to make agriculture unpopular with the cultivating classes. The importation of the different kinds of cloth from Europe has driven the Indian weaver to abandon his legitimate work and to resort to ordinary labour on daily wages as a means of support. The same has been the case with the rest of the professions, and all classes of people are compelled to drag a miserable existence by some means or other. This is indeed an extremely deplorable state of things. In the face of these miseries how strange is it to infer development of the prosperity of the country from figures showing an increase of revenue! It is only in countries where the governors and the governed belong to the same race that the revenues have an intimate connection with the welfare of the people. But in India on the contrary there is every reason to suspect that with an increase in the Government revenues there would be an increase in the miseries of the people. We emphatically assert that so long as our rulers make their revenues their first consideration and flatter themselves with the belief that a rise in the revenues is a sure index of the increasing prosperity of the ruled, there is no hope of any good to the country. No amount of tall talk, nor an array of figures, can therefore prove that the prosperity of this country is on the increase.

Advocates the abolition of the India Council as at present constituted and points out the necessity of Parliament exercising direct control over India.

Referring to the appointment of Mr. Bullen Smith to the India Council the Gujaráti (99) of 22nd June says:—We wonder what good will result from the appointment when it has been admitted on all hands that the constitution of the Council itself is defective and that all the expenditure entailed by its maintenance is mere waste. Mr. Bright once said that the Secretary of State for India generally lords it over his Council and tries to have matters disposed of in his own way. There are several instances fresh in our memory in which the Secretary of State for India did not withdraw from the position once taken by him, and it is very astonishing that nearly 25 lákhs of rupees should be annually wasted on a Council that works in this fashion. We do not think it just that old and decrepit officers that retire from service in India should be given places in this Council and thus entrusted with the most heavy and responsible duties: nay, it is very dangerous. The Secretary of State who presides over this Council is generally unacquainted with Indian matters and tries to manage his business according to his own personal views or those of his party; while the members who have served in India have their peculiar prejudices and are unable to agree on the questions that come before the Council. Moreover the greatness of the position of the members suffers by the arbitrary conduct of their head, and they are therefore not quite willing to continue in this state of humiliation. In these circumstances the utility of the Council is not clear. The India Council was originally established on the express condition that representatives from India would be admitted to its board. But this condition has not yet been satisfied, nor is there any likelihood of its being satisfied in the future. How then is it possible that the work of the Council can ever be managed satisfactorily? It is therefore necessary that an attempt should be made to bring about the abolition of this Council. So long as this Council is not abolished it is not possible that Indian matters can be discussed in Parliament. What India wants most urgently is the direct control of Parliament over the country. If that body were to exercise direct supervision over Indian affairs injustice would be prevented in many instances. There is not a single representative of India in Parliament. The English people are known for their love of independence, but they appear to be reluctant to confer independence on this country. How selfish is it that no attention should be paid to the loud demands for privileges of representation made by India? If the Irish have the right of returning members to Parliament, why should India be denied it. Why should Parliament not exercise direct supervision over India? When Russia has been keeping a steady and watchful eye over India, how is it that the advantages of establishing an identity of interests between England and India are not recognized? It is very surprising that while measures are being taken for securing the safety of the frontier and strengthening the military positions no attempt is made to secure internal peace. The policy of Lord Ripon and the views expressed by men like Messrs. Hume and Wordsworth have indeed served to spread contentment among Natives, the like of which was never experienced before. This contentment will however not last long, as it is not known how matters will change under the regimé of a new Viceroy. If however it is meant to keep the people ever contented the object will be accomplished by the exercise of direct control over India by Parliament with the view of paying immediate attention to their demands and of according to them a kind treatment.

Says that the solution of the Russian difficulty lies in securing the hearts and affections of the people of India.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 23rd June says:—The advance of Russia on India cannot be better provided for than by securing the affections of the people of this country. If Russia earnestly thinks of conquering India the small number of disciplined British troops will not be of much avail. If the dealings of England with India are such as to lead the people to prefer any other rulers to the English, Russia will not find great difficulty in securing her object. This circumstance should teach the English to devise measures for engaging the affections of the people of this country. If the English succeed in engendering in the minds of the 24 krors of the people a feeling of devotion to the British cause and in inducing a conviction that it would not be possible for India to get better rulers than the English, then the Government need not fear, not only Russia but, any other nation. It might be argued by some that it would be a suicidal policy for the people to favour the Russian cause inasmuch as the change might prove to be one from king log to king stork. But the answer to this contention is that it can never be and is not possible for the people generally to think of allowing their present rulers to continue to rule with all their high-handedness, even granting that the Russians are less civilized than the English, and that therefore their institutions and administration would not conduce to the welfare of the people of India. It appears from the Russian papers that the Russians are anxious to know how the people of India are affected towards their English rulers, and that they are convinced that unless there is discontent and disaffection in India it is not possible for them to make their way into the country. It is thus clear that the solution of the Russian problem lies in securing the hearts and affections of the people of this country. [The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 24th June dwells at considerable length on the present state of affairs in Asia in regard to the lines of action followed by the Russians in the north-west and the French in the east of India, and points out the necessity of devising measures for frustrating their object.]

Advises Government to abandon the policy of distrust in the Natives.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 22nd June reviews Sir Lepel Griffin's letter on the subject of the advance of Russia towards India, and says:—The English people should never call in question the loyalty of the Natives. The liberal policy pursued by Government towards them has secured firmly the foundations of the British Government. The stability of the Government depends not on the bravery of the British but solely on the loyalty of the Natives. It is, we think, incumbent on our Government that the policy of distrust towards the Natives should no longer be pursued. As observed by the Honourable Ráo Sáheb V. N. Mandlik, the policy of distrust is certainly very suicidal. Instances are not wanting to show that Government treat us very badly. Look to the Arms Act. The whole country has been disarmed. The people have become helpless. The Natives are prohibited from forming themselves into volunteer corps. We therefore think that it is high time that Government should discontinue this much-to-be-deplored policy and should adopt a policy of confidence—a policy which will firmly bind by indissoluble ties the minds of the Natives to the British rule. Allow us to form volunteer corps, allow us the use of arms, and we confidently assert, without any fear of contradiction, that England may boldly hurl defiance at Russia. England, backed by the aid of the Natives, will certainly be in a position to face ten Russias. We think that some definite understanding should be arrived at between England and Russia. Russia, it appears, does not intend to conquer India, but means to establish in that quarter a "raw" where she can make herself unpleasant to us in the event of complications elsewhere, as in fact she did on the last occasion. It is unnecessary for England to occupy Afghánistan and thus to incur fresh responsibilities. The railway line will shortly be complete as far as Herat. This line will not be paying in the least, but will on the contrary entail an unnecessary expense on India. What we think should be done is that the task of defending Herat and thus of checking the Russian progress should be entrusted to the Amir. Now and then our Government should lend some assistance to the Amir in money and men and friendly relations shall be maintained with Afghánistan. Russia should be distinctly informed that her further progress would be construed into an act of hostility. Russia then will not make bold to take a further leap, unless she is prepared to enter into hostilities with England. We have hopes of this understanding being arrived at, as it is rumoured that a mixed commission of English and Russian statesmen will be appointed in order to settle a boundary line in Central Asia beyond which Russia shall not be allowed to extend her dominions. Both the powers must see that it is advantageous to them that they should not come to blows in the east. A war between the two powers is not a trifling matter. It would be a terrible contest in which the vast resources of both the countries would come into play. It would cause tremendous bloodshed such as has been rarely heard of even in the dark ages. That in this contest India will side with England and that she will lose the most in the struggle is quite plain. It is therefore in the interests of India as also those of England that the latter country should try to bring about a good understanding with Russia; and we hope that the projected commission will not end in a fiasco. [The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 23rd June alludes to the statement that Russia intends to enter into commercial negotiations with Afghánistan and Beluchistan with the view of having her agents located in Herat, Balkh and Cabul, and remarks that whenever the Russians open intercourse with the Amir of Afghánistan under the plea of commercial negotiations it should be taken as the beginning of a direct provocation of hostilities with the British.]

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Hope's minute on the Indian Ecclesiastical Department.

In an article headed "Mr. Hope on the Indian Ecclesiastical Department," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 22nd June says:—The 17th paragraph of his able minute of dissent opens with the declaration that the necessity to the Indian Government to maintain the Ecclesiastical Department rests on three obligations, namely, "documentary, moral and religious, and political." Now we admit that all the arguments in support of the three State obligations are very cleverly urged. But the cleverness is that of an advocate arguing on the side of his client. That charters and State despatches exist to show that the Ecclesiastical Department as at present maintained is very much on the lines mentioned in them cannot be gainsaid. In fact none has denied their existence. But here is Mr. Hope's first error. What the Secretary of State required, and what the Non-conformists headed by Mr. Baxter urged, was whether in view of the existing circumstances of India and the interests of her tax-payers the department can be maintained. Because a hundred years ago or more, or even a quarter of a century since, it was a political belief in England, though erroneous, that the State must maintain the church, does it follow that the same political belief should be held true now when the progress of political life and the activity of modern religious thought have combined to displace the old belief? How are kingdoms and empires governed? Is the Honourable Mr. Hope prepared to uphold in public the view which he is popularly said to hold in private that England should be governed much on the principles on which India is governed—that there should be no Parliament, no Cabinet Ministers, no freedom of the press—in short, that the good old simple plan that prevailed prior to the time of Henry III. should now be made fashionable in England? And yet it seems that the principle on which he would justify the existence of the Ecclesiastical Department in India is very much founded on this old world notion. Mr. Hope will take no cognizance of the spirit of the age and the progress made in the art of governing States. For him change of conditions and change of circumstances have no force. Of course where such ideas prevail it is impossible to agree. But as a matter of fact we are aware that Mr. Hope in other matters is not so antiquated. His reforming zeal is as great as that of the most ardent reformer. For instance, look at his reforming zeal in matters economic. There is the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act. Though a brilliant failure, it still indicates his spirit of reform. Look again at his municipal reforms in Bombay and Surat. Then look again at his free trade instincts. And it may be asked whether municipal government and free trade are not both the offsprings of the civilization of the nineteenth century? Have not circumstances altered the state of the trade and of local institutions? Statecraft, as understood in modern times, means nothing if not progress demanded by the everchanging circumstances of humanity. Burke shrewdly observed that "circumstances, which with some gentlemen pass for nothing, give in reality to every political principle its distinguishing colour and discriminating effect." If so, it may be worth asking what are the circumstances going on all around us which must compel the Indian administration, if not immediately, at no distant day to admit that the maintenance of the Ecclesiastical Department from the revenues of the State is untenable? Mr. Hope's very painstaking and elaborate statement of facts of the existing documents regarding State obligation to maintain the department proves nothing. It appears to us to be beside the mark. The true politician who views the matter from the historical point must ask "is the present principle right or wrong—is it or is it not unjust to the tax-payers?" This broader question, the higher ideal of justice, is scarcely considered. But time is an efficient teacher, and what the Indian administrator may ignore the logic of coming events will compel him to learn. He looks through the smoke of prejudices; but it is desirable that that smoke be rolled away so that "a space for interests that are more fruitful in the hopes and desires that bind man to man" and, we may add, rulers to the ruled, may be left.

Points out the injustice of the demand made by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce for the prevention of frauds in Indian cotton.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 23rd June comments on the resolution adopted by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce to memorialize the Secretary of State for India on the necessity of adopting fresh measures for the prevention of frauds in Indian cotton, and remarks:—What difference is there between the defunct Cotton Frauds Act and the enactment now suggested by the Chamber? The object of the proposed enactment, whatever its wording, is the same as that of the defunct Act. Merchants may be adulterating Indian cotton with other substances in the same way as adulteration is generally practised by all countries in respect of all things. But if it is alleged that adulteration in Indian cotton is carried on to a fearful extent the like of which is not to be found in any other country in respect of any article of commerce, then we deny the allegation. First taking England as an example, the adulteration of the various articles exported from that country is greater than that practised in respect of Indian cotton. Adulteration in cotton is far preferable to that in articles of food and drink exported from England, which is injurious to the health of the consumers. Moreover is English cloth free from admixture? Is not thick sizing of cloth a fraud? Is it not a well-known fact that Indian buyers of English cloth strongly complain against this practice, and that it has much to do with the falling off in the demand for it in the markets of India, China and other countries? Why not then pass an Act to prevent this fraudulent practice? When an Act cannot be passed for its prevention, why enact one for the prevention of frauds in Indian cotton? English manufacturers also strongly complain of adulteration in American cotton imported into England, but they do not ask the American Government to pass an Act in the matter. It is not just that for the convenience of English manufacturers a stringent enactment should be passed and made binding on India. Unfortunately there are no persons to work in the cause of India amongst the just English public. It is therefore necessary that the natives of India should point out the injustice of the demand made by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce. If this is done the home authorities will not fail to give an impartial decision in the matter.

Comments on the appointment of the Thákor of Limbdi to the Bombay Legislative Council.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 27th June disapproves of the appointment of the Thákor of Limbdi to the Bombay Legislative Council, and observes that it is to be regretted that the proportion of independent members in provincial Councils, which is already small, should be reduced still further by the nomination of Thákors and Chiefs. As the Thákor of Limbdi is not a British subject he has no right whatever to a seat in the Council. It is true that he is very clever and well-educated, but that is no reason why the claims of the representatives of the people should be disregarded. As the Thákor has nothing to do with the Presidency affairs it would not be surprising if he invariably voted with Government in disregard of public interests, with the view of thereby securing a "passport" for the future admission of himself and others of his class into the Council. It is good that young Thákors and Rájás should receive political education in British Legislative Councils and should utilize it in their own dominions. But this education should not be imparted at the cost of the British subjects. If it is thought necessary to give them such political education and to enhance their loyalty towards the British crown, the number of seats in the Legislative Councils should be increased, and then instead of one, five or ten seats may be reserved for Thákors and Chiefs. The different classes of the British subjects should however be duly represented in the Councils. The ambition of becoming members of Legislative Councils may do the Chiefs some good, but their poor subjects will indirectly suffer. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments. The paper has nothing to say against the Thákor personally, because he is gifted with the spirit of independence, is bold and educated, and is therefore worthy of the honour done to him; but the Thákor cannot be expected to possess the same amount of commercial experience as his predecessor in Council possessed. The Ahmedabad Samáchár (84) of the 25th June says that the appointment must give satisfaction to the Native public, and expresses a hope that other Native princes will follow in the footsteps of the Thákor of Limbdi and show themselves worthy of the honour done to him.]

Advocates the separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers.

Referring to the question of the separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers, the Native Opinion (11) of the 22nd June suggests that the number of Subordinate Judges should be increased in view of their being entrusted with the judicial duties of revenue officers subordinate to District Magistrates. This separation is as important as the concession of the right of trial by jury and is calculated to establish the confidence of the people in their magistrates. Government should not grudge any additional expenditure for the purpose of bringing about such a valuable reform. [The Shiváji (65) of the 20th June expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Points out the necessity of bringing to an early settlement the questions of local self-government, education and publicity in legislation.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 23rd June says:—Matters which appear to be capable of easy settlement give rise to dissatisfaction and suspicion when their disposal is delayed. We have received a letter from a thoughtful correspondent who justly comments on the delay that is taking place in bringing about the arrangements preliminary to the introduction of local self-government. Time is rapidly passing by and it is not known where the rub is. Similarly nothing is known about the suggestions made by the Education Commission. It is said that the report of the Commission has been forwarded to the Secretary of State with an expression of the Viceroy's views thereon, but nothing further is known on the subject. Again the views of the Government of India in the matter of giving publicity to the proceedings of Legislative Councils have met with a similar fate. The Supreme Government had called for the opinions of Local Governments on the subject, but what was the result? On the whole all these questions appear to have been shelved. It is only during the administration of Lord Ripon that something might be done with respect to these questions. But as soon as he turns his back upon India they will be thrown aside and all the labour spent on them will have been wasted. It is therefore high time that the well-wishers of India and representative associations like the Sárvajanik Sabha should bring these matters to the front and make repeated efforts to secure their early disposal.

Suggestions regarding a successor to Mr. Justice Bayley while on leave.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 22nd June says:—Should Mr. Justice Bayley find it necessary to go home for three months, his place could not be more worthily filled than by Serjeant Atkinson who has more than once acted before. Mr. Bayley's absence might also make an opening for a Native Judge on the Original Side, and in that case one of the two leading Native barristers would exactly fit in. What says Sir Charles Sargent? As for the learned Serjeant we know him too well to think for a moment that he would grudge a lift given to a son of the soil. By the bye it has often occurred to us to ask why the shrievalty of Bombay has never smiled upon Serjeant Atkinson. Apart from his eminence in law and his unequalled erudition, Mr. Atkinson is a most useful citizen and a true and consistent friend of his adopted country. [The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 28th June refers to the rumoured appointment of Mr. W. E. Hart, First Judge of the Bombay Court of Small Causes, in place of the Honourable Mr. Justice Bayley, and asks why the Bombay Government should be so ungenerous towards worthy Native barristers when it is proposed to give to a Native the acting Judgeship in the Bengal High Court, where a Native Judge already enjoys permanent office for some time past. The Jáme requests Sir James Fergusson to give satisfaction to the Native public by appointing either Mr. Badrudin Tayabji or Mr. Phirozsháh M. Mehta to the acting Judgeship.]

Suggestions to the Factory Act Committee.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 23rd June approves of the constitution of the Factory Act Committee appointed by the Bombay Government, and says that it should hold its sittings at the Town Hall and publicly examine the witnesses appearing before it. The Collector should, through the medium of the public prints, call on those who are connected with mills and who wish to give evidence before the Committee to send in their names. The Committee should without previous intimation visit the local spinning and weaving mills. The evidence of experienced medical men should be taken with a view to ascertain whether continued work for many hours does not injuriously affect the physique of the mill-hands. It would be better if the Committee were not to interfere with mill buildings beyond suggesting a few alterations in them. It is to be hoped that the labours of the new Committee will not prove unsatisfactory, as was the case with a previous Committee appointed for a like purpose. A correspondent of the same paper of the 24th June says that if there is no likelihood of the number of working hours in spinning and weaving mills being curtailed, attention should be directed to the sufficiency or otherwise of the means employed by the owners for the preservation of the health of the mill-hands. The mill-hands are unable to provide themselves with sufficient food owing to the small pay they receive. As sufficient ventilation is not provided in mill-buildings, the mill-hands have to inhale particles of cotton from about 12 to 14 hours a day. This is very injurious to their health. Moreover, they have no supply of pure drinking-water. The Committee should inspect the blow-room in every mill. Some of these blow-rooms are so very badly constructed as to leave little room for the admission of free air. [A correspondent of the Kaisar-i-Hind (106) of the 22nd June says that mills should be regularly closed one day in a week with a view to somewhat neutralise the effects of the present hard labour exacted from the poor mill-hands. Mills are now closed only half a day in a fortnight, and for the other half of the day on which they are closed the labourers are employed in cleaning the machinery. The men employed in the mechanical workshops attached to spinning and weaving mills have to work harder than usual on the day on which mills are closed and have to spend nearly the whole day at their work.]

Suggestion for the nomination of a Hindu as a member of the Factory Act Committee.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 26th June regrets that no Hindu gentleman has been nominated a member of the Factory Act Committee. The addition of Messrs. Dinshá Máneckji Petit, Ranchhoddás Narotamdás and Dámodar Thákersey Mulji to the Committee would have proved very valuable. As these gentlemen have not been appointed members of the Committee, their evidence along with that of Messrs. Navroji and Sorábji Nasarvánji Wádia and of the managers and agents of all the spinning and weaving mills should be taken by the Committee. The Jáme Jamshed advises Government to nominate a Hindu gentleman as a member of the Committee, and says that the appointment will give satisfaction to the Hindu mill-owners and others.

Does not approve of the proposal to construct one building for the accommodation of the three Presidency Magistrates' courts in Bombay.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 22nd June does not approve of the proposal to construct one building on the Cruikshank Road for the use of the three courts of Presidency Magistrates, of which two are at present located in the Fort and one in Girgaum. It is a question whether the bringing together of the three courts into one building will contribute to the convenience of people of all classes and of all parts of the city. Though it must be admitted that the building when constructed will claim the convenience of being easily approachable by railway and tramway, still owing to the large extent of the city it will not be convenient to the people that live in parts that are not favoured with tramway or railway connections as well as to those that cannot afford the expense involved in making use of those conveyances. The best plan would be to build three court-houses in central localities in the three different parts of the city. This suggestion has the only disadvantage of entailing additional cost on account of extra superintendence, but it can be got over by the appointment of low-paid superintendents in the place of the present highly paid functionaries.

Recommends the adoption of some measures for affording relief to the people of Kolába and Ratnágiri that have suffered from locusts.

The Shiváji (65) of the 20th June says that it is a matter for regret that the attention of Government should not have been drawn to the famine that is raging in the Kolába and Ratnágiri districts on account of the ravages committed by locusts, and recommends the adoption of measures for affording relief to the sufferers.

Objects to the grant of allowances like tentage and house-rent to Assistant Superintendents of Revenue Survey on privilege leave.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 22nd June says :—A resolution has recently been issued by Government declaring that tentage will be allowed to Assistant Superintendents of Revenue Survey on privilege leave on the same conditions as those on which they receive house-rent. Further the resolution is made applicable to the case of officers who are granted an extension of leave and are sent out of India. Of course there is nothing objectionable in Government making such concessions to the officers of a department that chiefly contributes to enhance the State revenues, but do not such concessions impose an additional burden on the tax-paying population? We do not object to the grant of full pay to officers on privilege leave, but it is sheer waste of public money to grant them extra allowances.

Does not approve of the proposal to impose a poll-tax on pilgrims visiting Násik during the approaching Sinhast festival.

While reviewing the last resolution of Government on the Municipal Reports of the Presidency, the Arunodayă (17) of the 22nd June says :—The Commissioner, C. D., has proposed to impose a poll-tax on the pilgrims visiting Násik during the approaching Sinhast festival. This proposal has been approved by Government, but we are unable to share their views. Though it is clear that the imposition of the proposed direct tax will neither bear very hardly on the pilgrims nor bring in an appreciable amount of revenue to the Government treasury, still the action of Government will be looked upon with dissatisfaction as involving interference with the religious prejudices of the people.

Comments on the transfer of Mr. T. D. Mackenzie from Thána.

A correspondent of the Mahrátta (2) of the 22nd June says :—I was taken aback when I read in one of the Native papers that Mr. Mackenzie, Collector of Thána, was relieved of his office for his persistently laying before his superior officers the hard case of the rayats. It is certainly impossible for me to believe that such is the case. Sir James Fergusson is, I believe, a conscientious ruler and must leave no stone unturned to get at the knowledge of the real state of the rayats. He should evoke an expression of free opinion in such important matters and not try to snub it. It is very rare that we come across disinterested persons who act up to the dictates of their conscience in the teeth of the displeasure of their superior officers. The case of the rayats must certainly be very hard as Mr. Mackenzie has made bold to persistently represent it. I hope that the mantle of Sir R. Temple has not fallen on Sir James Fergusson. I need not refer to the case of Mr. T. Bosanquet who was at once degraded from the office of Collector to that of First Assistant Collector for opposing the Governor, so impatient was the latter of opposition. Sir James Fergusson, despite his shortcomings, has shown himself to be a good ruler. His speech at the New English School and his two celebrated resolutions prove beyond question that he has at heart the welfare of the people that are entrusted to his care. The forest laws are very stringent and the rayats are subjected to unprecedented hardships. It is high time that Government should open their eyes to the real state of affairs and should grant relief to the people by timely concessions. [The Mahárâshtră Mitră (45) of the 26th June refers to the same subject and says that if the public are mistaken in their interpretation of the motives that led to the transfer of Mr. Mackenzie from Thána, the authorities should make matters clear and thus leave no room for unfounded suspicions.]

Comments on the transfer of Mr. Adarji Jivanji from Surat.

A correspondent of the Indian Spectator (1) of the 22nd June, writing from Gujarát, says:—"What you say about Mr. Adarji of Surat is fair. He is a good man and a strict officer, just and honest. But these qualities are now at a discount with Government. It is said that they (the higher officials) were going to dismiss Mr. Adarji altogether, but the good Governor interposed and asked that if Mr. Adarji, the Deputy, was to be dismissed, why not Mr. White, the Collector? This saved Adarji." The editor remarks:—If this is a fact, and it is not unlikely for Sir James to do so, we pray His Excellency may further look into the matter for himself and restore Mr. Adarji to the people of Surat, who seem really to love him. His responsible advisers are no doubt open to conviction.

Comments on the appointment of Mr. William Souter in the place of Mr. Fonblanque, Assistant Deputy Registrar, High Court.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 22nd June says:—The appointment of Mr. William Souter to the temporary vacancy caused by the departure on six months' leave of Mr. Fonblanque, Assistant Deputy Registrar, High Court, has taken the public by surprise. The post, we presume, carries with it some responsible duties. It is not easy to see how a lad of eighteen can expect to get through them satisfactorily. The several fat appointments which have been lavishly created on the Original Side of our High Court are generally supposed to be reserved for junior European barristers to enable them to eke out a scanty income from their profession. The present appointment must have created some disappointment in that quarter as it has caused surprise everywhere else. Who is responsible for bringing about this appointment during the regimé of a perfectly upright and scrupulously conscientious Chief Justice? [The Deshi Mitră (94) of the 19th and the Yajdán Parast (126) of the 22nd June express disapproval of the appointment.]

The license-tax at Broach.

The Broach Samáchár (90) of the 26th June says that the circumstance that Mr. Mackenzie, the new Collector of Broach, has imposed a fine of three times the amount of the license-tax assessment on those who did not pay it by the 19th idem has created considerable excitement among the people of Broach. It is said that the Collector has acted in accordance with the orders of Government, but it is not surprising that the people should look upon this order as extremely severe, inasmuch as they have been accustomed to pay the assessment even after the expiry of the period prescribed for making payment. The Samáchár requests the Collector to rescind the order and to direct the Mámlatdár to receive payment of the tax up to a certain date. If the sanction of Government is necessary for the purpose, it should be obtained and the consternation prevailing among the people should be removed.

A complaint against the Bombay Tramway Company.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 27th June points out the inconveniences caused to the passengers by the new transfer tickets introduced by the Bombay Tramway Company. It cannot be understood what motives the Tramway Company had in effecting the change. If the new transfers have been introduced for the convenience of its employés, the Company has disregarded the comforts and conveniences of thousands of passengers.

Suggestion to the postal authorities.

The Kalpataru (36) of Sholápur of the 22nd June complains of the inconvenience caused to the residents in the new Peth, commonly called "Goldfinch Peth," by the delay in the delivery of letters. The mail train arrives at Sholápur at 4-15 A.M. and the delivery of letters takes place at 6 A.M. Notwithstanding this the residents of the Peth do not receive their letters till 10 A.M. Sholápur is divided into different wards and for each ward a separate delivery-peon is employed. Perhaps the new Peth being at the farthest extremity of the city, the delivery-peon for that ward finds it difficult to deliver letters before 10 A.M. If this be the case, the ward should be divided into two parts and one additional peon should be employed for the convenience of the people. From the branch post office at Sholápur money-orders are issued but payment on account of them is not made. This causes serious inconvenience to the public. The general post office being far off from the town it is very troublesome to go there. The inconvenience is more felt during the hot and rainy seasons. The only way of removing the inconvenience is to authorize the branch post office to make payments on account of money-orders presented to it.

Complains of the inconvenience caused by the delivery of money-orders once in a day instead of twice as hitherto.

The Násik Vritt (47) of the 21st June says :—Formerly money-orders were delivered to the people of Násik both in the morning as well as in the evening. But now-a-days the people are put to much inconvenience on account of the delivery of money-orders in the evening only. When money-orders were delivered in the morning it was convenient to the people to receive payment for them on the very day, but now that they are delivered in the evening, people have to wait for payment till the next day. The inconvenience becomes the more felt when money-orders are received on Saturday, in which case people have to wait till the next Monday. It is to be hoped that the postal authorities will direct their attention to this subject and restore the old system of delivering money-orders both in the morning and in the evening.

Suggests the transfer of the general post office at Surat from Náhánpura to Kanpith.

The Suryă Prakásh (83) of the 21st June recommends the transfer of the general post office at Surat from Náhánpura, which has declined in importance, to Kanpith. Kanpith occupies a central position in the city and monetary transactions generally take place in that quarter. If the general post office be located either in Kanpith or at the railway station, it would prove very convenient to all.

Prevalence of gambling and scarcity of water at Gogha.

A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (113) of the 22nd June says that at present there are two large club-houses for gambling in Gogha. Gambling is even carried on in public streets. As gambling is prohibited in Bhávnagar, Sihor and other towns, gamblers come by rail to Gogha for that purpose. The correspondent then complains of want of repairs to the fort surrounding Gogha and of the scarcity of water felt by the people, and says that the only remedy for the latter complaint is to divert the course of the river Kreda. This will not cost more than Rs. 40,000 and will remove the complaint for ever. The Collector gave this year Rs. 1,100 for repairing the landing-place and the same amount of money was also contributed by him last year. If instead of thus spending money every year on repairs the amount were utilized for diverting the course of the river, the people would be much benefited.

Want of repairs to the Fulpáda and Katárgám roads.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 22nd June says in its local columns that the condition of the Fulpáda road is in such miserable condition that it is very likely to cause accidents to passengers and wheeled conveyances. At the distance of every yard or two there are pits on the road. The road from the Minás Wadi to Fulpáda should be inspected by some officer and immediate repairs should be effected. [The Deshi Mitră (94) of the 26th June makes a similar complaint, and adds that the Katárgám road is also in want of repairs.]

Complains of the negligence displayed by the Sukkur police.

The Sind Sudhár (137) of the 21st June says:—Our ears have been tingling with news from all sides of the negligence displayed by the police in the performance of their duties. Constables, Inspectors and Faujdárs ought to remember that unless they perform the duties for which they are paid by Government carefully and honestly, they bring discredit upon themselves. Discredit is a bitter pill to swallow, and unless the police officers are in love with it, they ought to be on their guard and must perform their duties thoroughly. A correspondent writing to us from Sukkur gives us to understand that the place has for the last two weeks been a hot-bed of thieves, and that not a night passes without bringing some fresh news of thefts. Nights are passed by these people in sleeplessness. Nay, we sometimes hear of thefts committed in broad day-light. We hereby draw the attention of the police authorities at Sukkur to this undesirable state of things, and we hope the police will henceforward try their best to put down these disturbances.

Points out the necessity of removing the theatre that has been newly erected at Sukkur.

The same says:—The theatre started by the Panjábi railway servants in the heart of Sukkur by means of private donations is every night a scene of two or three quarrels. Some young mischievous boys stealthily throw stones against the temporary theatre. This causes great annoyance to the Panjábis, who rush out infuriated and deal blows to all that fall in their way. Matters have now reached such a pitch that it is apprehended that people might set fire to the building. It is therefore high time for the Police Inspector or the Town Magistrate to order the removal of the theatre from the town to some hillock. Unless this is done, the adjoining houses and the people in the vicinity cannot be said to be safe.

Railways.

Makes certain suggestions for the consideration of the East India Railway Committee.

In an article headed "The East India Railway Committee" the Native Opinion (11) of the 22nd June says:—The examination of witnesses before this Committee is dragging its weary length, but it seems likely that the work of examination will shortly come to a close. We are however sorry that none of the Native merchants residing in London have appeared before the Committee, nor does there appear the least chance of any being called from here. The question before the Committee is an all-absorbing one, and as the extension of railways is likely to heavily tax the pockets of the Indian tax-payer, it was the interest of Government even at a little cost to have invited representative men from India to lay before the Committee their views on the subject. In the absence of any such arrangement the Indian Government ought to invite at least written answers to the several questions mooted and lay them before the Committee so as to enable the latter to collate and compare before commencing the work of reporting on the whole evidence. The Committee of 1879, with Professor Fawcett, we believe, as its head, had come to a settled conclusion that not more than two and a half krors of rupees should be spent annually on our productive and protective public works, and from what Major C. Gordon, Deputy Comptroller General of Public Works Accounts, seems to have said before the Committee on the point of expenditure on the proposed new railways, the Government of India still seem to hold to the same conclusions with a little modification. We should have liked to see the further despatches of the Government of India published with their enclosures before this Committee was appointed. They could have thrown a flood of light on the situation, showing how the amount of public debt proposed to be raised for railway extension would affect the financial position of Government. We know already that our very first railways did not pay their way for a number of years and Government had to make good the loss in the shape of interest. Being first in the field the companies ought naturally to have derived handsome profits, but as such was never the case, we do not believe that the proposed new lines can hold out any better prospects. External trade may improve, and Europe, particularly England, may purchase large quantities of Indian wheat, but no further extension can be undertaken without touching the pockets of the Indian tax-payer, and to this course even our Deputy Comptroller General is strongly opposed. The history of the past working of our canals and railways must not go for nothing; they teach us a lesson that a headlong rush in that direction must ultimately bring on a dreadful crash. If what has come before the Committee be the opinion of the present Government of India, we must say they are wise. A gradual development of our railways is the only sound principle that ought to guide the deliberations of the present Committee as well as those of the Government of India. Even if all the proposed productive lines were undertaken they will not pay so much as to cover all their cost for a number of years, much less the protective lines, their avowed purpose being to bring the copious plenty of certain districts within easy reach of those stricken by famine. We however think that some of the lines of the latter class should be taken in hand in parts of the country which are far away from the trunk lines and have not been sufficiently opened up. There is only one way of satisfying all this craze, and that is by allowing private capitalists to undertake this extension on their own responsibility. But even the consideration of this side of the question is fraught with some difficulties, such as the questions of the ultimate purchase of the lines by Government, the fixing of maximum rates, and other matters of general control. A member of the Committee asked Major Gordon whether it would not be advisable on the part of Government to allow private capitalists to undertake the work without imposing any conditions on their undertaking. Major C. Gordon seems to favour this view of the question, and none could have any right to question the powers of private companies if they were not to ask for any assistance from Government. But in allowing private companies to undertake the work without Government control, the ultimate object of Government—the purchase of the lines as a source of revenue—has to be kept aside, and this is an additional reason why Government should themselves take up the task. Unless private capitalists submit to the condition of purchase after an appointed period, Government ought to be slow to make any concessions to them.

Complains of the inconvenience caused to the pilgrims visiting Pandharpur by want of sufficient accommodation.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 26th June publishes a letter from a correspondent who complains of the inconvenience caused to the pilgrims that visit Pandharpur on the occasion of the annual fairs by want of sufficient and neat accommodation in the railway trains. The correspondent states that pilgrims are generally pressed like sheep into trucks intended for carrying goods and cattle. This affects the travellers physically, and thus makes them fall victims to contagious diseases. The Dnyán Prakásh says that it is a matter for deep regret that the railway authorities should pay so little attention to the comforts and conveniences of the class of passengers that contributes most to the revenues, and suggests that henceforth arrangements should be made that would leave no ground for complaint.

Makes certain suggestions for the consideration of the Sind Railway Company.

A correspondent of the Sind Times (5) of the 17th June says:—All inconvenience to the passengers could be avoided by alterations in the hours of arrival and departure of the trains between Karáchi and Kotri. Passengers from and for the Hyderabad District are obliged to travel by the mail train, because local trains are very inconvenient. Why is it that the down local leaves Kotri at 2 P.M., while the up local arrives at Kotri at about the same time? Mr. Campbell ought to know the fierce heat that is experienced between 11 A.M. and 5 P.M. all the way between Jungsháhi and Kotri, and yet he has so timed the trains that passengers both by the up and down trains must necessarily traverse the distance over which heat is most felt during the hottest hours of the day, as if no other arrangement was possible. Again the departure of the train from Kotri at 2 P.M. and the arrival of the train at Kotri at that hour means to the passengers from and for the Hyderabad District a previous or further journey in the heat of the day for several hours before the Kotri station or the passengers' destination in the Hyderabad District is reached. Some years ago we had night trains between Karáchi and Kotri during the hot weather. Why not revert to that arrangement now? The Sind Railway Company ought not to mind the extra cost, since passenger traffic pays them very well. There is another arrangement possible. The local train from Karáchi might be timed to leave at 1 P.M., arriving at Kotri before sunset; and the train from Kotri might leave at 8 or 9 A.M., arriving at Karáchi in the afternoon. The inconvenience will thus be minimized, while the change will make no difference so far as the Railway Company is concerned.

Municipalities.

Suggestions for the improvement of the water-supply of Bombay.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 22nd June, in a paragraph headed "Our Water-supply," says:—Again the question of our water-supply is on the municipal anvil, and it will have to be decided one of these days. Complaints about insufficiency of water have been too many and too frequent, and though the rains have set in we cannot say that the complaints have been silenced. The Municipal Commissioner, it is said, has already written to the Town Council on the subject recommending Mr. Tulloch's Tansa water scheme as the most appropriate and suitable for adoption. But the question that must at the outset deter the most sanguine of the members of the Corporation is the supply of funds. We are not yet clear of the debts incurred on account of Vehár and Tulsi, and therefore the question of an additional responsibility will have to be grappled with gradually but steadily. We do not think the Corporation is prepared to treat our rate-payers like the goose in the Æsop's fable which laid golden eggs. Let them utilize all available means to economize our supply of water; let them utilize the existing wells to proper purposes; and if after all this they find that the supply is scanty they may take up the Tansa scheme in hand. But to take up any scheme before taking any of these measures simply because it would benefit future generations would necessarily be a serious administrative blunder. [The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 22nd June says:—If those concerned are earnest about the project for another source of water-supply for the city the best thing for them to do would be to see if Major Tulloch's services could be secured for the proper and final survey and the subsequent superintendence of the proposed work. An addition to the consolidated rate on property and an increase in the rates of town duties, as also direct or indirect assistance from Government, should be made to combine for the purpose of carrying out this scheme. The Gujaráti (99) of the 22nd June approves of Mr. Ollivant's scheme for the improvement of the water-supply of Bombay, and expresses a wish that speedy attention may be paid to it. The Yajdán Parast (126) of the same date says that great caution should be observed in carrying out the scheme in order that the supply of water from the Tansa Lake may not prove insufficient for the requirements of the people of Bombay in the future.]

Objects to the proposed expenditure on new drains in the Fort of Bombay.

The Indian Spectator (1) of 22nd June says:—They are again going to spend 4½ lákhs on new drains in the Fort. What are the representatives of the Fort ward about? Have they moved as much as a muscle to question the utility of this fresh expenditure? Are they aware that in 1867 the drains were built on what was then considered the most approved principle? And what has been the result? They are a hundred times worse than the old drains. Are the representatives of the Fort ward aware that, however unscientific, the antiquated drains are sanitarily better than those constructed on the approved principle? The Commissioner quotes in his report a solitary complaint from a Pársi lady, and thereon passes the sweeping condemnation that the old drains are utterly useless. We must say that had the drains of 1867 not been constructed, there would not have been that loud cry from the residents in the Church-gate Street, Elphinstone Circle, Marine Street and Meadows Street which we have been hearing for the last ten years. The newfangled drains converted these sanitary streets into insanitary ones. The authorities admit that sewer gas escapes from these drains, but they attribute the evil to defects in design and want of sufficient water during dry days to allow the matter to pass out at the main outfall at 160 feet per minute. This may be true. But the question is, who designed the drains. Surely drains are not such inexpensive structures as to be rebuilt every ten years on the ground of their not turning out to be all that they were intended to be when originally constructed on approved principle? If the principle was all right, how have they turned out such dangerously defective structures? Admit for a moment that the explanation presently attempted stands the test of truth, the next question is whether the new drains now proposed will turn out better than the old ones of 1867, which are condemned? Who gives a guarantee that they will prove no nuisance—in fact, that they will convert the Fort into a healthy district? Will the Commissioner or the Executive Engineer undertake to guarantee this? When the Corporation is asked to spend 4½ lákhs, and that after spending something like the same or even a larger amount seventeen years ago, it is meet that that body should first satisfy itself that the expenditure will not be a waste and that ten years hence some new Commissioner or Engineer will not come forward to condemn them again in the same way as the existing drains are now condemned. For our part we protest against this proposed expenditure. We say it is wise to wait and have full practical experience of the working of the drains in the Kámáthipura district. Mr. Nawroji proposed this course, but as usual he was in a minority. The way in which the vital interests of the city are being jeopardised is indeed disheartening. There are not in the Corporation enough men of the character of Mr. Nawroji Fardunji to oppose reckless expenditure. We see all round that the drainage works are being proceeded with in hot haste. The procedure is scandalous; but how few are they who raise their voice against official high-handedness?

Local self-government in Ahmedabad.

The same newspaper says:—What are the prospects of local self-government in Gujarát? We believe the Government of Bombay sent orders in April last to the Collectors calling upon them to consult respectable citizens as to the best mode of working the local and municipal boards, and also as to rules to be framed, the plan of electing the commissioners, and so on. The Collector of Surat, enamoured as he was of electric light, found time to call a public meeting of the leading inhabitants, laid the subject before them through his assistant, and duly reported to Government the resolutions passed at the meeting. But Mr. Reid, the Acting Collector of Ahmedabad, seems to have disregarded the orders of Government. He laid his proposals before a meeting of the municipal commissioners only in such a way as to avoid fresh discussion and suggestions. Very probably Mr. Reid thinks that the Governor and his Councillors, however cautious, are wrong in sending orders of this nature. So he adroitly fences with the orders and finally ignores them altogether. All is now quiet at Ahmedabad, and the Collector and his young men are happy.

Native States.

Advocates the abolition of Political Agencies in Native States.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 22nd June, in an article headed "Treaty relations of Native States," says:—What are treaties and engagements entered into with the Native princes after all? Though sanctified with all the rites of a politico-moral ceremonial, obligations for the observance of them have, according to a civilized code of morality, no greater binding force than any ordinary business of life. Thus with the death of a reigning prince conditions guaranteed to be binding till the sun and moon last lose their binding force, and the succeeding prince is made to enter into a new treaty, often quite the reverse of the old one. Thus the powers and privileges of a Native prince are gradually clipped, and he is practically brought down to the dead level of an ordinary zamindár. But this is not all. Even during the life time of a reigning prince occasions are found, nay created, to suit the convenience of our Foreign Office, and the rights and privileges over which there would have been a deadly fight during former times are taken away by the mere force of the will of the Political Agent. Do we not know how the Native princes were first cajoled and then forced to give up their right of producing salt in their own States? This is only one instance, but we can enumerate them by hundreds. We have no hesitation in saying that the policy thus pursued is not initiated by the Viceroy, the Secretary of State, or the British Cabinet; the Foreign Office assisted by the Political Agency is its originator, while the British Cabinet and even the Indian Viceroys are led by them, because the Political Agent and the Foreign Secretary are between themselves credited with an earnest zeal to do justice to the Native States and to possess all the requisite information to grapple with the subject. A close study of Indian history tells us that the real and living ruler and arbiter of Native States is the Political Agent and not his superiors. Let him move his finger in a certain direction and the matters are so arranged that the Viceroy and the British Cabinet are forced to come to the self-same conclusion even against their will. And what has been or will be the result of this one-sided nature of the treatment accorded to Native princes is graphically described by the Calcutta Statesman, which concludes an article on the subject with the following sentence:—"The empire drifts under guidance like this into a mere nursery of sham and disaffections to explode eventually in ruin." We are not yet prepared to believe in these sentiments; however we may say that the pillars of an empire require anxious care and careful looking after. And who are these pillars of the British empire in India? Surely not a Sir Richard Temple, nor a Secretary of State nor a Viceroy. The Native States are the true pillars of the British empire, and it is these pillars that require very careful handling. To us it appears that the British administration, particularly the Political Department, requires reconstruction in reference to these pillars. The establishments of the Political Department require substantial retrenchment, the object for which the department was primarily created having been accomplished. The rights and privileges of Native States are now carefully defined; they now know full well that their safety and welfare are intimately connected with the safety and preservation of the British empire; they have now practically no internal or foreign relations to adjust, and under the circumstances no Political Agents are needed at their courts to watch their movements. We do not say that no Political Agents are required, but surely a legion of them is not needed like so many police peons to take care of every criminal entrusted to their care. If it is desired that the relations between the Native States and the Indian Government should be friendly, let the political agencies be abolished, and then there will be no fear of the mutual relations being ever strained. Whenever necessary, joint commissions may be appointed to settle the differences between the Native States and the paramount power. We think the question deserves the serious attention of the public, and a due ventilation of it may bring others to the views we hold on the subject.

Recommends certain grievances of His Highness the Holkar to the favourable consideration of Government.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 28th June says :—Among the several matters in connection with which His Highness the Holkar is said to seek an interview with the Viceroy, the principal are the following two :—In the troublous times of 1857 the Holkar is said to have rendered great assistance to the English, and the Secretary of State for India is said to have addressed the Government of India on two occasions with the view of assigning a portion of territory to the Holkar in recognition of those services. As nothing however has actually been done in the matter, the Holkar desires to have the question decided. Properly it would have redounded greatly to the credit and generosity of the British nation to have rewarded the Holkar's services without his asking for a recognition. But it appears that there is a difference of opinion between certain officers as to whether the services rendered were such as to deserve recognition, and moreover the interval of time that has elapsed since 1857 has served to throw the question in the background. It is however just that the English Government, having regard to their professed love of morality, should free themselves from obligation by rewarding the Holkar in some way or another. Otherwise the desire to assist the British Government with which Native princes appear to be influenced at present would remain unstimulated. The other grievance of which the Holkar seeks redress pertains to His Highness's relations with the Jaora State. It appears that recently there was some dispute between the Holkar and the Chief of Jaora regarding the tribute paid by the latter to the former according to a treaty of 1818. This dispute was settled by Sir Lepel Griffin, the Governor General's Agent for Central India, to the satisfaction of both parties; but in giving his decision Sir Lepel, without any reason and without hearing what the Holkar might have to say on the subject, stated that the Chief of Jaora was independent of and not subordinate to the Holkar. This statement has given satisfaction to the Chief of Jaora and he has accordingly changed his relations with the Holkar. The latter naturally resents this change and has therefore brought the matter to the notice of the Viceroy. Judging from a historical standpoint it is but right that Jaora should be a tributary State of the Holkar inasmuch as it has been created by the latter. If however the Government of India confirms the view taken by Sir Lepel in the hope that the tribute hitherto paid to the Holkar by the Jaora State would henceforth be credited to the British treasury, the decision would give rise to much comment, while England's honour would be compromised. [The Mahrátta (2) of the 22nd June says that it shall be glad to see that justice is done to the Mahárája and that his services at the time of the mutiny are adequately rewarded. The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 22nd June says:—The condescension of His Excellency the Viceroy to vouchsafe to His Highness the Holkar a re-consideration of the subject of his representations about certain alleged grievances is in accordance with the sound policy pursued by the present British administration in respect of Native feudatories. Government can afford to do this without running any great risk of being too often called upon to reopen questions that are once settled. By giving His Highness the Holkar the opportunity long sought for by him, Lord Ripon's Government has given to all the Native Chiefs of India a good ground for re-assurance that the chief representative of the Queen-Empress in this country is as mindful of the rights of her feudatories as of those of Her Majesty herself.]

Disapproves of the comments made by the Times of India on certain acts of the heir-apparent of Indore.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 28th June says:—If the two instances mentioned by the Times of India of the high-handed treatment of certain persons by prince Bálá Sáheb, the heir-apparent of Indore, have really occurred, it is necessary to enquire into them and measures should be taken for the prevention of such conduct on the part of the heir-apparent in the future. But the statement of the local Times suggests certain doubts. It cannot be believed that the heir-apparent is so very arbitrary as to disregard the principles of justice, and that the clever and far-seeing Mahárája would allow his son to misbehave himself in this way. It is possible that the sufferers in these two cases may have been punished by the heir-apparent for some fault. The statement made by the Times is quite one-sided. As the British Agent at Indore has interfered in the first case mentioned by the Times and has yet taken no steps against Bálá Sáheb, it appears that the latter is not at fault. As the other case is sub-judice, it is unjust at present to pass a censure on Bálá Sáheb. The acts mentioned by the Times as being high-handed are nothing when compared to the instances that sometimes come to light of the severity exercised by European district officers over Native subjects. The Mahárája, as is well-known, does not flatter Europeans and is therefore disliked by them.

Maladministration in Chhota-Udepur.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 22nd June says:—The people are very poor. As they are very ignorant, some of the officers of the State try to practise upon them. The burden of veth bears very heavily on them. Whatever grain was required by the State was hitherto purchased from the bazár, but now the officers have established the practice of buying it from the rayats at rates lower than those prevailing in the market. Many of the State officers follow the same practice on their private account. As this has the effect of aggravating the miseries of the poor rayats, the State Kárbhári should institute careful enquiries into the matter and at once check the evil practice. Some State officers have purchased grain worth hundreds of rupees for purposes of trade only. Those officers who have thus in a way plundered the rayats should be punished after making due enquiries in the matter. We hear that some people have left the State owing to the oppression thus practised by some of its officers. If the Darbár of Chhota-Udepur does not enquire into the matter, the British authorities ought to make proper enquiries. If no enquiry is made the people will leave the State and will not ask for redress, inasmuch as they are illiterate.

Comments on the subject of the adoption of an heir by the Jám of Navánagar.

The Gujaráti (99) of the 22nd June, in an article headed "The shuttlecock of a king," refers to the endeavours that are being made by the Jám of Navánagar to have his son by Jánbái recognised as his heir, and observes that khatpat always continues in Káthiáwár and Government have to frequently change their views concerning Káthiáwár matters. As the Káthiáwár potentates are irresolute and wanting in sense and learning, they are nothing better than puppets. Those who have experience of the dárbárs of Káthiáwár know this very well. The chiefs are more to be pitied than blamed. The Kárbháris are more at fault than the princes themselves, and the Jám of Navánagar is under the influence of such Kárbháris. Government frequently change their decisions when the Jám entreats them to do so, but this is not creditable to them. The subject of the adoption as heir of the Jám's son by Jánbái is now being discussed at Ganesh Khind. Mr. Maganlál Bápubhái, the Diván, has gone to Poona to take part in the discussion. The Diván has, it is said, assured the Honourable Mr. Peile that the Jám will not hereafter raise the question of adoption. It is therefore believed that the son of Jánbái will become heir-apparent to the exclusion of prince Ranjitsing. Government may act as they please, but the people are so much grieved at such frequent changes of views that they do not place confidence in any action of Government.

Berár Affairs.

Comments on the rules regarding the admission of pleaders into the Berár courts.

The Pramod Sindhu (13) of the 23rd June says that the rules published in 1883 regarding the admission of pleaders into the Berár courts appear to be defective in so far (1) as the interpretation of some of them is not very clear and (2) as they do not provide for giving permission to persons who are justly entitled to it. Rule 2 provides for the admission to the Berár courts of persons who are ordinarily practising in certain courts mentioned therein, and it is not clear what the words "ordinarily practising" mean. Does the rule allow a pleader remaining at Bhusával to practise in the Berár courts occasionally? As regards the second defect the Sindhu is of opinion that it is not just to debar a man who has acquired his early education in Berár, who has prosecuted his studies as far as the B.A. Examination as a Berár scholar, and who has completed his studies in law by passing the examination for the degree of L.L.B., from practising in the Berár courts. The Berár authorities generally recognize the right of graduates from Berár to some kind of service in the province, and it is not right to deny admission into the courts to a man who has passed the highest examination in the law. Berár has no separate University but is subject to the Bombay University, and therefore the qualifications created by passing the same examinations should not be different in Berár from those in the Bombay Presidency.

Points out the necessity of prescribing public service examinations in Berár.

The Varhád Samáchár (16) of the 23rd June says that it is to be regretted that at present no regular examinations are held in Berár for the purpose of granting certificates to persons who wish to qualify themselves for admission into the public service. As matters at present stand poor boys who cannot complete their studies in the high schools are the greatest sufferers. Public service examinations are held in the Presidency of Bombay, and it is not known why similar examinations should not be held in Berár. It is to be hoped that the Director of Public Instruction will take up this subject and try to secure a regular test for students wishing to enter the public service.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
1*st July* 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

- Advance of Russia in Central Asia:
  - Advice to Government to abandon the policy of distrust in the Natives. 5
  - Expression of opinion that the solution of the Russian difficulty lies in securing the hearts and affections of the people of India ... 4
- Allowances: Objection to the grant of — like tentage and house-rent to Assistant Superintendents of Revenue Survey on privilege leave ... 10
- Appointments:
  - Comments on the appointment of Mr. William Souter in the place of Mr. Fonblanque, Assistant Deputy Registrar, High Court ... 11
  - Suggestions regarding the appointment of a successor to Mr. Justice Bayley while on leave 8
- Bombay Legislative Council: Comments on the appointment of the Thákor of Limbdi to the— 7
- Bombay Tramway Company: Complaint against the— 11
- Factory Act:
  - Suggestion for the nomination of a Hindu as a member of the — Committee 9
  - Suggestions to the — Committee 9
- Frauds in Indian cotton: Injustice of the demand made by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce for the prevention of— 7
- Gambling: Prevalence of — and scarcity of water at Gogha... ... 12
- India Council: Advocacy of the abolition of the — as at present constituted and the necessity of Parliament exercising direct control over India 3
- Indian Ecclesiastical Department: Comments on the Hon'ble Mr. Hope's minute on the— 6
- License tax: Complaint against the heavy fines inflicted by the Collector of Broach for neglect to pay — assessment within the proper time... 11
- Locusts: Recommendation for the adoption of some measures for affording relief to the people of Kolába and Ratnágiri that have suffered on account of damages caused by— 10
- New theatre at Sukkur: Necessity of removing the— 13
- Pilgrims: Disapproval of the proposal to impose a poll tax on — visiting Násik during the approaching Sinhast festival 10
- Police: Complaint regarding the negligence displayed by the Sukkur—... 12
- Postal matters:
  - Complaint regarding the inconvenience caused to the people of Násik by the delivery of money-orders once in a day instead of twice as hitherto... 12
  - Suggestion for the transfer of the general post office at Surat from Náhánpura to Kanpith 12
  - Suggestions to the postal authorities of Sholápur 11
- Presidency Magistrates' Courts in Bombay: Disapproval of the proposal to construct one building for the accommodation of the three— ... 9
- Public Service:
  - Comments on the transfer of Mr. Ádarji Jivanji from Surat ... 10
  - Comments on the transfer of Mr. T. D. Mackenzie from Thána ... 10
- Reforms: Necessity of bringing to an early settlement the — regarding local self-government, education and publicity in legislation ... 8
- Revenues of India: Expression of opinion that an increase in the — is not a reliable index of an increase in her prosperity 3
- Roads: Want of repairs to the Fulpáda and Katárgám— 12
- Separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers: Advocacy of the— 8

Part II.—Railways—

- East India Railway Committee: Suggestions for the consideration of the— 13
- G. I. P. and Dhond and Manmád Railways: Complaint regarding the inconvenience caused to the pilgrims visiting Pandharpur by want of sufficient and neat accommodation by railway 14
- Sind Railway Company: Suggestions for the consideration of the— ... 14

Page.

Part III.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad: Local self-government in— 16
Bombay:
  Objection to the proposed expenditure on new drains in the Fort ... 15
  Suggestions for the improvement of the water-supply of— ... 14

Part IV.—Native States—

Chhota Udepur: Maladministration in— 18
Indore:
  Disapproval of the comments made by the Times of India on certain acts of the heir-apparent of— 18
  Recommendation of certain grievances of His Highness the Holkar to the favourable consideration of Government 17
Native States: Advocacy of the abolition of Political Agencies in— ... 16
Navánagar: Comments on the subject of the adoption of an heir by the Jám of— 18

Part V.—Berár Affairs—

Admission of pleaders into the Berár courts: Comments on the rules regarding the— 19
Public Service Examinations: Necessity of prescribing—in Berár ... 19

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

C. P.
28579
INDIA OFFICE
29 JUL 1884

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 5th July 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	English.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	Anglo-Mara'thi.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
16	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	Mara'thi.
17	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
18	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
19	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
20	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
21	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*24	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
25	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*26	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
27	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
28	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
29	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
30	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
31	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
32	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
33	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
34	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
35	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
36	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*37	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*38	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
39	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
40	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
41	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
42	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*43	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
44	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
45	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
46	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
47	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*48	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
49	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
50	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
51	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*52	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
53	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*54	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*55	„ Pratód	Islámpur	Do.	200
*56	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pústak	Poona	Monthly	200
*57	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
58	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
59	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
60	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*65	„ Shiváji[2]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	[illegible]
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 205

9387
INDIA OFFICE
4 AUG 1884

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	Mara'thi—continued.
*69	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
70	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
71	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
72	„ Vasaí (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	Anglo-Gujara'ti.
79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
83	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	Gujara'ti.
84	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
85	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
86	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
87	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*88	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
89	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,090
90	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
91	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
92	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
93	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
94	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
95	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
96	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
97	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
98	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
99	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*100	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
101	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*102	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
103	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
104	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
105	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*106	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
*107	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
108	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
109	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
110	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
111	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
112	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
113	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
114	„ Samsher Báhadur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
115	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*116	„ Saurashtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
117	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
118	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*119	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
120	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*121	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
122	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
123	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
124	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
125	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
126	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	Ka'narese.
127	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*128	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
129	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	225
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	Sanskrit.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	Urdu.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
134	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	Persian.
135	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	English, Mara'thi and Urdu.
*136	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
	Sindi.
137	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Hope's minute on the Indian Ecclesiastical Department.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 29th June, in an article headed "Mr. Hope on the Indian Ecclesiastical Department," says:— Mr. Hope argues on the subject in the following manner: "When we find these circumstances of a factory transformed into those of an empire, it is as legitimate in principle to expand the limitations of old documents to suit the needs of the mixed community which our action has both directly and indirectly created, and the rights to religious equality to which the admission of strange faiths into our pale has given birth, as to insist on their present impracticability for the purpose of evading inconvenient and expensive duties, or of applying theories which belong to European and not to Oriental society." Here some fallacies have crept in. The legitimacy of the documents to which he has referred has lost its value owing to altered circumstances. In fact the old documents were themselves based on faulty principles, now exploded. The East India Company, as private traders, were from their point of view right in making provision for the spiritual wants of their clerks and servants. But because private traders once made this provision for their own interests, was it fair that when they assumed sovereignty and proclaimed religious neutrality they should still provide for the spiritual wants of their servants, and that from the moneys of those who did not profess their faith? The injustice arose from the erroneous belief prevalent as regards the functions of a dominant power towards the church to which it belonged. But circumstances and views have so far changed that there is now no denial of the injustice involved in the principle that the sovereign East India Company had recognised, viz. of maintaining the Anglican church from the revenues of India. The relevant question may therefore be asked whether a principle admitted to be wrong should be applied to the present state of matters in India. How can you legitimately expand the practical utility of a principle admittedly wrong and perpetuate further injustice? The impracticability of permanently maintaining the Ecclesiastical Department is urged on the ground of justice and political morality, and not with a view, as is alleged by Mr. Hope, to evade "inconvenient and expensive duties." We are prepared to maintain what is legitimate and just. It is because Natives are fully convinced that the proclamation of 1858 is a just document that they insist upon maintaining it on all points. No such justice can be ascribed to any of the documents which from time to time were placed on record in years gone by on the subject of maintaining the dominant faith at the expense of a vast population not sharing that faith. But Mr. Hope warns us against "applying theories" to this question which "belong to European and not to Oriental society." This is indeed refreshing, emanating from a stout son of the Anglican church. But is it or is it not a fact that the paternal Government applies English or European theories to Indian conditions of society as best suits its purpose? Is there not a general complaint that you destroyed the ancient institutions of the land—almost disintegrated them—and substituted new ones on the rigorous English models pronounced after bitter practical experience to be quite unsuited and almost wholly mischievous? How is Mr. Hope prepared to reconcile the land revenue policy of the State as in vogue for almost fifty years past, especially the scientific survey settlement, and the rigid collection of the land revenue in cash instead of in kind? Is this policy, the bane of the majority of agriculturists in India, based on theories applicable to Oriental or European society? Or is it the theory of "sharp revenue officers"? Are we to be perpetually told that the State can with impunity appeal to Oriental or Occidental ideas just as it suits its purpose? Can a policy based on such ideas be held to be moral? Can it be called Christian? Is it worthy of imitation by non-Christians? What again has Mr. Hope to say to the alternate violation and enforcement of treaties with Native States according to the political exigencies of the hour as estimated by the whim or caprice of the political officers? If Mr. Hope is prepared to base his reasoning for the application of English theories to Indian society and Native States on the ethical principles above referred to, we must congratulate him on the courage of his opinions. What then is the net result of Mr. Hope's contention as to the value of enlarging the scope of the ancient documentary obligations regarding the maintenance of the Indian Ecclesiastical Department? That though circumstances have radically altered the relation between church and State, it is yet necessary for the good of the souls of its well paid servants that a portion of the taxes contributed by the vast non-Christian peoples of India be applied to maintaining an ecclesiastical establishment! The whole fallacy lies in the advocacy of the exploded doctrine handed down by the divines and statesmen of the middle ages—that the State is under moral obligation to protect the souls of its subjects. The late Sir George Cornwallis has observed:—"Experience has proved that the State is not fit for the office of promoting religious truth and repressing religious errors. The State ought to abstain from the assumption of a sectarian character for the same reason that it ought to abstain from carrying on trades or manufactures." Have you not long ceased to be a trading company? Then why should you not abstain from being a religious monopolist in India? Leave it to the Christian church to carry on its own functions untrammelled. Let it rely on its own capital and exertions as the trader does. But it will never do for the State to be a religious vendor and to administer to the wants of a particular sect at the expense of others. We stated at the outset that though Mr. Hope admits the principle of religious equality, he is not strong enough in that conviction. And he uses the arguments for a sectarian purpose. The stock plea, now well worn out and thrice exploded, is put forward—that inasmuch as there has been an alienation of revenue to the extent of three and a half millions sterling for the benefit of Hindu and Mahomedan temples and mosques, there should be a similar alienation of the State revenue for Christian institutions. Once that is done the State will for ever be free from religious responsibility. The endowment will be allotted among the contending Christian sects and there will be an end of the matter. No doubt the proposal is very plausible and taking. But it is not our purpose here to enter into its merits, for the analogy on which it is sought to be based is fallacious. There can be no manner of analogy between the so-called alienation of revenue of 3½ millions sterling for Hindu and Mahomedan temples and mosques and the proposed allotment of 5½ millions sterling from the revenues contributed by the non-Christian taxpayers of India. We proved to demonstration the hollowness of the analogy three years ago. The Viceroy and his two unbiassed English colleagues have settled this part of the controversy, and nothing more need be said about it. We confine our criticisms therefore to the plea of religious equality which Mr. Hope has urged in support of his contention. In paragraphs 31 and 32, where he descants at length on the religious obligations of the State, he remarks that "upon those who do not recognize that neither individuals nor nations can get on in the world without a God, and that God the Christian God, any words must produce no effect." Here is the clearest indication of the writer's intense earnestness. We shall refrain from entering into a theological controversy. But mark the vehemence of the utterance! Is there any manner of doubt that if the honourable gentleman were the chief representative of the paramount power he would soon make the policy of religious neutrality, so long maintained, a mere dead letter? Where is the toleration that is expected from a member of the Government that holds strict religious equality between the subjects? Can one speak of religious neutrality and in the same breath talk of the "Christian God" alone and consider "demonstration" on the dogma "superfluous"? Then again he quotes Gladstone having long ago taught that the State should recognise and support some religious expression of the community. Is the honourable gentleman quite sure that this is still the opinion of Mr. Gladstone and that there has been no radical revolution in the mind since he wrote fifty-four years ago his paper on "Church and State"? Admitting that he is of the same opinion still, is that a reason for an administrator who recognises religious equality to propound "that it is the right and duty of Christian rulers to use their power, influence and means to maintain the Christian religion" from revenues contributed by non-Christians? Mr. Hope would have the Government to use their power, influence and means to maintain Christianity, and that in spite of proclamations of strict religious neutrality! But the height of absurdity is reached when in his excessive zeal, scarcely worthy of an Anglo-Indian administrator, he actually attempts to support this reasoning—however sound it may be in a Christian country—by referring to precedents of bygone rulers of India. He observes:—"No preceding Government possessing a destructive faith has failed to mark its accession to power by providing for that faith from the resources of the State. When we look around upon the vast extent and variety of non-Christian endowments of every age from the most ancient to the most modern times, we see a striking monument of the bold expression of successive dynasties of their own convictions, coupled with the enlightened toleration of the convictions of others." We should have been glad had Mr. Hope cited a few instances from times the most ancient till now. It is very well to make a sweeping generalisation. But we want satisfactory proofs for the assertion. We do not say that now and then such has not been the case. But it is dangerous to jump from the particular to the universal. Mr. Hope remarks:—"Can a Christian Government repudiate its own similar obligations—shall it dare to do nothing for the religion of the cross?" This is all very well in its way. But coming as it does from a responsible adviser of Government it is really dangerous. Mr. Hope fails to see its impropriety. We have been again and again told that precedents of former rulers are out of the question. The British have nothing to do with them. And yet strangely enough the moment some policy is to be advocated, some fad to be satisfied, up crops some precedent of former rulers! The scripture, it seems, can at this rate be quoted for a double purpose.

Says that Natives can stand comparison with Europeans in regard to administrative capabilities.

The same newspaper says:—One argument used by the correspondent of the Bombay Gazette writing under the nom-de plume of "Plancus" in his letter of last week seems to have been overlooked by the Native press. It is in regard to the absolute superiority of European officers of Government over Native. We are afraid this remark is more trite than true. But like all well worn general assertions it has found favour even with thinking minds, and so far it needs looking into. When they talk of Native servants of the State being the inferiors of their European colleagues in calibre, we are tempted to ask which class of servants, judicial, revenue or educational? What scope have these public servants been given to show themselves to advantage? Have they ever been treated on an equal footing with Europeans? From the military service they are excluded by force. In civil employment too they are generally taken up as if on sufferance, and are given very little chance of distinguishing themselves. They have to fight against heavy odds in competition, and even when successful have to play second fiddles all their lives. Then again it must be remembered that the handful of Europeans who are sent out every year to administer the affairs of India are presumably the best material available, whilst here in India the Native service is generally recruited on the patronage system or at the most on the system of promotion by seniority of men who entered service ill-prepared by education to do credit to the higher offices. Under these and similar circumstances it is scarcely fair for the European to set down his Native fellow-worker as his inferior. Comparison will hold good only when the best educated ability of the land is freely utilised and when full scope is afforded for the exercise of such ability. Let our Mandlik become Law Member with the Government of India, and our Dádábhái, Finance Minister; let our Mitter become Chief Justice, and our Ahmed Khán, Bishop Metropolitan; and then it will be fair to compare their work with that of their predecessors. We are not disposed to deny that in the matter of direction and control the Englishman is our superior. But this is less owing to any difference in essential qualities than to circumstances. We have to consider climate and early training, and above all what we may call the prestige of possession. The advantages of climate and moral superiority will remain, especially if Englishmen are the same in India as they are expected to be in their own country. These advantages exert immense practical influence as the elements of a nationality are wanting in India. In this respect the Native may not be quite so useful for imperial purposes as the Englishman; but even in the highest offices he would have one advantage over the foreigner, that of knowledge of the country. As for general administration it is well known that three-fourths of the work for which Revenue, Political and Educational officers are paid so handsomely is done by their Native subordinates.

Makes certain suggestions regarding the working of the proposed agricultural banks.

In an article headed "The proposed Agricultural Banks" the same newspaper, says:—The most ardent advocates of the scheme must confess to the many difficulties with which it is surrounded. If then we have rightly understood one of the important details in connection with the mode of lending money, it is this: that the promoters are desirous of utilising the present system of middlemen by inducing them to bring customers to the bank on payment of a small commission. Now it is here that many well-wishers of the project think that there is a rock ahead. And the greatest care will be required in perfecting this most important, and not the least practical, part of the bank's business, so that it may not founder on that rock. The fear is entertained that instead of actually helping the needy rayat, whose previous debts are of course assumed to have been compromised under the liquidation clauses, the bank may encourage the very middlemen who had previously held him in the grip to ply their usurious trade, and that with the bank's money instead of their own. It is observed that the temptation to increase or develop the bank's special business by means of commission or brokerage may lead to the frustration of the primary object. These apprehensions have been publicly expressed, and their real significance would be better understood by those who have had actual experience of the present rather unsatisfactory working of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act. Though the last amendment has somewhat improved the previous state of matters, as is reported by official apologists, it cannot be denied that the general effect has been to drive away the village money-lender or middleman,—the very person who has hitherto been the chief instrument of credit in the village economy. We have been told in official reports that no such bag and baggage process as was apprehended by a portion of the press that criticised that Bill has been observed. We hesitate to believe that statement for the simple reason that actual facts scarcely harmonise with the reports of the special judges or commissioners. We have often asked for a full report of the views of these officials, but the Local Government has studiously withheld it from the public. No doubt such portions thereof as have suited its purpose have been smuggled into the Annual Administration Reports, but there has been no honest attempt to take the public into confidence. And so long as these reports of the special judges are allowed to lie in the secret bureaus of the Secretariat the public cannot have that confidence which the Government invites by means of garbled paragraphs. Our contention then is that inasmuch as one of the effects of the Relief Act has been to drive away the money-lender, who is a natural link in the social and political economy of the village, the bank will now one way assist him to resort to his old haunts or places of business. Now such a condition of matters, the return of the money-lender to his old place, is in itself a cause for satisfaction. And so long as he is precluded from squeezing the rayat by the old methods which have been universally condemned there is no harm done. The fear is, as we have said, lest the bank, by utilising his services as a middleman or broker on commission, may bring about the old state of affairs for the emancipated rayat. That the bank will have to put into motion some sort of paid agency to attract custom we readily grant. Without such agency there is not much hope of its financial success. The question then narrows itself into this—who are the proper persons who can be relied upon to act as middlemen? The misgiving presently is that the money-lender of old may borrow from the bank on his own book, and he will always be in a position to do so more or less in proportion to the value of the security he can hypothecate, and lend the money to the needy rayat at exorbitant rates. We are of opinion that much will depend on the character of the middlemen. Hence if any plan can be devised whereby respectable local workers, other than professional money-lenders, say retired pensioners or village officials of known honesty, are put into requisition as the agency to attract custom, the objection will in a measure be met, and the fear now entertained regarding the old sáwkárs may be considerably allayed. Nay more, such an agency when found to work satisfactorily in practice will have a salutary effect on the usurers. They will soon learn the value of advancing loans at moderate rates, and thus a healthy competition will arise which is certainly to be welcomed on its own account. Let it again be remembered that it will not be in all cases that the rayat will borrow through the respectable agency that the bank may put into motion. The many stringent conditions on which the bank will have to work, at any rate during the first few years of its existence, will necessarily keep a particular class of rayats—those who are hopelessly impoverished and whose debts it will not be in the power of the bank to compromise—out of the pale of the bank. But this class will be the one that will be most sorely in need of some money. These will have to resort to the old money-lender. And inasmuch as that lender will in future have generally for his customers the hopelessly indebted only, for we assume that those freed from debts will in the long run resort more to the bank than to the sáwkár, it will be to his advantage to be moderate in charging interest. There are other sources of danger also. But these we will discuss another time. Our object here is to point out to the benevolent promoters how much care and deliberation are required in perfecting the scheme on which they have been so long engaged. It is to be hoped they will avail themselves of the advice of practical bankers, Native and English, as well as of those who really understand the difficulties of the rayats. Great care and sagacity, we repeat, are necessary to safely launch this new bark of the bank. But we have ample faith in the wisdom of the chief promoter and his zealous colleagues. They will no doubt allow the public an opportunity of discussing their scheme when perfected. For it is needless to remind them of the value of public discussion. The light which may be thrown by the criticism of an unbiassed and sympathetic press will be of no mean service to them. The more such light is thrown on the intricate and obscure parts of the scheme, the greater will be the ultimate chance of its turning out financially successful compatibly with the cardinal objects in view.

Disapproves of the enhanced revenue assessments recently imposed on the people in British Burmah.

The same newspaper says:—So British Burmah's turn has come to undergo the thumbscrew torture of enhanced revenue assessments so rigorously practised in the older provinces of British India. We commiserate the Burmese landholder whom everybody envied till lately for his comparative immunity from the plague of scientific survey and refined assessments. No doubt the State will in due course shroud "two of the most accomplished" of these officials in the cerements of the Star of India for enriching the Imperial treasury to the extent of 250 per cent. in twelve years! Fortunate Mr. Bridge and fortunate Captain Parrott! They are to be congratulated on their success as "sharp" Revenue officers. We can show nothing comparable to their zeal on this side of India since the retirement of the Honourable Colonel Anderson, C.S.I. "Strike hard; rivet closer; give no whit of ease." Such was the iron order which the Titan of the Bombay Revenue Survey remorselessly enforced during his reign of terror. And many indeed are the tales of woe of the poor agriculturist, chainbound to the thirty years' enhanced assessment under that official's regime. The Rangoon Times says:—"The land revenue of the Hathawady District has increased from Rs. 1,66,000 in 1870 to Rs. 4,10,000 in 1882, or 249·9 per cent. in 12 years." But that is not enough for the satisfaction of Sir Auckland Colvin. So the zeal of the officials has of late been further stimulated. "Accomplished" as they are in the art of flaying the rayat, they think nothing of clapping on a further rate that will enhance the assessment 12 per cent. more! Heirs of Viking! Who dare contest your will? The fury of your blast would scatter to the winds the chaff which brings to the Imperial treasure a net revenue of Rs. 1,05,22,620 per annum. It may be noted to the distress of the benevolent reader that in Burmah the land revenue is assessed from year to year. So this exhilerating process of skinning the dumb cattle of Burmah will go on annually for some years to come till the Imperial conscience, now so deadened, wakes up one fine morning. So long as a powerful Commissioner can inform his masters that the enhancement is in no way "oppressive," what right have journalists to criticise the assessments? So the order has gone forth that assessments shall continue to be enhanced till they are doubled! And here is the sad commentary of the local journal on the result of this unconscionable State demand, "that taxation in the districts named has now reached a point beyond the power of the people to bear; and if the proposed enhancements are carried out the Government will be deliberately reducing the population to the pauper level of their brothers in India." The force of the words we have italicised is ominous. And yet they talk of "light land revenue" and so forth! May not the benevolent instincts of the present Government put a check upon this high-handed and most impolitic proceeding? If Burmah, daily growing in importance and prosperity, is not to become in a few short years as much a ruined province as "the garden of India" owing to the rapacity and inordinate zeal of conscienceless State officials, the Supreme Government must interpose.

Complaint against the forest policy of Government.

The Jagadádarsh (34) of the 29th June complains of the stringency of the forest laws and of the injustice of using coercion for the acquisition of forests in Native States and in alienated lands, and observes:—It is indisputable that according to the terms of the treaties Native princes are the sole masters of their territories and of the forests included in them. It is therefore a matter for deep regret that the British Government, that pride themselves on being just, should think of taking up the forests in Native States. If the authorities are labouring under the belief that a desire to bring money into the treasury irrespective of the considerations of justice constitutes the essence of wisdom and cleverness, we plainly say that it is a mistaken belief. The happiness and conveniences of the people should be the paramount consideration of a Government and the payment of taxes by the people has reference to the same consideration. The officers that secure promotions by representing to Government that they have done good to the State by increasing the revenues are mere birds of passage in this country, and therefore pay no attention to the possible ultimate effects of their acts. But that is not the case with the Government of the country. Government are interested in perpetuating their rule. How strange is it then that they should turn a deaf ear to all remonstrances against the policy of putting implicit faith in European officers! Greed for money is an uncontrollable vice, and we being of a different race it seems Government do not much relish our advice. It is probable however that sooner or later Government will suffer the consequences of this policy. Government need not be told that the consequences of some acts are immediately apparent while those of others are seen after a time. They should therefore not beguile themselves with the supposition that because the terrible effects of certain acts are not immediately discernible that they will never follow. Recently some European officers have been taken up by a mania for forests; and taking these officers as their guide, Government have been very active in making laws and regulations on the subject. This forest policy has proved troublesome not only to the rayats in the British territories but also to Jághirdárs, Native princes, &c. What can be more shameful than to forcibly deprive Jághirdárs of forest rights when those rights have been conceded to them by treaties? It is true that the British Government are a great support to the Jághirdárs, but it is equally true that the greatness and power of the former depend in a great measure on the loyalty of the latter. It may be urged that the Jághirdárs are paid compensation for the alienation of their forest rights and that therefore no injustice is done to them. But we ask, what is the reason of coercing them into surrendering their rights if they are not willing to make them over for the compensation offered, unless it is maintained that might is right? We admit the necessity of protecting forests in the public interests, but we suggest the advisability of relaxing the present hard restrictions so that the goal might be attained without causing hardship to the people. As regards the Jághirdárs' forests we are of opinion that Government should place before the Jághirdárs in a clear light the advantages of conserving forests and should induce them to adopt measures in that behalf. However illiterate, the Jághirdárs have sense enough to understand the coercion practised on them, and though they may not give utterance to their feelings their susceptibilities are sure to be wounded by the treatment accorded to them. Government are surely alive to the inadvisability of spreading disaffection among Native Chiefs, and it is therefore proper that they should give this subject all the consideration it deserves while it is not yet too late.

Objects to the policy of keeping cash balances in treasuries instead of putting them into circulation for commercial purposes.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 29th June says:—The policy of locking up cash balances in the State treasury when money for commercial purposes is most in demand, thus creating an artificial tightness in the money market and injuring trade prospects, is indeed mischievous. The hardship was most acutely felt during this busy season, and it is a fact that both the import and export trade has been somewhat arrested in its natural development. There is no earthly reason why realised taxes should not go back to assist those from whom they are collected. The moneys are public, and the greater the facility the public derives from their circulation the better. Ordinary prudence would dictate such a course. The veriest tyro in banking would suggest it. But somehow or other a strange fatality overhangs the State in all its financial operations. Whatever mischief the inexperienced officials create by want of foresight and ordinary mercantile sagacity recoils ultimately on the public. Why should this be the case? Why should trade suffer for the incompetence of State managers? A reform is required. In this connection we commend to those interested in trade the able article that has recently appeared in the Madras Mail. It argues out the whole case against the present mischievous policy in a way that will at once arrest the attention of business men.

Disapproves of the proposal to prevent adulteration of cotton by means of a legislative enactment.

In an article headed "Legislation against Cotton Frauds" the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 30th June says:—We hope that before any attempt is made by the Legislature of this Presidency to extend to the dealers in cotton the special legislative protection which is being demanded for them from more than one quarter, the question will be viewed as much from the standpoint of the cotton-producing rayat and the cotton dealer in the interior as from that of the cotton importing firms in England. We observe from the proceedings of a meeting of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, held on the 28th of May last, that the feeling in favour of some penal enactment, though it may not be exactly on the lines of the Cotton Frauds Act of 1869 or 1878, is growing steadily. It is said that there is a similar law in England for preventing the adulteration of hops. We are unable to say how far the circumstances of the two cases justify the comparison, but the question ought to receive very careful consideration both at the hands of the public and the Legislature before it is settled. The present is not the case of a class utterly helpless or in any wise ignorant and therefore needing the special protection of the Legislature by way of a special and somewhat stringent law. It has never been easy to understand why the provisions of the Penal Code should be insufficient to meet the reasoning of those who think, and very rightly so, that adulteration in cotton is a crime and must in the interests of the trade be punished as severely as any other offence. That Code was intended to provide against all possible classes of crimes. The bargain between the buyer and the seller is a private bargain, and as such involves questions of private contract to which the laws already existing should be able to do sufficient justice in the case of breach of stipulations or fraud between the parties. The cotton producer, moreover, cannot be supposed to have no idea of self-interest. If he has it, it must be easy to make him understand that if he adulterates bad cotton with good the demand for Indian cotton must go down and consequences ruinous to his interests must follow. The circumstances under which a demand was first made for special legislation to prevent the adulteration of cotton were indeed peculiar and do not exist now. Till 1880, when the Cotton Frauds Act was altogether repealed, the mercantile community did not complain of adulteration but they do so now. It would however hardly be correct to infer from this that the absence of adulteration during the time when the Act was in force was due to any beneficial operations of the measure. Mr. Revett-Carnac, some time Cotton Commissioner in Central India, showed in his report for 1869 that in the Berárs the improvement in cotton was the result of the prosperity of the rayat without the necessity of any Act for preventing adulteration having ever been felt. Thus what it was attempted to achieve in this Presidency with the help of a stringent penal enactment was done successfully in the Central Provinces without any such help, but by the mere supervision of an officer who looked to the requirements of the cotton producer and tried to improve his position. It seems to us that the cotton merchants both here and in Liverpool would do well to enter more deeply into the question than they do now. At present the tendency is merely to look at what lies on the surface and to try to grapple with the evil of adulteration because it immediately and visibly affects the industry. But might not the evil be due to the condition of the cotton producer and to the exacting demands and rigorous action of the land revenue officers as much as to any other cause? It is not by penal laws of a stringent character that evils of this nature are effectually remedied. Such laws would only serve to discourage the industry as much as adulteration itself, and would in no way improve the position of the parties concerned. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the 2nd July expresses disapproval of any fresh restrictions being imposed on the cotton industry of India in compliance with the wishes of English merchants, and remarks that if the owners of cotton presses were to keep strict watch for preventing adulteration in cotton no complaints would arise.]

Makes suggestions for the development of a knowledge of scientific agriculture in the Bombay Presidency.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 29th June says:—Madras has even been ahead of us in the matter of education in agricultural science. Its Saidapet Farm has been long since noted for its completeness as regards all the means necessary for agricultural experiments. We now hear that the Madras Agricultural College has been placed under the direction of the Educational Department. When will our Presidency imitate Madras in this respect? There are at present agricultural classes attached to several high schools here, but the funds at their disposal do not allow of experiments on a large scale being made. There is Mr. Ozanne, the Director of Agriculture in this Presidency, and a department of agriculture is being formed under him. Now what this department of agriculture is to do is not easily found out. Why not have a good and efficient agricultural college in this Presidency in connection with our Science College? The instruction imparted must be made interesting and inducement must be offered for a time to direct the attention of students to this useful science. The poor cultivators who pay the local fund cess may be persuaded to send their sons to this college, where they should be instructed without the payment of any fees. A vernacular class for teaching the most essential principles of the science with thoroughly practical instructions for their application should also be attached to this college. Native gentlemen of influence should be called upon to assist Government, if necessary, and an influential committee of education formed. The poor cultivators, it is generally admitted, do not receive any return for the cess they pay, and it is but just that some means should be devised to improve this state of things. Government can make a beginning even now by inducing the sons of poor cultivators to learn the first principles of the science in the classes provided in the several high schools. Maráthi primers should be prepared for such as can read. We hope Government will be pleased to take this subject into their consideration at an early date. We have ever urged that by encouraging private efforts in education Government can curtail some of its costly expenditure on high schools. Now the saving thus occurring may very usefully be applied to this purpose, and Government would be only acting justly in utilizing these savings to this legitimate purpose. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Complains of the prevalence of corruption in the mofussil.

The Din Bandhu (6) of the 29th June says that under the British rule no vice is so rampant as that of corruption. If Government had exercised vigilance in watching the nefarious acts of the cruel and sinful officials who receive bribes, this vice would not have prevailed to such an extent. Corruption is so much practised in the Government offices in the mofussil that even the most wretched Kunbi is not allowed to go scot-free. If the rayats do not comply with the demands of these corrupt officials, the disposal of their business is delayed and they are thus put to much inconvenience. Such a state of things is indeed very reprehensible and is calculated to bring discredit on the British administration which is likly to be classed with the Mogul and Peshwa administrations. The circumstance that such complaints do not meet with the consideration they deserve lends colour to the belief that this Government like the former administrations indirectly encourage such practices with the view of enabling low-paid officers to eke out their scanty incomes at the cost of the rayats. It is not well that Government should be blind to the miseries of the rayats simply because they will never raise their voice in the matter.

Approves of the appointment of the Thákor of Limbdi to the Bombay Legislative Council.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 30th June says:—The appointment of His Highness the Thákor of Limbdi to be Additional Member of our Legislative Council is certainly not a bad one. On the contrary the public has reason to be satisfied with it. It is true that the Thákor is an outsider and cannot be said to represent any community or district in this Presidency. But when has this principle of nomination been closely adhered to? At any rate His Highness is a well-educated prince, has been to Europe and has seen something of civilized societies. This alone is greatly in his favour. He was in his time one of the most promising students of the Rájkumár College and he entertains liberal views on political and other public questions. The fear that being one of those who have been brought up under the wings of officialism he may prove a strong adherent of Government views in the Council is therefore premature. At all events Sir James Fergusson is to be thanked for having selected a gentleman who can very reasonably be expected to feel the responsibility of his new position and measure the value of public criticism on his conduct in the Council. We may say that great good would accrue to the Native States if educated princes were selected in this way from time to time to take part in the proceedings of our Legislative Councils. They could see and learn much by a connection of this sort. [The Samsher Báhádur (114) of the 27th and the Gujaráti (99), the Kaiser-i-Hind (106), and the Rást Goftár (113) of the 29th June express approval of the appointment. The Samsher congratulates the Thákor on the great honour done to him by Sir James Fergusson, and says that the Thákor is much respected for his quiet temper, love for his people and impartial administration of justice. The people of Káthiáwár will be pleased at his nomination. It is satisfactory that no complaint has been made against him by his subjects up to this day. The Gujaráti observes that the appointment is not altogether objectionable. Government have done honour to a deserving person and the choice has been very happy. It is to be hoped that the Thákor of Limbdi will show his independence in the Council. The Native Opinion (11) of the same date expresses similar sentiments in its Maráthi columns.]

Disapproves of the appointment of the Thákor of Limbdi to the Legislative Council.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 29th June says:—The nomination of His Highness the Thákor Sáheb of Limbdi to the local Legislative Council is somewhat of a puzzle. It is difficult to say whom to congratulate most, the excellent Government of Mr. Peile, the enlightened nominee, or the happy people of Bombay who are to be represented by His Highness of a remote corner of Káthiáwár. To be sure the Thákor Sáheb is an intelligent man, who may be expected to appreciate his responsibility. He is decidedly a better choice than many a Rája or Diwán around him who do not know English. It does not appear that the nomination is made with an eye to Káthiáwár interests only. But whatever the object, we trust that the young Rajput nominee will acquit himself well. If the arrangement is a boná fide one it is likely to prove an excellent means of training, though it is a question if the Governor's Legislative Council is to be turned into a training school for rulers of Native principalities. But the worst feature of the appointment is that it weakens the already weak non-official party. The Council is divided into the official and the non-official parts. The former is a compact little body bound to be unanimous on all questions of moment. The latter is split up into the non-official proper and the semi-official. The Thákor Sáheb falls under the last-mentioned category and will so far strengthen the strong by still further weakening the weak. We pity His Highness sincerely and cannot congratulate those who advised him to accept the offer.

Disapproves of the nomination of the Thákor of Limbdi to the Bombay Legislative Council.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 29th June says:—From the latest issue of the Bombay Government Gazette we learn that His Highness the Thákor of Limbdi has been appointed an Additional Member of the Bombay Legislative Council. We do not know that the Thákor Sáheb has shown any special aptitude for the business of legislation. He is yet very young and therefore cannot have that knowledge of the world without which no one can be deemed a safe guide in matters of legislation. He may be a nice young man, who talks good English, shakes hands with every body in an excellent style, gives good dinners and has the best stud of racers which may be turned to immense advantage at the coming races. He may have what Professor Wordsworth calls a fine exterior, agreeable manners, courteous behaviour, but it is extremely doubtful if he has not also the necessary minimum of intellectual acquirements. These luminaries are very bright when they move in their own orbits, but disturb them a little and you take the shine out of them. Of course nobody can blame them for such a state of things. The times are against them. They are yet half a century behind the civilization around them: they have not shaken off the influence of old associations. One such ornamental member in the Council is quite enough. He may be brought if the business of the Council cannot go on owing to the tactics of what we may be allowed to call the opposition. But for the present our friend the Honourable Ráo Báhádur Ráste is quite enough grease to make the wheel of legislation go smoothly. Government, we think, have not made a happy choice in this instance. Some member more likely to act independently ought to have been appointed. [The Kesari (39) of the 1st July expresses similar sentiments. The Subodh Patrika (15), the Native Opinion (11), the Bombay Chronicle (79), the Gujarát Mitră (80) and the Yajdán Parast (126) of the 29th June, the Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 30th June, the Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 1st July, and the Prabhákar (12) and the Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 3rd July also express their disapproval of the nomination of the Thákor of Limbdi. The Kannadă Suvarte (130) of the 4th July says that the people of Bombay are not likely to profit by the appointment. The writer remarks that in the Council as at present composed there is no member representing the Kánarese-speaking districts, points out the advisability of securing an adequate representation in the Council of all parts of the Presidency, and mentions the names of Messrs. Trimalráo Venkatesh and Fernandez, pensioned Subordinate Judges, as the most eligible representatives for the Kánarese-speaking districts.]

Does not approve of the appointment of Mr. W. E. Hart as Acting Judge of the High Court during the absence of Mr. Justice Bayley.

In a paragraph headed "The High Court Judgeship" the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 30th June says:—The statement made by the Bombay Gazette that Mr. Hart, First Judge of the Court of Small Causes, will be appointed to act for Mr. Justice Bayley on the High Court bench during the latter's absence on privilege leave has naturally created some surprise. Not that Mr. Hart is wanting in ability, but there are, we believe, some gentlemen practising in the High Court who were called to the bar before Mr. Hart. The suggestion in the Indian Spectator that the acting vacancy should be filled by one of the Native advocates at the bar is good so far as it goes, but we do not ask for any special favour being shown to Natives in this respect. If among these advocates there is one who is in point of seniority next to the Honourable Mr. Farran, it would be unjust to pass over his claims and appoint a junior. Let there be justice to all, irrespective of all considerations of patronage or colour. [The Rást Goftár (113) of the 29th June requests Sir James Fergusson not to lose the present opportunity of temporarily raising a Native barrister to the High Court bench and thereby laying the entire Native public under obligation. The Honourable Badrudin Tayabji stands next to Mr. Farran, who has declined the Acting Judgeship. Two or three barristers are senior to Mr. Badrudin, but they do not command good practice in Bombay. If it be true that Mr. W. E. Hart has been given the Acting Judgeship, it is only to be regretted that he is not a Native. Mr. Hart is quite fit for the post, but the only matter for regret is that by his appointment the prospect of the nomination of a Native barrister to the High Court bench has become distant. The Native Opinion (11) of the same date urges the claims of Serjeant Atkinson to the Acting Judgeship. The Yajdán Parast (126) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Remarks on the administration of the A'bkári Department during 1882-83.

In reviewing the administration report of the A'bkári Department for the year 1882-83 the Mahrátta (2) of the 29th June says :—It is well known that Government have always shown considerable anxiety to repress the vice of drinking. It is to be regretted however that they have not been able to put an effective check upon its prevalence. The population of the country is increasing from year to year, and there cannot but be a proportionate increase in the consumption of intoxicating spirits and drugs. It is the duty of Government to see that this increase is only in proportion to the increase of population and not greater. On comparing the figures however it will be found that the increase in the consumption of liquors, spirits and intoxicating drugs is in advance of the increase of population. This sad truth is recognized by Government in the following words:—"It was fully recognized and stated that the consumption of the past few years has been smaller than it was before the institution of the reforms in the system of management, but it is undeniable that the consumption of taxed intoxicating liquor is again increasing." Is it not exceedingly painful to find that Government should be so helpless in preventing the progress of this demoralizing vice? If Government find themselves powerless to bring about this reform, what other power in the country can do it? The report says:—"It is beyond the power of Government to prevent this result, but it may be checked by raising the duty so far as is practicable without encouraging illicit manufacture. The views of the Commissioner of Customs, Salt, Opium and A'bkári on the question are known to be in accordance with those of Government, and His Excellency in Council is confident that the important subject of discouraging the excessive consumption of spirit will not be overlooked." What Government order can be more feeble than this? But feeble as it is let us see what steps Government have taken to carry it out. The first and the most effective step taken by Government in this direction was that it allowed more than one hundred new liquor-shops to be opened in the year under review! The figures of receipts and expenditure show that in the space of only one year Government increased their ábkári revenue by no less than five lákhs of rupees! And yet we are told that Government are constantly anxious to put down as far as they can this demoralizing trade! Only one feature of this branch of administration is encouraging, viz., that in the year under review there was a perceptible decrease in the number of shops licensed to sell foreign liquors, the number for the year 1881 being 475 and that for the year under review 442.

Disapproves of the policy of affording relief to the embarrassed nobility by means of special legislation.

In an article headed "The Sind Encumbered Estates Act and our land policy" the Native Opinion (11) of the 29th June says :—The Indian Council has been just passing the Sind Encumbered Estates Act, and it has passed other Acts for Jhánsi and Gujarát. We say that these enactments are directly opposed to the highest principles which guide human conduct in all relations of life, and whether you go to relieve a class of effete landholders in Sind or a body of oppressed mirásdárs paying a heavy revenue as in the Deccan, or another class like the big landed proprietors in Jhánsi, Ahmedabad and Broach, the result is just the same. You increase laziness, improvidence and other attendant evils and therefore set industry and foresight at a discount. The work of the college and school room is practically undone by such measures, and people see before their very eyes that the ways of the world are not the ways taught by philosophy and science. In the Sind Act just passed only one word has been amplified in its extent. The same thing was done in the Deccan by re-defining the word "agriculturist" in 1881. The result was confusion. Now what are the reasons given by the Legislature for this change in Sind? We know that certain embarrassed people in Sind had all the honours of an Act done to them in 1876 and this was amended by the enactment of Act XX of 1881. "Zamíndár" is there defined as a landholder paying not less than Rs. 300 of revenue for any one of the five revenue years next before the 14th day of the September of 1876. This itself was in our view a most objectionable proceeding; because there are hundreds of persons in each district of this Presidency who might be in the same position as these impecunious spendthrifts of Sind, and it seems to us intolerable that an Act like this should be left on the statute book one day more than may be absolutely necessary on political grounds. Sir Steuart Bayley talked of declining to "tinker" an Act of this kind frequently. Why not then amend it and all its fellows by a total repeal, leaving industry and prudence and foresight to do their own work? This would have been the more desirable as the officer now in charge of the working of the Sind Act is, we believe, Mr. Hart-Davies, who in reference to land questions is apparently a mixture of effete conservatism and theoretical radicalism. He denounces Sir William Wedderburn for considering the Deccan rayats as good pay-masters, but in the same breath he holds that "the great majority of indebted cultivators are sincerely anxious to be clear of pecuniary embarrassments" and for their behoof he proposes a law of insolvency, which he considers to be a universal scheme of enfranchisement or a judicial white-washing, as our people always term the practical operation of an insolvency law. In fact the dream of these Revenue officers appears to be more departments, more tinkering of natural laws, less scope for individual action and more complications. The recent pamphlet of Mr. Hart-Davies affords one of the strongest proofs of the evils of our present revenue system, and yet those evils are only aggravated by exceptional laws like the one just passed for Sind, and the gangrene grows daily and hourly because the authorities seem to be afraid to probe it to its source.

Does not approve of the contemplated increase in the strength of the Native army.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 29th June says:—Should the report regarding the contemplated increase in the strength of the Native army turn out to be true it would afford a fresh illustration of that oft-repeated assertion touching want of continuity in the policy of the Imperial Government. Only three short years ago they disbanded some Native regiments on the plea of economy. Of course vested interests being omnipotent it never occurred to the "confidential advisers" to see if saving of a substantial character was not possible in the overgrown expenditure on account of European troops. The administrative monopolists of the hour had no compunctions of conscience to turn some three or four thousand poor sepoys adrift on miserable pittances by way of pensions and gratuities. And now since Quetta is supposed to require immediate defence in view of the near contingency of Russians occupying Herat the proposed increase of the Native army by a few cavalry regiments is easily understood. Of course when military experts advise the State to be prepared for the defence of India's north-western frontier it will not do for laymen to question the validity of their opinion. So that what remains to be considered or criticised by the practical politician is the question of cost. Has the Supreme Government seriously considered that question? If from motives of economy some regiments were disbanded three years ago, what guarantee is there that the military expenditure will not again increase with rapid strides? The Viceroy in Council has been convinced that more railways in India can be built without any increased taxation. It is to be hoped he has carefully considered the question that the proposed new cavalry force can be raised without the additional burden of a pie on the tax-payer. It would be grievous were the finances of the empire again gradually subjected to enhanced military expenditure. For years past the Native press has been crying aloud against the waste of 16 millions for military charges. And here we repeat our old suggestion that a serious effort should be made to maintain the European soldier on something less than £200 per annum. The enormity of this item is a dark blot on the administration of British India, and whatever is done to materially reduce it will pro tanto remove the blot.

Suggestions for the improvement of the present condition of Native soldiers.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 4th July complains of the insufficiency of the remuneration enjoyed by the Native soldier and makes suggestions or the amelioration of his present condition. British soldiers generally enjoy greater privileges than Natives, and it is therefore advisable that the latter should be exempted from payment on account of their clothing. Sons of Native soldiers should be granted allowances varying from 1 to 2 rupees after they attain a fixed limit of age with the view of training them for service in order that they might be eventually taken on as recruits in the army. Attention should also be paid to their education. A series of books describing such of the martial exploits of Native and European soldiers as are calculated to instil into them a warlike spirit should be specially prepared for them, and their education should be left in the hands of the military authorities. Physical and military exercises should also receive due attention. If these suggestions are acted upon the Native army of the future will become an object of pride to the country. These measures will of course involve an increase in expenditure, but in return we shall see the Native army composed of well-developed, educated and spirited young men instead of the low-caste, weak and illiterate recruits of the present day. Education will make them more devoted than hitherto to the British rule and a reduction in the British army in India will become possible, thus causing a considerable saving in the annual military expenditure of the country.

Points out the inadvisability of placing ammunition at the disposal of sepoys in times of peace.

The Sind Times (5) of the 24th June says:—There is not the least doubt that the regulation which places 20 rounds of ammunition at the sepoy's disposal has to answer for many of the purposeless and causeless deaths due to running amuck. Is there no way of making the regulation innocuous? And if there is none, is it not high time to do away with it in the interests of public security and public peace? We fail to see why every sepoy should have so much ammunition in his pouch in times of peace. He is of course welcome to have it when he is on parade; but what earthly purpose does it serve when he is not on parade? Has this regulation justified its existence on one single occasion? Has it yielded even a particle of good at any time? Of course we don't deny that in troublous times when a mutiny or an invasion is in the wind such a regulation may be perfectly justifiable, nay imperatively necessary. But in these piping times of unbroken peace where, we ask, is the justification or the necessity? Is there any danger of Russian invasion just now? Even the most pessimistic screechowls in the press have no such foreboding. Is there any likelihood of a Native rising? None whatsoever. Then why in the name of common sense retain a regulation which is fraught with so much evil, while it has produced not a single good result?

Comments on a circular issued by the Collector of Ratnágiri regarding the destruction of locusts.

The Jagan Mitră (35) of the 30th June on the authority of its correspondent complains of the great havoc committed by locusts in the tálukás of Khed, Chiplun and Sangameshvar as well as in Hatkhambe and other places in the Ratnágiri Táluka. The Collector has published a circular directing the villagers to take measures for destroying locusts and intimating that no assistance would be rendered by Government as was the case last year, nor would any applications for remissions of revenue be favourably considered? This shows very clearly how far Government sympathise with the rayats in their distress. If the rayats have to do everything, what is there left for the authorities to do?

Complains that European and Eurasian lads are preferred to Natives for employment in the public service.

The Rást Goftár (113) of the 29th June, in an article headed "Sheer Injustice," complains that great injustice is done to Native officers by the promotion over their heads of European and Eurasian lads, and cites an instance in which the vacancy of a Superintendent in the Accountant General's office at Bombay was split up with the view of promoting two European assistants, and says:—But the Accountant General's Department is not the only department where such injustice is perpetrated; the authorities of the A'bkári, Customs and many other departments appear at present to be taken up with the mania of giving almost all the appointments in the uncovenanted service to Eurasian lads. This is quite opposed to the policy of the Indian and Home Governments. The doors of appointments in the covenanted Civil Service are as if closed against Natives; and the heads of departments are bent upon stifling the ambition of their Native subordinates to secure higher appointments in the Uncovenanted Service. The Secretary of State for India has expressly ordered that appointments in the uncovenanted Civil Service up to Rs. 500 should as far as possible be conferred on Natives. But the heads of large departments openly disregard this order. Government ought to call them to account.

Disapproves of the contemplated sale of certain plots of Government ground on the Kennedy sea-face.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 1st July says:—The Government of Bombay, after having achieved a reputation for weakness, is now bent upon securing a name for obstinacy. Last year when Government advertised for the sale of certain plots of ground on the Kennedy sea-face not a single tender was sent in to the Executive Engineer. Not daunted by this defeat Government have again come forward with an advertisement for the sale of certain plots of land on the Kennedy sea-face and near the Colába railway bridge. It is a pity that the opinion of the general public should thus be set aside and that Government should sacrifice the comforts of thousands of poor people for the sake of providing accommodation for the bungalows of a dozen rich folks. Moreover the erection of fourteen bungalows on this site will not remedy the present cry regarding want of house accommodation. We are of opinion that if these plots are offered for sale on the same conditions as were originally imposed, no purchasers will come forward, and we therefore recommend to Sir James the advisability of retracing his steps. If Government are really anxious to do some thing in the matter of the scarcity of house accommodation, let them turn their eyes to the disgraceful row of hovels known by the name of the Marine Lines Bungalows. They are a source of positive danger; in the event of a fire breaking out in the locality the whole line of bungalows with all the property in them will be destroyed. These sheds should make place for more commodious and neat structures. It is indeed very awkward that while European soldiers find accommodation in splendid barracks their superior officers should with all the handsome amounts of rent paid by them be housed in such quarters. We still hope that Sir James will retract the offer to sell plots of land on the Kennedy sea-face and call for tenders for the construction of bungalows in the place of the present sheds in the Marine Lines.

Complains of the want of regard shown to the conveniences of passengers by the officers on the Shepherd & Co.'s ferry steamers.

The Suryodayă (68) of the 30th June publishes a letter from a correspondent who complains that the officers on the ferry steamers owned by Messrs. Shepherd & Co. that ply between Bombay and Uran, Dharamtar, &c., are generally regardless of the conveniences of the passengers. The correspondent gives the particulars of an accident in which the wife of a certain kárkun in the Alibág Subordinate Judge's Court fell in the sea near the Carnac Bandár while in the act of taking the steamer, and says that according to one account the accident was caused by the absence of a ladder to bridge the distance between the pier and the steamer, while according to another account it was caused by the captain starting the steamer before the woman got in. The Suryodayă says that the matter deserves very serious consideration and is one which Government alone can deal with. [The Satyă Sadan (61) of the 28th June expresses similar sentiments.]

Insecurity of pedestrians using the Cruickshank road at night.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 1st July comments on the recent attempt at outrage by two sepoys of the Marine Battalion on an Ayah named Nágu on the Cruickshank road on the night of the 26th June, observes that the occurrence of such an event at 8-30 P.M. on a well-frequented road is certainly alarming, and shows the necessity of greater vigilance on the part of the police. The police and municipal authorities do not appear to pay sufficient attention to the safety of the pedestrians using the Cruickshank road. It is surprising that this road should have no police peons stationed on it. As the Cruickshank road is lighted from one side only the light does not penetrate into the maidán on the other side of it. It is necessary that arrangements should be speedily made for providing more lights and stricter supervision by the police on this road.

A complaint regarding the commission allowed to booksellers in Bombay.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 3rd July observes that it is said that the authorities of the Government Book Depôt in Bombay have resolved to allow three annas in the rupee as commission to mofussil booksellers, while those in Bombay are only allowed two annas in the rupee, and that too when books worth Rs. 1,000 are bought by them. It is true that booksellers in the mofussil have to bear the cost of conveyance, &c., but those in Bombay have to meet heavy charges on account of house rent, servants' wages, license tax, &c., which amount to a larger sum than that spent by the booksellers in the mofussil. The authorities of the Book Depôt formerly gave one anna in the rupee as commission to Bombay booksellers when books worth Rs. 100 were bought and the same commission was allowed to retail sellers of books. The management of the Government Book Depôt has for a long time past been in the hands of Marátha gentlemen, who have been having things in their own way in the matter of printing and selling books. The authorities sell books to the purchasers according to their wishes. They do not sell them to certain classes of purchasers. Sometimes they stop the sale of certain books and renew the circulation of some. They delay the printing of some useful books that can be got ready in a fortnight and make arbitrary changes in their prices. These matters deserve the serious consideration of the authorities concerned.

Complains against the conduct of Colonel Reeves in debarring a certain person from practising in the courts under the Kolhápur State.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 30th June says:—Colonel Reeves, the Political Agent of Kolhápur, had, it seems, requested Government to ask the High Court to cancel the sanad of pleader granted by it to Mr. Váman Govind Ránade who was convicted and sentenced to undergo imprisonment in the Kolhápur defamation trials of 1882. We hear the gallant Colonel has now been informed by Government that the High Court refuses to cancel the sanad. But so far as the courts under his jurisdiction are concerned he has issued instructions that Mr. Ránade should not be allowed to practise in them. The contrast between the action of the High Court and that of Colonel Reeves is striking. And yet we are often told that Political Agents serve as angels of enlightenment and civilization in the "barbarous" States of "despotic" princes. [The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 2nd July considers the arbitrary conduct of Colonel Reeves as highly objectionable. If what is stated be true, the Bombay High Court should request Government to call for an explanation from the Political Agent of the disregard shown to its authority. The Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Makes suggestions for securing a more equitable assessment and collection of the license tax.

The Poona Vaibhav (53) of the 29th June complains that the arrangements at present in force for the assessment and collection of the license tax are very objectionable. The original assessments are made by the kulkarnis—a class of officers who cannot generally be credited with a very fine sense of justice. These assessments are made subject to the decisions of the Assistant Collector and the Collector in appeal, but owing to a variety of circumstances it is not easy to get these appeals decided without delay and vexation. Again if the assessments are acquiesced in, the circumstances under which they are collected are not altogether unexceptionable. The means at present adopted by Government for giving publicity to the assessments fixed on individuals, though sufficient in villages, are not enough in the case of large towns. Several persons are unable to have any idea of the dates before which payment of assessment has to be made and they therefore make themselves liable to the punishment of fine. To remedy this state of things the Vaibhav suggests that the work of assessment should be entrusted to some non-official and respectable gentlemen and the work of collection should be carried on by means of tax collectors employed for the purpose whose business it should be to visit the houses of individual tax-payers.

Reviews the report of the administration of the Indian Postal Department.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 29th June reviews the report on the operations of post offices in India for 1882-83 and says:—On the whole the report is completely satisfactory. This is one of the great blessings which have followed in the train of the British rule. We have one suggestion to make. We think that the price of post-cards and half-anna envelopes should be further reduced. We are confident that any reduction in the rate will not in the least tell upon the finances. At the time when post-cards were introduced apprehensions were entertained that there would be a fall in the sale of half-anna envelopes. The statistics show that those apprehensions were groundless. A reduced rate will give a stimulus to correspondence and we are sure that the loss sustained by the reduced rate will be more than recouped by the increased correspondence. We also think that the postage on light newspapers should be further reduced and that in compliance with the request of the editors of the English newspapers the postage on the English newspapers should be lowered. Whether the present state of things allows of such an experiment being made is a question for Government to consider.

Suggests certain changes in the appendices of the report on the administration of the Postal Department of India.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 30th June says:—It is to be regretted that the appendices, copious as they are, do not refer to the receipts or charges on account of the departments of money-orders, insurance, value-payable parcels, postal notes and savings banks. If a proper apportionment of the total charges of the department had been made as respects its strictly postal and what may be called its commercial functions, it would have facilitated comparison and shown how far the latter functions are profitable to Government. So far as the same department works both sets of branches the proper course would be, we think, to apportion a part of the charges as the cost of each set and to regard the receipts from each as the revenues of the department. According to the present mode the department is shown to be working at a deficit, whereas no account is taken of the receipts from the very branches of work which have principally contributed to the increase in the cost of establishment and thus to the deficit.

A suggestion to the postal authorities of Surat.

The Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 29th June requests the postal authorities of Surat to close the mails at 8 instead of at 7 P.M. from the 1st July as the passenger train will arrive at that place later than hitherto from that date. The closing of the mails at 7 A.M. causes great inconvenience to the people. [A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 30th June makes the same suggestion.]

Complaint regarding late delivery of mails at Petlád.

A correspondent of the Ahmedabad Samáchár (84) of the 2nd July writing from Petlád says that the postman delivers letters in the evening though the mails are received at noon. If the delivery of letters were not thus delayed people could immediately reply to the letters received by them. The postal authorities should dismiss the postman from service.

Municipalities.

Local self-government in the Panch Mahâls.

The Rást Goftár (113) of the 29th June refers to the resolution of Government on the subject of arrangements for the introduction of the scheme of local self-government into Panch Mahâls and observes that the right of nominating representatives in táluka boards ought to have been conferred on the townspeople instead of being reserved in the hands of Government. Surely the people of the Panch Mahâls are competent to choose their own representatives. Perhaps the villages might on account of their unanimity be better able to choose their own representatives than the townspeople. The indigenous panchâyats have from old times made the villages familiar with local self-government.

Makes certain suggestions for the re-organization of the establishment of the Poona Municipality.

The Poona Vaibhav (53) of the 29th June dwells at considerable length upon the inconveniences attendant on the multifarious nature of the duties at present entrusted to the secretary of the Poona Municipality and says that now that the question of the re-organization of the establishment is on the municipal anvil it is meet that the members should consider the necessity of abolishing all the fat appointments and dividing the responsibility at present resting on a few officers among several officers employed on moderate salaries. [A correspondent of the Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 30th June makes a similar suggestion.]

Supports the requests of the Karáchi Chamber of Commerce for the repeal of the octroi duties on piecegoods and gunnies.

In an article headed "The Octroi Duty on Piecegoods" the Sind Times (5) of 24th June says:—The Karáchi Chamber of Commerce have addressed an able memorial to the Commissioner in Sind praying for the repeal of the octroi duty on piecegoods and gunnies. We think no one who reads the Municipal Engineer and Secretary's memorandum can feel any doubt that the duty imposed on these articles is illegitimate. The Municipal Engineer and Secretary estimates the total income derived from the octroi on piecegoods and gunnies together at Rs. 20,000 and that on gunnies separately at Rs. 7,200 exclusive of the cost of collection. We should like to know what this cost amounts to. It is surely not worth the while of a municipality like that of Karáchi, the income of which has been doubling every year since 1881-82, to retain an impost so prejudicial to trade for the sake of a paltry sum. The figures given by the Chamber show that Karáchi is the main emporium of the trade in piecegoods with Afghánistán, Beluchistán, Mekrán, Sonmiani, and Persia, not to mention the Panjáb, the Khairpur State, Cutch, Gujarát, Jodhpur, and Bháwalpur. This trade will advance by leaps and bounds if the harassing duty on the piecegoods now levied is abolished. We agree with the Chamber in thinking that the rules now before the Commissioner for allowing refund on goods exported after having broken bulk are objectionable. They are sure to engender frauds and to considerably clog the course of business. The tax of 1 per cent. on all piecegoods imported prevents, as the Chamber points out, the formation of a bazár where the wants and tastes of all classes may be met, and the introduction of new styles and makes into the Karáchi market. We hope the Commissioner in Sind will see his way to comply with the request of the Chamber.

Native States.

Comments on the views of the Pioneer regarding the necessity of enforcing reduction in the armies of Native princes.

Referring to the article that appeared in a recent issue of the Pioneer on the subject of reduction in the armies of Native princes, the Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 3rd July says:—The writer appears to hold that no State should maintain more troops than are absolutely requisite for the dignity of the ráj and suggests that the best way of utilizing the materials available is to form a reserve force that may be useful to the British Government in times of necessity. The object of the article is to show the inadvisability of placing any confidence in the loyalty and honesty of Native princes and of allowing them to maintain their armies. It is perfectly unnecessary to expose the fallacy of the reasoning followed by the writer and to refute the arguments used by him. But it is important to consider how far the allegations made are weighty, inasmuch as the Pioneer is an influential journal and because it is evidently prejudicial to the interests of this country that the English people generally should entertain any suspicions regarding our loyalty. The fidelity of Native princes and their solicitude to assist the British Government in times of trouble have hitherto been tested on so many occasions that no sane man can doubt them. Even the Pioneer recognises the valuable services rendered by the armies of Native princes during the late Afghán campaign. The critical times of 1857 gave a stronger proof of the sincere attachment of Native States to the paramount power. The Pioneer argues that the poor Indian tax-payer has to pay for the British forces that are maintained with the object of over-awing the armies of Native States, and suggests the reduction of those armies as a remedy for this anomalous state of things. This is indeed very strange logic. Does the Pioneer see any signs of danger to the British rule from the armies of Native princes? And will not a compliance with the suggestions of the writer involve an infringement of the assurance given by Her Majesty in the Proclamation of 1858 "that in their (Native princes') strength lies our strength and their contentment is our joy"? And will not such infringement constitute treason? And if so, shall we not say that the Pioneer is guilty of abetting treason? The British Government have no cause for fear from the armies of their Native feudatories and past experience has shown that these armies would prove very valuable in times of trouble. We are of opinion that Government should allow Native States to keep larger armies than at present and should compel the Chiefs to keep them in an efficient condition.

Comments on Mr. Gorst's views regarding the present state of affairs at Hyderabad.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 30th June quotes the views of Mr. Gorst, M. P., regarding the present state of affairs at Hyderabad as expressed in an article published in a recent number of the Fortnightly Review, and remarks:—We are not prepared to believe in the truth of all that has been said by this gentleman, nor do we understand the reason of the alleged change in the loyal attitude of the Nizám towards the British Government. Whatever the factions in the Darbár, there has been nothing that could have strained the personal relations of the Nizám with the paramount power. On the contrary the cordiality with which the Nizám received the Viceroy at his capital in February last and the advice given by the latter in the matter of the settlement of some knotty administrative affairs give an unmistakable proof of an enhancement in the long existing friendship between the Nizám's and the English Governments. Nor are there any indications of the existence of a contrary state of things. These facts and the circumstance that Mr. Gorst has adduced no evidence in support of his statements induce a conviction that those statements have been based on the materials furnished by a political faction the interests of which are not identical with those of the present Government. It is however undeniable that the present position of affairs at Hyderabad is not very satisfactory. Some of the Sardárs are not well affected towards the present administration. Some disputes have cropped up between the Nizám's Government and Nawáb Khurshed Jah and the Peshkar, and though both the sides of the question have not come before the public the fact seems clear that there is no unanimity among the members of the Darbár. Obscene placards have been pasted in conspicuous places in the different parts of the city of Hyderabad, and the circumstance that their projectors have not yet been hunted down gives countenance to the belief that the initiation in the matter is traceable to some high quarters and that therefore people do not come forward to give information. The split in the Nizám's Darbár was never so wide and there does not appear much reluctance in high quarters to interfere if necessary. The modern history of India fully shows that quarrels among Native States and among factions and parties have invariably proved beneficial to the cause of the British Government; nay, it will not be exaggeration to say that 99½ per cent. of the territory at present in the possession of the British Government in India owes its acquisition to this cause. Many well informed persons say, and we do not disbelieve them, that the administration of the Nizám's dominion is efficient, that there is no laxity observable and that the Arab troops in the service of the State are so smart that a foreigner cannot very easily think of assuming a hostile attitude towards the State. But without venturing to be very explicit we would advise the Nizám to bear in mind that all the Native States that ever carried their disputes before the British Government made havoc of their cause. The repetition of such a mistake should therefore be avoided. [The Hindu Panch (31) of the 3rd July expresses somewhat similar sentiments. The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 5th July says:—A good Resident can do much to improve the present state of affairs. Mr. Cordery has not given satisfaction during his administration. Leaving aside his legitimate work he has been writing minutes against the Ilbert Bill and in proclaiming the incompetency of Natives for high offices. An officer who has no sympathy with Natives cannot be expected to direct a Native State with earnestness of purpose. We are of opinion that a Resident of the stamp of the Honourable Mr. Peile, quiet and civil, may be able to do much for the State of Hyderabad.]

Advises the Maháràja Holkar to enquire into the allegations made against his heir-apparent by the Times of India.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 29th June refers to the allegations contained in the Times of India regarding certain high-handed acts of the heir-apparent of Indore and says:—But if at all true they are such as to call forth the expression of disapproval on the part of the sensible Mahárája of Indore. A check to the despotic disposition and overbearing behaviour of the heir to the principality of Indore such as that indicated by the incidents related by the Times of India is eminently calculated to do good to the prince and to redound to the credit of the Mahárája. That ruler would certainly be doing his duty to himself, his family and his subjects by taking the matter into due consideration. The Mahárája ought to be the first to understand that it will be to the advantage and happiness of all concerned if the subject of the complaint is looked into by himself ere any undesirable active interference on the part of the paramount authorities becomes necessary. [The Gujaráti (99) of the same date doubts the veracity of the allegations made by the Times of India and observes that if they be true the Mahárája should take measures to correct his heir-apparent.]

Berár Affairs.

Points out the necessity of encouraging the cultivation of garden lands in Berár.

The Pramod Sindhu (13) of the 30th June points out the necessity of reducing the rates of assessment on bágáit lands in Berár with the view of encouraging their cultivation. Sir Richard Meade, late Resident of Hyderabad, in his speech on the occasion of the Darbár of 1880 expressed his regret at the comparative insignificance of the area devoted to the production of garden crops in Berár and exhorted the people to pay special attention to the subject. The exhortation however has had no effect. It is necessary that both the people and Government should simultaneously work in that direction. The rates of assessment at present levied on garden lands are heavy, and this coupled with the additional circumstance that garden crops require greater labour and expenditure than jiráit crops accounts for the backwardness evinced by the people in the matter. The question of rates therefore deserves to be considered by Government.

Does not approve of the proposal to abolish the Educational Inspectorship in Berár.

The same newspaper discusses the question of the necessity or otherwise of an Educational Inspector in Berár which has been referred to by Ráo Báhádur Náráyan Bhái Dándekar in his report to the Education Commission, and says that the Educational Inspector with his present duties has sufficient work. If the office of the Educational Inspector is merged in that of the Director of Public Instruction the latter will not be able to manage properly his legitimate duties of "direction" in addition to the examination of all middle-class schools, which work is at present done by the former officer.

Suggests the establishment of a separate court at Jalgaon.

The Varhád Samáchár (16) of the 30th June in a communicated article dwells on the inconveniences that are likely to be caused to the people of Jalgaon by the reported transfer of the civil court to Telháre and suggests to the authorities concerned the advisability of establishing a separate court at Jalgaon.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
8th July 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Remarks on the administration report of the — Department for 1882-83 13
Administrative capabilities: Expression of opinion that Natives can stand comparison with Europeans in regard to— 5 Agricultural banks: Suggestions regarding the working of the proposed— 6
Agriculture: Suggestions for the development of a knowledge of scientific — in the Bombay Presidency 10 Appointments: Disapproval of the appointment of Mr. W. E. Hart as Acting Judge of the Bombay High Court during the absence of Mr. Justice Bayley 12
Bombay Legislative Council:
  Approval of the appointment of the Thákor of Limbdi to the— ... 11 Disapproval of the appointment of the Thákor of Limbdi to the—
    The Indian Spectator 11
    The Mahrátta 12
Building sites in Bombay: Disapproval of the contemplated sale of certain plots of Government ground on the Kennedy sea-face ... 16
Cash balances: Objection to the policy of keeping — in treasuries instead of putting them into circulation for commercial purposes ... 9
Complaints: Against want of regard shown to the conveniences of passengers by the officers on the Shepherd & Co.'s ferry steamers ... 16
Corruption in the mofussil: Complaint regarding the prevalence of— ... 10
Forest laws: Complaint regarding the stringency of the— ... 8
Frauds in Indian cotton: Disapproval of the proposal to prevent the adulteration of cotton by means of a legislative enactment ... 9
Government Central Book Depôt: Complaint regarding the commission allowed by the — to booksellers in Bombay and certain other matters regarding its management 17
Indian Ecclesiastical Department: Comments on the Hon'ble Mr. Hope's minute on the— 3
Land Revenue Assessments: Disapproval of the enhanced — recently imposed on the people in British Burmah 7
License tax: Suggestions for securing a more equitable assessment and collection of the— 17
Locusts: Comments on a circular issued by the Collector of Ratnágiri regarding the destruction of — 15
Native army:
  Disapproval of the contemplated increase in the strength of the— 14
  Inadvisability of placing ammunition at the disposal of sepoys in times of peace... 15
  Suggestions for the improvement of the present condition of the—... 15
Police: Insecurity of pedestrians using the Cruickshank road in Bombay at night 16
Postal matters:
  Complaint regarding the late delivery of mails at Petlád ... 18
  Review of the report on the administration of the Postal Department of India for 1882-83 18
  Suggestion of certain changes in the appendices of the administration report of the Indian Postal Department 18 Suggestion to the postal authorities of Surat 18
Public Service:
  Complaint regarding the conduct of Colonel Reeves in debarring a certain person from practising in the courts under the Kolhápur State 17
  Complaint regarding the preference of European and Eurasian lads to Natives for employment in the— 15
Sind Encumbered Estates Act: Disapproval of the policy of affording relief to the embarrassed nobility by means of special legislation ... 13

PART II.—Municipalities— Page.

Karáchi: Approval of the request of the Chamber of Commerce for the repeal of the octroi duties on piecegoods and gunnies ... 19
Panch Maháls: Local self-government in the— 18
Poona: Suggestions for the re-organization of the establishment of the—Municipality 19

PART III.—Native States—

Armies of Native princes: Comments on the views of the Pioneer regarding reductions in the— 19
Hyderabad: Comments on Mr. Gorst's views regarding the present state of affairs at— 20
Indore: Advice to the Mahárája Holkar to enquire into certain allegations regarding the high-handed conduct of his heir-apparent ... 21

PART IV.—Berár Affairs—

Educational Inspectorship: Disapproval of the proposal to abolish the—in Berár 21
Establishment of a separate court at Jalgaon: Suggestions for the— ... 21
Garden lands: Necessity of encouraging the cultivation of—in Berár ... 21

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

C.R.
30138
INDIA OFFICE
11 AUG

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERAR

For the Week ending 12th July 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
*16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	200
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
22	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*24	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*25	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
26	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*27	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
30	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
31	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
32	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
33	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
34	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
35	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
36	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
37	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*39	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
40	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
41	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
42	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
43	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*44	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
45	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
46	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
47	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
48	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*49	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
51	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*53	„ Pishháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
54	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*55	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*56	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*58	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
59	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
61	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
62	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
63	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*64	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
65	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*66	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
67	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
68	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
69	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 215

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*70	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
71	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
72	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
73	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
74	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*75	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
76	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*77	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*78	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
79	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
80	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
81	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
82	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
83	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,090
91	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
92	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
93	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
94	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
95	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
96	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
97	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
98	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
99	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
100	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*101	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
102	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*103	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
104	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
105	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
106	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*107	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
*108	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
111	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
112	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
113	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
114	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
115	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
116	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*117	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
118	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
119	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*120	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
121	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*122	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
123	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
124	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	225
131	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*132	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*133	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*134	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
135	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
136	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*137	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
	SINDI.
138	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that India was conquered more by contrivance than by the sword.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 7th July discusses the question "How did the English acquire India," quotes passages from certain authors to support its contention that England acquired India more by contrivance than by the sword, and concludes as follows :—Experience has proved that it is extremely difficult to maintain a dominion, even if acquired by the sword, by the strength of the same instrument, and there is no knowing when ruin may overtake such an administration. It is said to be a rule in politics that foreign conquerors can never keep the wheel of administration going without the consent of the conquered races. Our wise rulers are surely cognisant of these truths and we hope that they will not listen to the utterances of partisan writers. We have firm faith in the sense of justice of the British Government and sooner or later they will prove themselves true to their duty.

Says that the present system of administration is not calculated to do good to the poor.

In an article headed "The Condition of the Poor" the Sind Times (5) of the 1st July says :—Would there were a Hogarth to paint for us all the stages of our poor labourer's downward march to ruin. How many terrible laws bristle and hiss around him! How many legal harpies hold him in their grip! If he has a house it is unfortunately not his castle. He gets too many domiciliary visits from the police, the patrol and the excise officers. There is little mercy for the poor. No pleader argues their cause, no court listens to them. They cannot pay the court fees, which are the "open sesames" of our palaces of justice; and even when they can pay, they cannot afford to dance attendance for months together to await explanations, reports and what not, and finally to be dismissed with a warning and a lesson. The revenue law is as cruelly crushing for the poor as the civil and the criminal. The least percolation into a poor man's land from a Government canal means the payment of something to the Darogha. The lopping of a few branches from a tree on the banks of a canal for the cultivator's cattle means a criminal trial and fine, if not the payment of something to the Tapádár and the police. If a bund gets broken, who so likely to be impressed without wages as the poor cultivator? If tents have to be pitched for a local potentate, whom should the kotar select for the forced service but the same creature? And then there come the Surveyor and Amin and the train of hungry locusts that follows them. We know officers who wish to be kind to the poor but who cannot under the present regulations. We say the English law has no mercy for the poor, and this, we say, is inconsistent not only with policy, not only with equity, but with Christianity.

Comments on the Honourable Mr. Hope's minute on the Indian Ecclesiastical Department.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th July says :—The next question dealt with by Mr. Hope is the necessity of a moral police for the poor European and Eurasian population of India. State expenditure for their spiritual ministration is urged on the following ground :—"Living from hand to mouth, surrounded by every temptation to intemperance and vice, scattered so as to be relieved from the influence of public opinion, they are too often on the verge of falling into debauchery, violence and crime, and of becoming a source of danger to the Native population and a public scandal to the British name." The picture drawn is indeed harrowing. But are not the dark colours laid out too thick? At any rate apprehension touching debauched Eurasians and lower classes of Europeans "becoming a source of danger to the Native population" is pure imagination, whatever may be the "public scandal to the British name." The whole statement of Mr. Hope needs corroboration. A Parliamentary return showing the number of cases of divorce and judicial separation on the ground of adultery or alleged adultery among Anglo-Indians of all classes, as decided in the British courts in India and England, might prove very interesting. But apart from this aspect of the matter let us examine on other grounds Mr. Hope's advocacy of expenditure of State funds on poor Europeans and Eurasians. We again ask, is it just to apply the revenues of India to such a purpose? If these "debauched" low-class Europeans and Eurasians are too poor to have spiritual ministrations to make them highly moral, which we doubt, why do not their richer brethren of the same faith assist them? Is it not one of the precepts of Christ to save souls going to perdition? Can it be consonant with Christian feeling and Christian piety that the sinful soul yearning for grace and penance should be cured by the moneys wrung from a non-Christian population? Surely the "superior" class of well-to-do Anglo-Indians can tax their own pockets for such a highly Christian purpose. Because there are poor Christians who need religious aid why should the moneys of non-Christians be robbed to provide that aid? Will Mr. Hope answer the question? But we will go further and ask that gentleman whether instead of recommending the Indian Government to provide doctors for the souls of poor Christians will it not be more honourable to follow the example of Englishmen in England? If Christianity be not a dying and decaying creed but a living force, as its ardent advocates say, there will certainly be found not only innumerable missionary societies but a considerable number of Anglo-Indians of the well-to-do classes and of the intense "earnestness" of Mr. Hope ready and willing to provide for the spiritual wants of the poorer classes of Europeans and Eurasians. Let the Honourable Mr. Hope gird his loins and direct his zeal to the collection of funds by means of voluntary efforts in the cause of his morally bankrupt flock. Let him unfurl the banner of the cross and rally round it as many spiritual soldiers sharing his energy and enthusiasm as his power, influence and resources may command. Anglo-Indian society will not fail to reward him for this truly Christian service by raising him to the dignity of a saint. The name of Saint Hope will ever afterwards conjure up other zealous spirits to emulate his religious fervour and thus maintain in India the distinctive faith of the dominant race.

Points out the necessity of reductions in the land revenue assessment.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 7th July says:—It is indeed very satisfactory that Sir William Wedderburn and men of his stamp should have been using their best endeavours to assist Government in devising means for the amelioration of the condition of the Indian agriculturist, but it is a matter for deep regret that the most salient feature of the question should not engage their attention. This feature is the excessive assessments of land revenue levied upon the cultivating classes. It is very strange that there should be a thorough want of system in the work done by the assessment department during an administration that is proverbially systematic. The views expressed by eminent authorities like Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. Carpenter, Sir James Caird and others clearly point to the conclusion that revenue assessments are not effected on any settled principles but are regulated by the caprice of the Government officers, and that these officers have fixed the assessments at a very high pitch simply with the view of soothing the susceptibilities of Government. This has served to reduce the agricultural classes to the greatest straits. Even Sir Bartle Frere, who is well known for his partisan views, confessed that the orders of the Secretary of State prohibiting the levy of a tax in excess of fifty per cent. of the net income of an agriculturist had simply remained on paper. It is the revelation of facts like these that should be attempted by Sir W. Wedderburn and others similarly inclined. Whether you organize the establishment of agricultural banks or devise other methods of pecuniarily assisting the agriculturist, no relief is possible without a reduction of the high revenue assessments. But this means an encroachment on the Government purse, and who can be guilty of such a sin? Lord Ripon has nearly run out his course and yet he has not uttered a single word on this subject. This is as it should be. Land revenue forms the integral portion of the revenues of India, and why should Lord Ripon run the risk of incurring the displeasure of the Home Government and of having his name associated in the pages of Indian history with a deterioration in the revenues of the country? In these circumstances it is vain to expect a material reduction in the land revenue assessments. But notwithstanding this we take this opportunity to impress upon our Government that if they are at all serious about the amelioration of the condition of the peasantry they should lay down rules for the guidance of survey officers and thus systematize the assessment operations. We are of opinion that Government should be contented to receive a sixth portion of the net income of an agriculturist. The spirit of this principle was observed during the administration of Akbar and others in whose time the peasants were happy. We admit that this measure would seriously trench upon the revenues of Government, but we are sure the pecuniary loss would be more than outweighed by the political gain in the shape of the loyalty and contentment of the people of India. In times of need money might be forthcoming to any extent, but it would be difficult to gain the hearts and affections of the people even with the aid of money.

Advocates the separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers.

In an article headed "Separation of the Judicial from the Executive" the Mahrátta (2) of the 6th July says:—Lord Ripon has promised to do so many things that are calculated to do justice to the natives of the country that the remaining period of his tenure of office appears to be too short for the accomplishment of his objects. It therefore appears necessary that we should first induce His Excellency to make a longer stay amongst us that he may carry his generous reforms through. The separation of the judicial from the executive is such a difficult work that a Viceroy less strong and less prudent than Lord Ripon can never be able to carry the day amidst the host of difficulties that are sure to be raised not only by the non-official Anglo-Indians but also by the officials. It appears that Collectors and other revenue officers subordinate to them were at first entrusted with magisterial functions with the pure and simple object of protecting Government revenue against embezzlement and fraud. At first the powers of investigation and punishment were confined to persons in the Revenue Department only; but as the sources of revenue increased and as Government were for revenue purposes required to deal with persons outside that department these powers were enlarged, and the Collectors and their subordinates came to have jurisdiction over Her Majesty's subjects in general. We are told that the object of thus uniting the judicial and the executive capacities in one and the same person was "to obtain greater uniformity and simplicity of working." The Magistrate and Collector of the present day is described to be a sort of local Governor having great advantage in his management from this combination of powers. The Collector in India represents three distinct functionaries in England—the county magistrate, the metropolitan commissioner of police and the police magistrate. We really do not understand if there is anything in the tropical climate of India that makes such a huddling together of powers suitable to the manners of the country. The criminal law has undergone so many changes and has been modified so often that its weaknesses and defects cannot be questioned by anybody. The union of the Collector and the Magistrate in one person is a radical defect in the system—a defect which the Government of Lord Ripon is pledged to remove—and the only difficulty in the way, and not a small one too, is that of finding out money for the increased expenditure which the separation is calculated to involve. That the increased amount of money cannot be raised by further taxation is a patent fact. That Lord Ripon does not wish to do so by imposing fresh burdens he has publicly declared. Reductions are practically said to be impossible. The only course open is that we must either put up with the inconvenience or vote a voluntary supply of money for the purpose; but both these are impossibilities, and we must find out a solution within the four corners of our present means. Such a solution is not very difficult. Within the past few months it has been conclusively proved that the revenue derived from the sale of stamps has so much increased that it not only supports the civil courts but pays for the criminal courts as well and yet leaves a surplus. Justice demands that the expenses on account of criminal courts should be met from imperial revenues, and we may therefore suggest that this surplus revenue may with advantage be diverted towards meeting increased expenditure on account of the separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers.

Comments on the suggestion regarding the extension of Sir James Fergusson's term of office.

The same newspaper says:—As to the suggestion by a contemporary regarding the extension of Sir James Fergusson's term of office till the opening of the Exhibition opinions will scarcely differ. No doubt he has in this matter cordially acceded to the wishes of the citizens occasion after occasion. But is that a strong reason for extending his tenure as Governor of Bombay? The only solid ground on which such an extension can be recommended is the ground of successful administration, that is to say, of administering the Presidency in harmony with popular ideas and wishes. We are sorry to have to observe that judged on that ground Sir James has been a brilliant failure. Again, since the passing of the Government of India to the crown there has been no precedent in any part of the empire of a Governor or Lieutenant-Governor having been allowed to remain in office beyond the orthodox quinquennial period. The plea for retaining Sir James till the opening of the Exhibition is so childish that we are amused at its being gravely put forth in the columns of a journal that pretends to lead public opinion! We fear the suggestion is based on the adage that the wish is father to the thought. Some one who has the ambition to shine prominently in connection with the Exhibition has been circulating the idea. It is not difficult to trace the source whence this ridiculous suggestion has emanated. Have not many previous Governors laid the foundation stones of useful public buildings or given impetus to other institutions or works of public utility the completion of which they never remained behind to see? Surely one Governor is as good as another for the purpose of opening the Exhibition. A new Governor would like to make himself popular with all classes of the community, and the International Exhibition of Bombay, when an accomplished fact, would be just one of those cosmopolitan objects which would acquire for him that popularity. If however the official mutual adoration society that never ceases to burn incense in honour of its great idol is anxious to give parting kudos we can show it a way how to do it. There is now a general wish to have a permanent memorial in connection with the Exhibition. If there is a chance a few weeks hence, when the special committee has stumped the mofussil in aid of the guarantee fund, of such a memorial being adopted, the public would have no objection to its being named after Sir James Fergusson. We are convinced that the association of his name with the permanent institution would be more consonant to His Excellency's feelings and more in accord with popular sentiment than the ridiculous suggestion regarding the extension of his tenure of office. [The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 7th July endorses the observations of the Times of India regarding the advisability of a movement for the extension of Sir James Fergusson's tenure of office and says:—The time is not yet come for a review of the manner in which Sir James Fergusson has governed this Presidency, but it may not be out of place to remark that on the whole his administration has been fairly satisfactory. Without any attempt at show or bluster His Excellency has tried his best to rule in the interests of all classes. His failures, whatever they are, have not been great and the Native public have certainly found no reason to charge him with anything like a disregard of their opinion or their rights.]

Requests the Bombay Government to investigate the statement that the authorities at Aden are openly hostile to measures for the repression of the slave trade.

The same newspaper says:—What is this charge brought against the authorities at Aden by Dr. Schweinfurth in the Pall Mall Gazette? In the fourth and concluding part of his paper—The Future of Soudan—commenting on England's neglect as France's opportunity, the learned doctor observes that "it is often the case where the English Government has taken affairs in hand that the repression of the slave trade and the abolition of slavery have been allowed to sleep." This is a serious charge against England, the country most reputed to be earnest in its efforts to stamp out slavery, especially in eastern waters. In proof of his assertion Dr. Schweinfurth cites the case of Aden. "From my own experience the Government of Aden not only does nothing against the slave trade but is openly hostile to any measure of repression." This is a direct challenge and it is to be hoped that for the honour of the British flag at Aden the Bombay Government will see the propriety of thoroughly investigating the matter referred to by Dr. Schweinfurth. Either a contradiction must be given or those employed to repress slavery at Aden and the neighbouring ports should be severely dealt with. We are slow to believe that the Resident at Aden has so far forgotten the responsibilities of his high office—and the repression of slavery is one of the most important of them—as actually to assume an attitude hostile to the enemies of the slave trade!

Comments on the appointment of Mr. W. E. Hart to the Bombay High Court.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th July says:—Three years ago we had to perform the disagreeable duty of criticising in the public interests two very objectionable appointments then made in the High Court by its late Chief Justice. Among other matters we remarked on the grave injustice done to an able and hard-working Native barrister who was studiously passed over. The permanent appointment was his by right of service, apart from his personal merits. But as usual race and colour proved no mean obstacles in the way of preferment. The late Chief Justice was the whitest of white Bráhmans. During his judicial career on the bench he more than once showed his extreme partiality for the "caste" to which he belonged, though for all that it is even to-day a serious question if he in any manner helped to enhance the reputation of that "caste." On the contrary there is a deep-rooted suspicion in the Native mind that in the adjudication of cases before him, where the litigants were Europeans on one side and Natives on the other, he uniformly forgot to exercise that stern judicial impartiality for which he was otherwise so well respected. He twice passed over the Honourable Mr. Badrudin when the acting appointment of Advocate General had to be made. A junior counsel, even junior to Mr. Pherozsha M. Mehta and in no way superior to either of them in ability or legal acumen, was nominated. If justice to Natives of ability is most expected in any quarter, it is within the sacred precincts where impartial justice is daily administered to the humblest of Her Majesty's subjects. Still the High Court is the last place where Natives are done justice to, even after the outside public has recognized their intrinsic worth! But it was devoutly hoped that Sir Charles Sargent, the successor of Sir Michael, would do his best when occasion offered to wipe off the reproach and raise the reputation of his Court for justice and impartiality so far as appointments went. This respected Chief Justice has long since been known for his utter indifference to race, colour or creed. His antecedents had encouraged the hope that at last Natives would cease to receive that differential treatment which was in vogue during the regime of his predecessor. That hope has received a rude shock, and once more "caste" has triumphantly asserted itself. It only emphasises the charge of insincere professions to advance Natives which has been so often levelled against our rulers. Mr. Justice Bayley is about to leave for Europe owing to illness. A vacancy is therefore to be filled on the High Court bench. And it is now settled that Mr. Hart, the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes, will fill that vacancy. The selection has not only created a feeling of profound disappointment among Natives but has become the subject of scandal among the European members of the bar. Nay, the irritation and annoyance are greater because the ordinary courtesy of an offer has not been made or attempted. That the entire bar should be scandalised at such a job—a job pure and unmitigated—is natural. Now we have nothing to say personally against the First Judge of the Small Causes Court. Last week we were unconsciously betrayed into approval of the alleged appointment. We did not know then that not a single member of the bar was offered the acting Judgeship. We would again approve Mr. Hart's appointment were we told that the senior bar had refused it to a man. Meanwhile our criticisms are entirely directed against those who have had an active hand in the appointment. We believe there has been no precedent for conferring an acting Judgeship on the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes. Once, and once only, the experiment was tried under exceptional circumstances and it failed. That was twenty years ago when the late Mr. Hore was nominated to the High Court bench for three months. Vacancies on the bench have since been uniformly filled by members of the bar. Then why this untoward proceeding in the present case? Mr. Hart no doubt is an estimable gentleman. He is personally liked for his good qualities. When Mr. Hart, then a junior barrister of little standing and less practice, was asked to preside at the Court of Small Causes the appointment was certainly not made as a tribute to any special claims or qualifications. He has certainly acquitted himself as any other barrister of average abilities and intelligence would perhaps have done. It is difficult to say whether if another man of standing and experience had been appointed he might not have done better. One such piece of good fortune is however sufficient for a lifetime. And it jars on one's feelings of the fitness of things to find that it should serve as a recommendation for another piece of good luck. It is uncharitably recalled to mind that when at the bar Mr. Hart had never any practice and the likelihood of getting it in future did not seem very great. We do not know how far the malicious suggestion is true that Mr. Hart's strongest qualification lay in having a brother who is Private Secretary to His Excellency the Governor! Of one thing we are sure that if the Private Secretary at all interested himself in his brother's appointment he must have been honestly persuaded of his brother's superior claims and qualifications. But in all seriousness His Excellency the Governor would have been better advised in avoiding such a palpable job. The chagrin of the Native community is all the greater because they see in such an appointment a determination to set aside the just claims of Natives even when they have fully qualified themselves for steps in advance. His Excellency the Governor has on more than one occasion given indications of rising superior to race prejudices. We regret that with the vacillating inconsistency which has marked his actions in other directions he has just stopped short of taking a step in the right direction, for which there was the strongest case, and which would have indubitably evinced his steadfast adherence to the principle of administering equal justice to all classes of Her Majesty's subjects in this Presidency. There is a strong reluctance to give full effect to the repeated orders of the Crown and Parliament. The experiment of a Native Judge on the original side of a High Court has never been tried in any part of India. The only instance that can be cited is that of Mr. Romesh Chunder Mitter who last year acted as Chief Justice of the Bengal High Court. Sir James will earn a lasting reputation for fair mindedness and strict impartiality, if, imitating the excellent example set by Lord Ripon, he takes the moral courage to fill the vacancy by appointing the Honourable Mr. Badrudin Tyabji, who, we believe, is the senior member at present available for the purpose at the bar, Messrs. Starling and Branson excepted. If any official act can crown his gubernatorial career, now rapidly drawing to a close, it will be this. And we appeal to his genuine English instincts and love of fair play, irrespective of colour, race or creed, to render Natives that justice which is loudly demanded by the opportunity at present afforded him. [The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 7th and the Jáme Jamshed (104) of the 8th July express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Disapproves of the contemplated appointment of an European to act as head-clerk in the Chief Presidency Magistrate's Court at Bombay in the place of Mr. Lester going on leave.

The Jáme Jamshed (104) of the 12th July says that the appointment of Mr. Lester as head-clerk in the Chief Presidency Magistrate's Court at Bombay in the place of the late Mr. Barker in supersession of a Native was unfavourably commented on at the time in several papers. As Mr. Lester intends to go on leave for three months, it is said that one Mr. Gardener employed in the Mint is to be appointed to act for him. Such injustice is not to be expected from Mr. Cooper, the Chief Presidency Magistrate. It is surprising that Natives should act as High Court Judges but nevertheless should be considered unfit for the post of a clerk in a subordinate court.

Points out the necessity of establishing dispensaries in villages and of strengthening the present staff of Hospital Assistants.

In a paragraph headed "Civil Hospitals and Dispensaries" the Subodh Patrika (15) of the 6th July says:—During the last year it appears there were 202 hospitals and dispensaries open in the whole of the Presidency, which treated in all less than 1½ millions of patients. This is a very small number quite disproportionate to the total population. Not only are there numbers of places where no medical aid is at all available, but in many of those where it is it is either not availed of through ignorant prejudice or because it is not always sufficiently near the sick bed. To meet the wants of the people not only must there be a larger number of these institutions, but we think the present ones ought to be further strengthened with additional hands whose duty it should be to go about the villages in the vicinity visiting the sick. A sufficient stock of some at least of the specifics and of patent medicines ought also to be kept at all police stations and with every police patel to be available at all times for distribution among the suffering poor in the neighbourhood. The services of competent Native vaidyas and hakims may with advantage be engaged to some extent so that through prejudice against foreign medicines ignorant people may not remain without medical help. The authorities may do well to humour prejudice to that extent in the present state of advancement of the masses. These most humane institutions of a civilized government should be in a position to carry relief into the most obscure corners of ignorance and poverty where it is most urgently needed.

Disapproves of the Government resolution asking Native princes to contribute towards the guarantee fund of the Bombay International Exhibition.

The Jáme Jamshed (104) of the 9th July says:—Many sensible men must have been grieved to read the Government resolution asking Native princes to contribute towards the guarantee fund of the Bombay International Exhibition. All are anxious to see the Exhibition carried out on a grand scale, but then the people themselves should strive to attain that end and not beg of Native princes to contribute towards the guarantee fund. The condition of Native chiefs and princes is well known. The fact that none of the princes has yet sent any contribution towards the fund though the project has been before the public for about a month and a half and though some of the newspapers have been persuading them to do so and holding forth the example of the Thákor of Bhávnagar shows either their inability or want of conviction in the justice of the demand. This indirect pressure on the princes may secure a contribution of two or three lákhs to the guarantee fund, but it is extremely necessary that strict economy should be exercised in carrying out the scheme. The issue of the resolution in question is to be regretted for two reasons (1) because it gives a sort of relaxation to the people who can never become enterprising unless they are prepared to bear their proper share of burden and (2) because the Government of Sir James Fergusson has thus encouraged the objectionable practice of appealing to Native princes for help, which practice has now become very common.

Comments on the recent amendment of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act.

In an article headed "The Sind Encumbered Estates Act" the Sind Times (5) of the 4th July says:—The preamble of the Bill stated that it was expedient to extend relief in certain cases to the heirs of jághirdárs whose jághirs lapsed on their death, and to empower the Local Government to extend the time allowed for making applications for the benefit of that Act. In the present Act however we find that besides certain changes in the definition of the word "zamindár" there is a further addition extending the benefit of the Act "where a joint family or any other body of co-owners holds" to "each member of that family or body who would be entitled to demand a partition of the lands." Now the statement of objects and reasons does not contain one single syllable regarding this favoured class. It is not explained why, while every individual landholder must in order that he may be entitled to apply for relief be possessed of land assessed at not less than Rs. 300 a year, a person who is a member of a joint family holding such lands need not. For the provision amounts clearly to this: if A, a zamindár, pays less than Rs. 300 on account of land revenue he cannot avail himself of the Act; but if A has two brothers B and C, and in coparcenary with them holds lands assessed at Rs. 300, of which however he cannot on partition get more than one-third, he is entitled to apply for relief. This is absurd; and yet we find the Legislature in the most unequivocal terms enacting this provision without caring to explain its object or its reason in any formal or informal statement and without giving the public any opportunity at all of discussing its expediency or even of acquainting themselves with it. We say that this Act is a surprise to us. We never expected that Lord Ripon would be the first to contravene his own order for giving publicity to legislative measures. It is a bitter disappointment to us to see the Act passed in a hole and corner fashion at Simla without the public being in the least taken into confidence or invited to offer their opinion. Lord Ripon, we are sure, could never have knowingly or intentionally given his sanction to a procedure which is opposed to the principles laid down so emphatically in the resolution of 8th September 1882 on the subject of giving greater publicity to legislative measures. But still the sad fact remains that an Act intended for Sind, an Act of great local importance, was hurried through the Council with several new provisions never contemplated in the original Bill and of which no notice was given at all to the public at large. The original Bill contained only four sections, out of which two only were material and substantive. The present Act contains ten sections, which introduce no less than five important amendments besides the two mentioned in the statement of object and reasons and the preamble of the Bill. Now we would ask whether anyone in Sind, excepting perhaps the Manager and the Commissioner in Sind, was aware that all these new amendments of which no mention was made in the statement of objects and reasons were on the tapis. Was any Bill published containing these amendments? Was any such Bill translated into Sindi? Were copies of it distributed among the few associations in Sind and the press? Was it available for reading at any of our court houses or kacheris? We challenge the authorities to answer these questions. They cannot say that the amendments were all so unimportant that it was unnecessary to give them publicity. The amendments are assuredly extremely important, and therefore it is the more inexplicable to us why the rules for their wide circulation and publication were utterly ignored.

Objects to the rule by which Circle Inspectors in the Agricultural Department in Dhárwár are required to carry on official correspondence in Maráthi.

The Karnátak Patră (130) of the 2nd July criticises the rules laid down by Mr. E. C. Ozanne, Director of Agriculture, for the guidance of Inspectors in Dhárwár, and says:—One of the rules requires that the Inspectors shall carry on official correspondence in the Maráthi language. This rule is very objectionable in a district like Dhárwár where the common language of the rayats is Kánarese, and it is therefore very likely that the object of the appointment of Circle Inspectors will be frustrated. Moreover such of the Inspectors as may be purely Kánarese will not be able to carry on official correspondence in Maráthi and the result will be great confusion. It is also to be regretted that the general rule by which European officers newly posted to the Dhárwár District are required to pass an examination in Kánarese should not have been made applicable to the Agricultural Department.

Comments on the decisions of the Magistrates at Surat in certain ábkári cases tried by them.

The Gujarát Mitră (81) of the 6th July says that about three months ago one Nasarvánji Bezanji was charged by one of the A'bkári Inspectors at Surat before the late Mr. Dwárkádás Chaturbhuj, Second Class Magistrate of Chorási, with keeping his liquor shop open till 10 P.M. in contravention of the conditions of his license. The Magistrate acquitted him, holding that the ábkári farmer was responsible in the matter according to clause 45 of his agreement and not the accused who was his servant. This view regarding the liability of the ábkári farmer for the acts of his servants is also held by the Mámlatdárs of some other tálukás, and decisions in accordance with it are common. Subsequently however the same Nasarvánji Bezanji was prosecuted before the City Magistrate on the 21st June and fined in the sum of Rs. 15. Now there arise several questions in connection with this second decision. Why was such a long time allowed to elapse between the acquittal of the accused by Mr. Dwárkádás and his subsequent prosecution before the City Magistrate? Why do the A'bkári Inspectors persist in prosecuting the shopkeepers when they have been repeatedly told that the ábkári farmers and not the shopkeepers are responsible for breach of the conditions of the licenses? Who is responsible under article 45 of the agreement? If the ábkári farmer, is the fine imposed by the City Magistrate legal or illegal? If on the other hand the shopkeepers are responsible under that article, why should not such of them as have already been absolved from liability under a mistaken interpretation of the article be prosecuted again and punished? If the A'bkári Inspectors persist in unlawfully apprehending shopkeepers, why should not their conduct be visited with severe punishment? Why should not the Magistrates be asked to furnish an explanation of the conflicting decisions passed by them and why should they not be duly reprimanded if they are found to be in error? The Bombay Government ought to speedily take notice of these decisions and of the conduct of those who may have frustrated the ends of justice so that the mofussil public may not lose their confidence in the administration of justice by Government officers.

Does not approve of the system under which court fee stamps are required to be endorsed with the names of purchasers.

The Sind Times (5) of the 4th July says:—We do not understand why under the new system court fee stamps are endorsed with the names of purchasers. If the buyer changes his mind about using it he ought to be able to part with it to anyone who may require it. We can understand the reason why non-judicial stamp paper is endorsed with the name of the buyer, viz. to prevent fraud and forgery, but no reason is apparent for the endorsement on the court fee adhesive stamps. It only inconveniences the public.

Makes certain suggestions regarding the investigation ordered by the Commissioner, S.D., into the charges brought against the Mámlatdár of Chiplun by one Mr. Chanechor.

The Bakul (20) of the 6th July understands that the Commissioner, S. D., has directed the Collector of Ratnágiri to make enquiries on the spot in connection with the charge brought against the Mámlatdár of Chiplun by one Mr. Chanechor, and suggests that the Collector would do well to take the evidence of the women and children that witnessed the insult alleged to have been given by the Mámlatdár, instead of wasting his time in examining the police and other officers. The writer also points out the advisability of removing the Mámlatdár from Chiplun pending the enquiry, and adds that if a close investigation has to be instituted it might be well, in view of the other duties pressing on the Collector, to entrust it to the Assistant Collector in charge of the táluka. [The Satyă Shodhak (63) of the same date does not approve of the suggestion regarding the transfer of the Mámlatdár from Chiplun.]

Complains that the conveniences of villagers are not looked after by the managers of local funds.

A correspondent of the Jagan Mitră (36) of the 7th July writing from Pendur in the Málvan Táluka complains of the injustice of neglecting the interests of villagers in the matter of roads and other conveniences. It cannot be denied that villagers contribute the greater portion of the income derived from the local fund cess, and it is strange that while every effort is made to provide all sorts of conveniences for the townspeople no attention is paid to the requirements of villagers. The present system of village inspection followed by revenue officers is perhaps responsible for such a state of things. It is seldom that the Assistant and Deputy Collectors visit minor villages. For the purpose of examining the village accounts a certain number of villages are chosen as centres to which the people of adjacent villages are called with their account books, and thus the work of examination is completed without the officers having ever an opportunity of judging of the wants of the people. It is but proper that the heads of local fund committees should devise every means by which the funds at their disposal may be utilized in a way most beneficial to all classes of people.

Disapproves of the contemplated reduction in the number of district savings banks.

The Bombay Chronicle (80) of the 6th July refers to the resolution of the Government of India on the operations of the post offices of India during the year 1882-83 and says:—It is to be hoped that the contemplated step of curtailing the number of district savings banks will not be taken hastily or without perfect warrant in any important place. From the tables given in the resolution it would appear that there were in the year under review 180 district savings banks (not including the three Presidency banks) continued side by side with the postal savings banks. The opening and closing balances were respectively Rs. 74,61,212 and Rs. 75,47,670 and the number of accounts at the beginning and close of the year 21,880 and 21,972 respectively. These figures by no means show a falling off in the utility of the district savings banks. They appear to be a source of convenience to large numbers of people who should not be deprived of them without good and sufficient reasons and merely for the purpose of transferring the whole of the savings banks' business to the post office. When the question is again brought forward we hope the Government of India will insist on being fully satisfied of the inexpediency of continuing the district savings banks before passing final orders on the subject.

A correspondent of the Dnyán Chakshu (7) of the 9th July suggests that the word "reply" superscribed on reply post cards should be printed in the vernacular languages of India. This will save common people the fines inflicted on them by the officers of the Postal Department for making a wrong use of the cards.

Suggests that the word "reply" should be printed on reply post cards in the vernacular languages.

The Satyá Shodhak (63) of the 6th July points out the inconveniences suffered by village people on account of the paucity of village postmen at present employed by the Postal Department. Government have reduced the postage on newspapers with the object of developing a taste for reading, but people in villages are slow to take advantage of the concession inasmuch as newspapers are never received by them until they are a fortnight old. The writer suggests that a sufficient number of village postmen should be employed to allow of a more prompt delivery of letters, newspapers and money orders to the people in villages.

Points out the necessity of employing a greater number of village postmen than at present.

The Jagadádarsh (35) of the 6th July reviews the operations of the Postal Department during 1882-83 and points out the necessity of increasing the salaries of post masters in view of the additional work and responsibility entailed upon them by the creation of postal and stock notes and by the transfer to the Postal Department of the savings banks, money order, telegraph and other branches of business.

Points out the necessity of increasing the salaries of post masters.

A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (114) of the 6th July says that the post office at Udváda does not receive parcels and letters for insurance. For that purpose the people have to go to Párdi, a distance of seven miles. Moreover a savings bank is not attached to the Udváda post office, and the people therefore feel the want of that convenience. The correspondent requests the Post Master General to open a post office at Udváda which can transact business in all branches. Such a measure is calculated to remove the great inconvenience at present felt by the inhabitants of Udváda and the surrounding parts and to prove profitable to the Postal Department.

Certain suggestions regarding the post office at Udváda.

A correspondent of the Sind Sudhár (138) of the 5th July writing from Sukkur says:—The postal charges which the people in the territory of the Mir of Khairpur are required to pay are surprisingly exorbitant. The addressee of a paid letter received at Khairpur from other quarters has to pay half an anna on the receipt of the letter as the Mir's especial postal charge. If the same letter is postage bearing he has to pay one anna and a half. If the letter is not addressed to a man in the town of Khairpur but to one in the suburbs the addressee has to pay one anna and a half for every paid letter and two annas and a half for every unpaid letter. If the letter is postage bearing the British Government is paid one anna out of the sum which the Mir's servants charge. Not only this, but every person who posts his letters in the town post office has to pay half an anna for each letter besides the usual postal charge. The consequence is that many people in the Mir's territory send their letters through travellers to the British dominion with half an anna for each letter to enable the traveller to apply a postal stamp to it. This clearly proves that there are no proper postal arrangements in the Mir's territory. I hope His Highness will communicate with the British Government on this subject and give this grievance the attention which it deserves. If this is done the subject population will be saved much useless expense and the stigma now attaching to the Mir's rule will be removed.

Says that the postal charges levied by the Mir of Khairpur are exorbitant.

A correspondent of the same newspaper says:—Some time back we every-now and then heard of cases of gambling pending before the City Magistrate, but for several days no such case has reached our ears, although gamblers with three cards in their hands are seen on all sides on public roads carrying on their nefarious practice openly. They entrap several poor ignorant citizens in the meshes of their net and thus satisfy the cravings of their heart. It would seem that these persons have got a license authorising them to openly rob any and every person they meet with. What are the police doing? Is gambling no crime? To add to the evil, whenever gambling is carried on there assembles a large crowd of spectators, which proves very favourable to pick-pockets but is a source of annoyance to many poor people.

Complains of the prevalence of gambling at Karáchi.

Local Self-government

Makes certain suggestions regarding the introduction of the scheme of local self-government.

In an article headed "The Bombay Local Boards Act" the Mahrátta (2) of the 6th July says:—Three months have now elapsed since the "Bill to make better provision for the administration of Local Funds in the Bombay Presidency" received the assent of His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, and no doubt the necessary preliminaries are being arranged for the introduction of the scheme of local self-government under the Bombay Local Boards Act, 1884. It is plain that the elections cannot conveniently be held until the rains are fairly over, that is, about the end of October. If held now, we may predict a certain failure because the scheme being entirely a novel one many of the qualified persons do not know their rights under it in spite of the efforts of the peripatetic agents of the Sárvajanik Sabha of Poona, and consequently it may be safely laid down that a very small proportion of those who enjoy the right to vote will undergo the trouble and expense of going to the polling centres, more especially as absence from their homes at this time of the season, however short, is sure to be detrimental to agricultural operations. It will therefore be a mistake to hold the elections when field operations are going on. Assuming then that they will not take place until the 1st of November, it is worthy of consideration whether the interval cannot be turned to advantage by making those whose names are entered in the lists better acquainted with their rights and responsibilities, so that they may not find themselves unprepared on the appointed day. But how this can be effected is a question not free from difficulties. It is useless to rely solely on the Mámlatdárs and their establishments or the Patels and Kulkarnis. An idea strikes us, and we feel confident that if carried out it will effect much good. We think that Collectors should be asked to prepare a compendium of instructions in the vernacular, clearly explaining the main features of the scheme and pointing out the benefits of standing as candidates or of coming forward to record votes. Copies of these instructions should be widely distributed in each village and copies should likewise be furnished with the concurrence of the educational authorities to the school-masters in all villages with directions to read out and explain them to the people. This proposal involves no other outlay than the comparatively trifling one of printing the necessary number of copies of the instructions, while the good it is likely to effect is proportionately great. That some such measure will achieve great success is proved by the fact that a small pamphlet which was issued a year back was very well received at the time. We wish therefore our idea were taken up. Another matter second in importance only to the above is that mentioned in clause (6) of section 69, viz. the determination of the mode in which elections of members of local boards (other than elections of Inámdár members) shall take place and the places at which and the authorities under whose superintendence such elections shall be held. It is obvious that in order to avoid inconvenience to voters and to lessen the risk of their not attending to record their votes there should be as many polling places in each group as possible, so that no voter may have to travel more than three miles in order to arrive at a polling station. Females should be allowed to vote by proxy, as also Sardárs and others who enjoy exemption from attendance at the civil courts. Strict measures should be adopted to prevent corruption and fraud, and one of them is not to appoint low-paid officials, such as Mámlatdárs' kárkuns, to superintend the polling stations. In almost every táluka, besides the officers of the Revenue Department, there are highly paid officers of some one or other department such as the Judicial and the Public Works whose services should be freely availed of for the purpose. It would be bad policy to encourage the idea that officers of the Revenue Department alone are concerned with the success of the scheme of local self-government. It is also a question for consideration whether voters should be allowed to vote for any qualified candidate or only for one of those who have declared their intention to stand. It has been suggested in some quarters that the latter course should be adopted. It will certainly avoid confusion, but it is extremely problematical whether at the outset candidates will declare their intention to stand, because if unsuccessful they may meet with ridicule from the ignorant people. It therefore appears desirable that for the first few years, until the scheme becomes popular and the people become familiar with it, no such restriction should be placed. It is sure to keep off the best men. The greatest circumspection is thus necessary in framing the rules under section 69 (b). Considering all things we shall not be wrong in assuming that the Act will not come into force before November next. We hope however that further delay will not be allowed to occur. As the Act did not receive the assent of the Viceroy until the 14th March, and the lists have to be published at least two months before the date fixed for holding the elections, it was of course impossible for the new boards to come into office on the 1st April last. But the Act does not require that the local boards of every district should come into office on the 1st April, or indeed simultaneously on any other date, and we therefore trust that after the rains no time will be lost in introducing the scheme in each district as the needful preparations are completed, instead of postponing it until April next for the sake of fruitless uniformity.

Education.

Does not approve of the proposed enhancement of fees in the Deccan College.

The Poona Vaibhav (54) of the 6th July says that a report is current that the question of an enhancement of the rates of fees charged from students in the Deccan College is on the tapis. It is believed that there is a connection between this question and that of the establishment of a Government Law School at Poona. The question of starting a class in the Deccan College for teaching law has off and on been brought forward by the well-wishers of the College, but it does not appear to have been ever placed before Government by Mr. Chatfield. A representation on the subject having again been made during the recent absence of Mr. Chatfield on leave it reached the hands of Government. Before Government came to any decision in the matter Mr. Chatfield returned from leave, and finding that he had lost his long preserved game it is said, but with what truth we are not prepared to vouchsafe, that he hit upon this plan of raising the College fees. The present Director of Public Instruction has been holding office for a considerable time, but has never evinced a marked interest in the cause of education. At a time when the Government of India have been using their best endeavours for the development of educational reforms a more liberal officer in the place of our present Director would have accelerated the desire of acquiring education among the people of this Presidency. If therefore an officer of such illiberal views has at all recommended an enhancement in the College fees it is to be hoped that Government will pay no attention to the recommendation, but will continue their usually liberal educational policy. It is also to be hoped that Government will give such consideration to the demand for a Law Class in Poona as it may deserve. [The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 3rd and the Maháráshtră Mitră (46) of the 10th July express their disapproval of the proposed enhancement of fees in the Deccan College.]

Disapproves of the Government resolution excluding Natives from the Apothecary Class attached to the Grant Medical College, Bombay.

The Bombay Samáchár (90) of the 11th July says that the Government resolution regarding the exclusion of Natives from the Apothecary Class attached to the Grant Medical College is improper and hasty. It is not known what led Government to adopt this measure. Moreover Government have not given any opportunity to the public to discuss it. The doors of the Apothecary Class being thus closed against Native youths, many of them will lose a source of livelihood at a time when want of employment is greatly felt. The necessity for European and Eurasian apothecaries is not as great as that for Natives, for most of the dispensaries are attended by Native patients and Native apothecaries can best attend to their wants. The Samáchár requests Government to reconsider and modify the measure.

Railways.

Complains of the want of fencing by the sides of the Rájputána-Málwa Railway.

The Hitechchhu (82) of Ahmedabad of the 10th July refers to an accident that happened to the mail train of the Rájputána-Málwa Railway on the 29th June about 8 miles north of the Abu Road station by a bullock being run over, and remarks that it was owing to want of fencing by the sides of the railway line. Such accidents frequently occur and there is a likelihood of serious accidents happening and involving loss of human life. It is therefore necessary that Government should impress upon the railway authorities the necessity of speedily fencing the sides of the line.

Suggestions to the Sind Railway authorities.

The Sind Times (5) of the 1st July says:—A correspondent complains of the very great inconvenience to which the passengers are put by having to travel in the middle of the day. The carriages for 3rd class passengers are so crowded and besides so open on all sides that we shall not be surprised to hear one day of the Railway Company being sued for wilful negligence in the performance of its duties as a public carrier. Another matter that struck our correspondent was the way in which some respectable Native women were shoved into the female compartment with some questionable characters. We would, with our correspondent, strongly recommend to the railway authorities that an upper class should be introduced for respectable ladies.

Municipalities.

Comments on the unsatisfactory work of the Health Department of the Bombay Municipality.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th July says:—So strong seems to be the popular conviction regarding the unsatisfactory work of the Health Department that nothing short of a public meeting is enough to teach that branch of the municipality the duty it owes to the city. Here we have a costly establishment spending annually nine lákhs of rupees, and yet, judging by results, failing to give any adequate return. The cost of the administration alone absorbs one lákh, and yet there is none to look after the scavenging and halálkhor department. Business is carried on in a happy-go-lucky fashion. The Health Officer, whatever his other merits, does not emulate the energy which so much endeared his predecessor, Dr. Hewlett, to all classes of the people. Work is generally left to be done by a set of irresponsible Inspectors on large salaries who are scarcely qualified for it. The Health Officer is welcome to his belief in the efficacy of the work done by his subordinates. But the public, which has bitter experience of their non-efficiency, cannot put faith in the statement regarding the clearing of the augean stable which is spoken of in the annual administration report of the city's health and conservancy. There is a want of conscientious work and responsible supervision. The subordinates in the various branches are uncontrolled. Is it a wonder if people cry, and cry in vain, for the removal of this and that nuisance, small and great, unendurable or positively mischievous? And what do the officials say? Simply this: that it is impossible to attend to the complaints for removal of nuisances without money, as if the nine lákhs now spent were not enough! The only apology for all the mal-administration is want of funds! The question then arises whether the Health Officer has ever been able to check and test the work of his subordinates. While the Commissioner and the Engineer are busy framing estimates for the problematic drainage which is to make Bombay according to their notions a perfect Hygeia, and while the Health Officer is busy preparing roseate reports, it is no wonder that the city is left to be taken care of by the subordinates. This inertia can only be removed by the action which an independent committee appointed at a public meeting can bring to bear on it. Otherwise there is no hope of better conservancy for the city, though for all that the city will be required to pay more and more in years to come. A movement has recently been set on foot in Calcutta to consider the sanitary condition of that metropolis. It is much to be wished that a similar public enquiry were instituted here. The dark veil which conceals the mal-administration of the whole department needs to be torn in order to bring about a better state of matters. The patience and powers of endurance of the masses are being tried too far. Is there none in the city to put an end to the julum of the municipal Mahárájás? [The Yajdán Parast (127) of the same date complains of the wretched condition of some of the lanes and roads in the native town, and says that it is very troublesome to pass through such quarters, especially in this rainy season, when mud and pits full of water remain uncleaned for days together.]

Disapproves of the contribution of one lákh of rupees towards the guarantee fund of the Bombay International Exhibition sanctioned by the Bombay Town Council.

The Jáme Jamshed (104) of the 7th July considers the contribution of one lákh of rupees to the guarantee fund of the Bombay International Exhibition sanctioned by the Bombay Town Council objectionable and remarks that when 11½ lákhs of rupees have already been subscribed towards the fund it cannot be understood why the municipality should go to the trouble of having special legislation to enable it to contribute one lákh of rupees. The railway, navigation, tramway and mill companies will be the chief gainers by the Exhibition, while the municipality will have to incur additional expense. Why then should the latter go out of its way and subscribe to the fund when the former hold aloof? It is to be hoped that the Municipal Corporation will not support the resolution adopted by the Town Council. The poor taxpayer's money would be better utilized in adopting measures for supplying pure water and fresh air to them. If the municipality be anxious to contribute its share it should ask Government to sanction a grant of Rs. 25,000 out of municipal revenues for the maintenance of a museum or art gallery.

Native States.

Suggestions to Colonel West, Political Agent, Káthiáwár, for improving the condition of the province under his charge.

The Gujarát Monthly Journal (101) for the Hindu months of Fálgun and Chaitra 1940 (March and April 1884) but received on the 10th July reviews the career of Colonel Barton, late Political Agent, Káthiáwár, and offers certain suggestions to Colonel West, his successor, for the administration of the Agency. The question of the desirability of continuing the game laws in Káthiáwár should receive due consideration. Colonel West should look into the condition of the poor tálukdárs subject to the Agency, should take measures to improve it and should thereby earn their gratitude in the same way as the Honourable Mr. Peile has earned the gratitude of the poor tálukdárs of the Ahmedabad District. He should pay no attention whatsoever to the complaints made by anonymous and irresponsible writers. A bank should be established in Káthiáwár with the capital jointly contributed by the British Government and the Native States for the purpose of advancing money at a moderate rate of interest to those tálukdárs who may be in embarrassed circumstances. A committee should be appointed to determine the comparative advantages to the province of railway and irrigation works. Attempts should also be made to develop the mineral resources of the country.

Comments on the fine of Rs. 500 imposed on the Rája of Dhrángadra for failing to arrest certain highwaymen.

The Hitechchhu (82) of Ahmedabad of the 10th July says that the fine of Rs. 500 imposed on the Rája of Dhrángadra for failing to find out Manvar, the highwayman who recently plundered certain travellers near the village of Sara in the State of Sáyla, is not sufficient. The highwayman Manvar, who belongs to the Miyána caste, has been harassing the people for the last two years and is still at large. The reason for this is that he is brave and commands influence in the surrounding States. A State which frequently fails to detect highwaymen should be required to pay double the amount of the plundered property as fine besides making good the value of the property. If a fine of Rs. 100 or more per day be imposed on the Dhrángadra, Sáyla, Morvi and Mália States until they apprehend the highwayman Manvar and his companions they will somehow arrest them. Otherwise it will be difficult to capture Manvar, for he appears to be under the protection of some Native State. [The Gujarát Mitră (81) of the 6th July says that if the Dhrángadra State has purposely failed to detect the highwayman it should be still more severely punished, for if this be not done the insecurity of life and property in a province like Káthiáwár will be enhanced.]

Berár Affairs.

Points out the inconveniences of a High Court for Berár being located at Hyderabad.

In an article headed "The Berár High Court" the Vaidarbh (16) of the 21st June says:—The Resident at Hyderabad has since the establishment of civil courts been invested with the powers of a High Court for the Hyderabad Assigned Districts. He is also the High Court for the Residency Bazárs and the cantonment of Secunderabad. Until very lately the judicial work which the Resident had to do was very little. But since 1881 it has increased immensely. Where there used to be 6 or 7 civil appeals there are now above 50; and the same has been the case with the criminal work. A scheme for relieving the Resident of the judicial work has been under the consideration of Government. As usual the public are kept in the dark as to the details of the scheme. It was by a piece of lucky accident that the bare fact of some such subject being under consideration came to be known. We understand that the chief officers of the Commission were consulted. What views these gentlemen gave is not known. But from the facts that now and then have found their way into the English press it appears that a new office of Judicial Assistant to the Resident is to be created. This officer, it appears, is to be stationed at Hyderabad. Whether this officer will do only that work which falls to the share of the Resident or whether he will be given some portion of the work at present done by the Judicial Commissioner is not known. But in any case the scheme appears to us a most defective one. The great complaint of the Berár people has been the costliness of justice and what increases the pity of it is that it is not owing to any principle of administrative convenience that justice has become so dear in Berár. Even since the establishment of civil courts in Berár the Resident in Hyderabad has been invested with the powers of a High Court for the province. Now Hyderabad is more than 800 miles from Berár, and the location of the chief court of justice at such a great distance from the people for whose behoof it was created has been productive of very great hardship. But there was no help till now. The Resident is mainly a political officer who must remain at Hyderabad to watch British interests. Originally he was never intended to be a judicial officer. It has become necessary to relieve the Resident and appoint a separate officer to take up his judicial work. Now that Government are thinking of introducing this change it certainly behoves them to pay some attention to the miseries which are being inflicted upon the people by defective organization. The situation of the High Court at such a distance from the people puts these alternatives before them, (1) either to forego justice or (2) to pay an excessively high price for it. A party wishing to appeal to the High Court, if he engages any of the High Court pleaders residing in the province, has to pay the very large fees which they demand for undertaking a journey to Hyderabad. If he does not do that he must himself go there and engage one of the local pleaders. In either case large sums are required for travelling expenses. If we add to this the worry and trouble of a two days' journey, the loss of business, the troubles of a sojourn in a foreign place like Hyderabad, the number of the people who are prevented by these considerations from seeking justice, we can form some notion of the beauties of the present system. All this the people would be relieved of if the High Court of the province were situated in the province itself. We do not suppose Government have any interest in inflicting misery upon the people; and if a proper representation were made it is unlikely that it would be all thrown away. The only people who would gain by the court remaining at Hyderabad would be the suitors in Secunderabad and the Residency Bazárs. But they can hardly venture to put their claims against those of the Beráris. The High Court is supported from the Berár revenues, and those who pay ought to receive more consideration than those who do not.

Says that the proceedings of he Akola municipality should be conducted in Maráthi.

The same newspaper points out the inconvenience caused by the proceedings of the Akola municipality being allowed to be conducted in the English language and suggests the advisability of adopting Maráthi, which is the language of the district, as the language of the municipal board. As at present constituted the majority of the board are unacquainted with the English language and it is therefore natural that they should take no interest in the proceedings and nod assent to the opinion of the president. Moreover such a state of things is calculated to frustrate the object of imparting political education to the people, which is the backbone of the scheme of local self-government inaugurated by Lord Ripon.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
16th July 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Administration of India: Expression of opinion that the—as at present carried on is not calculated to do good to the poor 3
Agricultural Department: Objection to the rule by which Circle Inspectors in the—at Dhárwár are required to carry on official correspondence in Maráthi 10
Appointments:
  Comments on the appointment of Mr. W. E. Hart to the Bombay High Court 7
  Disapproval of the contemplated appointment of an European to act as head-clerk in the Chief Presidency Magistrate's Court at Bombay in the place of Mr. Lester going on leave... ... 8
Bombay International Exhibition: Disapproval of the Government Resolution asking Native princes to contribute towards the guarantee fund of the— 9
Conquest of India: Expression of opinion that the—was effected more by contrivance than by the sword 3
Dispensaries: Necessity of establishing—in villages and of strengthening the present staff of Hospital Assistants 8
Gambling: Complaint against the prevalence of—at Karáchi ... 12
Indian Ecclesiastical Department: Comments on the Hon'ble Mr. Hope's minute on the— 3
Judicial matters: Comments on the decisions of the Magistrates at Surat in certain ábkári cases tried by them 10
Land Revenue Assessments: Necessity of reductions in the— ... 4
Local Fund Cess: Complaint that the conveniences of villagers are not looked after by the managers of the— 11
Postal matters:
  Expression of opinion that the postal charges levied by the Mir of Khairpur are exorbitant 12
  Necessity of employing a greater number of village postmen than at present 12
  Necessity of increasing the salaries of post masters 12
  Suggestions regarding the post office at Udváda 12 Suggestion that the word "reply" should be printed on reply post cards in the vernacular languages 12
Public Service:
  Comments on the suggestion regarding the extension of Sir James Fergusson's term of office 5
  Suggestions regarding the investigation ordered by the Commissioner, S.D., into the charges brought against the Mámlatdár of Chiplun by one Mr. Chanechor 11
Savings Banks: Disapproval of the contemplated reduction in the number of district— 11
Separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers: Advocacy of a— 5
Sind Encumbered Estates Act: Comments on the recent amendment of the— 9
Slave trade: Request to the Bombay Government to institute investigations regarding the statement that the authorities at Aden are openly hostile to measures for the repression of— 6
Stamps: Disapproval of the system under which court fee—are required to be endorsed with the names of purchasers 11

Part II.—Local Self-government—

Scheme of Local Self-government: Suggestions regarding the introduction of the— 13

Part III.—Education—

Deccan College: Disapproval of the proposed enhancement of fees charged from students in the— 14
Grant Medical College: Disapproval of the Government resolution excluding Natives from the Apothecary Class attached to the—at Bombay... 14

Page.

PART IV.—Railways—

Rájputána-Málwa Railway: Complaint regarding want of fencing by the sides of the— 15
Sind Railway: Suggestions to the authorities of the— ... 15

PART V.—Municipalities—

Bombay:

Comments on the unsatisfactory work of the Health Department of the — Municipality ... 15
Disapproval of the contribution of one lákh of rupees towards the guarantee fund of the International Exhibition sanctioned by the Town Council 16

PART VI.—Native States—

Dhrángadra: Comments on the fine of Rs. 500 imposed on the Rája of — for failing to arrest certain highwaymen 16
Káthiáwár: Suggestion to Colonel West, Political Agent of —, for improving the condition of the province under his charge... ... 16

PART VII.—Berár Affairs—

Akola Municipality: Expression of opinion that the proceedings of the — should be conducted in Maráthi 18
High Court for Berár: Inconveniences of a — being located at Hyderabad. 17

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERAR
For the Week ending 19th July 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
*16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	200
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
22	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*24	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*25	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
26	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*27	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
30	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
31	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
32	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
33	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
34	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
35	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
36	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
37	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*39	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
40	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
41	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
42	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
43	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*44	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
45	„ Mahárásthră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
46	„ Mahárásthră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
47	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
48	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*49	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
51	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*53	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
54	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*55	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*56	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*58	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
59	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*65	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*69	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Comments on the British administration of India.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 14th July refers to the recent controversy between the Indian Mirror and the Pioneer on the subject of the advantages and disadvantages of the British rule, takes the latter to task for its severe and exasperating tone, and says:—Although it may be said that the benefits derived by India under the auspices of the British rule would not have been possible if the former administrations had continued to maintain their supremacy, still a consideration of the evils that have followed in the train of the present rule is calculated to induce a predilection for the old state of things. It is however undeniable, and we frankly confess it, that the present regime is pre-eminently characterised as establishing thorough security of life and property, the like of which India never experienced under any of the former governments, and the people are now at least formally free from such high-handedness as marked the rule of tyrants like Aurangzeb. Under the administration of straightforward, discreet and impartial rulers like Akbar the people were not as miserable as they now are on account of a very queer system of revenue assessments. The present condition of the peasantry might move the hardest heart. It is disgraceful that our people should have been reduced to such a plight while their destinies are in the hands of a nation that has reached the zenith of civilization. Is it not strange that a single unfavourable season should suffice to upset the equilibrium of the ryot and drive him to emigration? We cannot help saying that the British rule is solely responsible for this state of things. Though we do not hold that the present regime has thoroughly ruined the country, still we are sure that poverty made its appearance at the time the whites landed in this country. That a country that formerly prided herself in the designation of the "Golden Chersonese," and for the acquisition of which hundreds of nations sacrificed their treasures and the lives of their subjects, should have been reduced to such a woful condition is a circumstance that must bring a deep stain on the administration of the present rulers. There are various measures by which Government can with certainty remedy this unsatisfactory state of affairs. India's money is carried to England and is spent there without any recompense being made to this country. Judging from the standpoint of political economy this is a serious mistake, the perpetuation of which can only be accounted for on the presumption that "might is right." India is at present unnecessarily burdened with military officers enjoying enormous salaries, and there is a sure means of relief in the appointment of Native officers on lower salaries. It is not good to import European officers to fill minor appointments. Though a wholesale reform in the direction indicated is not at once possible, still we would advocate a reduction in the number and salaries of the numerous appointments at present held by Europeans. The present state of things cannot continue long, and it is high time that the British Government should take leave of all their double dealing propensities, should accord a liberal share to Natives in the administration of the country, should confer high posts on Natives, should cultivate friendly relations with the people and claim their assistance as a matter of right in times of necessity, should appoint Natives to responsible posts in the Military Department, and thus abolish all invidious distinctions between the rulers and the ruled. Such a policy is calculated to raise the people from their present depression and lead them to offer prayers for the eternal rule of the British.

Condemns the policy of Government as being solely directed towards securing an increase of revenue.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th July says:—None will deny the fact of "growing revenue." The question is whether this fact, so pleasant from the point of view of the Finance Minister of the day, is at all pleasant from the tax-payers' point of view. Who has ever heard of that voiceless creature? Has a revenue officer ever heeded the remonstrance of the impoverished ryot? Has he ever cared to acquaint his Government with his tale of woes? No. If at all, "general considerations," so-called rise of food prices, proximity of railways, increased trade in produce, are the causes assigned for the ability of the ryots to cheerfully pay enhanced assessments! Look how two zealous State officials have recently attempted to increase the land revenue by 12 per cent. on the Burmese, and that too after enhancing it 250 per cent. in 12 years! Look again at the benevolence of the Local Government that has recently tried to raise the wind out of wells, even when there are no wells to speak of! Is it a wonder if the land revenue increases while the impoverishment of the ryot increases pro tanto? But then is it not the guiding principle of the State to do everything for the people and nothing by them? The explanation of the official is everything; the remonstrance of the people nothing. They may cry in the wilderness. What is the cry of the subject to the State and what is the State to the subject? So long as the tax-gatherer can flay his victim to the skin, so long as fat surpluses are annually paraded, the toiling ryot may weep and weep in vain. Excise revenue may swell, but at what cost of the moral and physical deterioration of the people? The crime of drunkenness keeps beautiful pace with the "growing revenue" in excise. Is the Government of India aware of the mince meat they make of the poor toddy-drawers and distillers of fermented liquors? Are they aware how licenses are put up to auction and how ábkári farms are annually sold? Why, we can give a whole history of the action of the energetic Mr. Pritchard in this Presidency. But to what avail? When have Government listened to the tales of oppression of the poor toddy-drawers and other dealers? There is nothing so tormenting as the torture of refined British civilization, and all under the sacred name of progress! Then look at the trade in justice—growing revenue in stamps and unmitigated litigation. Dear justice and swelling law receipts! Last, though not least, there is the oppressive forest law against which petitions and memorials in numbers have gone to the authorities from every part of the empire. What do their contents disclose? The plain unvarnished fact of unmitigated julum by those vested with the powers of administering the Act. What a reign of terror have they established, and all under the plea of "conservation of forests"! Instances of the daily practice of arbitrary powers by the forest officials are indeed a legion. But who has ever redressed the grievances of the villager? What measure of relief has the Government of India offered to the weak and the oppressed? Thus are "growing revenues" complacently poured into the State treasury, while India cries like a child, helpless and unable to raise her voice. Such is the righteousness of the administration! We appeal to the humanity of Lord Ripon to say whether such righteousness can ever exalt the reputation of the nation of which he is such a shining unit. For it is a naked fact that sharper than the sword of destruction are the shears of the tax-gatherers in every department of the State.

Discusses the question of separating the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 13th July says:—Another objection, which is a purely sentimental one, is that the Collector being the representative of Government in the district would lose much of his influence if he were divested of his judicial powers. We admit the force of this argument, and we would yield to none in holding that the highest officer of the district, the sole representative of the sovereign power, should command the greatest respect from his subjects. Although we thus admit the principle, we do not justify the means. To keep the sword of Damocles hanging over the heads of people in order to command their respect differs from the accomplishment of the same object by the beneficial influence of love and desire to do good. In the former case the feeling of respect is only passive and will disappear when the least opportunity is afforded; while in the latter case it is genuine, it is real, it is deep-rooted in the heart of hearts and cannot go away until by continued efforts it is driven off. The histories of successive Governors and Governors-General can very well illustrate this view. Lord Lytton gagged the mouth of the Native press and therefore his mistaken Afghán policy was not subjected to unfavourable attacks, but immediately he left these shores hostile criticism poured in like a stream. Sir Richard Temple held the people of this Presidency in check and nobody opposed him, strong and powerful as he was, but at the hour of his departure, when in consequence of his having given over charge of his office he was powerless, "the other side of the picture" was presented to the public with such moral force at its back that the attempt to perpetuate his memory by means of a public address collapsed in a while the price now charged is Rs. 15. How unjust is it that the price of su an adulterated stuff should be raised from Rs. 3 to Rs. 15? Has the Collect given permission to the farmer to charge Rs. 15 for a maund of bháng? Gover ment ought to ask the Collector to see that the farmer sells the drug in a pu state and at a price to be fixed by the former. If the farmer charges a high price than that fixed by the Collector, he should be fined under the terms of h license.

Suggests that prisoners committed by the subordinate to the divisional magistrates in Karáchi should be lodged in the city jail.

The Sind Times (5) of the 8th July in its local columns says:—We notic that prisoners committed by the subordinate magi trates to the divisional magistrates in Karáchi a lodged in the police lock-up and sent on speedily the divisional magistrates. The friends of the p soners are unable to get access to them, and by t time they return from their villages with money secure professional assistance the accused are convicted and sentenced. W think the interests of justice would be furthered by the prisoners being lodg in the city jail and allowed sufficient time before their prosecution is proceed with to enable their relations to secure counsel.

Complaint against stamp vendors.

A correspondent of the Sind Sudhár (139) of the 12th July says:—Son stamp vendors have made it a habit not to sell stamp paper to poor people except for a price greatly excess of the actual price, or until the purchas consents to engage the services of the vendors for writing purposes. The po purchasers in order to save time are forced to comply with the demand. So of the stamp vendors are in league with money-lenders, and they general manage to write in a way favourable to the lender. Further, they are oft absent from their shops, and consequently persons in need of stamps have to about wandering in search of them. Whenever a respectable man who acquainted with the law asks for a paper, they generally tell him that the su ply of the required stamped paper is out. They do so because they exp very little profit from the educated classes. The correspondent then dwells the evil practices of stamp vendors at Sukkur and Gharibabad, and expres a hope that Colonel Wallace will try to redress the grievance of the public.

Scarcity of water in the camp at Rájkot.

A correspondent of the Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 11th July complai of the inconvenience caused to the inhabitants in t camp of Rájkot by scarcity of water, and points out t necessity of securing a permanent supply of wat even at a considerable outlay of money.

Comments on the report on the operations of the Postal Department of India for 1882-83.

In an article headed "Report on the operations of the Post Offices of Ind for 1882-83" the Indian Spectator (1) of the 1 July says:—Appendix No. III. is comprehensi enough, but is capable of further improvement f purposes of reference as it is somewhat defecti The suggestions we beg leave to make to the pos authorities are feasible, and can be adopted in the next return. (1) If a line we drawn below "privileged letter service" and the total of the six descriptio of letters delivered were marked down, the trouble of the student of statist would be obviated. For purposes of comparison it is desirable that lette should be distinguished from post cards. In the present form post cards a included in the total for letters. The difficulty of comparison of the numb of post cards and letters in each province will be obvious at a glance. (2) the same way we would draw a line to mark down the totals of registered a unregistered book and pattern packets. (3) Another line must be drawn admit of the totals of the four kinds of parcels delivered. We trust t Director General will attend to these simple suggestions. Their utility for t purpose of facilitating reference by publicists desirous of generalising for th readers the provincial results of each species of articles delivered is obvio Another suggestion we would offer is this. A brief abstract of articles de vered in each of the 14 provinces may be easily given in the body of t report for the general reader. It might have been given immediately bel the abstract of the table in the margin of paragraph 16, Section III., Co spondence, of the report under review. Again some steps may be taken to compare the broad results of progress in each province with its population. Such a comparison would prove very instructive. We may then know which are the go-a-head and which the stationary or backward provinces.

Points out the inconvenience caused to the public by the money order forms at present in use.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 14th July complains that great inconvenience is caused to the public by the newly introduced money order forms. The printed form that remains with the receiver does not contain the name and address of the remitter and it is therefore generally difficult to have information on that point whenever necessary. The form that is signed by the payee and delivered to the Postal Department contains the name and address of the remitter, but it is often impossible to take notes from that form without detaining the postal peon for an inconveniently long time. The inconvenience is most felt by newspaper offices that daily receive bundles of money orders. The authorities of the Postal Department ought to attend to this complaint and effect the necessary changes in the forms at present in use.

Points out the inconvenience caused to the people of Poona by their having to go to the general post office to receive articles addressed to them.

The Shiváji (65) of the 11th July says that the people of the city of Poona are required to go to the general post office in order to receive articles that are sent to their address through the Postal Department. This is not proper. There is no reason why the public should be put to the inconvenience of walking a long distance for this purpose, and it is to be hoped that the postal authorities will remedy it.

Suggests the opening of a branch post office in Gopipura, Surat.

The Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 13th July expresses satisfaction with the endeavours made by Mr. Mádhavráo, the post master of Surat, to meet the wishes of the people, and requests him to open a branch post office in Gopipura, which might prove a source of great convenience to the inhabitants of that thickly populated part of the city as also to those of Rustampura. [A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 17th July says that branch post offices should be opened in the principal parts of the town of Surat, such as Haripura and Navsári Bhágol.]

Points out the inconvenience felt by the people of Kaira by the location of the post office outside the town.

A correspondent of the same newspaper complains of the inconvenience caused to the people of Kaira by the removal of the post office to a place outside the town, and points out the necessity of either restoring the office to its original place or of opening a branch post office in the town.

Legislation.

Suggestions in connection with the Khoja Succession Bill.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 14th July, in writing about the Khoja Succession Bill now before the Supreme Legislative Council, suggests that the Act should provide that if a Khoja, whether he be a Sunni or a Shiáh, dies intestate, his property should be inherited by a relative whether seventh or seventeenth in descent from him. If he leaves no heirs his property should go to Government, who should utilize it by way of establishing a charitable institution for the benefit of the sect to which the deceased may have belonged. Again if a Khoja who has a wife belonging to his sect takes another that does not belong to it and has children by the second wife, the latter should not be debarred from participating in the property left by him, though their claims may be subordinated to those of the first wife and her children.

Comments on the remarks of Sir Steuart Bayley on the Bill to amend the Sind Encumbered Estates Act.

The Sind Times (5) of the 8th July says:—We are at last in possession of the full report of the proceedings in the Legislative Council in connection with the passing of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act, but we are sorry it hardly throws any light on the questions we discussed in our last issue. The reasons given for the delay in reporting on the Bill are stated to have been the desire of the Bombay Government to introduce some further amendments besides the two mentioned in the Statement of Objects and Reasons and the desire of the Select Committee not to tinker an Act of this kind frequently. Both were perfectly legitimate and perfectly laudable desires; but it does not therefore follow that the public were to be kept in the dark as to the further amendments and allowed no opportunity of having their say on them. Sir Steuart Bayley, who was in charge of the Bill, said that the amendments suggested by the Bombay Government were none of them of great importance, that they concerned "methods of procedure," and that the scope of the Bill was left as it stood before. This, we say, is extremely disingenuous. Is it a method of procedure to extend the relief provided by the Act to persons who were before beyond its pale? Is it a method of procedure to widen the definition of zamindár, which is admittedly the pivot upon which the whole Act turns? If there is anything which is not a method of procedure it is this definition. It is nothing if not a substantive portion of the law. But Sir Steuart Bayley would have us believe that though the definition is amended the scope of the Bill has not been altered. "Practically," says he, "we leave matters very much as they were, except that we remove all doubts as to the possibility of bringing a joint estate paying Rs. 300 as its aggregate revenue under the Act." Is this the effect of the amended definition of zamindár? Decidedly not. Sir Steuart Bayley confounds the effect of the amendment of Section 8, which makes the words "all immoveable property" in that section to include "any interest in joint immoveable property," with the effect of the amended definition of zamindár. If the object was merely to remove all doubts as to the liability of a joint estate for the payment of the debts of one of the joint tenants, then the only amendment needed was that now made in Section 8. It is that section which enumerates what property is to be under management; and it is that section, and that only, which required alteration in case anyone questioned the right of the Manager to treat a share of a joint estate as immoveable property. As a matter of fact no one ever questioned this undoubted right. Immoveable property is not the less so because it happens to be joint. Does any court now exempt a share of joint property from attachment or sale because it is undivided? Is such share counted as no assets in insolvency proceedings? Is it not completely available for rateable distribution among creditors? Does anyone doubt that such a share can be alienated voluntarily as well as involuntarily? And if so, is it not preposterous to doubt that such a share cannot form any portion of the assets in the Manager's hands—that the Manager, who is not only the Insolvency Court but also the representative of the debtor, can have no power and no control over it, can neither take the proceeds of the share nor pay the creditors out of them? And yet we are told that the amendment of the definition of zamindár involves nothing more than the removal of a doubt felt on this point, and that in other respects it leaves matters in status quo. We admit we would not have a word to say against the amending Act if it really did nothing more than remove this doubt. But the Act goes much farther, its scope is much wider, and it makes a very material alteration in substance and not in mere procedure. With the greatest respect for Sir Steuart Bayley we are compelled to say that he thoroughly misrepresented the effect of the amending Act. Anyone who reads for himself the amended definition of zamindár and then compares the natural construction it bears with the construction put upon it by Sir Steuart Bayley will at once perceive the justice of our remark. Indeed Sir Steuart Bayley is himself not a little inconsistent and confused on the subject. He tells us that the alteration regarding joint proprietors was a difficult question, and he was afraid it had given the Legislative Department a good deal of trouble. Had it really? According to Sir Steuart Bayley the alteration was simply intended to remove a doubt as to the liability of a share in joint property to contribution for debts. Where was then the difficulty, and where the trouble? One would have thought that the matter was hardly worth the deliberations of a Select Committee. It was too simple to require any balancing of pros and cons. It was too transparent to admit of a doubt. It was based on such fundamental equity that it could hardly provoke a single question. And this simple transparent matter was the subject of the incubation of a Select Committee for more than a year, and was evidently the cause of much intellectual travail to the Bombay Government! We say we refuse to believe t was this paltry little point which caused so much difficulty and trouble. do not say there was no difficulty and no trouble to the Legislative Depart On the contrary we have no doubt that the real amendment was too impo not to create a difference of opinion and to require considerable deliber But it was an amendment which Sir Steuart Bayley either ignored or represented. What he said about it was at any rate neither precise no spicuous.

Complains of rapid legislation.

The same newspaper says:—There is now a Bill before the Sup Legislative Council which strikingly illustrate glorious uncertainty of law caused by our rapid lation. An Act was passed in 1864 to provide fo solemnization of marriages in India of persons professing the Christian reli This Act empowered the Governor General of India, the Governors of M and Bombay, and the Lieut.-Governors of Bengal, the North-West Prov and the Panjáb to grant licenses to ministers of religion to solemnize marr This power was duly exercised, and the ministers thus licensed went on s nizing marriages not only while the Act was in force but also after i repealed in 1865 by an Act which declared all marriages not solemnized u a license granted under its provisions to be null and void. The Act of was however repealed by another Act in 1872, which in its turn declare marriages null and void if not solemnized by the ministers specified in th Thus it would appear that the ministers licensed under the Act of 186 not licensed under that of 1865, nor specified in that of 1872, had no auth to solemnize marriages after the Act of 1864 was repealed. The repeal c repealing Act did not revive the first Act, as there is an express prov against such revival in the General Clauses Act. What is the moral of all Simply that even educated ministers of religion, even the European comm cannot keep pace with legislation. They cannot help being ignorant of that law which concerns them most. The Legislature now comes fo to validate what is invalid by passing an Act with retrospective effect lega all marriages solemnized by the authority of licenses granted under the 1864. Ignorance of law cannot be pleaded by any man in his defence. it is an excuse for such retrospective legislation as that now under the deration of the Supreme Legislative Council. We wonder how many would have to be passed if all the illegalities due to ignorance of law wer to be legalized. Lord Ripon has tried his utmost to give greater public legislation, but we are afraid those who have to execute his orders are as c and indifferent as ever in the matter.

Education.

Makes suggestions for the spread of technical education.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 13th July says:—A friend suggests that m palities and local fund boards of districts shoul tribute small sums towards the maintenance of c technical institutes to be opened in zilla towns, show the feasibility of such a plan he mentio instances of small Native States that have opened technical schools with a small capital. To us this idea appears to be eminently practical and e accomplishment, as will be seen from the account of such an institutio Native State in Káthiáwár. The Public Works Department of the State of Gondal has opened workshops and apprentice classes where st get the necessary instruction in technical education and they come out of as useful members of society within the very short period of twelve m From the rules framed for the purpose it appears that trained carpente masons with a fair knowledge of their work can be secured at very littl and with very little labour. The student is required to pay no fees and ha to pass one year before his final examination takes place. The studen hopes of being employed under the State. The work of municipal an fund boards is such as to require the services of many such trained carp and masons, and if only one more department, that of health, were adde technical schools and apprentice classes would be valuable institutions i towns. The Educational Department is at present thinking of giving enco

ment to primary education by the establishment of village school not be out of time here to suggest that technical schools on such as that followed in Gondal would be quite a boon to the agr munity. The Famine Commissioners have very rightly obse country is as yet quite unprepared for the general use of any ag plements except such as are of the simplest character; and if th of education takes care to give the village a few trained carpent there can be no doubt that sugar and oil mills, machines for the fibres, &c., simple in their form but very useful in the preparat tural products for the market, will be soon forthcoming; so that of the superabundant labour will be diverted from the plough to the pressure on the resources of land will be reduced. If this p technical schools works well a grand college for technical educat be established in Poona or Bombay to turn out mechanical engin

Complains that the mode of instruction at present followed in the private and Government schools in Bombay is calculated to overtax the mental capacities of boys and makes suggestions for remedying the evil.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 16th July, in commentin case in which a school master at Bradfo
ed for detaining a child after the usua for having neglected to prepare certain observes that the condition of private an schools in Bombay is worse than that stitutions in England. The standards very defective. The amount of wo far in excess of the capabilities of the st such a strain on boys of tender age tells severely on their mental capacities is undeniable. It is high time that prompt measures sh to remove this defect in the administration of private as well as schools. Time might come when it would be necessary to resort to sev such as are being adopted in England, but it is not wise to wait come to such a pass. [The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 13th Ju the same subject, points out the advisability of initiating a refo school masters and college professors could be made to devo wholly to their legitimate duty of teaching their pupils and to se prescribed studies are gone through during the school and colleg private hours of students being utilized in the preparation of exe revising what they have learnt from their teachers. In view of will be necessary for the educational authorities to see if those ployed in the work of education are up to the mark, and if not to
to bring them round to a proper sense of their duty.]

Comments on the Government notification declaring Natives ineligible for employment as apothecaries.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 14th July says:—The plea notification in the Government Gaz
admission to "Natives of India, Goanese into the subordinate Medical Departme caries, is that none but Europeans or qualified as medical men to deal w soldiers. To this it is a sufficient answer to say that no instance found where a Native apothecary was held, either for want of me on charges of drunkenness or negligence of duty, incapable o office to the satisfaction of his superiors. During the last Afghá the few Native gentlemen in the higher medical service had to a army, and nothing was heard either at the time or afterwards as disqualified for the duty. On the other hand, we believe, he acq creditably. We may assume however that race feeling is so British soldier that he will not bear with a Native apotheca not stand to reason and is it not consistent with fairness that a which is so quickly moved by feelings of race should have at th some regard for the feelings of those who are held disqualified caries? On what principle of administrative morality are the H ships of our hospitals conferred on members of the apothecary gratify the whim of the European soldier you must have none b and Eurasians as apothecaries, why not declare at the same ti but medical appointments in the military service shall be open to "The natives of India, Goanese, Pársis, &c.," may at least fairly

a small compensation for having the military medical service closed against them. But that does not in the least suggest itself to those who frame these notifications for the luxury of racial distinctions. The House-Surgeon in the Jamsetjee Hospital is an apothecary, and the same is the case with the Gokuldás Hospital and the Sassoon Hospital at Poona; while the gentleman appointed to work out the provisions of the Contagious Diseases Act is also an apothecary. The system of appointing apothecaries to posts other than those in the medical branch of the military service will very probably continue, and the result ere long will be that while Native assistant surgeons will have but a limited field to move in, the European and Eurasian apothecary will be more favourably situated. If Government wish to be fair, they should declare that none but natives of India, Pársis and Goanese will be admitted into the subordinate ranks of the non-military medical service. A declaration of this kind would place the two classes on an equal footing. [The Rást Goftár (115) of the 13th, the Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 14th and the Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 15th July express disapproval of the Government resolution excluding Natives from the apothecary class attached to the Grant Medical College. The Rást Goftár asks to what extent will race prejudice go. It is surprising that Native hamáls, lamp-lighters, cooks and other labourers should have still been allowed to serve in hospitals for European soldiers. If the arguments brought forward in this case hold good, Europeans and Eurasians only should be employed as halálkhors and sweepers in the service of white men.]

Railways.

Suggestions to the authorities of the B. B. & C. I. Railway.

A correspondent of the Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th July invites the attention of the Manager of the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company to the inconvenience and hardship entailed on the inhabitants of the island of Gorai by the late departure of the Virár local from Colába and by the want of a train timed to arrive at Borwali at about 10 P. M. to enable the people to return to Bombay, and expresses a hope that the Manager will remove the inconvenience.

Municipalities.

Comments on the relations of the Bengal Government with the Municipal Corporation of Calcutta.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th July says:—There is now a wordy war of the fiercest type going on between the Bengal Government on the one side and the Municipal Corporation on the other. A hue and cry has been raised by the clique representing the former that the sanitary reforms in Calcutta are far from what they should be. We cannot say how far the complaint as to the city's sanitation is well grounded or otherwise. Our object here is to draw attention to the factional aspect given to the question. Now it may be remembered that one of the reasons urged by almost all the district officials consulted by the Government of India against local self-government and non-official presidents for local boards was the possible rising of factions and the consequent failure of the experiment. Fortunately in no part of India where the scheme has been experimentally worked has there been a single instance of the sort of indecent faction that is now tearing Calcutta to pieces. In one or two places there was a small tea-cup storm; but no instance of a local board, chiefly composed of Hindus and Mahomedans, has been reported where faction has run riot. But mirabile dictu the metropolis of the empire has first revealed to the public gaze the disgraceful exhibition of a faction entirely originating with Europeans—that civilised class of gentlemen who are supposed to guide Native members at local boards by their precept and example. And the worst of it is that he who as a member of the Supreme Government at Simla two years ago evinced the most ardent interest in, and actively supported the cause of, the scheme introduced by Lord Ripon, finds himself by a cruel irony of fate, when raised to the exalted dignity of the ruler of a province, most opposed to giving the scheme a practical shape. Alas! how men's memory turns traitor to their previous utterances and rises in judgment against their present acts! Perhaps the inconsistency is of the Jesuitical kind and quite reconcileable with consistency by the subtle process o sophistical reasoning. Lord Ripon's Government may take a note of the distinct encouragement given by Mr. Rivers Thompson to fanning the flame c faction in local self-government as initiated in Calcutta. Local boards i other parts of the empire may also take a note of it. What next?

Makes certain suggestions to the Municipal Corporation of Bombay in reference to the contribution demanded for the establishment of a Veterinary College.

The same newspaper says:—The proposal mooted some time since for th establishment of a Veterinary College in connectio with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty t Animals has advanced a stage. The municipality i asked to contribute Rs. 5,000, or one-fourth of the total expenditure. We do not think the municipality should comply with the request when the demands o primary education are yet so great in the city. We would rather prefer tha the Corporation should sanction Rs. 5,000 in addition to the annual grant unde that head. The expenditure of Rs. 5,000 on the Veterinary College would simply be a waste of money. And if anyone could profit most by it, it would be the Government. Besides, allowing the Superintendent a salary of Rs. 900 is monstrous. It is a job. Most probably the Surgeon-General has to provide somebody with this sinecure. When you can get hard-working University men to serve as tutors in local colleges on the initial salary of Rs. 500 rising by annual increments to Rs. 850, it is extravagance to start an infant institution with a Superintendent on Rs. 900. The Corporation had better thankfully decline the very polite request of the Local Government. [The Rást Goftá (115) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments. The Jám Jamshed (103) of the 16th July points out the mistake committed by some writers in advising the municipality to refrain from contributing its share o the expenses of the maintenance of the college, and says that as the municipality owns a large number of cattle which will benefit by the establishment of the hospital it is bound to contribute its share.]

Comments on the great loss sustained by the Bombay Municipality by the sale of the Panvel Brick Works.

The Yajdán Parast (128) of the 13th July refers to the loss of Rs. 1,61,00 suffered by the Bombay Municipality by the sale o the Panvel Brick Works, and asks who should b hanged for this great loss? What explanation ha the Town Council received from the responsibl officer of the municipality on whose recommendatio the Brick Works were opened? What reply has the Council to give? Surel this is nothing less than a scandal, and the rate-payers are entitled to deman an explanation in the matter.

A suggestion to the Bombay Municipality for laying out a magnificent garden with a large zoological collection on the Rotten Row opposite the High Court buildings.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 19th July disapproves of the proposal t convert the Victoria Gardens to botanical purpose complains of the wretched condition of the zoologica portion of the Victoria Gardens, and says that the Rotte Row opposite the High Court buildings should be turned into a magnificent garden and should be styled th Ripon Gardens in commemoration of his Lordship' great services to India. The Rotten Row is very beautifully situated, and if i were utilized for the purposes of a garden, portions being specially prepared fo bands and theatricals and a portion reserved as the zoological section, it woul prove very attractive. Of course this will require the expenditure of a large amount of money, which can best be recovered by levying a small fee fron the visitors, as is done in Calcutta and Madras. If the ground is made over t the municipality, and if the latter agrees to name the gardens after Lord Ripon the public will also come forward with liberal subscriptions.

Draws attention to the exceedingly filthy condition of small lanes in the cities of Bombay and Poona.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 13th July complains of the exceedingl filthy condition of small lanes in the cities of Bomba and Poona, and asks if the attention of the municipa authorities has ever been drawn to them. It is no wonder however that this should be the case. The presen policy of municipal administration is mainly at fau in this matter. A notion has gained firm ground that the construction big markets, the laying out of extensive gardens on th posting of electric lights on the main roads constitute th reformation of a city.

Comments on the correspondence between Mr. Winter and the municipality of Poona on the subject of the nomination of a chairman.

Referring to the two letters from Mr. H. E. Winter, of the Poona Municipality, to th chairman of the municipality, urgin of the managing committee of the the nomination of Mr. Plunket Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 17th Plunkett's services, we contend, a tous than those of Mr. Winter himself or of his official su fairly doubt if either Mr. Plunkett or Mr. Winter himself wo for the local municipal administration if that did not f official duties for which they are paid. But even if we put aside and admit for the sake of argument that Mr. Plunke municipality are gratuitous and not hired, we put it to Mr. say after reflection if it was in good taste for him to have lai ever on that character when the services of every municipa gratuitous. In short that is an attribute which is common to every municipal commissioner has hitherto rendered and Our second contention is that Mr. Winter's letters are contra of both the Bombay Government and the Government of In the recollection of the reader that the principal ground upon Government of India based their celebrated resolution on th self-government was that though at the commencement lo might suffer in efficiency to some extent by being transferred official agency that agency was to be relieved of the pressure of work connected with local administration and t agency was to be gradually initiated into that work even a efficiency at the commencement, if necessary. So far as reg of the Supreme Government. Now we shall see what the Bombay Government have all along been. In the resolut annual reports of the several municipalities the Bombay Gov for several years past expressing their regret that the non-o not evince any active interest in municipal administratio Bombay Government in a resolution reviewing the munici year 1881-82 expressed the same regret, and then proceeded those non-official gentlemen who had efficiently performed t man. Again this year too the Bombay Government have sa and yet Mr. Winter, instead of encouraging the local mana persevere in their laudable efforts to relieve the overwork them to nominate an official as their chairman!!! And w Mr. Winter's action was contrary to the explicit declaratio preme and Local Governments regarding their real intention the extension and development of local self-government? In explaining the first Mr. Winter says that the only considerat guide the members of the managing committee in making th post of their chairman should be which of them could dischar efficiently, or, in other words, which of them was the fittest p and not whether such a person was an official or not. We tingly join issue with Mr. Winter on this point. We believ thinking that the principal question which every membe committee is bound to ask himself when making selection fo man is not that stated by Mr. Winter, namely, who is the fit post irrespective of the position of that person, but whether not among the non-official members of the body one who efficiency perform the duties attaching to that office without ficing the interests of the rate-payers. And we believe we a holding that if the members of the body are in a position to in the affirmative, they would be simply betraying their sacr aside such a person in favour of an official member of the s shall concede for the sake of argument, is admittedly mor said post. Such is our view of the main question at issue, which, w even Mr. Winter himself will on further reflection admit to be not only but in entire consonance with the intentions of Government.

Points out the advisability of abolishing the house-tax levied from the people of Bulsár.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 18th July says that accordin statement of its correspondent at Bulsár a g
of dissatisfaction prevails among the peopl
town on account of the levy of the house-ta work of collecting the tax is being vigorou ceeded with. The police confiscate the pro defaulters, which is sold by the Mámlatdár for realizing the dues on of the tax. The complaint regarding this tax is an old one and l revived after a year or two. The municipality ought to do away v tax, and if it fails to do so, Government ought to compel that body to re

Native States.

Comments on the reports that are in circulation regarding the administration of the Chief of Indore.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 14th July, in an article headed "The ers of Holkar," says:—It is perhaps an una result of the present state of things that the
of the relations between the paramount po
the Native States should again and again cro
the consideration of Government in some another. For better or worse these States are bound up with the fo the British Government, and yet so variable, fickle and at times vexati been the policy of what is called the Foreign Department of the Gov of India in its disposition towards the princes and feudatory chiefs that we are not surprised that the attempt of those among the British who aim at reducing slowly and steadily the power of these chiefs and them mere puppets nodding their heads at the beck of practically irres Political Agents should repeat itself in spite of the protests of the prince spite of the appeals made by the Native press to the sense of justice and our rulers. The princes are watched and suspected at every turn, merest show of independence or the simplest act likely to displease tical Agents becomes a signal for the policy of repression. So long as the slink before the Foreign Department of the Government of India and the tunes of the Political Agents and their friends, they are safe, but the they act upon their dignity an attempt is made to blacken their characte long since the armies maintained by the chiefs under treaties and enga solemnly entered into between them and the paramount power were to as a menace to the British rule in India, and journalists in the Angl press did not hesitate to declare that the assumption of the title of by Her Majesty on the 1st of January 1877 had so changed the relat tween the paramount power and the princes as to completely justify th in curtailing the rights of the latter and ordering by a stroke imperial policy the immediate disbandment of the troops maintaine Native States. The Government of India during Lord Lytton's Vic was indeed up to all political dodges, and was known not only to sy with the cry but to have even gone so far as to take note of the bicke the Anglo-Indian press and in accordance with them to keep cut an mandate which had only to issue from the archives of the Foreign strike a sense of terror into the hearts of the Native princes. But the in which the Government of the day became involved in the meantim sequence of the Afghán war stopped, fortunately for the chiefs, the e of a policy which, had it been acted upon, would have assuredly had astrous effect of destroying all faith in the treaties and promises of the rulers and alienated the sympathy of the prince as well as the peasan fact that we are at present living in times far better than those whic witnessed during the Viceroyalty of Lord Lytton has not however those who aim at striking a silent death-blow to the pledges which b British Government to its many feudatories. Lord Ripon is charged class of writers with neglecting the duty which the British Governmen to owe to itself and to these feudatories—the duty of meddling in th of prestige whenever it can with the internal administration of these St

taking every available opportunity to reprove, curb and jealou prince who ventures to say or do anything that he think right to say or do. To the credit of Lord Ripon it mus instead of lending an ear to these invitations to an injuc jectionable policy His Excellency has, as far as possible, the sympathy of the Native chiefs by refraining from act inspire jealousy in them or to destroy their confidence in th intentions of the British Government. It was a maxim of the late that the best rule of conduct for the British Government to adop with the Native States was not to meddle with their internal but to bring about reform by advice, influence and example. S has never found favour with the Foreign Department and tho over its genius. Their policy has been to intimidate and, wh weaken the chiefs, and none of them has been a greater eyesor the talented Mahárája of Indore. In vain have they tried to pr the mutiny he was against the British. Now occur events in the Lord Ripon is seriously asked to depart from the principles he to begin at once a policy of espionage and repression in regar ness. That His Highness the Holkar should be one of the whom certain writers in the Anglo-Indian press should mak their profession to write with bitter acrimony we can well u Highness is an independent and conscientious chief, and his the eyes of his jealous critics is that he has from time to time rights which were promised to him but which have been withhe that does not reflect credit upon either the consistency or th the British rulers. His Highness has never cared for the frowns of the Foreign Department and has all along dealt wi Agents in the spirit of a ruler mindful of his duty and position. Government of India at the present day is in the hands of a rig who may be trusted to hear him with patience and attention, M has deemed it advisable to press upon His Excellency's attentio and justice of clearing him from the charge of disloyalty and g territory which the British Government promised him in con services during the mutiny. This is what his enemies among the and in the press evidently look upon with positive disfavour; hensible method of giving currency to stories and reports d reputation of the Mahárája is adopted by them. Till the other was breathed by a single paper as to any misdeed committed b or as to any act of mal-administration on his part, and now th chooses to stand upon his old rights and invites the British consider and either admit or reject after consideration certain c them he is held forth before the public as one of the most ty princes, and exaggerated and wild reports are bandied abou falsely described as a state of panic said to be prevailing in That these are stories invented by interested partisans with a p there cannot be the slightest foundation for the charge of ma brought against His Highness by the Pioneer and one or tw Indian journals is best shown by the fact that they did not star wild charges until after they had heard that His Highness ha Viceroy to allow him to visit Simla for the purpose of placing his claims before the Government and the Viceroy had in ret the Mahárája's proposal. Had the report as to the mal-admi Highness or the prevalence of a panic among his subjects the truth about it, the public would not have so long been in de a state of things so unsatisfactory. And what are the speci administration laid on His Highness's shoulders by his aspersers of rabid articles which have recently appeared in the column against His Highness there are innuendoes and vague charges, impossible to note any specific instance cited to justify all th criticism to which His Highness's character is subjected by t stories of His Highness's "disloyalty" during the mutiny, wh have taken a pleasure in raking from time to time without havin to prove them as founded in truth and facts, are again brought finding that these may not suffice in the eyes of either the Government or the British public to damage the character and claims of the Mahárája ill-bred attempt is made to connect His Highness with one or two alle deeds of his eldest son prince Shivájiráo. By all means let a due en instituted into the young prince's acts. But it is the dastardly attempt to the Mahárája with the acts of his son that we condemn as an attempt deli intended to prejudice His Highness in the eyes of Lord Ripon and th public, and with no other view than that of creating by a side-wind an u able opinion about the claims to which the Mahárája intends inviting t tion of the Government of India. It is sad to think that against rabid m such as the Pioneer, Native chiefs have practically no redress. We cert not claim for the princes any immunity from criticism, and so long as said of their rule is said with a careful regard for facts and truth, criticis very wholesome effect and is by all means to be encouraged. But journal makes it its business to circulate reports damaging to the politic tation and loyal character of a ruler and distinctly calls in question his to the paramount power, it is due to all that the paramount power shou fere by calling upon the journal in question to prove its charges or to su usual penalty meted out to offenders against the State. The Pioneer an who have ranged themselves on the side of the anti-Holkar party are occasions fond of bewailing what they call the better tone of the Nati and whenever any Native journal chooses to point out the faults of the rule in India these very journalists solemnly invoke the gods of rever think it sheer political madness on the part of a Government like that to allow such things to be said against it by writers in the Native pre when it comes to some question relating to a Native prince these very critics assume a tone of violence and disparagement towards the Nativ equal to the vilest criticism in point of violence and asperity of the m loyal critic of the British Government in the Native press. Language the Pioneer has of late been employing against the Holkar is calculated politically a mischievous effect if allowed to be indulged in with im and yet we find that nothing has become easier than for a journal o charge the Holkar with disloyalty, and that as often as the libel can be

ed. A libelled prince has indeed the law of libel to resort to for pr but this remedy is practically ineffective. The prince must leave his and appear as an ordinary litigant in a court of justice in British clear himself in the eyes of the public against charges of this kind. I duty of the paramount power to protect him against the dissemin charges so grave and misleading. The Anglo-Indian journals which doing their worst to defame the Mahárája Holkar are not only setting unworthy example to the Native press, but, what is more unfortuna their conduct is calculated to spread among the Native princes an im that the paramount power, while expecting them to be righteous a directly encourages the circulation of charges of disloyalty against the an impression may of course be corrected by the paramount power to believe in the charges and treating them as baseless. But mere contempt has no power for good in such affairs. The relations betw paramount power and the Native States are of a delicate character, an one of the latter is misrepresented, and that with persistent frequen political wisdom of the best kind for the paramount power to give maligned prince an assurance of its confidence in him and of its resolve the malignant attacks as unfounded. We therefore hope that there is n ation for the reports that the libels in the Pioneer against the Mahárája have influenced the Viceroy so much that His Excellency has asked the rája not to visit Simla until an explanation of the charges brought ag son has been given. It is not to be believed of Lord Ripon that he wo the sins of the son on the father. While however we strongly protest ag charges of disloyalty brought against the Mahárája we would also sug
His Highness the advisability of completely disarming the hostile crit his enemies by introducing certain reforms in the administration and i into the charges preferred against Bála Sáheb. [The Indian Spectator
the Native Opinion (11) of the 13th July express similar sentiment Bombay Chronicle (79) and the Rást Goftár (115) of the same date expr disapproval of the present state of affairs at Indore. The form Mahárája to abandon his present policy and the latter express the Government of India will not allow unnecessary delay to take investigation of the complaints of mismanagement.]

Approves of the action of the Bombay Government in the matter of the establishment of a Joint Administration at Rájpipla.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 13th July says:—The Rájpipla has only to thank himself an visers for the humiliation and indignit has now to submit. He had ample war his evil ways, that were alike disgrace injurious to the people. He disregar presuming probably too much on the the paramount power, forgetting egregiously that that power be just to his people in the interests of good order and humanity too lenient to him. His misgovernment had indeed reached a p said power could no longer expose itself to the odium of forget duty to the poor subjects of the State. They needed relief urgentl recourse left to the Government of Bombay was to remove those s his sway and to place them under the care of the Joint Admin formed. The step has been rendered imperative for the sake of th of the British power, for the welfare of the people of Rájpipla, an of the rights of the heir to the degraded chief. Let all Native disposed to indulge in pranks and pastimes, such as those which the chief of Nándod to grief, beware of their ways and try to be w too late to repent. [The Gujarát Mitră (80), the Gujaráti (99) Goftár (115) of the 13th, the Deshi Mitră (94) of the 17th and the S (83) of the 19th July express approval of the action taken by Government in this matter. The Rást Goftár is afraid that some been done to the Diván Mr. Sadáshiv Vishvanáth Dhurandhar as h appointed one of the Joint Administrators of the State. Mr. could not have anything to do with the mal-administration of the was not on good terms with the Rája. Moreover Government had asked for a commission of inquiry. The people have a r the faults of the Rája and the particulars of the oppression exerc Why should Government keep back the report of the Commission The Deshi Mitră considers the punishment inflicted on the Rája v advocates the deposition of the Rája and his transportation to place and the installation of his son on the throne. The Suryă that notwithstanding his mal-administration the Rája does no fate of being deposed and packed off to Madras. The writer wo learn that the Rája has been allowed to act jointly with Major S feels sure that the Rája will greatly improve with the assistan coadjutor. The Rája should be told that if he did not improve eve of such an able colleague, Government would take serious notice of Comments in connection with the imposition of fines on Native States for failing to arrest highway robbers and a suggestion for the employment of the British police for the apprehension of the highway robber Manvar.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 14th July says:—It is all chief cause of the imposition of a fine the Dhrángadra State was its failure to highway robber Manvar who plundered lers near Sára. Dhrángadra as well a States are bound by agreement to trac and highwaymen, and if they fail to come liable to pay a fine. This arrang objectionable. But before imposing a of such failure ought to be ascertained. We do not think it is ju any of the States of Káthiáwár of a secret alliance with highway r we see any reason for doubting their honesty and good sense. is some expectation of an enormous pecuniary gain it is not p Native State will connive at the acts of highwaymen even at the ring the displeasure of Government. But in this instance there d to have been any such expectation. We attribute the inability of States to arrest Manvar to the inefficiency of their police, and we services of the British police should be called into requisition for Complains that the territory of the Mir of Khairpur serves as a place of refuge to insolvent borrowers.

A correspondent of the Sind Sudhár (139) of the 12th July says:—F had some time back the reputation of being but now they have made deceit and dishonest chief weapons. Whenever they are in need of they go to some banker, who supplies them wit
they want, but as soon as the money-lende them to return the money they run away to Mirwah in the Mir's dom
You often see many persons in the Mir's territory with decrees of th courts in their hands, but which cannot be executed. These decree-h would be very willing to pay a fourth part of the money due to them, the Mir usually charges for the trouble of recovering debts,—nay, they woul forego one-third or one-half of what is their due, if they could but get th
The Mir for his own part is very just and inclined to deal fairly by all, but are others who always block up the door of justice. We are confident the Mi remove this grievance as soon as he comes to know of it, for surely he do wish that anybody should be robbed of what is his due.

Berár Affairs.

Makes certain suggestions for reforming the system of judicial administration in Berár.

In an article headed "The Judicial System of Berár" the Vaidarbh ( the 12th July says:—The first observation that we make is that under the system there is no sepa
of the judicial and revenue lines. Except the cial Commissioner, who is a purely judicial functio and the Commissioner, who is not a judicial functionary, and the six D Commissioners, who are obliged to be everything, all the other officers Commission are shunted off and on to judicial work. At one time an Ass Commissioner is an officer presiding over a civil court, the next week he addition a táluka officer, magistrate of the first class and a treasury officer, a third week he ceases to exercise the powers of a civil court. Our present s hardly deserves to be called a system. There is one thing we see every and that is confusion. There is no pretence to anything like division of Some officers are so much overloaded with work, and that of a most div kind, that it is utterly beyond their power to do anything well and factorily. Administrative centralization defeats its own purpose. Thi has in the case of the Resident attracted the attention of the Governm India. We wonder how the case of the district and subordinate o has been overlooked. The Deputy Commissioner is the chief reven ficer of the district; he is the district judge; he is the district magis he controls the local funds; he has a part in the administration of the cational Department; he is the president of all the municipalities in his dis he is to closely supervise the work of the local boards; and he must see forest and the police departments. There are therefore only two courses the officer must either kill himself with overwork, or he must try to do portion of his work well, and the rest indifferently! How could you ex man to write reports upon subjects ranging from sericulture and cotton most elaborate piece of legislation and do active work in addition and be same time a good judge? There are no functions more inconsistent than of the judge and the administrator. A judge must possess the powers of de tion, patience and calmness in a pre-eminent degree; he has no need to ac haste. An administrator on the other hand must possess the faculty of thinking and of rapidly making up his mind one way or another without l time. What he wants is resoluteness, decision and despatch. Our Gover expects to find these inconsistent temperaments in one and the same indiv
What is said of the Deputy Commissioners holds good in a more marked m in the case of Tahsildárs, i. e., such of them as are invested with civil p
We make bold to say that if a Tahsildár were to do everything which pr falls within the scope of his duties it would be simply impossible for him time for civil work. This curious assortment of all irregularities and incong presents at times most scandalous spectacles. An officer presiding over a takes leave or is transferred. No one is appointed in his place and his c closed! Or he is told off to do revenue duties and a similar result follow it for this that courts are established? There is another feature in the p system which is a fruitful source of hardship to the people, of civil cases by officers in camp. Under the orders of the the Judicial Commissioner must move in the province for the year. The Deputy Commissioners, as revenue officers, head-quarters a still greater time, and the same is the cas Assistant and Extra Assistant Commissioners. When thes take civil work with them, and suitors and witnesses ha train. What amount of trouble and expense this entails not perhaps sufficiently well known in high quarters. another anomaly in our judicial system. There is no fixity subordinate courts. The grade of such a court depends up which the officer happening to preside over it is investe Jalgaon Court is in point. When Mr. Nizámuddin was Jalgaon he had powers to try suits of the value of Rs. 3 Jalgaon Táluka for amounts exceeding that sum were trie Commissioner of Khamgaon. Subsequently Mr. Nizám with the full powers of a Subordinate Judge and then all the ferred to him. Then after a time Mr. Nizámuddin had to go and an interregnum followed. When after a time a successo had powers only to try suits up to the value of Rs. 300 and t sums above that amount were sent to Khamgaon. With th Judge with greater powers a further transfer and retransfer t while suits remained pending and were postponed from day had to run backwards and forwards between Jalgaon and our system!

RAOJI BHAVAN

Acting Reporter o

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press, 22nd July 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Complaint regarding the adulteration of bháng with gánja refuse 8
Administration of India:
  Comments on the British— 3
  Condemnation of the policy of Government as being solely directed towards securing an increase of revenue 3
Bombay International Exhibition: Approval of the resolution of Government inviting Native States to contribute to the guarantee fund of the— 8
Hunting excursions: Expression of opinion that European lads should not be permitted to carry loaded firearms 8
Indian Cholera Commission: Expression of opinion that representatives from each of the three presidencies of India should be appointed to sit on the— 5
Judicial matters: Suggestion that prisoners committed by the subordinate to the divisional magistrates in Karáchi should be lodged in the city jail 9
Madness amongst dogs: Expression of opinion that Government should offer a reward for ascertaining the causes of the prevalence of— ... 5
Native army:
  Advocacy of the claims of certain officers to the post of Native Aid-de-camp to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay ... 7
  Comments on the Government resolution in the matter of the decision of law suits in which Native soldiers are concerned ... 7
  Comments on the present state of the — and suggestions to Government 6
Postal matters:
  Comments on the report on the operations of the Postal Department of India for 1882-83 9
  Inconvenience caused to the public by the money order forms at present in use 10
  Inconvenience caused to the people of Poona by their having to go to the general post office to receive articles addressed to them 10
  Inconvenience felt by the people of Kaira by the location of the post office outside the town 10
  Suggestion regarding the opening of a branch post office in Gopipura, Surat 10
Public service: Suggestion regarding the employment in the — of persons who have passed the Matriculation Examination 8
Rájkot: Scarcity of water in the camp at— 9
Separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers: Discussion of the question of the 4
Stamps: Complaint against the vendors of — in Sind 9
Tours: Necessity of taking measures for abolishing the old custom according to which officers on tour are provided with necessaries by villagers 6

PART II.—Legislation—

Khoja Succession Bill: Suggestions in connection with the — ... 10
Rapid legislation: Complaint against — 12
Sind Encumbered Estates' Act: Comments on the remarks of Sir Steuart Bayley on the Bill to amend the — 10

PART III.—Education—

Grant Medical College, Bombay: Comments on the Government notification declaring Natives ineligible for employment as apothecaries ... 13
Private and Government schools in Bombay: Complaint that the mode of instruction at present followed in the —is calculated to overtax the mental capacities of boys and suggestions for remedying the evil ... 13
Technical education: Suggestions for the spread of— 12

Part IV.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway: A suggestion to the authorities of the— ...

Part V.—Municipalities—

Bombay:
Comments on the great loss sustained by the — Municipality by th sale of the Panvel Brick Works ... ...
Filthy condition of small lanes in the cities of — and Poona ...
Suggestion to the—Municipality for laying out a magnificent garden with a large zoological collection on the Rotten Row opposite the High Court Buildings ... ...
Suggestions to the Municipal Corporation of — in reference to the contribution demanded for the establishment of a Veterinary College ... ...
Bulsár: Advisability of abolishing the house-tax levied from the people of — ... ...
Calcutta: Comments on the relations of the Bengal Government with the Municipal Corporation of — ... ...
Poona: Comments on the correspondence between Mr. Winter and the municipality of — on the subject of the nomination of a chairman ...

Part VI.—Native States—

Dhrángadra: Comments in connection with the imposition of a fine of Rs. 500 on the State of—for failing to arrest highway robbers and a suggestion for the employment of the British police for the purpose ... ...
Indore: Comments on the reports that are in circulation regarding the administration of the Chief of— ... ...
Khairpur, Sind: Complaint that the territory of the Mir of — serves as a place of refuge to insolvent borrowers ... ...
Rájpipla: Approval of the action of the Bombay Government in the matter of the establishment of a Joint Administration at— ... ...

Part VII.—Berár Affairs—

Judicial system of Berár: Suggestions for reforming the— ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

C. R.
1857
NDIA OFFICE
25 UG 1884

REPORT

ON

NATIVE PAPERS

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 26th July 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
*16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	200
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
22	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*24	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*25	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
26	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*27	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
30	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
31	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
32	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
33	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
34	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
35	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
36	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
37	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*39	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
40	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
41	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
42	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
43	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*44	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
45	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
46	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
47	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
48	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*49	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
51	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*53	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
54	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*55	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*56	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*58	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
59	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*65	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*69	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 229

o.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
70	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
71	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
83	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
84	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
85	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
86	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
87	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*88	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
89	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,090
90	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
91	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
92	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
93	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
94	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
95	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
96	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
97	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
98	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
99	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
00	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
01	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
02	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
03	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
04	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
05	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
06	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
07	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
08	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
09	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
10	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
11	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
12	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
13	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
14	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
15	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,814
16	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
17	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
18	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
19	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
20	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
21	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
22	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
23	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
24	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
25	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
26	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
27	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
28	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
29	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
30	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
31	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	225
32	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
33	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
34	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
35	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
36	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
37	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
38	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
	SINDI.
39	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

Votes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, h are printed in italics.

3. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the News- in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. ese cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the al Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be ately necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in eneral Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Po

The Indian Specta

Condemns the policy of refusing information on State matters to the public.

which is in every sense
We now and then hea
crying grievances agai country. The bureaucr that it takes delight in attaching to any burnin
It is intolerant of outsid withheld. Again it fa the public. But for the fall to the ground. Th and cabined mind. W a benefit to those havi
ments are repositories relating to the whole b parted and broadly sc government. The less information, the great infatuated with the beli
autocratic form of gov reform in this direction of the press for which t
they may be intereste by driblets. It is this ing portion of the pr
press is treated alike, t
nerate into what the St
which the men in office nence. It is the inso assumes in the plenitud
has no right to dema doodle" he may choos
which the exigencies
No ministry in Englan
information except fo
fierce light of Parlian
opinion is not worth play the Sir Oracle. C have no dog or cur of information which is th

The Native Opinio

Comments on the admission of Europeans and Eurasians to the exclusion o Natives into the Departmen of the Survey of India.

profess to view Europe
on the admission of ca

The Indian Specta

Recommends that th parties that were convicted i connection with the Salen riots should now be released

Politics and the Public Administration.

Condemns the policy of refusing information on State matters to the public.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 20th July says:—It is not the first time that independent publicists, anxious to be accurately informed on important State matters, have inveighed against the absurd practice that prevails in the various Secretariats of doggedly refusing to give information which is in every sense of the word public and is also paid for by the public. We now and then hear a complaint under this head. It is one of the small crying grievances against the autocratic form of government prevailing in the country. The bureaucracy in power is so narrow-minded and withal so jealous that it takes delight in withholding the information, at any rate till the interest attaching to any burning topic under consideration is lost or has diminished. It is intolerant of outside criticism. That is one reason why information is withheld. Again it fails to apprehend the fact that it exists at the expense of the public. But for the public the raison de être of its own existence would fall to the ground. The broad view of public policy never troubles its cribbed and cabined mind. Whatever tends to educate public opinion is in a measure a benefit to those having the reins of administration. Everywhere governments are repositories of the most comprehensive and accurate information relating to the whole body politic. The more such information is widely imparted and broadly scattered about, the lighter and the pleasanter the task of government. The less the criticism of the wrong sort based on inaccurate information, the greater the gain. The hitch is this. That bureaucracy is infatuated with the belief that the people exist for them. So long as the present autocratic form of government prevails there can be no remedy or hope of reform in this direction. Unfortunately the worse thing is that certain organs of the press for which the confidential advisers may have a fancy or in which they may be interested are inspired. Official information is doled out to them by driblets. It is this official nobbling that is much resented by the remaining portion of the press that is not thus favoured. But even when the entire press is treated alike, there is the apprehension that the information may degenerate into what the Statesman once called "fatuous flapdoodle." The attitude which the men in office generally assume towards the public is one of impertinence. It is the insolent official who shuts up all sources of information and assumes in the plenitude of power that the public which pays him his salary has no right to demand the smallest scrap of information except the "flapdoodle" he may choose to dole out. Nobody asks for political information which the exigencies of State may require to remain secret or confidential. No ministry in England can live for three months that attempts to withhold information except for strong reasons shown for the refusal. But here the fierce light of Parliamentary criticism is unknown and the inspired public opinion is not worth much. And so each official, high or low, is tempted to play the Sir Oracle. Calmly smoking his calumet of official indolence, he would have no dog or cur of the public bark at his door and demand that diversified information which is the pabulum of Indian journalism.

Comments on the admission of Europeans and Eurasians to the exclusion of Natives into the Department of the Survey of India.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 20th July says:—The Government of India have recently issued a resolution which provides for the admission of Europeans and Eurasians, to the exclusion of all other classes, as candidates in the Department of the Survey of India. It is very surprising that such a resolution should have been issued during Lord Ripon's administration. If Government profess to view Europeans and Natives in the same light, why this restriction on the admission of candidates into the Survey Department?

Recommends that the parties that were convicted in connection with the Salem riots should now be released.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 20th July says:—Slowly the true history of the Salem riots and of the innocents who were convicted some months ago is unravelling itself. Nemesis is nothing if not sure-footed. And it is some satisfaction to know that those who gave perjured evidence, on the strength of which alone many law-abiding men in Salem who were not concerned in the matter were senten to long terms of imprisonment, have now met with their proper deserts. Of first batch of 9 perjurers who were tried last week at Coimbatore 7 have b convicted. Thus have the wicked fallen. But it is sad to see the innoc still needlessly undergoing unjust sentences—unjust because based on concoc evidence, some of it under the inspiration of the police. Two of these wretc perjurers confessed to having been driven to swear away false evidence un police pressure! This is the usual tale. Wherever factions have quarrell wherever blood has been spilled, wherever riots have occurred, there it has b eventually discovered that the police of the place had something or other to A conviction is daily growing in the minds of the unbiassed that everywhere police do extort confessions either from prisoners or witnesses or both. Is t feature of the maintenance of law and order in India creditable to the auth ties? Not a week passes but some such event is chronicled in the pap Surely it is time the Supreme Government appointed a commission of inqu with the view of placing the police on an honest footing. Are the people to frightened everywhere and even sent to the Andamans, if not to the gallows, perjured evidence concocted or supported by the police? What apology the administration of Mr. Grant Duff to offer? What have Messrs. Macle McIver & Co. to say to the revelations now made public? What reparation the Madras Government going to make to those who have been unjustly c victed? For the sake of the reputation of British impartiality it is to be ho not a day will be lost in freeing them from their present wrongful incarcerati

Discusses the question of the separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers.

In an article headed "Separation of Judicial from Executive function the Sind Times (5) of the 15th July says:—What the reasons for not uniting these two functions in and the same officer? They are mainly two: the f a politico-economical one, the other an ethical juridical one. The former is based on the princi of division of labour, and the latter is based upon what may be called an axi of morals as well as of law, viz., that a biassed judge is a bad judge, and t the best judge is he whose mind is a tabula rasa in the particular matter before him. An officer who has heavy revenue duties to perform in addit to heavy judicial duties can hardly perform both these classes of duties satis torily. At any rate he is less likely so to discharge them than an officer has only one of these sets of duties to discharge. So again a person who already formed an opinion about a case, or who has been connected with it its initial stages, is more likely to decide it wrongly, if not wrongfully, tha person who approaches it from an independent standpoint, with a clear c science and an unfettered judgment. Even under the present law the fact t a revenue officer has made a preliminary enquiry into a case in his reve capacity is always a good ground for demanding its transfer from him in magisterial capacity. It follows from these considerations that wherever executive officer has heavy revenue and judicial duties to perform and at same time has abundant opportunities and temptations for forming a prejudgm it is imperatively necessary to introduce the reform of separating the two fu tions and dividing the labour. Here in Sind, for example, the Mukhtyárk and Assistant Collectors are not only overburdened with revenue and judi duties, but at the same time command peculiar facilities for obtaining hear and unsworn information, and are peculiarly liable to that moral jaundice wh is generally produced by such information. The writer here gives two hy thetical cases which illustrate the abuse of judicial functions by execut officers on account of misleading information and private pique or unwor revenge, and proceeds to remark:—The Mukhtyárkars unite in themsel numerous powers of which the rayats have a salutary dread. The Legislat expects even from village rustics a knowledge of such Acts as the Bombay La Revenue Code, the Irrigation Act, the Salt Act, the Forest Act, the Munici Act and the Police Act. Under any one of these Acts the Mukhtyárkar can alw manage to make it too hot for them, if he so chooses. All these Acts, except the first, create petty offences which the Mukhtyárkar as magistrate is authori to discover and punish, while even the first of these gives him as Mukhty kar power to sentence a man to fine for "wilfully erasing, removing, or in ing a boundary mark" besides numerous revenue powers fra the rayat. These are some of the facts which render the sep tive from judicial functions extremely necessary.

Approves of the arrangements made by the Bombay Government to provide Indian beer for European troops.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 20th July says:—It is arrangements have been completed Government with Messrs. Meaki provide India-brewed beer for Eu
the Bombay Presidency. This is though it is a pity that the Local G have waked to a sense of the duty it owes to the tax-payer so We owe the present arrangement most probably to the press
the Supreme Government. It is owing to the persistency of India has been able to check the importation of English artic of 40 lákhs at the least per annum. But we fear lest the Lordship be the signal for all and sundry to go back to their been hard lines with provincial Governments to have to obe
the orders of the Supreme Government in the matter of the p in India as far as practicable, and they would be too glad if I dog they could return to their vomit. Job is so dear to th aucracy, and patronage is too incorrigible and fat a canker to Where is the continuity of policy? If there were some hop it would be a day of rejoicing in India. The anti-Native its time. It may for a time put up with the radical not Viceroy. But the moment his back is turned on this countr expect one big rebound to the old state of affairs. When th it will be ten times more mischievous in its effects than bef demoralising feature of Anglo-Indian polity.

Comments on the resolution of the Bombay Government regarding the abandonment of the tax levied on kacha wells in Gujarát.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 22nd July expresse
the abandonment of the tax levied Gujarát, and says that it is not a water-rate should be revised with a
the loss in revenue caused by this at present contemplated. When Go that the revenue derived from the wells is trifling no great loss will be caused to them by the en of that source of revenue. The loss can be met by the cur useless and extravagant expenditure. If this is done the o ernment resolution under notice will be fully gained.

Criticises the relations of Government with Native Chiefs and Inámdárs in regard to ábkári, opium, &c.

The Jagadádarsh (35) of the 20th July says:—It is a satisfaction that the British Gover showing their recognition of one duties of a government by the im taxes on intoxicants like opium, gá liquors. Nay, a still greater en duties levied on European liquors would be justifiable, consi which their use has committed among the Native populatio time it is extremely necessary that Government, in pursuin policy, should guard against the infringement of the rights others. A consideration of the present arrangements howev induce the painful conviction that the authorities are bent u increase of the Government revenue regardless of the vested
The sanads that have been granted to several Inámdárs mention of the concession of rights over water, trees, stones, ment have already pledged themselves to protect these righ their receiving a judi of 5 annas in the rupee. It is theref persecute the Inámdárs by raising new questions regarding th very natural that the Inámdárs should develop new source same way as the British Government have been doing, and it abridge their rights simply with the view of augmenting revenue. The same remarks apply to the relations adopte with the Native States in the matter of ábkári and opium.

that Government have allowed compensation in consideration of the restricti imposed, but it is sheer injustice to force Native States with a high hand cede their rights for the compensation offered. We are of opinion that suc procedure will not pass by the name of justice even in England. This opp sive conduct of Government has given rise to heart-burnings among the Chi There is not the slightest doubt that such a policy of trampling the rights Native States with an eye to petty fiscal interests will never produce g results.

Advises Government to attend to certain complaints made by dealers in spirituous liquors.

In an article headed "An A'bkári Grievance" the Native Opinion (11 the 20th July says:—The avidity with which increase of revenue from every source is sought fo an evident indication of the moral deterioration Government. Turn to every department of State you will find that its Argus-eyed head is ever and a revolving in his mind the best means of turning the existing resources to better advantage of Government. Thus an examination of the several sour of revenue proves that this avidity, this zeal for an increase of revenue, is alw kept screwed up to the highest pitch, the result being that the subject find beyond his means to live decently. Of course the ever recurring plea for this high-pressure system is at hand and is flung into the face if anyone attem to point out the black spots in the system itself. Mr. S. Keaye, Mr. Hyndn and all other recent writers on the present condition of India are set down black plagues and monomaniacs, because they have attempted to tear the from the system and shocked the complacence of the British people by paint our condition in its true colours. Though our rulers do not see it, this syst of high pressure is more likely than not to prove the last straw on the cam back, and the goose that lays golden eggs will be killed in the end to the s prise and bitter regret of our rulers. A scene of this over-flowing zeal revenue is about to be enacted in Poona and in some mofussil stations, suppose, in August next. It is in connection with our A'bkári Department which we have at no time been great admirers. The toddy-dealers hav been considerably fleeced, now comes the turn of wine and spirit merchants pay an enhanced quota of revenue to replenish Government coffers. But process adopted for the object in view is so objectionable that it would h been a wonder if it had not outraged the sensibility of the honest mercha In a courteously worded representation they have laid before Governm their grievance in detail. We shall not enter for the present upon series of difficulties in the way of their trade as enumerated by the Po wine merchants in their petition to Government, but will address oursel to the main features only. Clause III. enjoins that if a licensee has to le his premises, whatever the nature of the call upon him, he must obtain previous sanction of the Collector to his doing so and pay a fee of Rs. 5 obtain such permission. This injunction is cruel in the extreme, and em gencies may arise which, while they may force him to leave his premi even without such sanction, may render the licensee responsible for acts of his servants. But why should it be necessary at all to secure s permission when the license-holder is sufficiently bound under the terms of license? The enormity of the injunction consists in making the licensee pr tically a prisoner in the cell. We think this feature of the clause deser immediate amendment. For ourselves we fail to see either the utility or advisability of asking for daily accounts of wines sold. Such a provision only enhance the cost of wines to the consumers. The most surprising of these clauses is that which allows police myrmidons to pay their unwelco visits to these merchants' shops whenever they may feel inclined to do so compels the licensee to keep on his premises a Sike's hydrometer to enable th visitors to guage the strength of the wines, when it is the duty of Governm to provide their inspectors with such a guage. We do not object to any spection, but it should only be entrusted, if at all necessary, to officers of supe ranks. If it is deemed necessary by the department to test the strength wines, we think it can be easily done by a declaration by the inspecting off that the capsule and cork of every bottle is intact. We believe that this s gestion of the petitioners is sound and deserves the consideration of Gove ment. The worst part of the whole arrangement is that these rule enforced without any previous timely intimation of their introducti result will be that those of the wine merchants who may have larg hand or may have ordered them from England will be great losers in of the enhancement of the duty levied upon them under the new ru the circumstances a six months' previous notice was, we believe Another grievance of these people is that the military messes, whic supplies direct from England free of duty, are allowed to sell quanti and spirits to Government officers. If the allegation is correct, would appear to be illegal and should be stopped. We hope the i in the petition will be duly weighed and given the amount of favo deration they so richly deserve. [The Bombay Chronicle (79) of t the Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 26th July make a similar compl Complains of the oppressive nature of the Highway Act.

The Shivájí (65) of the 18th July says that it is very cruel the provisions of the Highway Act the the cultivating classes that drive a tr bullock carts in order to eke out the scan their legitimate profession. These classes been reduced to the greatest straits by wanton assessment of land their miseries are aggravated by the imposition of many other tax circumstances the imposition of a tax on carts will make th most unbearable. Such a step is calculated to induce a belief that do not like to see their rayats happy. The mere fact that these cla conversant with the modern modes of ventilating grievances wil the conclusion that there is no cause for complaint. If the o Revenue Department will have the courage to be faithful to Go latter will know the whole truth of the affair. But the tenor of th authorities deters these officers from representing things in the This state of affairs is very unsatisfactory. Though everything app the necessary materials for a tempest are gradually accumulating, no knowing when the crisis may come. If Government desire contingency a very distant one they should initiate a policy of sho regard to the feelings of the people. The major portion of the the country is agricultural, and therefore an attempt should be m and remedy the inconveniences of this class.

Makes certain suggestions in connection with the appointment of a separate officer to supervise the Police Department.

The Kalpataru (37) of the 20th July hears that a proposal is to relieve the Divisional Commissioner connection with the Police Department a them to a new officer to be called the Po sioner. It is said that the Commissioner that they did not get sufficient leisure the duties in connection with the Police Formerly there were only two Revenue Commissioners and the recently increased to three. It is difficult to understand the comp ing pressure of work, and on this ground alone there appears to b for effecting the proposed arrangement. If however it is based o that one officer cannot efficiently attend to different sets of dutie the same time, the proposal is unobjectionable and is calculated to Police Department. But the proposal must be carried out with any extra cost on Government. The writer proposes to do this b the revenue work of the Presidency to two Commissioners and d salary of the third towards the new appointment.

Disapproves of the proposal to confer certain newly created appointments in the A'bkári Department on Europeans and Eurasians only.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 22nd July says:—We are that it has been resolved to confer ments of A'bkári Inspectors recently s the Bombay Government on the officers in Preventive Service. Surely such a po calculated to fill all large departments wi and Eurasians to the exclusion of Native Fergusson has greatly encouraged arbitrary officers by the rece placing Eurasians on a level with Europeans. [The Satyá Shodh 20th July also makes a similar complaint.]

Points out the necessity of increasing the salaries of Hospital Assistants.

The Din Bandhu (6) of the 20th July says:—Though w
ly thank Government for the liber
they have been providing for the c public by the establishment of hos saries, still it is very much to be r intentions of Government are in a manner neutralized by the shown to the interests of the subordinate medical service. T accounts for the difficulty that is experienced in procuring sufficient number of persons ready to enlist themselves in this est inconvenience suffered by the class of medical subor Hospital Assistants lies in the insufficiency of the remuneration considering their official position and the hard work they very doubtful whether honest work can be expected from servants. When in charge of Civil Hospitals they have th ment entrusted to them, while they are quite independent offic of dispensaries. In cases of murder and grievous hurt the j generally guided by the opinions of these officers. In these very dangerous that officers with such responsible duties sh salaries. The allowance of Rs. 30 which these officers form recently been discontinued by Government on the plea that from private practice are a sufficient encouragement to th however appear to be labouring under a misapprehension in people with whom these officers have to deal have scarc or the ability to pay them their fees, and a trifling sum of earned during a year can hardly be looked upon as a sufficie to these low-paid servants. Dr. Beatty's period of service is and it is not unlikely that any efforts made by him for perp among the subordinate medical service in the shape of amelioration of their condition will meet with response from

Complains of the inconveniences caused to the public by the way in which justice is administered in the mofussil courts.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 24th July co convenience and trouble caused to way in which justice is administer courts. Hundreds of persons may from these courts who have not b hearing and who are told to atte
When the officers are on circuit the dance attendance on them, moving from one village to anc detriment of their own callings. The inconvenience is more land revenue matters than in civil suits. In the case of t postponement only entails on the parties an additional exper batta to witnesses, &c., but there is no end to the sufferings of the former description. It is therefore necessary that jud first decide what cases they will be able to hear on a p should summon the parties and witnesses in those cases only.
are, owing to certain circumstances, prevented from finishir cases appointed for the day they should give timely notice t cerned, intimating at the same time the day to which the hea may be postponed. This arrangement would prove beneficia Officers going on circuit should summon the parties in onl
they think they will be able to get through and should state when and where the parties should attend. Such a system is a prompt transaction of business, to prove very convenient to remove the misapprehensions which are produced by the in interests shown by the officers of Government.

Says that European and Native families ought to be invited to the parties given at the Government House.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 26th July, in writin evening party given at Ganesh
cellency the Governor, observes th of his career Sir James Fergusson
of his anxiety to bridge the gulf th
peans and Natives, but a single hot sufficed to deprive him of that noble quality. He was unabl before the antagonistic views, the insidious attempts to gain him indignation, of the European community, and we therefore see i change. In the beginning he invited Natives to one or two par the Government House. But that arrangement has been done av favour of a single evening party. This will do no good and will intercourse between the two races. Sir James is much mistaken upon soothing the sensibilities of Natives by inviting a few Europe partake of refreshments and enjoy theatrical amusements at an ev in the company of a Native assemblage. Entertainments in which European families may mix together and enjoy the hospitality of ment House are the greatest desideratum and in these His Ex Governor should set the first example. The writer thinks that advisers are more to blame than Sir James himself in such matte be hoped His Excellency will invite European and Native families instead of holding ludicrous gatherings like the one under notice promote intercourse between Europeans and Natives.

Objects to the free grant of a Government plot of ground and the contribution in money towards the erection of a new building for the use of the Indo-British Institution at Bombay.

The same newspaper of the 21st July takes exception to the libe
by Government in making a free grant plot of Government ground near the Sc and in contributing about Rs. 50,000 for
of a new building for the use of the Institution, and says that when the in first established in Bombay the Local recommended to the Supreme Governm grant of the plot of ground on which the Trinity Chapel and the Institution now stand. The Supreme Government refused to ac commendation of the Bombay Government and ordered in 1839 t amount of money should be charged for the piece of ground to b the purpose. When the then Supreme Government acted thus i it is highly objectionable that the present Government should grant of a valuable plot of ground and contribute a large sum erection of the building. The Government of India must ha share in this liberality. The Government of India refused to con a plot of ground in this very locality for the use of the Municipal O the payment of full charges for the same. Is not this conduc being complained against? Is the Government of Lord Ripon outcry of Europeans and their organs? Does his Lordship thin were to object to this grant for a Protestant institution fresh attac made on him on the ground of his Catholic faith? This sort of l pleases the people and creates feelings of suspicion in them.

Disapproves of the contemplated appointment of Mr. Ollivant as the chief organizer of the Bombay International Exhibition.

The same newspaper of the 21st July strongly objects to the appointment of Mr. Ollivant, the Munici sioner for the city of Bombay, as the chi of the Bombay International Exhibitio
the loss which the municipality would s withdrawal from the control of its affai
that it would be better either not to ho bition at all or to hold it after two years. The Municipal Corpora protest against Mr. Ollivant's transfer. The writer advises Go nominate Mon. Joubert as the chief organizer of the Exhibitio consents to act as a salaried commissioner under the supervisio mittee. [The Yajdán Parast (128) of the same date expresses so lar sentiments and suggests the names of Messrs. Arthur Crawfo Griffiths, the Superintendent of the Sir Jamshedji Jijibhái Schoo
the post. The latter officer has acquired experience by the part h organization of exhibitions in England and Paris in previous year
rience would therefore prove very valuable for the Bombay Exhi Bombay Chronicle (79) of the same date says that Mr. Ollivant's cannot fail to meet with the unqualified, nay enthusiastic, approb public. The writer however trusts that in the event of his undertake the chief management of the Exhibition the authoriti in concert with him to make such arrangements as will not interests of the municipality during his temporary withdra control.]

Complains of the inconvenience caused to the public in Sind by their being required to go to the Mukhtyárkar's office to pay the land tax.

The Sind Times (5) of the 27th June says :—We have rece complaints regarding the inconvenie the public by having to go to the office to pay the land tax. For years pádár has called for it at the doors of houses. We do not know why the C have altered such a long standing pra convenience of the public, the only individual that has benefite being the Tappádár. The Collector charges interest at 9 per ce while he only pays 3¾ per cent. on deposits in the savings bank if the exaction of interest is legal or equitable.

Points out the necessity of opening telegraph offices at Pátan and Rádhanpur.

A correspondent of the Ahmedabad Samáchár (84) of the 2 out the inconvenience suffered by the and Rádhanpur by the want of telegra railway stations, and says that if t were opened in those places about one sages would be despatched every month and Government would Complaint against Mr. E. L. Cappel, Assistant Collector of Sholápur.

In an article headed " Improper conduct of our Assistant Kalpataru (37) of the 20th July says :— (16th July) Mr. E. L. Cappel went on cursion with his office Jamádár. Afte some time he came in sight of game the act of aiming a shot at it his dog, which was in the charge o caught the scent and ran at the game. The game having been danger by the movement of the dog effected its escape and the missed his aim. Being fired with indignation, the gentlemar Jamádár with such vehemence that his back, though covered with quite red and bore the marks of the stripes. The poor Jamádár blaming his own unfortunate lot for the injuries inflicted on could he do? Who can vouchsafe redress to him? If he we steps against the delinquent he must be prepared to wash his Government service and to run the risk of starving his child then where is the certainty that he will get redress? The European and a high officer to boot. It is indeed deplorable that a member of the Civil Service who is generally credited wit of even temper, discretion and civility should have been guilty Perhaps the Jamádár was very fortunate in having escaped with What if the sáheb had in the fit of anger aimed his pistol at We long for the day when God will infuse among the Europea cultivate friendly relations with Natives.

Points out the necessity of speedily constructing flood works at Surat.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 23rd July says :—Our co Surat justly complains that no mea been adopted for the construction of prevention of floods in that city. It i fall of rain this season has not been heavy and unusual floods are not likely to occur, but it is inconsistent w safety to remain indifferent in the matter. The lesson taught by great floods ought not to be forgotten. What was the result made by Government regarding the construction of flood works of constructing them been given up? Is this delay to contin heavy flood overtakes the city? It is the duty of the authoritie of the Bombay Government to help the people of Surat by taking preventing the recurrence of the calamity which befalls them ever Dátardun (93) of the 24th July expresses similar sentiments.]

Complains of the fearful condition of roads in Rånder.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 25th July says that as rain fell at Rånder for twelve days consecutively the condition of the road leading from Surat to Rånder and that of all the roads in the town has become very alarming. The roads are full of deep holes in which stinking and dirty water has collected. These are a certain source of injury to the public health. [A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (103) of the same date makes a similar complaint.]

Points out the necessity of running a steam-launch between Kotri and Gidu-Bandar.

A correspondent of the Sind Times (5) of the 15th July says:—What I contend for is that a steam-launch is very much required between Kotri and Gidu-Bandar and that the local funds can well afford to have it. It must be admitted that Kotri is one of the chief stations in Sind, where there is great passenger traffic; it must at the same time be admitted that most of the passengers have either to come from or to go to Hyderabad, and that consequently they must cross the river when going to Kotri as well as when returning from it. It is true beyond doubt that a great majority of passengers travel by the mail trains while only a few travel by the mixed. An easy and speedy means of crossing the river both at the time when the mail trains arrive as well as when they depart ought t be provided. Both the up and the down mails reach and leave Kotri during the night, and there is no steam-launch plying at night. The two cutters running between Gidu-Bandar and Kotri are not safe, especially during the summer season, they cannot accommodate many persons, and their charges are very heavy. At present it is the Government servants who can get leave only for a day or two, and a few others that use these cutters. I have reason t believe that even now the local fund committee receives from the cutters a net income of about Rs. 1,200 every year. There is little doubt that a steam-launch would be financially a gain to the local funds, but even if it were t prove otherwise, which nobody apprehends, it is the duty of the local board to provide for the safe and speedy conveyance of passengers.

Points out the necessity of erecting a dharmashála at Karáchi.

The Sind Times (5) of the 27th June says:—It is a matter for great surpris and regret that a town like Karáchi should afford n shelter to the numerous strangers who arrive ther or pass through it. It has no dharmashála for th poor and the homeless, and no cheap and comfortabl accommodation for those travellers who can and will pay for it. In other part of Sind, even in small villages, a dharmashála may be seen, maintained by privat charity or from the local or provincial funds. But nothing of the kind is to b found in Karáchi, a city second to Bombay in the whole Presidency, and whic by reason of its growing importance and increasing commerce and consequen demand for labour and capital is attracting numbers of strangers and foreigner from different parts of Sind and the Panjáb. Such a state of things is discreditable to a big city like Karáchi, and the sooner it is remedied the better fo its growing reputation and for those who take a pride in the rapidity wit which fine buildings have been springing up on all sides of it. We doubt no that with a little exertion there may be found many wealthy and charitabl persons who will come out to provide handsomely for travellers and strangers But even if there were no person coming forward with an open purse th powers that be ought, we think, to build a dharmashála for the convenience o travellers coming to Karáchi.

Points out the advisability of establishing a tonga service between Ratnágiri and Kolhápur.

The Satyă Shodhak (62) of the 20th July points out to the authorities of the Postal Department the advisability of establishing a tonga service between Ratnágiri and Kolhápur. The opening of the A'mba Ghát under the auspices of the administration of Mr. Crawford has been the signa for a free intercourse between the cities above the Ghåts and Ratnágiri, and there are signs of a gradual development of that intercourse. There is no doubt that the proposed tonga service would pay its way inasmuch as various classes of passengers would hasten to take advantage o the convenience. The prospect of a railway to Kolhápur is not very distan and if the people of Konkan meant at all to profit by it it would be throug the medium of a tonga service.

Complains of the inefficiency of the police in the villages of Válod, Buhári and Ambáj.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 24th July, writin from Surat, mentions some recent cases of theft an plunder in the villages of Válod, Buhári and Ambá and complains of the insufficient number of polic sepoys in these villages, where these offences a on the increase.

Education.

Says that a class for teaching vaccination to females should be opened in connection with the Grant Medical College, Bombay.

The Yajdán Parast (128) of the 20th July expresses approval of the res lution adopted by the Municipal Commissioners Calcutta to engage the services of two female vaccina tors, and says that it would be better if Bombay wer to do the same. When Bombay has not yet produce female doctors, it is difficult to get females well verse in this subject. But as vaccination can be learnt i a short time, a class should be attached to the Grant Medical College for teaching vaccination to females in the same way as a class for teaching midwifer is attached to the same institution.

Complains of the want of schools in the villages of the Gogha Táluka.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 20th July complains of the want of schoo in the villages of the Gogha Táluka, names 16 villag where schools with a daily attendance of from 3 to 50 students could be opened, and says th when villagers request Government to open schools their villages Government ask the villagers to supply half of the necessary fund The tálukdárs of the Gogha district are tálukdárs in name only. They a agriculturists and many of them are very poor. When they find it difficult maintain themselves, how can they be expected to defray half the expenses maintaining schools? The owners of the villages of Vávadi, Tagadi and Khá are well-to-do and can afford to maintain schools, but as Government office are indifferent in the matter the want is not supplied.

Municipalities.

Complains of the indifference of the Bombay Municipality in the matter of taking precautionary measures against cholera.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 26th July refers to the weekly heal report for Bombay for the week ending 22nd Ju which reports the occurrence of three deaths fr cholera, refuses to believe that cholera has entire disappeared from the city, and says that the numb of deaths from cholera in the current week will i crease, because the epidemic is said to have aga broken out in some quarters of the city. The reasons for this apprehend increase in mortality from this epidemic are apparent. The copious rainf has enhanced the moisture in the atmosphere, which is considered one of t sources of cholera. Green and rotten vegetables are now sold on a large sc and the condition of meat sold in the bazárs is not good. The stench usual prevailing in Bombay has not abated and the bad odours emanating fr dust-bins on account of the accumulation of rain-water in them have increase What wonder then that under these circumstances cholera should aga rage virulently in the city? Who is to attend to the matter? This is rea a painful state of things.

Does not approve of the proposal of the local municipality to raise a loan of Rs. 60,000.

The Pandhari Vaibhav (52) of the 20th July does not approve of the pr posal of the Pandharpur Municipality to raise a loan Rs. 60,000 for constructing dharmashálas for the co venience of pilgrims, and advocates an expenditu of Rs. 10,000 a year from the municipal reven towards that object. The writer then proceeds examine the municipal accounts, and asks if it is not the duty of Gover ment to scrutinize the items of expenditure. The annual accounts recent published show that considerable sums of money have during the year be debited in the head of dharmashálas, while there is no trace of the erection any such buildings. Who is responsible for such a state of things? Is it rule that the people's money should be spent in this fashion?

Native States.

Makes certain suggestions for placing the relations of the Native States with the paramount power on a sound footing.

In an article headed "The Paramount Power and the Native States" t Indu Prakásh (10) of the 21st July says:—If Lo Ripon would, before laying down the reins of his offic bestow his attention on the relations between t paramount power and the Native States and attem to place them on a more satisfactory footing th they have been on for some time past, so as to prevent in the future what h been in the past a frequent source of heart-burning and vexation, His Excellen would achieve a most beneficial purpose and solve a question of very gre political importance. We observe that the Calcutta correspondent of t Pioneer gives out the report that the Government of India are at prese engaged in the solution of two very important questions affecting the Empi one of which is the definition of the relations between the paramount pow and the Native States. This question is involved in so many traditions a prejudices of the past that it will not be easy for Lord Ripon to rise superi to the counsels of those brought up in the mysteries of the Foreign Office a to discover better means than are now open to the princes of having questio affecting them settled after a satisfactory hearing. Lord Ripon seems to us be however so well fitted to give a quietus to the vexed problems which ari on account of the undefined and unsatisfactory character of those relations th we doubt not the Native princes will receive proposals coming from his Lor ship with great and special confidence. It is true that there is only one ye left for his Lordship to complete the reforms he has endeavoured to rear our midst, and so many are they that one may be inclined to feel that Lordship may prove unable to deal satisfactorily with a question whi every Viceroy before him left to itself. But it is politically unsafe keep questions of this kind in their present state for a long time, a nothing ought to deter his Lordship from doing his best to solve the questi and from effecting certain reforms in the Foreign Office, which has lo enjoyed the notoriety of a high-handed and irresponsible bureaucracy, s tling rights and destroying privileges often without giving a fair hearing those affected by its decisions. The Native States have passed through va ous stages of independence since the British established themselves as t paramount power in the country. Happily in these days we do not hear of "t earth-hunger" or of "the doctrine of lapse" which created so great a stir in t days of Lord Dalhousie and of which the late Sir J. P. Willoughby was one the steadiest and foremost champions in this Presidency. So far as the doctri is concerned, it may be said to have died out never to rear up its head agai But that was the first stage through which the princes had to pass, when th were not sure when and how they would be sacrificed to the greed for annex tion which characterised the services in Lord Dalhousie's time. But the muti which followed convinced the authors of the fatal errors of their policy a brought a revulsion of feeling in favour of the maintenance of the Native Stat and the cultivation of the sympathy of the princes. But if the immediate resu of the mutiny was to give a death-blow to the policy of the annexationis they have endeavoured to give expression to their designs by preaching t doctrine of repression in the place of that of spoliation against the Native State If Native States cannot be annexed their princes can be at least brought down a reduced to the level of powerless chiefs, with whom the British Government c trifle as much as they please. This is the principle which the supporters of t annexation policy have steadily kept in view. For instance, when the misrule Malhár Ráo became notorious, a very vigorous effort was made to induce the Go ernment of the day to take advantage of the crisis in the history of the Nati

State of Baroda and seize upon its territories so as to include it within the line. It was the wise statesmanship of Lord Northbrook which saved the Emp from a repetition of the scenes which India had witnessed in Lord Dalhous days; and his Lordship will be long remembered as the Viceroy who t the earliest opportunity of showing to the princes and people of In that the British Government fully recognized the binding force of the sole assurance conveyed to them by Lord Canning soon after the mutiny that rights of the princes and states would be respected. If the fears therefore annexation have long since been at an end, and there is none now in the ra of British statesmen who thinks that the safety of Government lies in wholesale destruction of Native States, yet their place has been taken by fear of a different character altogether. If the number of the supporters of doctrine of lapse has dwindled away, the number of those who think that princes should be reduced to the level of large landlords and brought un the complete subjection of the Foreign Office and placed at the mercy of Political Agents is perhaps growing. This stage through which the Nat States are just now passing first manifested itself when the Viceroyalty of L Lytton began. Shortly before his Lordship was sent out to India as Vice the Royal Title's Bill had passed the Houses of Parliament, sanctioning assumption of the title "Empress of India" by Her Majesty, and on occasion of its passage fears were expressed by no less a person t
the present Prime Minister, who then was the leader of the opposit that the new Imperial title would change the relations, or would be ta to change the relations, between the British Government and the Na States. The Ministers however put it most distinctly that the title of E press was meant to confirm the rights secured to the princes by me of treaties and engagements from time to time. But all these assurances w quietly ignored when Lord Lytton entered upon his career as Viceroy India, and endeavoured by every means in his power to curtail the freedom action of the princes in several matters. It then became evident that Gladstone's fears were not altogether baseless. Immediately after Her Majes assumption of the title of Empress some of the Native States were coaxed i signing their consent, much against their will, to certain arrangements rega ing salt and opium—arrangements that were intended to encroach upon finances of the Native States in the interests of the paramount power.
princes protested as much as they could, and it will be remembered tha request made by many chiefs in Káthiáwár, who were affected by these arran ments, to have a personal interview with Sir Richard Temple, then Gover of Bombay, was refused in a very graceless manner. It is relations of character that require a satisfactory settlement but which are at present allo to be left undefined. The Native States may be said to be at a disadvant whenever any question affecting their interests arises. What is it but a n unjustifiable wrong to a prince of the position of Holkar that he should h
the charge of disloyalty laid against him by political officers of the stamp
Mr. Durand, now Secretary to the Government of India in the Fore Department, and no fair hearing should be given to the Mahárája to re the charge? Likewise whenever a dispute as to some territory or as to so other question arises between the British officers and a prince, the only red allowed to the latter is to refer the question to the Foreign Office, or if prince happen to be one under the jurisdiction of a Local Government that of Bombay, questions affecting him are disposed of by the judicial mem of the Governor's Council. It is idle to expect that justice can be done adjudication of this character. Mr. Tucker, who was formerly a membe the Council of this Presidency, once expressed himself to the effect t while holding that office he found himself in an unenviable situation and impressed with the necessity of a reform in the system adopted by Governm in deciding questions affecting the Natives princes. The work, he said, heavy as the judicial member of the Council has to read lengthy petitions to decide the questions submitted to him without the advantage of hearing b sides. Likewise the Foreign Office of the Government of India cannot expected to do justice to questions affecting the Native princes. Its traditi are such as to unfit it for the duties that it has to discharge. It is no do in the hands of the Viceroy for the time being to exercise an effective con

over it, but the Viceroy happening generally to be new to the country and those in the office being initiated in the mysteries of Indian diplomacy, he has to guide himself according to the plans suggested by them. It is therefore seldom that princes meet with justice. They may appeal against decisions adverse to them to the Secretary of State, but the result generally is that they get no redress even there; the Secretary of State is more or less pledged to support the action of the Government here, whether on account of a desire to keep up its prestige or on account of a disinclination to wade through the large mass of papers accompanying each case! Under this system the Political Department is the irresponsible judge of the rights of the princes secured to them under treaties, and the tendency of late has been to reduce those rights as far as possible. The suggestion has from time to time been made that a Court of Arbitration composed of well trained English lawyers should be established for the adjudication of questions which arise between the British Government and a Native State or between one Native State and another, on the model of Her Majesty's Privy Council in England. Such a court would certainly have the merit, which the present system does not possess, of insuring to aggrieved princes a satisfactory and public hearing o their grievances. The only way to inspire confidence in the princes is to show that Government will not, in dealing with their right, observe diplomacy and secrecy, but give them an opportunity of a fair statement and argument o their case. We can well understand that the Viceroy should have the powe to deal on his own responsibility with such questions as may arise from a Native prince assuming an aggressive attitude towards the British Governmen by befriending some power rival to the latter or otherwise. State policy doe require that cases of this kind should be dealt with by the State alone and no by judicial tribunals. But these are not the cases of which we see much now The present system has been found wanting in the essentials of a proper administration of justice and the Native princes have learnt to their cost tha under it they are destined to suffer. It is high time that some reform wer made and the relations between the paramount power and the States so define as to allow of disputes between the two or between one State and another bein decided by a properly constituted court of arbitration. If there is any trut in the report that Lord Ripon is bestowing his attention on the question, it i to be hoped his Lordship will take the proposal for a court of this kind int consideration. The fact that the Native States should be maintained intac being accepted, the next question is—how to deal with them in cases whic bring their interests in collision with the interests of the paramount power. A satisfactory solution of this question has yet to be attempted, and Lord Ripon memory will be remembered with gratitude by the princes if he takes it i hand and invites the opinions of the princes and sees if the proposal for th institution of an arbitration court is feasible.

Disapproves of the policy of entrusting young princes with the powers of administration.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 25th July alludes to the approachin installation of the Thákor of Gondal and says that is dangerous to allow young princes to manage thing in their own way. It is unwise to entrust youn potentates with the responsible work of governin their States, when they have nothing but the exper ence of college life to their credit, without exercising any check over the Many instances have occurred in which young princes have grievously erre and have been led astray by those about them. It is true that the youn Thákor of Gondal is clever and well educated and that he showed his courag by undertaking a long voyage to England. But it is not likely that he will b able to effect reforms in the State single-handed.

Complains of the prevalence of maladministration in the Dhrángadra State.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 20th July says:—British officers have confidence in the administration of justice by th State of Dhrángadra. The paramount power ought take measures for speedy reform in that directio Mr. Kuvarji Kohyáji Vakil, the Diván of Dhrángadr is a very able man and can introduce the necessary reforms into the State, b he has hitherto been helpless on account of the schemes of certain who enjoyed the protection of the Thákor's mother. If the Diván to have his own way now that the Thákor's mother is dead there a of reform in the State. The judicial officers of the State do to enjoy the confidence of the British authorities. The writer certain cases in which the Political Agent expressed his dissatisfactio decisions of the Judge of that State and proceeds :—Why does not th Agent compel the Darbár to introduce the necessary reforms into It is the Agent's duty to do so. If either the Thákor or some throw obstacles in the way of reform, strong measures ought to b remove them.

Berár Affairs.

Points out the defects of the system of judicial administration in Berár.

The Vaidarbh (16) of the 19th July says:--The administration o a copy of the Panjáb administration. In P evils which we complain of have been not by the people but their existence has bee ledged by Government and a Bill has introduced into the Viceregal Legislative Council for reorganising th administration of the province. The remarks which the Hon'ble M made in introducing the Bill apply with equal force to this provi needs of the province have outgrown the simplicity of the original There is now hardly any difference between the laws and regulation in Berár and those which are in force in Bombay or Bengal. It cann that Government are not alive to the necessity of division of labo have perceived the necessity of relieving the Resident of his judicial Similarly they have found it necessary to keep the two offices of t and Revenue Commissioners distinct. It appears to us that there not greater, reason for carrying on this separation of executive fro functions down to the district and subordinate officers. The grea is how can this be effected. The easiest answer is that we should h thing like what exists in the neighbouring presidency of Bombay. sure whether it may not be best to adopt that system. But we dou Government are prepared to make the wholesale changes which suc will necessitate; nay, we ourselves fear that it may not be easy to now. The writer then proceeds to make the following suggestions:– should be a complete separation of judicial from revenue functions powers of High Court of which Government wish to relieve th should be conferred on the Judicial Commissioner, the High Court be in the province and not at Hyderabad. (3) The Deputy Commissio already overburdened with revenue and executive work should be their judicial functions. (4) The province should be formed into t (or divisions) for judicial purposes, and these two districts (or divis be presided over by two judges of the rank of Deputy Commissioner the powers of District and Sessions Judges. (5) There should be 1 Subordinate Judges in the province, 8 in each division, and th be presided over by the most experienced Extra Assistant Commis if Government can spare them, Assistant Commissioners. These Co have power to try suits up to the value of Rs. 5,000. (6) Appea decrees of these Courts should lie to the District Courts. (7) All o for sums above Rs. 5,000 should be triable by the District Courts. (District Courts shall lie appeals from the decrees of the Subordina (9) Appeals from the original and appellate decrees of the two Di shall lie to the Judicial Commissioner. (10) The present system of Ju cases in camp should be discontinued. The inspection of the S Courts should be done by the District Judges when they go out work. We would also advocate a considerable modification of th the Courts of Small Causes.

Suggests that an Honorary Magistrate should be appointed at Adgaon.

A correspondent of the Varhád Samáchár (17) of the 21st that the trade of the town of Adga greatly on account of the removal of that place. Hitherto some hopes w regarding the restoration of the Cou regarding the proposed transfer of the Court to Telháre ha disappointment. It is however to be hoped that Governmen way to appoint an Honorary Magistrate in the town, as such a to improve the position of the town in some measure.

RAOJI BHAVANRA
Acting Reporter on t

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
29*th July* 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Ábkári :
  Advice to Government to attend to certain complaints made by dealers in spirituous liquors 6
  Criticism on the relations of Government with Native Chiefs and Inámdárs in regard to —, opium, &c.... 5
Appointments :
  Comments on the admission of Europeans and Eurasians to the exclusion of Natives into the Department of the Survey of India 3
  Disapproval of the proposal to confer certain newly created — in the A'bkári Department on Europeans and Eurasians only ... 7
Bombay International Exhibition : Disapproval of the contemplated appointment of Mr. Ollivant as the chief organizer of the — ... 9
Dharmashála at Karáchi : Necessity of erecting a — 11
Flood works at Surat : Necessity of speedily constructing the — ... 10
Highway Act : Complaint against the oppressive nature of the provisions of the — 7
Hospital Assistants : Necessity of increasing the salaries of — ... 8
Indo-British Institution at Bombay : Objection to the free grant of a Government plot of ground and the contribution in money towards the erection of a new building for the use of the — 9
Information on State matters : Condemnation of the policy of refusing — to the public 3
Judicial matters : Complaint regarding the inconveniences caused to the public by the way in which justice is administered in the mofussil courts 8
Kacha wells in Gujarát : Comments on the resolution of the Bombay Government regarding the abandonment of the tax levied on— ... 5
Land tax : Complaint regarding the inconvenience caused to the public in Sind by being required to go to the Mukhtyárkar's office to pay the— 10
Parties at the Government House : Expression of opinion that European and Native families ought to be invited to the — 8
Police :
  Complaint regarding the inefficiency of the — in the villages of Válod, Buhári and Ambáj 12
  Suggestions in connection with the appointment of a separate officer to supervise the — Department 7
Postal matters : Advisability of establishing a tonga service between Ratnágiri and Kolhápur 11
Public Service : Complaint against Mr. E. L. Cappel, Assistant Collector of Sholápur 10
Roads : Complaint regarding the fearful condition of — in Ránder ... 11
Salem riots : Recommendation that the parties convicted and sentenced in connection with the — should now be released 3
Separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers : Discussion of the question of the — 4
Steam launch between Kotri and Gidu-Bandar : Necessity of running a — 11
Stores : Approval of the arrangements made by the Bombay Government to provide Indian beer for European troops 5
Telegraph offices : Necessity of opening — at Pátan and Rádhanpur ... 10

PART II.—Education—

Grant Medical College, Bombay : Expression of opinion that a class for teaching vaccination to females should be opened in connection with the — 12
Schools : Complaint regarding the want of — in the villages of the Gogha Táluka 12

Page.

t III.—Municipalities—

Bombay: Complaint against the indifference of the — Municipality in the matter of taking precautionary measures against cholera ... 12
Pandharpur: Disapproval of the proposal of the — Municipality to raise a loan of Rs. 60,000 12

t IV.—Native States—

Maladministration in the Dhrángadra State: Complaint against the prevalence of — 15
Native States: Suggestions for placing the relations of the — with the paramount power on a sound footing 13
Powers of administration: Disapproval of the policy of entrusting young princes with the — 15

V.—Berár Affairs—

Honorary Magistrates: Suggestion for the appointment of an Honorary Magistrate at Adgaon 17
Judicial administration in Berár: Defects of the system of — ... 16

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

IDENTIAL.]

NA

PUBLISHEI

For the List

No	Names of N
	ENGL
1	The Indian Spectator..
2	„ Mahrátta ...
3	„ Morning Star
*4	„ Quarterly Journal janik Sabha ..
5	„ Sind Times
	ANGLO-M
6	The Din Bandhu
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu ..
8	„ Dnyánodayă
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh ..
10	„ Indu Prakásh
11	„ Native Opinion ..
12	„ Prabhákar
13	„ Pramod Sindhu .
14	„ Shetakaryáncha K
15	„ Subodh Patrika .
*16	„ Vaidarbh ...
17	„ Varhád (Berár) S
	MARA
18	The Arunodayă
19	„ A'ryávart ...
20	„ Bakul ...
21	„ Belgaum Samáchá
22	„ Bhála ...
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]
*24	„ Chháva ...
*25	„ Chikitsak ...
26	„ Daivadnyă Samác
*27	„ Dakshin Vritt
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak
30	„ Dnyán Ságar
31	„ Ganga Lahari
32	„ Hindu Punch
33	„ Hitechchhu
34	„ Israel[1] ...
35	„ Jagadádarsh
36	„ Jagan Mitră
37	„ Kalpataru...
*38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]
*39	„ Katáksh ...
40	„ Kesari ...
41	„ Khándesh Vaibha
42	„ Lamp of Judaism
43	„ Lokahitavádi
*44	„ Mádhavi ...
45	„ Maháráshtră Hite
46	„ Maháráshtră Mit
47	„ Nagar Samáchár.
48	„ Násik Vritt
*49	„ Nibandh Chandri
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu
51	„ Panchánan
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav
*53	„ Pisháchanáth
54	„ Poona Vaibhav
*55	„ Prabodh Chandril
*56	„ Pratod ...
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Pustak ...
*58	„ Rámdás ...
59	„ Saddharm Dip
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika.
61	„ Satyă Sadan
62	„ Satyă Shodhak
*63	„ Sharabh ...
64	„ Shetakari ...
*65	„ Shiváji[1] ...
66	„ Shubh Suchak
67	„ Suryakánt...
68	„ Suryodayă...
*69	„ Svadesh Hitechch

---

[1] Frequently ad

CON 252

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 2nd August 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	" Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	" Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	" Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	" Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	" Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	" Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	" Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	" Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	" Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	" Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	" Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	" Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	" Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
*16	" Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	200
17	" Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
19	" A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
20	" Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
21	" Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
22	" Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
23	" Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*24	" Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*25	" Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
26	" Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*27	" Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
28	" Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
29	" Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
30	" Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
31	" Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
32	" Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
33	" Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
34	" Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
35	" Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
36	" Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
37	" Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*38	" Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*39	" Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
40	" Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
41	" Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
42	" Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
43	" Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*44	" Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
45	" Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
46	" Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
47	" Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
48	" Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*49	" Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
50	" Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
51	" Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
52	" Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*53	" Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
54	" Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*55	" Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*56	" Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*57	" Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*58	" Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
59	" Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
60	" Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
61	" Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
62	" Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*63	" Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	" Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*65	" Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	" Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
67	" Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	" Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*69	" Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 252

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
70	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
71	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil...	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
83	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
84	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
85	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
86	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
87	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*88	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
89	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,090
90	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
91	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
92	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
93	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
94	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
95	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
96	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
97	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
98	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
99	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*100	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
101	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*102	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
103	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
104	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
105	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*106	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
*107	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
108	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
109	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
110	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
111	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
*112	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
113	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
114	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
115	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,814
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
117	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*118	„ Saurashtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
119	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
124	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
125	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
126	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
127	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
128	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
129	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
130	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
131	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	225
132	„ Kannadă Suvarte...	Bombay	Do.	768
133	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
134	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly ...	100
	URDU.
135	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
	SINDI.
139	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, ch are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newser in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. hese cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the cial Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, r placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be lutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politic

The Poona Vaibhav (5
o
c o h
t

Says 'that the people of India have reason to hail with delight the advance of Russia.

of two powerful governmen
terminous is in itself a gre either government on its s will produce the beneficial rulers and the ruled and o foundations. If however t lities of the English mind viz., that in the rapid stride
they do not profess to be s mere fact that the British be masters of the whole co nations are similarly inclin loath to disbelieve the pro
with the farsighted Englis
sions of Russia her attitud secure for her produce the great help to her in her pr raise her to a state of grea
that we should join our G movements of the British tion of the near approach for the miseries of India t with delight.

In an article headed "

Makes certain suggestions in regard to Sind on the subject of the separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers.

not exceeding Rs. 200 in a is now vested with the Thal and Kashmor, while nate court at Shikárpur.
is, almost equal to the are total area of Thar and Pá Judges (counting the D square miles, or, in other square miles. If we exc average will be 2,714 squ
compare this average wit rally also a second class
province, and it follows
square miles, i. e., about o
It must be remembered t civil suits on the service is one anna for every officer. If however the j instance a process is issu is clear therefore that the diction the less the amou Everyone having even a nistration knows what a d

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that the people of India have reason to hail with delight the advance of Russia.

The Poona Vaibhav (54) of the 27th July says:—In our opinion the advance of Russia to the north-western frontier of India is calculated to prove beneficial as well to the people of India as to the British Government. The apprehensions which have undoubtedly taken possession of the authorities are quite erroneous. That the dominions of two powerful governments like the English and the Russian should be conterminous is in itself a great safeguard against the exercise of oppression by either government on its subjects, and in the case of India this circumstance will produce the beneficial effect of developing amicable relations between the rulers and the ruled and of perpetuating the British rule by strengthening its foundations. If however this argument is not enough to soothe the susceptibilities of the English mind they should lay to their hearts another circumstance, viz., that in the rapid strides which the Russians have been making towards India they do not profess to be swayed by any other than commercial motives. The mere fact that the British people who landed in India as traders contrived to be masters of the whole country does not justify the conclusion that all foreign nations are similarly inclined and therefore credulous people like ourselves are loath to disbelieve the professions of Russia. It may however be otherwise with the farsighted English! But judging in the light of the present professions of Russia her attitude is decidedly advantageous to India. If India could secure for her produce the custom of the vast territories of Russia it would be a great help to her in her present commercial depression and would undoubtedly raise her to a state of great prosperity. In these circumstances it is not proper that we should join our Government in bewailing the advance of Russia. If the movements of the British Government and the current reports are any indication of the near approach of Russia, all loyal subjects should take it as a signal for the miseries of India to cease and should therefore hail the advance of Russia with delight.

Makes certain suggestions in regard to Sind on the subject of the separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers.

In an article headed "The separation of Judicial from Executive functions" the Sind Times (5) of the 22nd July says:—We propose in this article to expound a scheme by which the separation of the two functions may be carried out at the smallest cost to Government. In Sind, excluding Thar and Párkar and Thal and Kashmor, we have only 13 Subordinate Judges. The 7 Mukhtyárkars in Thar and Párkar have also civil jurisdiction in suits not exceeding Rs. 200 in amount, and the Deputy Collector, Upper Sind Frontier, is now vested with the jurisdiction of a Subordinate Judge in the tálukas of Thal and Kashmor, while the táluka of Jacobabad is annexed to the subordinate court at Shikárpur. The whole area of Sind is 48,012 square miles, that is, almost equal to the area of England and Wales put together. Excluding the total area of Thar and Párkar, 12,729 square miles, we have 14 Subordinate Judges (counting the Deputy Collector, Upper Sind Frontier) for 35,283 square miles, or, in other words, one Subordinate Judge for no less than 2,520 square miles. If we except the Deputy Collector, Upper Sind Frontier, the average will be 2,714 square miles for every subordinate court. Let us now compare this average with the average area under a Mukhtyárkar, who is generally also a second class magistrate. There are 51 Mukhtyárkars in the whole province, and it follows therefore that the average area under each is 941 square miles, i. e., about one-third of the average area under a Subordinate Judge. It must be remembered that in Sind there is a system of mileage fees levied in civil suits on the service of process besides the ordinary process fees. The fee is one anna for every mile, exclusive of the first mile travelled by the serving officer. If however the journey can be performed by rail the party at whose instance a process is issued has to pay the actual railway fare of the bailiff. It is clear therefore that the smaller the local area of a Subordinate Judge's jurisdiction the less the amount of mileage fees and railway fare payable by litigants. Everyone having even a slight acquaintance with our system of civil administration knows what a drag these fees are on justice and how inconvenient and troublesome they are. But these are not the only fees the amount of w may be considerably reduced by contracting the local limits of our subord courts. In every suit on an average at least two witnesses, if not more summoned to give evidence. The parties are bound to pay the expenses of journey to and from the court, and these expenses are sure to decrease by thirds if the local area of each subordinate court is reduced to one-third c present area. The relief that will be thus afforded will be very considerable, we feel sure it will bring its own reward in the increase of suits and the consec increase of institution and process fees. Our proposal is that the area of e subordinate court should be made co-extensive with the area now under a M tyárkar, that Mukhtyárkars should be relieved of their magisterial funct and that these functions should be transferred to officers charged with duty of administering both civil and criminal justice within the limits of revenue táluka, i. e., on an average within 941 miles. The evils of the pr regime are well known and are even officially recognized. Who is not a how often cases are delayed on account of Mukhtyárkars being forced to g on their revenue tours, how often the accused, however innocent, hav remain untried in jail for days, if not for weeks together, or how often plainants and witnesses are put to the trouble of finding the Mukhtyárkar's c and following it from day to day? These are but a few of the numerous h ful results of burdening such a hard-worked itinerant official as the Mukhtya with judicial duties. And we think it cannot but be conceded that a mea having the double end of effecting a most urgent division of labour and a urgent reform in our civil administration, a measure which would remov burden of magisterial duties from off the shoulders of Mukhtyárkars place the civil courts within easy reach of the people, deserves the best c deration of our Government, provided of course that it is financially fea

We learn from the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency the total income of the year 1882-83 amounted to Rs. 10,88,31,165 an expenditure to Rs. 10,09,35,351. Thus there was a clear surplus of Rs. 78,95
Our scheme does not involve the outlay of even one hundred and twenty part of this surplus. The Administration Report, though it inform that Sind yields a revenue of Rs. 61,18,426, does not state the amount s on its administration, and we cannot therefore say whether the small lay our scheme will involve can be disbursed from the revenues of S Excepting Karáchi, which has a Small Cause Court, we know only three c in Sind which require an officer exclusively charged with civil duties, Hyderabad, Sukkur and Shikárpur. In all the three cities there is, we bel a City Magistrate who can very well perform criminal functions. In remaining tálukas of Sind the criminal work now done by the Mukhtya amounts on an average to about 100 cases a year. The average numbe suits disposed of by each of our 13 Subordinate Judges is not more 1,500. If the local limits of their jurisdiction be reduced to one-third, average number, we believe, will hardly exceed 500. We would ther abolish the present subordinate civil courts excepting the three at Hydera Sukkur and Shikárpur, and establish new courts with magisterial and powers in every revenue táluka, excepting Hyderabad, Sukkur and Shikár
At present Government pay Rs. 8,275 a month to 51 Mukhtyárkars, and Rs. 2 to 13 Subordinate Judges, exclusive of travelling allowances. The M tyárkars get for their travelling allowances Rs. 1,275 every month, and 6 o Subordinate Judges with their establishments are paid heavy travelling al ances and batta for about 4 months during the touring season. The new co we propose will require no travelling allowance, for they will be stationar a central place within a limited area, and thus what is now paid to the ordinate courts in respect of this charge, which, we may take it, does not short on an average of Rs. 800 a month, will be available for the creation o new courts, besides the Rs. 2,675 a month already mentioned. Government therefore have in round figures about Rs. 3,500 a month, exclusive of the sal now paid to the heavy establishments of the present courts. The jud officers presiding in the proposed courts will have to be paid in all Rs. 8 a month. The Subordinate Judges now receive, as stated before, Rs. 3, therefore Government will have only to pay Rs. 4,925 more per month to c out the separation of the judicial from the executive functions of Mukhtyár and to reduce the vast local limits of the present civil courts to one-thir their present area. As for the establishments Mukhtyárkars now do t magisterial work with the aid of one munshi and one or two peons. The courts can equally well discharge this portion of their duties with the s establishment. One Sheristedár, one Názir, a couple of bailiffs, and a coupl peons will be all that will be required for the transaction of civil work. heavy establishments of 10 out of the 13 civil courts can easily be distribu among the new courts. We believe each of these 10 courts has at least messengers, as they are called, and 3 peons, besides about 6 munshis. civil work of the new courts will be comparatively light, and according to estimate Government will not be called upon to pay more than Rs. 250 a mo at the most towards the salaries of the additional establishment which it be necessary to entertain. Thus then the total amount which Government have to disburse will be Rs. 5,225 a month, or Rs. 62,700 a year, i.e., than 125th part of the probable annual surplus at the disposal of the Bom Government. May we ask if, considering the importance of the reform question, this is at all too much to pay? It is in the interests of the poor t we advocate the scheme of appointing one set of officers combining civil criminal functions within limited areas. The richer classes can even at pre manage to obtain justice, and sometimes more than justice. But the voice poor, who are the great majority of our people, can seldom get this price boon. This is a hard fact, without the least exaggeration, the least colour It is even capable of demonstration à priori and of verification inductiv Most of our thoughtful officers are as keenly sensible of it as ourselves, and believe that the rest cannot deny that the fact is true to a great extent. T admission alone is enough for our purpose. Our proposal is extremely mod ate. It does not aim at securing a perfect machinery for our judicial admi tration. When it is carried out it will not operate as a panacea for all the the poor are heir to. We have no doubt there will be some grievances, what we contend is that the reform we advocate will take the sting from m of them and that the people will be appreciably happier under it than at pres

Advocates the revival of the panchâyat system for the administration of justice.

The same newspaper in its issue of the 25th July says:—If however G ernment be not willing to spend one single ru more on reforming the judicial administration this province, we would humbly invite its attent to two other proposals. The first of these is the rev of the pancháyat system; the second is to combine the pancháyat system the system of conciliation now on its trial in the Deccan. The evils produ by the destruction of the pancháyat system under the British rule have b admitted even by Government officers, and by none more candidly than George Wingate and Sir W. Wedderburn. The evils of the cumbersome flexible machinery of civil courts are enhanced in this province by its inac sibility, even as it is, to the poor. It operates within an area of more than 2, square miles on an average, and is expected to bring cheap and ready jus to all classes of people living within this area without any distinction of ca creed or colour. But unfortunately our administration has created two castes, the rich and the poor, between whom the law does not directly recog any distinction, but who are nevertheless placed indirectly, perhaps all unc sciously, on two different footings. The poor cannot afford the luxury of a suit, but the rich always can. Even a pauper is forced to stamp his applica for leave to sue or appeal in formâ pauperis, but for defending a suit in form there is no provision at all. Parodoxical as it may appear, the Bri Government has produced the greatest inequality by giving equal rights to rich as well as to the poor. But the paradox will be no longer felt when i remembered that the remedy for enforcing those rights are more available the rich than to the poor. To have a right and to be unable to enforce i decidedly more galling than to have no right at all. It is undoubtedly benevol to enact that in the eye of the law the rich and the poor alike stand on the sa level, but this benevolence is hardly worth being proud of when the poor are no a position to catch the eye of the law at all. Imagine an agriculturist who c knows how to plough, sow and reap, and who generally lives from hand to mou imagine him called upon by the law to present a neatly written plaint, w regular logically precise paragraphs, showing at the very commencement th cause of action, a word unintelligible to him, is not time-barred, that the ation of the relief for the purposes of jurisdiction (another word unintellig him) and for the purposes of court fees is rightly made; imagine him p through the circle of fleecing petition-writers, the circle of open-mo bakshis-mongering, red-belted chaparásis, the circle of hungry underlings office, and standing at last face to face with that august personage, the Subor Judge, who cons the plaint as if he was performing a surgical operation puts plenty of questions and picks plenty of holes, who returns the pla amendment, and thus subjects the agriculturist to the fierce ordeal of passing through the three preliminary circles aforesaid. Imagine, we sa poor ignorant cultivator initiated into the mysteries of process fees, and mileage, of the service of summonses, of affidavits, of days fixed for ment of issues and days fixed for final disposal, of written statement counter written statements, of interrogatories and commissions, of exa tions, cross-examinations and re-examinations, of interlocutory order injunctions, and of the thousand and one technicalities with which our literally bristle. Imagine his confusion and amazement, and then say i not sheer heartless, ruthless cruelty which forces him to seek justice thro many pitfalls for his unwary feet. What does the man know of pow attorney, of verifications, and of that noble science now brought to perfe

the science of making the worse appear the better reason? He is sadly in the Scyllas and Charybdises that surround him on all sides. Never pre language, he perhaps makes some statements which bring him in for a cution for perjury. The pleader on the other side badgers and browbeat and takes him through a long cross-examination. A person who uses p when he settles his simple accounts with his zamindár, a person hardly remembers when he was married or when his first-born cam
the world, is expected to detail every incident of his cause and to answer question bearing, however slightly, on the matter, without qualifications, nations or limitations. Can anyone deny that such things occur almost eve in our courts? Can anyone deny that the delay, expense and circumlo which characterize their proceedings are the bane of the ryot? Let th have their courts if you like, but we strongly say it is high time to revi pancháyat system in our villages.

Comments on the decision of the Government of India in the matter of the complaint of the people of Vaduth in Sátára against certain Christian converts.

Referring to the decision of the Government of India in the matter complaint of the Bráhman inhabitants of the of Vaduth in the Sátára Collectorate, the part of which were reported at pages 9, 9, 5 and 8
Reports on the Native Papers for weeks ending April, 19th May, 8th and 15th December 18
spectively, the Bodh Sudhákar (23) of the 30th apostrophizes the complainants in the fol strain:—What consideration do you expect Government to vouchsafe to complaint—Government, who in 1858 published a long-worded proclam full of promises, but who do not now care to make the tenour of their way sistent with those promises? How far have Government kept their with Native princes and jághirdárs that you should expect them to pay tion to the reference to the promises of 1858 made in your petition? W you refer to the proclamation of 1858 or to the provisions of the Indian Code, who can obstruct the wanton course of those who profess to belong religion that is propagated at the cost of the State? A European murd at once proclaimed insane while a Native guilty of the same crime is ha Do you not understand the principle of such justice? Do you not rem the saying that whatever a king does is right? The authorities have b blind and deaf to the miseries and complaints of Hindus, and especially of mans. Are you Europeans that you should claim to have your grie redressed? Or are you at least Christians? If you are neither, who ca you? The writer then proceeds to remark:—The mere fact that the G ment of India have decided against the Vaduth Bráhmans is not suffici give a quietus to the contention raised by them. Religious wounds are healed. Even in Europe religious disputes have on many occasions political revolutions, and it is very strange that our authorities should lose s of such a glaring historical fact. But there is no help if the authorities l made it a point to annoy Hindus, and especially Bráhmans. If the maxi might being always the better of right is to be looked to as a general guid administration there is no necessity for legislative councils and legislat If people's complaints are to be thus disposed of, in what quarter can t expect relief? If the Government of India have thought fit to rely on opinion of the Bombay Government in this matter the complainants should hesitate to take their case to the Secretary of State.

Suggests a partial repeal of the export duty on rice.

Noticing the heavy fall in the export of rice from Burmah in 1883-84 Indian Spectator (1) of the 27th July says:—Ur there is some exceptional cause at work of which G ernment are aware, we must say the fall has someth to do with the duty as it now stands. If the statement of a Calcutta conten rary can be relied upon, it seems that the diminished exports are quite int gible with the proportionate growth of exports from ports like Saigon, J and others. Surely Sir Auckland Colvin will now consider the matter. him remember that the duty of 5 per cent. on the finer class of grey goods not affect anyone in India and that the sacrifice of the revenue of three-qua million was needless. Manchester's plea that the duty fell on the consumer hollow. No one in India complained of it. Arguing from analogy, this rice is also a heavy tax on the consumer, though that consumer is not India but Eng and Europe. But we have proclaimed the policy of free trade in India, and principles are to be practically adhered to, then this continuance of the ex duty on rice in spite of representations for its partial or total repeal is in sistent. In the interests of the rice trade itself, as well as for the gre prosperity of Burmah, it is expedient that the Supreme Government sh fairly consider how far a partial repeal may be practicable. The certainty a reduction of duty will lead to growing consumption or to increased exp has now been so far emphasised by the results of the experiment in the reduc of the salt duty that there can be no question as to the revenue ultima reaching its original figure if the duty is reduced. We think that a total re can be accomplished with advantage to the trade as well as to the revenu taking off annually one-fourth of the duty at present levied.

Comments on the Government resolution on the subject of the abandonment of the tax on kacha wells in Gujarát.

The same newspaper says:—The brief resolution, dated Bombay Ca 18th July 1884, announcing the abandonment of tax on kacha wells is a unique document. Tau by the independent press for its apparent insinc in the matter of taxation of wells in Gujarát, Government has tried to put itself straight in the of the public. The Revenue Commissioner o Northern Division deserves well of the Government for having by means c letter of 3rd July constructed the golden bridge which has enabled his ma at "Bombay Castle" to retreat from the untenable position created by cleverly-worded resolution of March 26th. He has informed them, let us of his own accord, that "great encouragement to the construction of cheap would be afforded by the remission of the inconsiderable amount of revenue obtained from the levy of assessment on such wells." It is something for Government to acknowledge through its trusted agent that the amount t levied from the taxation of wells is inconsiderable. But let us analyse resolution for practical consideration. The Governor thanks the Commissi N. D., for having well pressed "this subject on the attention of Governme which is another roundabout way of saying that the Government has seen mistake committed on the subject in its previous resolution. And look at next sentence: "The tax on kacha wells dug during the term of the ori settlement in Gujarát is legally defensible as part of the settlement contract, may not be an oppressive charge in itself, but it is undoubtedly contrary t accepted principle that no part of the land revenue should be assessed in a way as to discourage improvements to be effected by the survey occup This is unfortunate, coming from an honest Government. We demur in t the official assumption so often paraded that the tax is legally defensible the settlement contract. No, it is not, as has been conclusively shown.

interpretation of legality is fallacious. The second hypothesis that the ch is not oppressive is equally fallacious. Its oppressiveness has been made plain. Is it or is it not a fact that since 1869 the cultivators in Gujarát abandoned sinking wells because of this unjust tax—a tax as unjust as oppressive? In the teeth of conclusive evidence on the point, based on it is wrong of a Christian Government that offers to deal justly and be g by the promptings of political benevolence to assert so late in the day tha burden of the tax is not felt. But the concluding portion of the same sen hoists the Government with its own petard. It admits the principle th part of the land revenue should be assessed in such a way as to disco improvement. Now is it or is it not a fact that for years together imp ment in land by means of wells has been discouraged? And if the f admitted, then it may be asked what is the cause of that discourager
Is it not the oppressiveness of the practice of taxing wells in oppositi
the principle? The very fact of the reluctance of the ryots to dig wells that assessment on improvements is oppressive. The practical val the principle lay in honestly interpreting that principle. And now lo the relief which Government is going to offer in future to the ryot.
authorising the Commissioner of the Northern Division to abandon "kos" rate, it still has an eye to more land revenue. It tries to let go b left hand a small item of revenue and yet clutches at the same with a ti grip of the right hand. If the revenue derived from kacha wells in Gu
"is not important," where is the raison de être of "additional land reve to be "equitably" levied "in consideration of command of water" whe revision time comes, and that on a better principle? "Command of w is, we presume, another periphrastic way of assessing lands which are wa by percolation from wells. The "better principle" which Government templates formulating may in all probability turn out to be no other than th condemned by the Collector of Cuddapah in Madras as stated in his minu the Famine Commissioners' report. Is it honest to revive that principle if so, what becomes of the ostentatious statement that Government is unw to tax kacha wells which go to improve cultivated lands? How does thi definition of "consideration of command of water" differ in reality from Our rulers may point out the difference as suggested by their imagin
But to our mind the whole thing appears to be simply a delusion. The irony of the last sentence becomes visible in the light we have thrown subject. The official who has drafted the resolution fancies in his zeal f creased revenue that "this order will prove a stimulus to utilisation abundant subsoil water of Gujarát in the present season, which seems lik be one of scanty rainfall." Stimulus indeed! What a benevolent Govern that offers this blessed concession in view not only of the coming scarcit for lasting prosperity in future!

Points out the necessity of avoiding delay in the transaction of business by the High Court.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 28th July says:—The Times of Indic attention to the heavy arrears of cases both original and appellate sides of our High Cour asks for the appointment of an additional judge.
arrears on the original side, we understand, a so heavy as those on the appellate side, whe though two division benches are sitting to dispose of the business and are their best to get through it as fast as the ends of justice can allow, the w steadily increasing. It is said their Lordships the Chief Justice and J of the Court intend drawing the attention of Government to this state of t Litigants are frequently known to complain that though redress again justice is sure in a British court of justice, and particularly in the High yet it comes so slow that when it does come it loses the greater part of its
A Government which happens to make a profit out of its courts of justice not to be chary of providing for the interests of those who seek their prot

Comments in connection with the magisterial benches at Dhárwár, Gadag and Hubli.

The Dhárwár Vritt (28) of the 24th July does not understand wh authorities should have thought fit to establish b
of magistrates in Dhárwár, Hubli and Gadag.
people of these places are not troublesome and fore the magisterial work is not so heavy as to the appointment of benches. Moreover much mination does not appear to have been exercised in select nominations to the Dhárwár bench are not very objecti much doubt if the Collector has any personal knowledge of Gadag and Hubli benches. They may be honourable and what use can they be if they are unacquainted with the pro courts and the laws administered by them? It is a rule w to invest with magisterial powers persons who have not p examination, nay the rule is enforced with such strictnes after passing the examination do not exercise magisterial p are compelled to submit themselves to a second examina stance is sufficient to show the importance attached by exercise of magisterial powers, and we therefore urge that i fitness to the proof the members of these benches should a with municipal cases only, and if they acquit themselves sat be invested with additional powers.

Objects to the contemplated adoption of a system of half-yearly payments to military pensioners.

The Jagan Mitră (36) of the 28th July learns that it is the present system of quarterly pa pensions in favour of a system of ha If there is any truth in the rep fraught with great injustice to t While in service these persons fin live within their means and they therefore resort to money ance. It cannot be expected therefore that they should ma age from these insufficient earnings, and this view is corr experience. Even under the present system of quarterly pa are obliged to borrow money on the security of their pensi if the contemplated change is brought into force it will most their miseries without securing any appreciable benefit to G

Objects to the policy of subjecting the Bombay Presidency only to the provisions of the Factory Act.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 2nd August says:—It Factory Act Committee appoint Government will not be able to eff the existing Factory Act or to d benefit of the labourers employed deniable that the present Act is al long as the Supreme Legislative Council does not amend the pass one for the whole of India it will be doing injustic industry of Bombay. As factories and spinning and wea Bengal and other parts of the country, the Act should be ma whole of India. It is surprising that a kind Viceroy like hold such narrow views in this matter. Experts have point of effecting great improvements in the Act. Lord Ripon a new Act or appoint a commission of inquiry, which should parts of the country and submit a report to him. We Lord Ripon would be so indifferent in such an important not deserve to be shelved simply at the instance of local G feared that without the co-operation of the Government o of the Factory Act Committee will not prove successful, as the committee appointed in 1875.

Complains of the harsh conduct of A'bkári Inspectors.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 28th July says that b ment of the A'bkári Departme conducted the people have to suf and the department is becoming everyday. As neither the principal authorities of the depa ment pay attention to the bitter and frequent complaint management, no improvement takes place. The duties drinks are being constantly enhanced without any regard f the people, and the dealings of ábkári officers are charact Instances of such conduct have frequently come to light, have yet been made to check it. The writer here cites a re a Pársi named Kuvarji Chhibábhái, a liquor shopkeeper in Sá was at the instance of an A'bkári Inspector fined Rs. 20 magistrate of Olpád for unlawfully bringing European liqu

wádi to the British territories, which fine was remitted in appeal, it hav proved that the accused was taking liquor to the Gáikwádi territories bringing liquor from them, and observes :—But who is responsible for which the accused may have suffered by having to waste his time in d himself against the prosecution to the detriment of his profession? The au of the A'bkári Department pass off such cases as the result of unimportant r
But when such mistakes frequently occur and innocent men have to suff venience and loss, they cannot be regarded in that light. They f properly under the class of offences than of errors. A note ought to b of such mistakes made by A'bkári Inspectors and they should be puni them. The severity of the regulations of the A'bkári Department hav reduced the earnings of liquor shopkeepers, and such mistakes ma condition miserable. The conduct of A'bkári Inspectors is highly ob able and their exemption from punishment is as injurious to the public as it is discreditable to Government. As the authorities of the A'bkári ment do not appear to be capable of effecting the necessary reforms it hoped that Government will do the needful in this matter.

Comments in connection with the resignation of their appointments by the Honorary Surgeons of the Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 27th July says:—As matters ha their course Government will either have to paid assistants or to call upon other medica men to offer their gratuitous services. We th as long as the scheme of gratuitous medical is found to work well Government ought t
it in preference to that of paid agency.
only saves the public some money but affords room for indefinite ext meet the growing wants of the city. We also desire it in the in young medical gentlemen. For as the numbers of our doctors increas may soon come when many of them on finishing their education will hav for some time before they get any practice worth the name. Such gentle be usefully employed, so far as both the public and they themselves are co in gratuitous hospital practice under the superintendence of more exp medical officers of Government. There they will have an opport acquiring experience and making a name for themselves. Thus th selves, no less than the community, will be gainers under this systen
the other hand only paid agency is employed the choice must necess upon persons who have spent some years in the practice of their profes the number of such assistants as can be employed must at the best limited. We hope therefore that Government will not yet give up the scheme, but will give it another trial under more favourable conditions

Makes certain suggestions for ensuring the success of Government medical institutions.

Reviewing the last report on the administration of the Medical ment, the Shetakaryáncha Kaivári (14) of August says:—The province of the operation department consists of prevention and cure of
To accomplish the former it is necessary that officers should be allowed to have their own organizing sanitary improvements in villages, towns and cities, and view it is desirable that such officers should have a place on the m boards; while to gain the latter object it is indispensable that officers i of dispensaries and hospitals should have the power of choosing th medicines, apparatus and surgical weapons. It is generally believed medicines supplied from the Government Medical Stores are of very infe lity. In preferring their indents for medicines officers are bound by h fast rules. They are therefore unable to take advantage of new inve the treatment of diseases, and their failure to cure their patients serves the public faith and eventually to impede the success of medical instit

Makes certain suggestions regarding the Bombay police.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 27th July says:—It has frequen said that the police force of Bombay re thorough overhauling in both its branches, th ive and the detective. How far the sugg founded on facts it is not easy to determine. The gallant Commissio his usual impulsiveness may perhaps challenge the proposal fo point to the annual administration report for the efficiency of But official reports, as we have more than once observed, are therefore apt to be misleading. The chief of a department own trumpet. Independent outside testimony is the best. T can it be had? Perhaps yes, perhaps no. Perhaps indepen might be forthcoming, provided they were assured that their would not be resented or that they would not be afterwards vict secuted by the police. The condition may seem strange, but is times stranger than fiction? There seems to be a strong popu

he who dare rise in judgment against the alleged irregularities Department must in the long run be hunted down. It is avern truth it is not for us to say, that the Bombay police has very in striking terror into the hearts of ordinary citizens. It is the inquisitorial process which the police is imagined to be capabl that keeps the tongue of the majority tied down. Not a whispe is allowed to escape their lips. A strong mental reservation is n shrewd man, if asked to honestly state his opinion of the ge of the police, would ominously shake his head, as if to imply rather reveal the secrets of the charnel-house. Walls ar ears, and in Bombay the populace suspect that hidden in the wa secret emissaries of the police. This is supposed to be the con of the mass in reference to our guardians of peace and protect property. The small section of enlightened Natives has no d from such feeling. But there can be no two opinions touchin run of Indians. If British conquest has in certain respects lifte from ignorance, it has also degraded them. And we cannot that in the ordinary operations of maintaining order throughou
the capital cities or in remote villages, the men in power uncontrolled. Terror is more or less the potent engine of the police in India, and we may presume that Bombay, with its vigilant press, is no exception to the general rule. Now terror men into lying. When Europeans attribute lying to the lower c they seem to forget that it is their own terrorising system o of order" that has brought it about. It is the powerful police, trary Commissioners or District Superintendents or Magistrates in a measure instrumental in stamping out the primitive manly ally the virtue of telling the truth, for which Indians have b from times immemorial. Concocted evidence, for which the po are everywhere notorious, is met, as a virtue of necessity, by e evidence adduced by the accused, innocent or otherwise, bro
Police Magistrates. The demoralising effect on the character Natives is directly due to British conquest, and it is to be deve our rulers will take serious cognisance of the politico-ethical e to remedy it. If we are to take cognisance, in the general public, of the rumour that holds its sway in the minds of the the Native community, then we are led to suppose that there m one screw loose in the machinery of the city police. The hypothesis naturally forces on us is whether the Commissioner rumour. When it is borne in mind that nothing is dearer to h reputation of the force over which he has now presided for years and upwards, it would be insulting his intelligence wer that Sir Frank Souter has never heard or cared to discover regarding his police—we mean that opinion which is now rigid which it is not possible under the existing condition of despair, or wrongly by the dread of police prosecution, to evoke. For official in the city more than another comes into daily cont
gentlemen of position, influence and enlightenment, it is the p Souter. Presuming that in all probability he has attempted opinion on the character of the police force, it may be asked probed it to the core. We are afraid it is unlikely. Very fe the forward class would care to let him know their inmost tho for two reasons. The first is the conviction that Sir Frank, with known intolerance of outside independent Native opinion, however we may not care to consider it; the second reason that operates as a deter the enlightened Native gentleman is that he is required to state his fa gorically. If mere vague reports floating in the air, if mere rumou and that piece of oppression or corruption, are put before him, he m retort by observing that there is no foundation for the rumours. In it is no joke, with the law of libel so well understood, to assert facts may be any quantity of presumptive moral evidence, but if there be evidence the facts are considered "unproven"! Hence the parties m petent to acquaint him with facts are the very persons who may ha cruelly victimised by the police. But these are the persons most di be got at. And even supposing that by persuasion and the most so surance of secrecy such a person is induced to tell his tale, the chances deep-rooted dread will in all probability warn him to exercise mental tion to a certain extent. So far then the facts, if elicited at all, incomplete, and the Commissioner may feel himself not justified to action thereon. Magistrates are out of the question for reasons obvious. The only other class who may be thought competent to s authoritatively are the lawyers. But to get at the bottom of a thi from them is not easy. Such are the difficulties in the way. That the p fairly efficient in the performance of their ordinary duties we are not to deny. The allegations which require to be substantiated may be ated below :—(1) Is it or is it not true that black-mailing and corrupt or less exist in the police force? (2) Is it or is it not the case that a the police, both in their inferior and superior grades, are harsh and in the Natives, almost brutal towards the poorer classes? (3) Is it or is that the police from malicious or other questionable motives some tim cute people who may have dragged them to the Police Court to summons for harsh, insolent or brutal treatment? (4) Is it or is it that some members of the police are subsidised by gangs of pro gamblers or proprietors of "hells," as well as by certain private inc such as licensed liquor sellers? (5) Is it or is it not true that the po habituated to extorting confession from persons locked up by means of and other cruelties? All these allegations may be true or false, or th be partially true and partially false. What we beg leave to make clea place is that the allegations are often made. If such be the case we th high time for the Commissioner, who is responsible to the public, to into their accuracy or otherwise and dispel one way or the other the s largely prevailing as to the irregularities and lawlessness of his for must do all in his power to remove the dread which oppresses the mind. It cannot be that it is a pure service. It cannot be that Si believes in its absolute honesty. We want a new system and the intr into the force of fresh blood, active and honest. Superannuation of the Commissioner may not be just now possible, but there is a devout wish if not expressed, that he may not retire without thoroughly reorgani police force. Above all let Sir Frank remember that the force ca superlatively white when there is a popular suspicion to the contrary, is incapable of all the mischief and gross abuse of power ascribed to it—or rightly it is for him to determine. This much, however, may b asserted that every third man whom you happen to meet in the street

you that the police force is not quite what it was in the time of Mr.
During his regime a different state of matters prevailed. It was th itself that felt terror and dreaded the Commissioner Sáheb Báhádur, the law-abiding people, as is often supposed to be the case now. But make no invidious comparison, lest we ruffle that sweet temper for wh Commissioner is so well known. We tremble for our own fate, lest o should be soon besieged by invisible detectives watching us with bated eager to march us off into "the august presence" to be there held in vile or to give us a bad half-hour and a foretaste of what the police is of doing, very much after the practice in vogue in the Third Section o bureaucracy! [The Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the 28th July says that th

made by the Spectator is untimely, inasmuch as the polic shown great activity in the discharge of their duty.]

Complaint against the Karáchi police.

In a paragraph headed "Our City Police" the Sind
July says:—On the night of the 22
turning home by a public road br
the Bandar Road, with Rs. 1,100 in wrapped up in his dhoti, was set on by some persons, who threw in his eyes, bound him fast violently, and robbed him of the m that the poor Kachhi is lying in a precarious state from the effec
We should very much like to know how the police can expla in this affair. One thing is clear that thieves have no dread c in a city like Karáchi a robbery on a high road, accompa violence, would be the last thing to be heard of. What are v police force which is unable to prevent such felonies committe its very nose? Gamblers, we are told, have a very good tim gambling is a virtue compared with highway robbery. The r we have referred to is not the only one which has shaken our police. We warn the Town Inspector to be more careful and duties more efficiently, unless he has no regard for his reputa Sudhár (139) of the 26th July refers to the same incident and o have lost all confidence in the police and Government ought t steps to remedy this mismanagement.]

Complains of the wretched condition of the road from the Hope Bridge at Surat to Adájan, Bhátha, Pál and other villages.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 31st condition of the road from the Hope to Adájan, Bhátha, Pál and other vi so very wretched that hundreds of and female, have to wade through knee-deep. Bullock conveyances road. [A correspondent of the Sur
the 28th July makes a similar complaint and requests t construct a good road for the convenience of the public.]

Points out the necessity of erecting a dharmashála at Padwa.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 27th Gogha points out the necessity erecting a dharmashála on the confi
of Padwa, and says that the people willing to defray half the expense
The dharmashála at Morchand is quite useless, being far remov road. It is to be hoped that Government will pay attention t

Local Self-government.

Suggests that independent non-officials should be nominated members of the committee to be appointed to revise rules in connection with the new Acts for local self-government.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 27th July says:—It is vincial Government is about to app to revise rules in connection with local self-government. If this be the Government to appoint indepen
to represent each of the district Presidency is divided? If the auth we may see the representative of giving the benefit of his experience in the revision of the ru that the official voice alone is to be heard, though we know dominant as ever, even when the non-official voice is liste
the wise men will say there are no competent Natives to sit
But we must not anticipate evil.

Education.

Complains of the unsystematic way in which schools are established and abolished in the Ratnágiri District.

A correspondent of the Satyă Shodhak (62) of the 27th
the hardship caused to the teachers schools of the Ratnágiri District b way in which schools are establish Since 1877 the number of schools i been subjected to modifications occasions. Last year 8 new schools were established, while or 15 schools have been abolished. The increase in the numb any particular year is perhaps attributable to the desire on the p tional authorities to show progress in education, but unfortuna is fraught with the greatest inconvenience to the teachers.

surplus revenue available in a particular year it is better to utili
ing schools than in establishing new schools the stability of wh be disturbed by a deficit in subsequent years. Nearly twenty been reduced to a helpless condition by the recent abolition of schools, and it is to be hoped that the authorities will see their them with employment in some department or other.

Complains that the study of the Gujaráti language is neglected in schools.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the 27th July dwells on the attended the elimination of the study language from the curriculum of hig institutions, and points out the neces
the study as compulsory as that languages.

Railways.

Comments on the report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the subject of railway extension in India.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 27th July gives a summary of the
the Committee of the House of Co
subject of railway extension in Ind
The reason assigned for allowing the yearly borrowings to continue to rest
tary of State is that since it is probab may come when lines may be made private enterprize it is not fair to introduce any change that ma altered state of things when it may come about. When this is two other recommendations, viz., that no tax should be levied and that part of the Famine Insurance cannot be diverted interest on borrowed capital, it appears that though permi granted to the Government of India to construct lines on its ow and to utilize private enterprize the practical result of it wil much. The real, and we may say the only, important quest whether the Government of India was or was not to be allowed master, and so far as we can make out anything from the teleg
we think no great advance has been made. If India can gain the extension of its railways it will do so only if the Governm allowed to do the whole business on its own responsibility. E trade principles may require that the Government of India shou monopoly, but these principles have done immense mischief and this country they should be held in abeyance at least for some which time we hope to recover from the evil effects of the b committed. The question of railway extension arose from the the causes of Indian famines, and anybody that has read t Commissioners must know that railway lines have to be opened the food supply of the country and giving a stimulus to the i country. What we thought was to be done by the Committee out what lines ought to be opened immediately and what post
we desire that the Commission should lay down the opinio declaring if the broad gauge or the narrow one was better.
Committee of inquiry to investigate and find out the econ railways and to suggest remedies if those effects were bad.
has not gone into this part of the question and the results of therefore do us little good.

Points out the necessity of erecting fences by the sides of the Dhond and Manmád Railway.

A correspondent of the Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 28th J
Yeola complains that accidents to h life are common owing to the abse
the sides of the Dhond and Manma requests the attention of the railway matter.

Municipalities.

Comments in connection with the appointment of Mr. Ollivant as Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Bombay International Exhibition.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 27th July says:—Now that Sir James Fergusson is said to have made up his mind to appoint Mr. Ollivant Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Exhibition, we may say that we shall be glad to see that gentleman so installed. The arrangement will be a gain to the Exhibition and it will also be a gain to our municipality. For one thing it may save us from the scientific drainage. But we ask the Corporation to set its face against any such proposal as the appointment of a Deputy Commissioner. The people do not want his substantive appointment to be kept warm for Mr. Ollivant till he has been relieved of his Exhibition duties. Surely it cannot be that the municipality should be made to pay for the work of the Exhibition! To appoint a new man will be a lesser evil than to keep Mr. Ollivant's place safe, burdening the city with half a lákh of rupees till the Exhibition is over.

Does not approve of the resolution of the municipal Corporation of Bombay regarding the diversion of night soil from the outfall at Carnac Bandar to Warli.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 30th July comments on the recent resolution of the Municipal Corporation of Bombay regarding the diversion of the night soil from the outfall at Carnac Bandar to Warli and says that the people have been from the very beginning opposed to the conveyance of night soil through the drains. When the question was first raised the public voice was so vigorous that it was not satisfied until a promise was exacted that the drains would be the means of conveying sullage only and not the night soil. And why is that promise being now disregarded? Is it because the Port Trustees and Government have become impatient in the matter? Some time ago Mr. Ollivant pointed out the danger of flushing the drains by means of sea water and he now recommends that which he once considered dangerous.

Native States.

Advises Government to take the strongest measures for putting a stop to corruption in Native States.

The Nyáyadarshak (112) of the 28th July complains that corruption prevails to a great extent in Native States generally, and particularly in those of Káthiáwár. Such of the officers of the rank of Resident or Political Agent as are inclined to be corrupt can manage to be rich without the least trouble to themselves. Such officers, if consulted, would tell the same tale. It is also the policy of corrupt officers to give bribes to others in order to secure their private ends. Roguish Kárbháris are the principal offenders in this respect. They receive bribes, they give bribes, they reduce the princes to a state of indebtedness and empty the State treasury. Such spoliation is going on in several Native States, and it is proper that Government should take the strongest measures to put a stop to it.

Approves of the decision of the Bombay Government regarding the establishment of a joint administration at Rájpipla.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 27th July says:—We must no longer delay offering our congratulations to the Government of Bombay on the decision they have come to in regard to the management of the unfortunate State of Rájpipla. The local Government appears to have suggested the setting aside of the Rája to the Government of India; but the latter, while admitting the justice of the suggestion, recommended that Rája Gambhirsing should be given an English officer as Joint Administrator to save His Highness from evil advisers and his State from consequent ruin. This being so, we hardly see how Mr. Nandshankar also is to be Joint Administrator. He may perhaps be made Diván, though we doubt if it will be worth his while to accept the office. The present Kárbhári may do well enough. The appointment of Major Stace as Joint Administrator is unexceptionable. He is just the man for the place. With energy and intelligence to be rarely met with in the department Major Stace is also known to be a thoroughly upright officer, and if he has not the tact always to agree with his superiors he is certainly those who will do harm. Rájpipla has now a hopeful future, tho Gambbirsingji may well feel despondent at the turn affairs have take

Does not approve of the policy of appointing Major Nutt to exercise supervision on the Chief of Gondal.

The Gujaráti (99) of the 27th July is very sorry to hear that Go contemplate the appointment of Major Nutt to the administration of the Gondal State even Thákor has been invested with full powers
Nutt has not distinguished himself as a go nistrator and is known to be an improper many accounts. During his management confusion has increased in th
State and we do not approve of the policy of appointing him to exerc vision over the good prince.

Expresses disapproval of the contemplated appointment of Mr. Bápálál in the place of Ráo Báhádur Nandshankar Tuljáshankar.

The same newspaper says:—Is it true that Government co
the re-employment of Mr. Bápálál in Go service? We do not believe it; but w on good authority that the local Governm
of setting at naught the resolution of th
ment of India in the Junágad case, by w
gentleman was permanently incapacitated f service. It is proposed to appoint Mr. Bápálál in the place of Rá Nandshankar Tuljáshankar, who will be appointed Joint Admini Rájpipla. The Bhil tribes in Rewa Kántha are notorious for their tendencies, and is it not very dangerous to appoint to such a provi who abetted the massacre of 75 men in his charge? If anythin results from such an appointment the Bombay Government will ha the whole responsibility. It is to be hoped that Sir James Fergu consider well before making such an improper arrangement.

Berár Affairs.

Complains of block of civil business in Amráoti.

The Pramod Sindhu (13) of the 28th July says:—The block has become so serious in the Amráoti Civil sided over by a judge having power to tr
the value of Rs. 500 that in our opinion repre
should be made to the Resident with a suggestion that an additiona appointed to clear off the arrears. Since the transfer of Mr. Shrikrish to Ellichpur the work of the court has almost been at a standstill.
soon after Mr. Shrikrishna Narhar's transfer Mr. C. Bhimráo was civil judge, but unfortunately his bad health compelled him to native place on leave. Mr. Keshav Mahipat succeeded Mr. Bhimr also fell sick and went to his native place, where he died. Then Nicholetts, who is now disposing of the work with great ability an but we hear that he will at no distant date be made acting Deputy Com
We hope that before he goes the authorities will make such arrang will put matters right.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PA
Acting Reporter on the Na

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
5th August 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Ábkári: Complaint against the harsh conduct of—Inspectors ... 9
Advance of Russia in Central Asia: Expression of opinion that the people of India have reason to hail with delight the — 3
Complaints: Comments on the decision of the Government of India in the matter of the complaint of the people of Vaduth in Sátára against certain Christian converts 6
Dharmashála at Padwa: Necessity of erecting a — 13
Export duty on rice: Suggestion for a partial repeal of the — ... 7
Factory Act: Objection to the policy of subjecting the Bombay Presidency only to the provisions of the — 9
Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital: Comments in connection with the resignation of their appointments by the Honorary Surgeons of the — ... 10
Government Medical Institutions: Suggestions for ensuring the success of— 10
Judicial matters:
  Advocacy of the revival of the pancháyat system for the administration of justice 5
  Comments in connection with the magisterial benches at Dhárwár, Gadag and Hubli 8
  Necessity of avoiding delay in the transaction of business by the High Court, Bombay 8
  Suggestions in regard to Sind on the subject of the separation of the judicial from the executive functions of revenue officers ... 3
Kacha wells in Gujarát: Comments on the Government resolution on the subject of abandonment of the tax on — 7
Pensions: Objection to the contemplated adoption of a system of half-yearly payments of military —... 9
Police:
  Complaint against the Karáchi— 13
  Suggestions regarding the Bombay— 10
Roads: Complaint regarding the wretched condition of the road from the Hope Bridge at Surat to Adágan, Bhátha, Pál and other villages... 13

PART II.—Local Self-government—

Local Self-government: Suggestions for nominating non-officials as members of the committee to be appointed to revise the rules in connection with the new Acts for — 13

PART III.—Education—

Schools:
  Complaint regarding the unsystematic way in which — are established and abolished in the Ratnágiri District 13
  Complaint that the study of the Gujaráti language is neglected in — 14

PART IV.—Railways—

Dhond and Manmád Railway: Necessity of erecting fences by the sides of the — 14
Extension of railways in India: Comments on the report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the subject of — ... 14

PART V.—Municipalities—

Bombay:
  Comments in connection with the appointment of Mr. Ollivant as Chairman of the Executive Committee of the — International Exhibition 15
  Disapproval of the resolution of the Municipal Corporation of — regarding the diversion of night soil from the outfall at Carnac Bandar to Warli 15

PART VI.—Native States—

Appointments: Disapproval of the contemplated appointment of M
Bápálál in the place of Ráo Báhádur Nandshankar Tuljáshankar Gondal: Disapproval of the policy of appointing Major Nutt to exerc supervision on the Thákor of— ... ...
Native States: Advice to Government to take stringent measures f putting a stop to corruption in— ... ...
Rájpipla: Approval of the decision of the Bombay Government regar ing the establishment of a joint administration at— ...

PART VII.—Berár Affairs—

Civil business in Amráoti: Complaint regarding the block in the—

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 9th August 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
*16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	200
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
22	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*24	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*25	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
26	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*27	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
30	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
31	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
32	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
33	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
34	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
35	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
36	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
37	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*39	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
40	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
41	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
42	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
43	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*44	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
45	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
46	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
47	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
48	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*49	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
51	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*53	„ PishácHanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
54	„ Poona Vaibhav	Pooná	Weekly	250
*55	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*56	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*58	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
59	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*65	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*69	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 275

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issue
	MARA'THI—continued.
70	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
71	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil...	Málvan	Do.	200
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	300
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	34
82	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	60
83	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	13
	GUJARA'TI.
84	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	2
85	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	75
86	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	30
87	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	50
*88	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	20
89	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,09
90	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	70
91	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	6
92	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	60
93	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	52
94	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,00
95	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	20
96	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	47
97	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	40
98	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	10
99	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,00
*100	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	20
101	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	65
*102	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	20
103	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	52
104	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,40
105	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	11
*106	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	20
*107	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	20
108	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	70
109	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	30
110	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	20
111	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	38
*112	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	20
113	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	22
114	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	70
115	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,81
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	20
117	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	40
*118	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	20
119	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	37
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	55
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	20
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	40
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	20
124	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	20
125	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	5
126	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	7
127	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	30
128	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	50
	KA'NARESE.
129	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	1
*130	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	20
131	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	22
132	„ Kannadă Suvarte...	Bombay	Do.	70
*133	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	10
	SANSKRIT.
*134	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly ...	10
	URDU.
*135	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	20
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	10
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	30
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	20
	SINDI.
139	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	50

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different hea
which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Ne paper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issu
In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a or ă) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confus never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Aruṇodaya or the well known Mitra, it is prin with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay
the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Comments on the impoverished condition of India and points out the means of effecting the regeneration of the country.

The Vidnyán Vilás (126) for the month of August complains of the present impoverished condition of India and says that the condition of the people was not so wretched before the advent of the British. There was no forest department then and the duty on salt and the restriction on the sale of opium did not exist. The Stamps and Court Fees Acts were not known then. Land revenue was not taken in money, and no tax was levied on the income derived by farmers from the sale of milk and ghee. Moreover a large portion of the people was either engaged in the military profession or lived on plunder. It is good that plunder and robbery have ceased, but the effect has been that the number of those that originally lived on the produce of the soil has increased and there has been a proportionate diminution in the income of individuals. The present wretched condition of the people is the result of an increase in the taxes levied on such reduced income. The prosperity of the country depends on its riches. Formerly India was rich and her wealth excited the cupidity of several plunderers. Formerly she was the exporter of several articles of merchandise, but now she has become an importer. Unsubstantial foreign articles are now largely imported, which serve to drain her wealth. But the greatest injury is caused by the fact that the Government is foreign. The capital of the empire being in a foreign country and the administration being conducted by foreigners, large sums of money are annually carried away from this country without any chance of their being ever returned. It is true that many foreigners used to plunder India in former times, but as they did so after great intervals the effects were not felt by the people. As the rulers lived here, the money taken in the shape of plunders, bribes and remuneration for offices filled by them remained in the country. Then all the officers were Natives and there was no public debt. But since the advent of the British all high and well paid offices have gone into the hands of Europeans. An expensive foreign army has been kept up. Interest is paid to foreign countries for loans raised there, and large sums are remitted on account of home charges and also on account of foreign articles imported into India. Owing to these and other causes krors of rupees are every year drained off to foreign countries, and as the country is unable to make up the loss poverty increases day after day. It is necessary that measures should be adopted for remedying this state of things, and if they are not adopted in time India will be ruined. First of all the expensive system of government ought to be done away with. If confidence is placed in Natives and if all high offices are conferred on them administrative expenditure will be greatly reduced. The expenditure on account of the foreign and the home charges should be curtailed. Articles of native manufacture required for the use of Government offices should be bought here and native industries should be encouraged and fostered. A reduction in expenditure will make a reduction in the burden of taxation possible. Wealth will thereby increase, new arts and industries will thrive, and the people will become prosperous and happy. [The Hitopadeshak Ratná (102) for the month of July but received on the 8th August expresses similar sentiments regarding the causes of the present impoverished condition of India and apostrophizes the country in the following strain:--India, it is thy misfortune. Britain is not moved by pity in sucking your blood and in extracting your entrails. The administrative expenditure of England is 8½ per cent. while in thy case it is 22 per cent., and this circumstance shows the gravity of the loss. India, how distant dost thou think is thy ruin? If Britannia's kind and brave sons even now extend a helping hand to thee, thou mightst see better days. But if the present policy is allowed to continue thou must weep for ever. The writer concludes by advising Lord Ripon to effect the regeneration of the country.]

Expresses regret at the contemplated resignation of office by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 8th August says:—The statement that His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught intends to leave this country for his native land in the next winter or spring will not fail to give rise to feelings of deep regret among the Native public. It is difficult to understand why His Royal Highness should have come to that resolution, seeing that he has been in the country for only. It is rumoured that he has not found his stay here agreea be the case, the cause for regret is all the greater inasmuch as stance may prove an obstacle in the way of royal personages coming to this country in future. But we think that this resoluti come to out of regard for the feelings of Queen Victoria, who, it w at the time of the lamented death of the Duke of Albany, wishe Duke of Connaught near her. At any rate his rumoured departur is disappointing to the Native public. Bombay will feel it the expected to have him sooner or later as her Commander-in-Chief.

Complains of the costly nature of the justice administered by the British courts in India.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 3rd August says:—Everywh raised against the costliness of the jus tered by the British courts in India. In this dear justice amounts almost to inju
with heavy fees for stamps, translations c and so forth, and the fees exacted by costs run up by solicitors, and lastly the delay in the adjudic causes, a decree in favour of the plaintiff at times means denial o sometimes his ruin. This state of affairs has grown chronic. W hearing of it off and on for the last 10 or 15 years. At one time the delay comes from Madras, at another time from Bengal. A third grumbles. The fact is that like many other chronic abuses which round the unwieldy State machinery this grievance can only be re thorough reform. Mere tinkering with a fringe of this departmen never do. But the evil of delay in the administration of law is j prominent in Bengal. The complaint at present is that the law c surplus of 12 lákhs above and beyond all expenses. Why should the on Law and Justice? Why should suitors in Bengal be asked not onl fair quota of the expenses of the administration of justice, but a cons beyond it to swell the imperial treasury? Virtually the surplus is the suitors. And yet they weaken the bench by undermanning it cry in Bombay too. But here the complaint is more against hearing of suits and against the weakness of two of the Judges.
may be endured. But dear injustice is intolerable. More cases appeal against the judgment of the two Judges than against the
the other Judges put together. [The Gujaráti (99) of the same da somewhat similar sentiments.]

Makes certain suggestions for disposing of the heavy arrears of work in the High Court.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 4th August says:—Bombay is suffering from the evil of "law's delay."
at Calcutta seem to be likewise greatly the score of a block of work in their loca
The Trades' Association, the Chamber c
the press, and even the Judges of the have addressed Government on the subject, which has become a s plaint. It seems to be generally felt there that nothing but ar some Judges to the High Court would relieve the court's file. The recommended the appointment of three more Judges. The Tra tion has asked for four. What the Government will do is yet an o
But there is a surprising unanimity as to the magnitude of the evi
it is unquestionable that the subject calls for very serious conside far the increase of work will require a permanent addition to the bench we are not prepared to say, but it can admit of no doubt present there is very considerable accumulation of work on bot late and original sides. To relieve the court of its appellate wor suggested to form appellate benches in the mofussil with powers to appeals. Now, apart from the circumstance that the law as stands does not empower the Government or the High Court to fo benches, the proposal is objectionable on principle. The arrange doubt be somewhat convenient to suitors, but the questions of law
the cases will scarcely meet in the mofussil with that free disc they receive here. To our mind the only possible course is to ad one or two Judges to the High Court until the arrears are dispose respect to original work also the only course at present possible is to appo for some time an additional Judge at the High Court. But a more effective economical remedy seems to consist in the creation of either a first class o second class Subordinate Judge's Court here. To invest the Small Ca Court with jurisdiction over immoveable property is to impair its usefulness a ready and rapid dispenser of justice in small money claims and to thr upon the court a burden it can ill bear. It is already sufficiently occupied w its work, and any increase of jurisdiction would necessitate an increase of s and appliances. A Subordinate Judge's Court would be cheap both to Gove ment and the people, and would be a valuable adjutant to the High Court.

Says that thanks are due to Sir Richard Garth for his proposals regarding reduction of court fees.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 3rd August says that the public and es cially the poor have reason to be grateful to Richard Garth for the proposals made by l with the view of reducing the burden of court f which at present bears very heavily on them. It said that these proposals are now under the consid ation of the Government of India, who are prepared to face a deterioration revenue consequent on a reduction of the court fees. This is indeed v satisfactory. It is evident that the present heavy charges on account of co fees have the effect of practically shutting the doors of justice against the po who are deterred from seeking it by heavy court fees. If the Chief Justice our High Court will take pains to study the court rules and make an atter to remove the grievances of the public regarding heavy solicitors' fees, &c., will surely succeed.

Points out the necessity of effecting a change in the existing law of bigamy as applied to Hindu women.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 5th August dwells on the pitiful pligh which a Hindu woman named Abái has been thro by having been punished by the court for marry a second husband during the lifetime of her husband, by whom she was ill-treated, and says:— is as cruel as it is opposed to the principles of jus and morality that a Hindu husband should be permitted by law to marry m than one wife while the oppressed and starved wife cannot take anot husband. We wish that the hardships suffered by this unfortunate A would attract the notice of the Honourable Mr. Ilbert and Lord Rip and that their hearts would melt with pity for the large class of such suffer It is the duty of the Honourable Ráo Sáheb V. N. Mandlik either to introd a Bill into the Supreme Legislative Council for the amelioration of the sufferi of Hindu women or to induce Mr. Ilbert to do so. If Lord Ripon and Honourable Mr. Ilbert wish to perpetuate their memory in India, they sho speedily take this highly important matter into their consideration.

Recommends Government to appoint Dr. Vandyke Carter to the Indian Cholera Commission.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 3rd August dwells on the merits of Vandyke Carter as a medical man and puts forw his claims to a seat on the Indian Cholera Commiss Like Dr. Koch, Dr. Carter has analysed cholera ge and this circumstance makes his claims to a stronger than those of Dr. J. Cunningham and D. Cunningham. The theory of cholera propounded by these gentlemen quite different from that advocated by Dr. Koch, and therefore their appo ment to the Commission is objectionable.

Complains of the dearness of salt in India.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 3rd August says:—The Under Se tary of State for India, when replying to a quest in the House of Commons some days ago, said tha was not the case that large numbers of Natives w unable to procure salt. In support of his statement he quoted some figures show the increasing consumption of salt in recent years. But those who kn the state of the country will be of a different opinion. The increase in general consumption of salt, no matter how great, can hardly prove anyth of the sort asserted by Mr. Cross. On the contrary the fact is patent to m that in most districts the people are too poor to buy salt at the present ra which are considered very low by Salt Revenue Collectors and others of t class. Indeed so badly off are people in different places in respect of supply of salt that they have to resort to salt-earth and similar foul satisfying their wants. An instance of struggles of this sort very formed the subject of elaborate judicial investigation in the Madras Pre

The case was only typical of many others now and then cropping up magisterial courts of the country, where poor people are punished acco the letter of the law for no more serious offences than attempting to themselves with mud and earth for the sake of the smallest modicum of may yield, being too poor to procure the life-sustaining ingredient of quality. [The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 5th August expresses simil ments. The same paper of the 6th August points out how cholera ari the use of dried fish and vegetables that have not been properly salte to the question asked on this subject by Mr. McCarthy in the House mons and the reply given to it by Mr. Cross, and says that if Mr. McCa been well acquainted with the dearness and want of salt in this cou would not have been satisfied with the explanation given by Mr. Cro Satyă Shodhak (62) of the 3rd August says that the decision of the High Court confirming a sentence passed on a person for possessing s is calculated to encourage revenue officers in getting up vexatious pros against poor people. In the Bombay Presidency it has been author decided that possession of salt-earth is not an offence according to th sions of the Salt Act, and if Government are at all anxious to secure an ity of procedure in the different presidencies it is but just that they afford relief to the people of Madras by informing the officers of the partment in that presidency that it is no offence to possess salt-ear provisions of the present Act are in many places ambiguous and this circu is taken advantage of by revenue officers wishing to fill the Governmen to the great detriment of the interests of the poor. It is therefore imp necessary that the Legislature should take care to see that revenue generally clearly expressed.]

Comments in connection with the proposed amendment of the Factory Act.

In an article headed "The proposed amendment of the Factory
Indian Spectator (1) of the 3rd August sa Committee recently appointed by the Local ment to collect evidence as to the desira otherwise of amending the Factory Act has menced its sittings. Though we are strong supporters of the cause of th ing population in the city and of cotton mill operatives in particular, w look at one side of the question alone. No doubt the object with w Government has put itself in motion is praiseworthy. Anything that ameliorate the social and physical condition of the labourer, anything that from the thraldom of the capitalist, has our hearty approval. But in s the efforts of the Government we must be first convinced that the nec an amendment so soon after the introduction of the Act has arisen present condition of the various growing industries in the city it is that no needless official interference should be encouraged by furth lative enactment. Enough and more than enough was said on thi about the time the original Act was passed in 1881. The liter the subject is ample for an unbiassed judgment. And the most i point to be remembered in connection with any proposal for factory le in India is the social and economic condition of the Native labourer lation by analogy will never do. We have had enough of Anglicised unsuited to the requirements of the Indians. Grave evils have risen f legislation in other directions. An Inspector entirely new to the coun in his official zeal, have found that certain provisions of the Act have no quite well. From his inexperience of the habits and customs of the p may have drawn inferences which may not stand the test of authority perience. On the other side nothing should be left undone which out on evidence to be really a grave neglect or omission on the part owners. It is fair that both sides should be heard. Meanwhile it may to note some points contained in the resolution of the Local Governme 23rd May 1884. It is therein observed that "the provisions of th Factories Act" have been found in the Bombay Presidency "to b and palpably inadequate." It was on the strength of the grave and inadequacy of the provisions that the Local Government twice urged th preme Government to amend the Act. But on carefully going over the r of the two Inspectors, Messrs. King and Jones, we are constrained to sa save in one or two particulars we have found nothing that could have justifi Local Government in moving for an amendment. The provisions on the appear to be sufficiently adequate. It is not a matter of surprise that th perial Government should have itself felt the greatest reluctance to suppo Bombay Government. In fact the reports themselves are "so gravel palpably inadequate" as to offer no justification to any Government, how sympathetic, to acquiesce in the suggestion of the Local Government. The from the Government of India, No. 560 dated 25th April 1884, too p indicates, if one can read between the lines, that the Local Governme failed to make out a case for the amendment. And the following sente the resolution is pointed enough:—"The Governor General in Council, sympathising warmly with the objects which the Bombay Government view, decided on a careful consideration of the arguments for and against mediate amendment of the law not to introduce a general measure at the p time." The only possible reason which can be adduced by the Bombay ernment is that factories employing less than 100 persons have been re from the scope of the Act and so far this mars the utility of the measure.

is no doubt some complaint against the small wool and cotton cleaning fa in the backstreets of Bombay. But even here there is a qualified obj And inasmuch as the introduction into the general body of the Act, in for the whole of India, of a provision to include small factories employi than 100 men and women is decidedly objected to by all the other pro Governments without exception, it would be handicapping the small ind elsewhere in India to introduce the provision with the view that the ut the Act may not be marred in the city of Bombay. We fear even for thes factories there is much exaggeration. As for legislation in favour of number of holidays and hours of working proposed by the Bombay Gove it has our hearty support. And we believe the mill-owners themselves gladly welcome some such legislative interference. There are minor sugg which the Municipal Act is strong enough to enforce—such as lime-w cleaning of drains, ventilation, &c. When these are considered, the report two officials dwindle considerably, leaving an insignificant residue which no way justify a wider amendment of the Act. We believe the Commit have to take one vital fact into consideration—and on this subject we wou gest that the amplest and the most authoritative evidence be taken,—viz., the allegation regarding the physical deterioration of the operatives is borne facts. What is the experience of each and every mill-company in Bombay?
statistical information regarding the present state of health of men whose has averaged above 7 or 8 or even 10 years may set the question at rest. W it will be found that on the whole at least 60 per cent. of the operative good physical condition. The result of this test should then be compared condition of health prevailing among ordinary labourers in the city not ed in cotton or other mills. [The Mahrátta (2) of the 3rd August says Bombay Government is determined, it seems, to have a new Factories thinks that the present law does not protect the interests of the peop are hard-worked to an extent injurious at once to their own health an general interests of the mill industry in Bombay. Whether the genera ests of the mill industry are affected or not in the manner the Govern Bombay supposes we must leave to the mill-owners to judge. They w the first persons, we think, to detect any decline in the working capacit labourers they employ. As the Bombay Gazette observes, we must not by the number of hours for which they are said to work. The Ga shown that work here is not so heavy as in England. Here three labou employed to do the work that would require only two labourers in This taken with the fact that children are allowed to work alternately show such a hopeless state of things as the Government of Bombay wou us believe. A Committee is now sitting in Bombay to report on the
We hope the Committee will not make off-hand inquiries, but will into the matter and ask the labourers themselves to say what they think over some of them should be subjected to examination by a medical boa

if there have been any injurious effects on their constitution on over-work. A new law should be proved to be necessary before i The proof must come from the people themselves. If other Gover averse to the introduction of a Factories Act in their territories, e Bengal the number of working hours is greater than in Bombay, we a clear case ought to be made out before fresh legislation in th resorted to. The mill-owners should be allowed the fullest libert their position.

Thanks the Bombay Government for trying to elicit public opinion before amending the Factory Act.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 4th August says:—The Supre
ment has given a pretty clear indication as regards the proposals of our Local Gove
the latter has taken the very commendabl
of sounding public opinion before beginni late. Anxious as the Government is to Factory Act on the lines suggested in Mr. King's report, the invita Chamber of Commerce and the Mill-owners' Association to send the tatives to a Committee of enquiry is a step for which the warmes Bombay are due to Sir James Fergusson's Government. The Con be a thoroughly representative one, and will do its work honestly an
If in spite of this opportunity to speak out their minds our merchan owners silently acquiesce in the proposals of Government, they w thank themselves for anything amiss happening to the mill industr quence of such repressive legislation. [The Bombay Samáchár (89)
date says that the Government of Sir James Fergusson should res with the existing Factory Act and should abstain from displeasing once more. If not, the Factory Act Committee should conduct with open doors and the Government should give an opportunity to to discuss the draft Bill by publishing it. The public of Bombay, an those interested in the mill industry, should freely express their o
the proposed lagislation and should strengthen the hands of the V does not see any necessity for it, by memorializing the Supreme G
The Rást Goftár (115) of the 3rd August says that the time has come ment to intervene with the view of saving the labouring classes from necessary that the poor classes should be prevented by law from themselves to the ambition of the life agents of spinning and weavin

Comments in connection with the recent evening party at Ganesh Khind.

The Poona correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (103) of the does not agree with the views expressed b in its issue of the 26th July and reporte
of the Report on the Native Papers for th ing 26th July 1884 in connection with evening party at Ganesh Khind, and says:—The Natives are res
the difference that is apparent on the surface between the social gat by Sir James Furgusson during his early days and the evening organized. His Excellency earnestly meant to develop social between Europeans and Natives by means of friendly gatherings, bu failed for want of encouragement from the leaders of Native soci wretched evening parties now given are the result. On the rec there was no opportunity for Natives to mix with Europeans, and could not have been gainers to an appreciable extent by paying the u to His Excellency and by witnessing a theatrical performance. Bu cannot be taken to task for this state of things. The mere fact th cellency had the patience to listen to the whole performance, of w not understand a single word, without giving the least indication of disgust, is the best testimony of the noble disposition of that ge of his desire to please Natives. The whole fault lies with us. G generally actuated by good motives and are in earnest in bringing ab between Europeans and Natives, but we instead of encouraging counter to their views. By our acts we show that we do not dese treatment which these officers show a readiness to accord to us, a there is nothing strange in the fact that the distance between the remains the same as years roll on.

Complaint against the Bombay Tramway Company.

In a paragraph headed "The Tramway Company and Indu Prakásh (10) of the 4th A company owes a great deal to the B it could not have done better than modest prayer for some conveniences which the public have them, viz., seating four persons on a form instead of five as at desirable reform, which the company can effect without much the company has had the gracelessness to refuse the public t the latter have now resolved to address the Governor in Coun memorialists will meet with better treatment at the hands of (Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 7th August supports the pray memorial regarding the inconveniences suffered by the public tram cars. The Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the same date says t to the public comfort shown by the Tramway Company sho tolerated.]

Says that the observance of Madras time in the mofussil should be countermanded.

The Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 3rd August, in an article h unpopular Madras time," points out felt by the people by the continuan in the mofussil, and requests Gover discontinuance throughout the Bo Though it has proved more inconvenient in the mofussil than unjust that it should have been done away with only in the The Surat authorities and the local Praja Hitavardhak Sabha rialize the Bombay Government in the matter.

Comments on the Government resolution regarding the Honorary Surgeons of the Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 8th August says:—Th Sir James Fergusson, which has a close of its career by several un added one more blemish to its reput resolution accepting the resignation Surgeons of the Gokuldás Tejpál be gathered from the views expressed by the Surgeon-Gen recommend the abolition of Honorary Surgeonships and t two paid Surgeonships to be held by Europeans. This is re the poor Dr. Pesikáka and Dr. Roland Blaney must be hea they had not accepted the Honorary Surgeonships. Eve General approves of the proposal of Dr. Carter to appoint ne geons, it is very doubtful if competent Native doctors who ca will come forward to accept those appointments after the from this episode. In this affair Sir James Fergusson has s regime those who command power are all in all, that the defe officers is nothing, and that Government rules are meant for s and not for the fortunate highly-paid ones. Not the slightes in the new resolution to the unpunctuality of Dr. Hojel. clear whether the new order directing the "Surgeons" of th the hours of their attendance in a muster are applicable to the Does Sir James mean to imply that the subordinate Surge punctual in their attendance while the head of the hospital at any time and devote his valuable time to private practic by this conduct greatly encouraged the influential clique of D who wish to keep down Native doctors. These European doc engage in private practice. We regret that we have to writ but Sir James has proved himself a very weak-minded Govern to be anxious to please well-to-do Europeans in some way the services of European officers are generally extolled in le resolutions at the time of their retirement on pension, not a said for these Honorary Surgeons who worked without regar On the contrary they leave the service with the blemishes and "unfitness as Surgeons" on their character. This cont us many lessons and the most remarkable feature of the affai himself introduced the system of nominating Honorary Surge has himself been instrumental in crushing it. [The Bombay S

same date says that the experiment of appointing Honorary failed and that it should be tried once more. Government h mistake in asking for the opinion of the Surgeon-General in he recommends paid Surgeonships and if Government carry mendation, they will be committing a serious mistake.]

Complains of the delay in the declaration of the result of the last Subordinate Magistrates' Examination.

The Yajdán Parast (128) of the 3rd August asks why Subordinate Magistrates' Examinat been declared though three months h it was held. The delay is a public s be remedied. It is exercising cruel candidates to keep them in suspense f
If the examiners cannot finish their work owing to the pre business, others should be nominated in their stead.

Comments on a case in which a pátil named Onákar was prosecuted at Hoshangabad for secretly helping the notorious highway robber Tántia.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 5th August says:—It i and painful that the highway robbe escape punishment for years together
nocent persons should suffer instead, expressed our disapproval of the pol persons secretly aiding Tántia. The cites a case in which a pátil nam sentenced to imprisonment by Mr. B Commissioner of Hoshangabad, on the 12th April last, for secret and remarks:—It was proved before Mr. Howell, the Sessions prisoner Onákar, owing to the pressure put upon him by Tántia, plundering operations. Not only this, but the pátil had to all plundered by Tántia. It is said that Tántia forced himself u his guest and escaped when the authorities tried to apprehen way the poor pátil had to suffer for nothing. It is very wicke way robbers, but in such cases as the one under notice the circu party to be prosecuted should be taken into consideration. T proved very troublesome to the people of Central India but not been able to apprehend him. He forcibly enters the dwe and exacts help from them. The people cannot at such a junc against him. If they oppose him they endanger their lives an prosecute such people is to do them double harm. The pátil O be one of this unfortunate class of people. The authoriti they mean to throw a cloak over their inefficiency by thus
men. [The Poona Vaibhav (54) of the 3rd August makes remarks while disapproving of the action of the Bombay Gover ing to the High Court against the decision of the Sessions Ju who acquitted Gopál Náráyan, pátil of Bettigeri, of the char Channyakatti. The Vaibhav says that it is unreasonable to villagers to maintain their own against armed dacoits.]

Comments on the case of suicide by a Pársi liquor shopkeeper of Bombay, who drowned himself in a well for having been deprived of his license for selling country liquor.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 4th August says:—The Pársi liquor shopkeeper named Dhan aged 62 years committed suicide by in a well at Khetwádi for having been Collector of Bombay of his three licens liquor from the first of August 18 attention than ordinary cases of sui liquor and toddy strongly complain exercised on them by the A'bkári Department, and this case is tion in connection with the working of the A'bkári Depart frequently said that the heavy fees exacted from sellers of liqu
the strict conditions often imposed on them have become un dissatisfaction prevails amongst them on that account and som that they have been ruined in their business. Several seller were once considered to have become rich in the business are debt. Inhabitants of Bombay as well as of the mofussil compla of the A'bkári Department and wish for some relaxation, but as the o that department have become very anxious to augment Government they do not pay any attention to the public demand. It is to be regret matters should have reached such a point as to give rise to a case of We hope that this case is the first and last of its kind and that the au of the A'bkári Department and Government will see their mistake, tho in the day, and correct it. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the 3rd Aug that the authorities and the public will see from this case of suici amount of misery is entailed on liquor shopkeepers by the new arran for the sale of liquor. The Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the 7th August s the ábkári authorities have been ill-advised in the strong measures now by them. The measures are as inconvenient to the public as they are i to liquor-sellers. The public should send a protest to Government aga severity of the measures of the A'bkári Department.]

Complains that Eau de Cologne is used to supply the place of spirituous drinks.

The Káside Mumbai (108) of the 8th August expresses approva severity exercised by the A'bkári Department, out the advantages arising from a reduction in t ber of liquor-shops in the city, and says that a reduction would be beneficial. It is howeve regretted that Eau de Cologne should come more frequently into req than before as a substitute for spirituous liquors. The use of Eau de Co liquor is very injurious to health and its large consumption in an undilut produces serious results. If therefore Government impose a duty on forbid its sale without a license, thousands of people will be prevent using it in place of liquor.

A complaint against the new arrangements introduced into Surat for the sale of toddy.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 6th August s the toddy sellers at Surat are complaining against the great changes effected this year in ditions of selling toddy in that city. The ments prevailing in the Bulsár Táluka for th toddy have been introduced into Surat. The authorities have pointed out the advantages of allowing toddy to be gardens abounding with date trees and have thus been able to incr Government revenue. As gardens in Bulsár are situated at a distance or three miles from the city, the arrangements have not been found to objectionable. But as Surat is the chief centre of toddy and as n gardens abounding with date trees are situated in the vicinity of the cit it is feared that the new arrangements will give rise to frequent cases o enness.

Makes suggestions for preserving the Queen's statue on the Esplanade.

A correspondent of the Indian Spectator (1) of the 3rd August There is a beautiful statue of the Queen on the Esplanade, paid for by Khanderáo Gáikwád of It is a chaste work of art and means should b to protect it from the sun during the dry se the rains during the monsoon. At the same time the whole structur be open to the view of the people passing along the great public r present it is exposed to all the bad effects of the dews and the sun duri months. During the south-western monsoon it is protected from inju by an ugly corrugated iron extinguisher. This arrangement is a great and a public wrong, even leaving out of consideration the danger of the statue in the erection and removal of the roof. There should b spreading roof with edges twenty feet from the ground.

Says that the fishermen who carry on their business in the vicinity of the Hindu temples and burning ground near the banks of the river Sábarmati at Ahmedabad should be prevented from so doing.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 7th August says that th petitions have been made to the District M of Ahmedabad dated the 25th July and 6th N 1883 and 28th February and 29th June 188 tively by some of the inhabitants of that cit purpose of preventing fishermen from ca their work in the vicinity of the Hindu te burning ground near the banks of the river S the petitioners have simply been informed tha is being made in the matter. It is surprising that the Zilla Magistrate should not have yet concluded his enquiry in this trifling matter though 380 days have elapsed since the first petition was presented to him. This shows what length of time Magistrates and Collectors take in doing their work. As some serious results will ensue from the fishermen persisting to wound the religious feelings of the Hindus it is to be hoped that measures will be speedily taken to remove the cause of complaint.

Requests Government to appoint an additional Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad to dispose of arrears of work.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 4th August says that though an assistant has been appointed to the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Ahmedabad, the arrears have not been cleared off. Work has also increased in the subordinate court. It would be better if a third Subordinate Judge were appointed or if some other arrangements were made for disposing of the arrears of work. [The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 7th August expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that the salary of the Second Class Magistrate at Surat should be raised from Rs. 75 to Rs. 125 per mensem and that an additional Magistrate exercising the powers of a Third Class Magistrate should be appointed.

The Suryă Prakásh (83) of the 9th August says:—The salary of the present Second Class Magistrate at Surat is Rs. 75 per month. This is a very small salary, considering the authority he exercises in such a large and important city as Surat and the various important cases coming before him. Moreover a city officer is put to greater expense in keeping up his position than a táluka officer. We are therefore strongly of opinion that the pay of the City Magistrate should be raised to Rs. 125. Another Magistrate exercising third class powers should be appointed on Rs. 75 per month. Those cases that require the exercise of first class powers will be disposed of by the Huzur Deputy Collector and the rest by the Second and Third Class Magistrates. We hope the Commissioner, N. D., will see the justice of our recommendation and move Government on the subject.

Recommends Government to appoint Mr. Nánábhái Kávasji, Police Inspector, Surat, as special officer for apprehending highwaymen.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 3rd August refers to the prevalence of highway robberies in Káthiáwár under the leadership of Manvar, says that a jamádár of Junágad named Ummar has been specially appointed by Government to apprehend the robbers, and observes that the appointment of Mr. Nánábhái Kávasji, the well known Police Inspector of Surat, will have the effect of allaying the fears of the people and will serve as an efficient check to the operations of the highwaymen.

A suggestion to the postal authorities of Pátan.

A correspondent of the Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the 6th August, writing from Pátan, refers to the delay in the arrival of the mails at that station owing to the flooding of the rivers Sarasvati and Banáras, and says that if the mails are conveyed to Pátan from the Unjha station during the rainy season no delay and inconvenience will be caused, as no rivers will have to be crossed on the way. It is to be hoped that the authorities will pay attention to this suggestion.

Complains of the wretched condition of the road from Ránder to Olpád.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 9th August says that the condition of the road from Ránder to Olpád has become very wretched. Carriages drawn by horses cannot go over the made road from Jahángirpura to Olpád owing to the accumulation of mud. Bullock conveyances have to suffer great hardships while passing over the road.

Local Self-government.

Comments in connection with the rules recently published by Government for regulating the election of members of local boards.

In an article headed "A breach of faith by the Bombay Government" the Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 4th August says:—When the two Local Self-government Acts were being discussed during their passage through the local Legislative Council, we drew attention, among other things, to the necessity of providing in the body of the law that rules and regulations to be framed by the Local Government under those Acts shall be published in a draf view to invite public criticism thereon before they are finally tively promulgated. The great principle underlying such recognized by the present Government of India in the two im issued in 1882 and 1883; and, if we are not much mistaken, Government, along with the other provincial Governments, accepte of the reform suggested in those two circulars. It is worthy of r the legislative measures passed with a view to give effect to government scheme in other provinces distinct provision has b

the publication of all rules and regulations in a draft form be finally promulgated. We searched in vain for such a provision i legislative measures when they were introduced last year, but we that the defect in the Bills would be remedied during their passag Council. Such did not, however, prove to be the case, and we we appointed. Instead of a distinct provision in the body of the law w its stead an assurance from the Local Government that it was it publish such rules and regulations in a draft form previous to their fi tion. In the first place the Honourable Badrudin Tyabji, who reco randum as a rider to the reports of the Select Committee on the t measures, wrote as follows:—"The objection which I raised to the ex of making rules conferred upon Government was based upon the giving as much publicity to, and inviting as much public discussion u which when passed form part of the Acts themselves, as circumstanc
My opinion on this point of course remains unchanged, and I re ernment not passing any rules under either of the Bills without fi the drafts and inviting the fullest public criticism, especially from of the Council." Thus wrote Mr. Badrudin, and we believe we ar suming that he had an assurance from the honourable member in Bills which led him to rely upon Government following the par which he advocated. Again the Honourable J. B. Peile, C.S.I., Government in charge of the Bills, gave this explicit assurance wh to the discussion on the Municipal Bill on the occasion of its se
He said:—"As to rules, these are for the most part to be made und the municipalities themselves. Government has power to make regulating the elections and there is no objection whatever on ou publication of these before they are finally passed." There is no s to be found in Mr. Peile's speeches on the occasion of the second Local Boards Bill, but we believe that omission was not intentio inclined to believe that the assurance upon the strength of which wrote his memorandum, from which we have already quoted abo been identical with that which Mr. Peile publicly vouchsafed on the Municipal Bill referred to above. We do not think that any doubt whatever as regards the fact of the assurance public by Mr. Peile on behalf of Government in connection with t Bill being also applicable to the Local Boards Bill. Now su case let us see how such an assurance has been fulfilled
The Bombay Government Gazette of the 17th ultimo contains a n Government in the General Department publishing in virtue of th ferred by section 69, clause (b), of the Bombay Local Boards Act, for regulating the elections of members of local boards, other t under section 6, clause (c), and section 7, clause (c). There is nothi fication to indicate that before publishing these rules the non-offi of the Legislative Council were consulted. The rules published not in the form of draft rules inviting public discussion. Now it prising to us that the Bombay Government should have forgotten on this point. It is hardly six months since the assurances were ei or impliedly vouchsafed, and if this be the way in which the very tion that vouchsafed the assurances acts, what need we expect the course of time the present members of the Local Government by others? And this particular objection would hold good rules published were unobjectionable. But when some of the rules are quite objectionable, and must be altered if ever precaution for ensuring the success of the new policy is to be taken, the objection becomes all the more strong. We shall accordingly refer on the present occasion particularly to what we consider to be the most objectionable rule. That rule is rule No. 5. Now our chief objection to this rule is that it lays down a procedure for the naming and acceptance of candidates for membership which is sure to discourage respectable people from coming forward, because this procedure of a person naming himself as a candidate is not in accordance with the deep-rooted feelings and prejudices of the people in this country. The best procedure is that which was followed in Poona last year on the occasion of the first municipal elections, namely, that no person should be accepted as a candidate unless he was duly proposed and seconded by persons qualified to vote. A precisely similar procedure is laid down in Rule 20, which relates to the election by a táluka local board of its representatives for the district board. Under such circumstances we fail to see any reason why a different procedure has been laid down in this case only. We trust that the Bombay Government will forthwith remedy this defect.

Education.

Points out the necessity of starting a technical school in Sind.

The Sind Times (5) of the 1st August says:—Why is it that we have not a single industrial, technical, or arts school in Sind? If Government do not wish to train our youths for the public service alone, it is high time that some steps should be taken to introduce and encourage a knowledge of the mechanical and industrial arts. Our enlightened Educational Inspector ought to devote his attention to this subject and secure at least one arts school for Sind.

Want of good feeling between the students of the Gujarát College and Mr. Kápadia, the lecturer in physics.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 1st August says:—Anonymous letters complaining against Mr. Kápadia, lecturer in physics in the Gujarát College, have been received by all the teachers in the Ahmedabad High School, the professors and fellows of the College and Mr. Best. When matters have gone so far Mr. Best ought to make an enquiry in the matter. Mr. Kápadia is second assistant master in the High School, drawing a salary of Rs. 120 per month. Mr. Best has appointed him lecturer in the College, for which work he gets Rs. 83. How can one man do the work of two offices? He has to work for five hours in the High School, and how can he then find time to teach College students and the Matriculation class? He works for two hours only as second assistant master and teaches physics for two hours. This is injustice.

Railways.

Comments on the administration report of the Railway Department for 1883-84.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 3rd August says:—We are glad to observe that the Director-General has thought it fit to remove the vague impressions regarding the analogy of railway construction in America by which an ignorant public is apt to be carried away. Private enterprise and abundant capital, which are always forthcoming in the states of the west, are never to be had in this country "without assistance from the Government." This is no doubt true to a great extent. But against this statement of Colonel Stanton is the opinion of many an experienced commercial man that private enterprise can be reached in the shape of capital, and that without any aid from Government, but the conditions imposed by the State are so hard and the principles on which all railway concessions have been given away in the past are so faulty or objectionable that they act as a great deterrent to private capitalists embarking on their own account on Indian railways. Major Conway Gordon placed before the Select Committee the two sides of this important financial question in a very impartial manner. The Director-General of Railways has however omitted to point out the financial disasters which have overtaken many a railway in the west. Wealthy America can afford to bear the losses incurred by bogus railway companies or non-paying concerns. Considering the poverty of India undue stimulation of railway construction by private enterprise is more or less to be deprecated. The effects of such a rash course wi be very far-reaching. Another omission we have discovered in the report re lates to the creation of traffic after railways are made in America. The Gov ernment of India can never afford to imitate the tactics of the cornering railway kings. The abnormal extension in the United States is undoubtedl owing to the large number of speculative railways. India is wholly fre from this taint of speculation. There is not a railway that does not pa more or less. Even the protective railways earn something, now that the have worked for some years. Besides they serve the most useful purpose o being the channels of pouring food grains from the rich into the poor districts So far then the steady progress of 10,447 miles of railways in India up to 188 is satisfactory. And even from the point of view of net profits earned it i equally satisfactory. For the average dividend of neither continental railways save in France, nor of American railways reaches anything like 5·91 per cent on the total capital laid out. The number of European employés shows a increase of 199 over the preceding year, while there is a nominal diminution o 731 in the number of Natives. It is satisfactory to know that 95 per cent. o the entire body of railway servants are Natives. We however again mis the crucial test, namely, the table of salaries and wages earned by Europea and Native employés. The figures under their respective heads are the tru criterion of the wage fund earned by Natives. We pointed out this seriou omission last year and hoped that the Director-General would take the hint The fact shows how unwilling the official is to give the public that informatio which is due by right. Surely the public that have to pay for the rail ways are entitled to know what the foreign and the Native agencies cos respectively.

Complains that no Native witnesses were examined by the Select Committee on Indian Railways.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 3rd August says:—It is very disappointin that the Select Committee on Indian Railways shoul not have allowed any opportunity to Natives to giv evidence before it. We learn that a Native at presen residing in England and who has been studying th question of public works in all its bearings for the last 2 years, wrote to the Under Secretary of State for India offering to give evidenc before the Committee, the chief members of which were officials, but no reply wa sent to him as his views were opposed to those of Government. He afterward directly requested the Chairman of the Committee to allow him to giv evidence before it and submitted the particulars of what he had to say. Bu his request was not complied with. From this it is clear in the first place tha no opportunity was offered for an expression of the views of the Natives on th subject and secondly that the only Native witness who offered to give evidenc was prevented from so doing. Considering this circumstance the Committee' enquiry must be regarded as one-sided, and it is no wonder that its report shoul declare that whatever Government do is right.

Advocates the reduction of the present heavy rates of freight on Indian railways.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the 3rd August points out the advantages tha would result from a reduction in the rates of freigh charged by Indian railway companies for the con veyance of goods and says that trade does no flourish owing to the high rates of freight charged b railway companies. If the rates are reduced, this country can very well com pete with America in the wheat trade. The export of cotton is also affecte by the heavy rates of freight and by the scarcity of waggons for its conveyanc in the busy season. If economy was practised in the management of railways the companies would suffer no loss by a reduction of the rates of freight The companies employ a large number of Europeans on large salaries. Thei work can be done as well by the employment of cheap Native agency. A Government have power to compel the guaranteed railway companies t practise economy and to reduce their rates of freight, they should use tha power and order them to employ Natives more freely than hitherto.

A complaint against the Ulwar State Railway.

A correspondent of the Indian Spectator (1) of 3rd August travelling fro Bandikui to Delhi says:—I saw about sixty passen gers and their friends, mostly women and childre huddled together under trees to escape the noonda heat. Traces of fatigue and faintness were visible on many a face, and th constant cry was "water." The people had come from great distances, an having no idea of time or space they had of course to wait for hours. Wh not make arrangements for their comfort and convenience? It always vexe one to see the class of passengers paying most treated with least regard. Th carriages were filled to suffocation, men and women together occupying some o them although there was other provision. Before the second station afte Bandikui could be reached we were overtaken by a very smart dust storm, whic was followed by a heavy downpour. Our carriage was in two minutes a poo of water. It leaked from the top, and the windows too allowed full play to th torrents to come in. My companions escaped to a neighbouring third clas compartment. I had to wait till the train stopped. Finding no guard o station-master on the platform I had to bribe the porter to remove the luggag to a third class carriage. And here I was ensconced all the night, being now and then forced to remain in very disagreeable company. At Ulwar the trai stopped for a very long time. There was a heavy rush by howling, shrieking passengers. The wretched little carriages were already full. I counted 13 passengers in one, 15 in another carriage. By the rules the guard should not allow more than 8 persons to sit in one compartment. But where was the guard, and where was the station-master? There was scarcely any responsible man on the spot The representative of the Ulwar State in railway matters was with us. He too was helpless, he explained. The porters and others did their best to put in all who came. This is State management! I am sure the Minister for Publi Works knows nothing about it. He is not likely to tolerate such a state o things for one day. But he has to go upon official reports. As in some othe matters, so in this of railway, State management means maximum of expens with minimum of responsible work in the interests of the public. Servants o the State forget that the public are their patrons and masters for the tim being.

Says that the system of granting pensions to employés should be adopted by the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company.

The Suryă Prakásh (83) of the 9th August expresses approval of th conduct of Government in having exacted a stipula tion from the authorities of the B. B. & C. I. Rai way Company to allow pensions to the employés o the Rájputána Railway, which will shortly pass int their hands, and points out to the authorities th justice and expediency of initiating a system by which the employés of the B. & C. I. Railway Company might be placed on an equal footing regardin pensionary benefits with the present employés of the Rájputána Railway.

Municipalities.

Comments on the resolution of the Municipal Corporation of Bombay regarding the diversion of the night soil from Carnac Bandar to Warli.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 3rd August says:—The resolution passed the last Monday's meeting of the Corporation to sen the night soil collected at the Carnac Bandar dep to Warli through the main drain, which runs unde neath the first district, is a matter for small surpris It was a foregone conclusion. On that day the were as many as 11 European members against Natives, 4 or 5 of whom alone are known to ta any active inerest in municipal affairs or have paid any attention to the subje of drainage and the mischief likely to arise from throwing night soil into t main drains. These European members sided with the Commissioner. Th seldom think for themselves. The majority attend meetings when vexed questio have to be settled, because they are invited to attend and support the offic view—that view being in their opinion the correct one. Few of them feel a genuine interest in self-government. Why should they? They are mere bir of passage. Does Colonel Merewether or Dr. Blanc, does Mr. Thorburn Mr. Caroll, care much what happens to Bombay ten years hence? Will th be sorry when at the end of the period it is known to a certainty that t works which they actively supported in conjunction with Mr. Ollivant ha proved a costly failure, and that people have died in the city at the rate of per 1,000? The scheme is pronounced as problematical in all but official quarte And yet with utter disregard for the future health of the citizens they have vot it to a man. We are surprised at the arguments of the members most interested in getting the night soil depôt removed from Carnac Bandar. Colonel Merewether ridiculed the arguments of the people of the Kámáthipura district. Their first ground of objection was deficiency of water-supply. Is that to be gainsaid? And yet Colonel Merewether laughed out the objection! He said that fresh water may not be had, but sea water was to be found in abundance to flush the drains. Did not the Commissioner report that trials of flushing by sea water in England had proved failures? Then on what grounds did the gallant Colonel consider that sea water would do very well, when the fact of its being useless is everywhere admitted? And whence is surface water to be brought? You may have enough to flush some portions of the drains during the monsoon. But how during the dry weather? Are we to presume that sullage water will be introduced to drive down the solid matter from the pipes at Carnac Bandar? Who are the authorities that "have conclusively shown" that sea water from a "sanitary point of view is better" for the flushing of the drains? The only local authority who has hazarded such an opinion is Mr. Kemp. But with due deference to his abilities we must decline to accept his view. Is there a single instance of any town, as crowded as Bombay, which has to pass down night soil at the rate of 150 tons a day through a large extent of pipes, where drains have been flushed with salt water without any detriment or danger to the pipes themselves or to the health of the people? If such a successful experiment has been tried anywhere, we should like to know about it. [The Bombay Chronicle (79) and the Rást Goftár (115) of the same date say that the Corporation could not but adopt the course recommended by the Town Council. The Kaiser-i-Hind (106), the Yajdán Parast (128) and the Pársi Punch (113) of the 3rd August express disapproval of the resolution adopted by the Corporation, the first two suggesting that night soil should be turned into manure.]

Comments on the proposal to sink artesian wells in Bombay.

The same newspaper says:—No practical man ever thought of benefiting Bombay by means of artesian wells. But it is as well perhaps that the question has been now authoritatively settled. The municipality must now think seriously about the Tánsa scheme. The best plan will be to suspend the drainage works except as experiments, and push on with a good scheme of water supply. But this is what the municipal officers will never think of. They are so anxious to give the people what they do not want that they have no time to think of what the people do want.

Complains against the assessment of charitable institutions by the Assessment Department of the Bombay Municipality.

The Gujaráti (99) of the 3rd August says:—Great mismanagement prevailed in the Assessment Department of the Bombay Municipality in the time of Mr. Hutchinson and now the reformed department has begun to tyrannize over the people. Under the new scheme for assessing properties places that are set apart for the use of the public and temples and mosques have been made subject to assessment. This has caused great commotion. Gardens set apart for the use of Hindus were formerly exempted from assessment, but now they are taxed. Temples are also taxed. The latter are not owned by individuals and yield no rent. The department does not act wisely in this matter. Does it intend to make up the loss suffered by it in former years? When lákhs of rupees were misappropriated nothing was done by it. When the municipality levies the water-rate on these charitable institutions, why should a fresh tax be imposed on them? It is to be hoped that the Municipal Commissioner and the Corporation will attend to the matter and pacify the cry now raised.

Comments on the Government resolution on the subject of the dispute between some of the elected commissioners of the Surat Municipality and the president, Mr. White, in the matter of electric lights in that city.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 5th August says:—The resolution of Government on the subject of the dispute between the seven elected commissioners of the Surat Municipality and their president, Mr. White, appears to go for the most part against the commissioners. Though Mr. White does not quite escape censure, nothing has been said regarding the chief point of difference. Government have taken no notice of his arbitrary conduct in insulting some of the commissioners.

This will not fail to cause disappointment to those commissioners as well as t the public. We think that if an opportunity had been given to the commissioners who petitioned Government to have their say on the explanation furnished to Government by Mr. White and the report made by the Revenue Commissioner, the result would not have been the same as that now arrived at. Some of the particulars given in the resolution of the events that happened are erroneous. Government are mistaken in saying that one of the petitioners, Mr. Ishwardás, was a great advocate of the introduction of electric lights into Surat. In fact he was opposed to the measure from the very beginning, as can be seen from a reference to the recorded proceedings of the municipality. But Government have made a greater mistake than this in the matter of the extension of the Public Park at Surat. Government say that as 27 elected commissioners voted in favour of the proposition to extend the Park while only 3 commissioners voted against it the work of extension must be looked upon as approved by the public. But Messrs. Jamiyatrám Chintámanishankar, Munshi Lutfullákhán, Kálábhái, Dáyábhái and others voted against it. The president disregarded the proposal made by Messrs. Kálábhái and Dáyábhái that the extension should be postponed till the formation of the new board. In these circumstances the measure cannot be considered as approved of by the public. Government have erred, and have made the public err as well, by viewing matters in that light.

Advises the Surat Municipality to construct artesian wells in the city as an experimental measure.

The Surat Akhbár (82) of the 4th August refers to the successful working of artesian wells in Australia, Pondicherry and other places and advises the local municipality to spend about Rs. 10,000 on the construction of these wells as an experimental measure before carrying out measures for bringing water to the city at a cost of six lákhs of rupees. If these wells prove a success, the difficulties of supplying water to the city by means of pipes will be removed.

Complains against the levy of house-tax at Kaira.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 3rd August says that the people of Kaira are complaining against an enhancement of the house tax. A sub-committee has been appointed by the municipality to revise the tax. If the revised schedule is passed by the general meeting the poor people will have to suffer much. Mr. Spry ought to see if the members of the sub-committee have not made use of their position in fixing low rates for their own properties. Large buildings should be put under a separate class and the tax on them should be Rs. 5 or 7. Why does not the municipality levy a wheel tax? Such a course will obviate the necessity of oppressing poor people.

Comments on the rules for regulating municipal elections in Karáchi.

The Sind Times (5) of the 29th July says:—On a cursory perusal of the rules for regulating the municipal elections in our city as sanctioned by the Commissioner we notice that the provision made by the municipality for qualified females voting by proxy has been omitted in the rules. This is doubtless an oversight, and we hope the provision will be at once restored. It is clear that most of the qualified Native ladies cannot vote in person. To rule therefore that they cannot vote by proxy is simply another form of ruling that they cannot exercise the suffrage vested in them.

Points out the necessity of enforcing early disposal of applications for copies of documents.

A correspondent of the Dhárwár Vritt (28) of the 31st July writing from Ránebennur says:—Under section 93 of the District Municipal Act the public are entitled to a perusal of the proceedings of a municipality, and Government Resolution No. 9368 dated 6th December 1881 rules that there is no objection to grant copies of such proceedings to those who are entitled to peruse them on payment of the necessary charges. Nearly 10 months ago a gentleman asked for a copy of the resolution passed by the managing committee of the Ránebennur Municipality on the 30th March 1881, but he has yet been unable to get it. It will be very convenient if the Bombay Government issue an order directing that applications for copies of documents should not be kept over for more than 8 or 10 days.

Native States.

Approves of the action of the Bombay Government in refusing to sanction the adoption by the Jám of Navánagar of a son born of Jánbái.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 8th August says:—If what we have hear be true, and we have every reason to believe that i is true, the Bombay Government have acted wisel in refusing to sanction the adoption by the Jám o Navánagar of a son by Jánbái. Because a forme Government of Bombay recognised the claims o Káluba, who was born of a Mahomedan wife of the Jám, it does not follow that the present Government should follow that evi example. It is to be hoped that the Jám will now devote himself to the tas of introducing reforms into his State. According to the information we hav received the advisers of this weak-minded prince will not allow him to remai quiet. They advise him to take his case to the Government of India, na before the Home Government. The Jám fears to follow this advice and it i to be hoped that he will never take this false step. It is said that about 5 or 6 lákhs of rupees were spent in obtaining the sanction of Government to th adoption of Káluba, and this coupled with other circumstances has involved th State in heavy liabilities. If the Jám does not desist from the false step o appealing against the decision of the Bombay Government he will becom more involved.

Berár Affairs.

Points out the advisability of taking measures for prompt disposal of civil business.

The Pramod Sindhu (13) of the 4th August refers to the remarks of th Judicial Commissioner of Berár on the subject of dela in the disposal of civil suits, and says that the peopl of the district of Amráoti have had during the pas year full experience of the inconvenience and troubl attendant on the insufficiency of judicial officers. I is indeed very strange that with all the growing income of the departmen arrangements should not be made to meet the convenience of suitors. It i necessary that the Judicial Commissioner should devise some measures for removing all cause for complaint. If the present number of Civil Judges is insufficient for the requirements of the province attempt must be made to supplement the service by the elevation of some competent subordinate officers t the rank of Extra Assistant Commissioners.

Protests against an enhancement of school fees and against the distinction made between Hindu and Mahomedan boys in the matter of the remission of fees.

In an article headed "School Fees made a Race Question" the sam newspaper says:—One of the consequences of the appointment of the Education Commission has been th enhancement of fees in the Government schools of th province. The fees hitherto levied in what are technically called the secondary classes were considere to be very low in proportion to the importance of th instruction and the cost which Government have t bear in maintaining this class of schools. We have been of opinion that th scale of school fees in this province was moderate. Indeed it was a very wis step that no high fees were demanded at the beginning. The fee rules hav undergone revision during the last decade. Once the boys of agriculturist who contributed to the educational cess were required to pay half the fee paid by non-agriculturists. The distinction though reasonable and still in forc in Bombay and the Central Provinces did not commend itself to the authoritie in this province and it was abolished after a short existence. We are informe that along with the secondary schools the fees payable in the primary school have also been increased about 50 per cent. all round. One circumstance however has struck us, and it is that 10 per cent. of the Mahomedan pupils are unde the new rules exempted from fees, while the same concession has been withhel from the Hindu boys. Is it because the Mahomedans are supposed in compariso with the other classes of boys to be less able to pay their fees or less incline to go to school, or is it because this class of the population has not take advantage of schools in the same proportion as the other sections of the community have done, that more favourable terms are offered to induce them to g to school more freely than they have yet done, or is the concession founded on an other consideration? The first theory of poverty and disinclination cann we think, be quite correct. We are told in the Resident's review of the Repo on Public Instruction for 1882-83 that the percentage of the Mahomedan bo to the total number on the rolls of Government schools rose during the ye from 13·8 to 14·3, while there was no corresponding increase in the number the Hindu boys. We also read in the report presented to the Education Co mission by Mr. Lee-Warner that "owing to this special provision made f the education of Mahomedans the percentage of Mahomedan lads under i struction in the Urdu and Marâthi primary schools to the Mahomedan popul tion is higher than in the case of Hindus. The percentage of the Hindu ma population to the total male population of the province is 92·9, while that the Mahomedans is 7·04; but the percentage of Hindu male scholars to t total Hindu population is 1·9, while that of Mahomedans is 4·07." So wheth owing to the "special provisions" or otherwise, the number of Mahomeda lads already using Government schools is about four times the number of t

Hindu lads, judging from their respective proportions to the total populatio
And if they have been able to pay their fees all the while and if the proporti of school-going lads, already large, is still increasing, it does not follow th
the Mahomedans are either backward in taking advantage of the instructi imparted by Government or are unable to pay for it. We do not care inquire who started this idea, but we do not think that the scheme was we considered in all its bearings before it was sanctioned. Are not the Hindu generally as well off or as badly circumstanced as the Mahomedans? Even suppo
ing that there exists in the province a larger proportion of well-to-do Hindus tha Mahomedans, are there no poor Hindus who deserve the concession grante to their Mahomedan fellows, and do not the former equally contribute towards t educational or provincial taxes? The idea does not seem to have been co ceived in an equitable spirit and we think that the distinction should not allowed to exist. Knowing the people as we do we think that the concessi of remission of fees in the case of 10 per cent. of school boys is really good a wise and would be equally appreciated by both Hindus and Mahomedans if were not given a sectional character, which besides marring its usefulness creat a distinction in favour of one class of people at the expense of another.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Pre

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
12*th August* 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Abkári:
  Comments on the case of suicide by a Pársi liquor shopkeeper of Bombay who drowned himself in a well for having been deprived of his licenses for selling country liquor 10
  Complaint against the new arrangements introduced into Surat for the sale of toddy 11
  Complaint regarding the use of Eau de Cologne to supply the place of spirituous drinks 11
Bombay Tramway Company: Complaint against the— 9
Complaints: Expression of opinion that the fishermen who carry on their business in the vicinity of the Hindu temples and burning ground near the river Sábarmati at Ahmedabad should be prevented from so doing 11
Court fees: Expression of thanks to Sir Richard Garth for his proposals regarding the reduction of— 5
Factory Act:
  Comments in connection with the proposed amendment of the— ... 6
  Expression of satisfaction with the action of the Bombay Government in trying to elicit public opinion before amending the—... 8
Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital: Comments on the Government resolution regarding the Honorary Surgeons of the—... 9
Impoverished condition of India: Comments on the — and suggestion of the means of effecting the regeneration of the country 3
Indian Cholera Commission: Recommendation to Government to appoint Dr. Vandyke Carter to the— 5
Judicial matters:
  Comments on a case in which a pátil named Onákar was prosecuted at Hoshangabad for secretly helping the notorious highway robber Tántia 10
  Complaint regarding the costly nature of the justice administered by the British courts in India 4
  Expression of opinion that the salary of the Second Class Magistrate at Surat should be raised from Rs. 75 to Rs. 125 per mensem and that an additional Magistrate exercising the powers of a Third Class Magistrate should be appointed 12
  Request to Government to appoint an additional Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad to dispose of arrears of work ... 12
  Suggestion for disposing of the heavy arrears of work in the High Court 4
Law of bigamy: Necessity of effecting a change in the existing — as applied to Hindu women 5
Madras time: Expression of opinion that the observance of — in the mofussil should be countermanded 9
Parties at the Government House: Comments in connection with the recent evening party at Ganesh Khind 8
Police: Recommendation to Government to appoint Mr. Nánábhái Kávasji, Inspector of Surat, as special officer for apprehending highwaymen in Káthiáwár 12
Postal matters: Suggestion to the postal authorities of Pátan ... 12
Queen's statue on the Esplanade: Suggestion for preserving the— ... 11
Resignation of office by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught: Expression of regret at the contemplated— 3
Roads: Complaint regarding the wretched condition of the road from Rándér to Olpád 12
Salt: Complaint regarding the dearness of — in India 5
Subordinate Magistrates' Examination: Complaint regarding the delay in the declaration of the result of the last— 10

Part II.—Local Self-government—

Local Boards: Comments in connection with the rules recently published by Government for regulating the election of members of— ... 12

Part III.—Education—

Gujarát College, Ahmedabad: Want of good feeling between the students of the — and Mr. Kápadia, the lecturer in physics 14
Technical school in Sind: Necessity of starting a— 14

Part IV.—Railways—

Administration Report of the Railway Department for 1883-84: Cor
ments on the— ... ...
B. B. & C. I. Railway Company: Expression of opinion that the syste of granting pensions to employés should be adopted by the—Freight on Indian railways: Advocacy of the reduction of the prese heavy rates of— ... ...
Select Committee of the House of Commons on Indian Railways: Cor
plaint that no Native witnesses were examined by the—Ulwár State Railway: Complaint against the—... ...

Part V.—Municipalities—

Bombay:
Comments on the proposal to sink artesian wells in— ...
Comments on the resolution of the Municipal Corporation of regarding the diversion of the night soil from Carnac Bandar Warli ... ...
Complaint regarding the assessment of charitable institutions
the — Municipality ... ...
Kaira: Complaint against the levy of house-tax at— ...
Karáchi: Comments on the rules for regulating municipal elections in-Ránebennur: Complaint against the — Municipality for the delay in fu nishing copies of certain proceeding ... ...
Surat:
Advice to the — Municipality to construct artesian wells in th
city as an experimental measure ... ...
Comments on the Government resolution on the subject of the di pute between some of the elected commissioners of the — Mun cipality and the president, Mr. White, in the matter of electr lights in that city ... ...

Part VI.—Native States—

Navánagar: Approval of the action of the Bombay Government in fusing to sanction the adoption by the Jám of — of a son born Jánbái ... ...

Part VII.—Berár Affairs—

Disposal of civil business: Advisability of taking measures for mo prompt— ... ...
School-fees: Protest against an enhancement of — and against the di tinction made between Hindu and Mahomedan boys in the matter
the remission of— ... ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

C.R.

34567

INDIA OFFICE.
15 SEP 1884

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERAR

For the Week ending 16th August 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
*16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	200
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
22	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*24	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*25	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
26	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*27	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
30	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
31	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
32	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
33	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
34	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
35	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
36	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
37	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*39	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
40	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
41	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
42	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
43	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*44	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
45	„ Mahárásthtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
46	„ Mahárásthtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
47	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
48	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*49	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
51	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*53	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
54	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*55	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*56	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*58	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
59	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*65	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*69	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 339

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
70	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
71	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
83	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
84	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
85	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
86	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
87	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*88	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
89	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,090
90	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
91	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
92	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
93	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
94	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
95	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
96	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
97	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
98	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
99	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*100	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
101	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*102	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
103	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
104	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
105	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*106	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
*107	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
108	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
109	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
110	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
111	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
*112	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
113	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
114	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
115	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,814
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
117	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*118	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
119	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
125	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
126	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
127	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
128	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
129	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*130	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
131	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	225
132	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*133	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*134	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*135	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
	SINDI.
139	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881,

Politics and the Public Administration.

Tries to expose the fallacy of the assertion that India was conquered by the sword and is maintained by the strength of the same instrument.

The Vengurla Vritt (73) of the 7th August says:—The agitation regarding the Ilbert Bill went a great way in tearing the veil off many a vile thought regarding Natives that found shelter in the white bosoms of Europeans, and in disabusing the minds of those Natives who were foolish enough to be beguiled by their sweet talk. So long as we were content to be ignorant and were fond of crediting the Europeans with divine attributes, they indulged in tall talk about amelioration of the condition of the people. But no sooner did we take leave of that passive attitude and take our stand on the principle of equality of rights and privileges between man and man than all that loud talk turned out to be meaningless, and we found them envying us for even the most trifling concessions made to us. Instances of this last trait of the character of Europeans have been very frequent of late. A word from a philanthropist like Mr. Wordsworth, condemning the unjust treatment accorded to Natives, is enough to disturb the mental equilibrium of the writers who take credit for divine attributes, and to lead them to indulge in rabid talk. The recent letter from Plancus furnishes a specimen of this kind of writing. The two main arguments which underlie the ravings of this writer are (1) that the British conquered India by the strength of the sword and (2) that they are maintaining their empire by the strength of the same weapon. The mere fact that the British are in power may serve to kick the beam in favour of whatever they may say. But if truth and history were allowed a potential voice they would tell a different tale. On what ground do the British parade the argument of the conquest of India by the sword? Let them point to a single battle which they won by their own prowess, unassisted by the Natives. Why should a people who originally landed on the shores of this country in a famished state, who insinuated themselves into the confidence of Natives by carrying on the profession of itinerant Márwári pedlars, and who after gaining a sure footing turned ungrateful traitors to their benefactors, vaunt so much about their military achievements? Why should a people who acquired bits of territory by mean intrigues and, like Hyder, did not shrink from reducing to a state of utter destitution their own master talk big about their valour? Who can give credence to the assertion that a people who made it a policy to fan the flames of quarrel between the different Native rulers with a view to serve sinister motives of self-interest, acquired their dominion by means of justice and strength? A people who swallowed the territories of their friends, who made free with the estates of those who sought their protection, and who deprived their enemies of their kingdoms by various artifices, have no right to proclaim to the world that they gained their empire by means of justice and by the strength of their sword. Instances illustrative of the lines of policy above indicated can be cited by hundreds from history, and it is therefore proper that Natives should not allow themselves to be led away by such specious arguments as those advanced by Plancus, but should try to view things in their true light.

Says that the present policy of Government is characterized by inconsistency.

The Arunodayă (18) of the 10th August says:—The professions of even-handed justice which are trumpeted by the British rulers in India are simply ridiculous. The present policy of Government is nothing if not inconsistent. While Government abolished the import duty on English piecegoods, the pressure of which was neither felt nor complained against, they have not seen their way to the abolition of the license tax, which is generally declared to be an unjust impost and the advisability of discontinuing which has been frequently pressed on the attention of Government. Arguments based on the principles of free trade were brought into full play to support the abolition of the import duty on piecegoods, but the same arguments evidently do not hold good in the case of Indian articles imported into England, as otherwise the English duty on Indian gold and silver ware would not have been allowed to continue. The very fact that notwithstanding the general cry for reduction in the overgrown expenditure of administration Government have thought fit to add to it sufficiently proves that there is no unity of interests between the rulers and the ruled, and we cannot b observing that this is a very undesirable state of things. In the current ye financial statement Sir A. Colvin said that it was resolved to extend to the Bri Indian soldiers the concessions regarding favourable rates of exchange in the mittance of salaries that were enjoyed by the colonial soldiers, the effect of wh was an addition of 18 lákhs of rupees to the military expenditure. If Governm have resorted to this dodge with the view of giving a quietus to the public cry reduction of expenditure there is no chance of success. The people of this coun have become altogether callous of humiliation and contempt, and are sur sustain their cry in the same way as a famished people continue to beg for f even if they are kicked out, threatened and subjected to mean insults. The peo of India have lost their former grandeur. Their riches have vanished. They required to approach Government for any and every trifling concession.

deputation goes from Thána to attend on His Excellency the Viceroy with view of personally explaining the grievances of the people in the matter of stringency of the forest laws, but the Private Secretary informs the members t the Viceroy has no leisure for an interview. The times of the Mogul rule w in this respect certainly better than the present, inasmuch as in those times subjects never expected to interview their rulers and therefore there was occasion for disappointment. The present policy of Government howe appears to be to act in a manner to give rise to complaints and then to hu liate people by refusing to give them a hearing, and this policy is observed officers from the District Collector to the Secretary of State and even by Parliament and the Queen-Empress. Matters have reached such a pitch t some ignorant people are willing to be thrown away into the sea instead having to suffer such excruciating tortures. Of course such expressions m be taken in their proper light as proceeding from ignorant and desperate peo
The inference is clear, however, that the people are incapable of bearing heavy burden of taxes, and we hope Government will now adopt a course of ev handed justice, encourage native trade, reduce the military and other expen ture, and be ever diligent in promoting the welfare of this country. [T Gujaráti (99) of the same date in a communicated article expresses somew similar sentiments regarding the present policy of Government and advises people to continue agitating in a constitutional way.]

Comments in connection with the question of a direct Parliamentary control over the affairs of India.

Reviewing the articles contributed by Mr. John Slagg, M. P., on the sub of a direct and more efficient Parliamentary con
over the affairs of India, the Mahrátta (2) of the 1 August concludes as follows:—We believe we n
not say anything more as to the necessity of hav
some means of exercising a more efficient con over the affairs of India. As days roll on the necessity is becoming more more imperative, and if no timely note be taken of the state of feelin England and in this country we believe the English nation will have to ru carelessness. Russophobia is growing more and more upon the Indian off mind; the marches of Russia in Central Asia are becoming more and m resolute and menacing; and if the English nation does not possess itsel some effective means of checking the actions of the Government of India, probable that a pretext may be sought to wage war with Afghanistan or Ru on the ground of insecurity of India, just as the Lytton Government di the case of the Afghan War. The sooner therefore the evil is remedied for all, the better will it be for both nations.

Discusses the question of the possible effects of Russian conquest on the different classes of the Indian people and advises Government to effect a reconciliation between the people and the official classes.

The Mahárásshtră Mitră (46) of the 14th August, discussing the questio
the possible effects of Russian conquest on the ferent classes of the people of this country, says
Those who are at present maintaining themselves service under Government will evidently suffer m under the Russian rule. The cultivating classes generally contented, and if some consideration shown to them in the matter of salt, forests, ábk license-tax, and court fees, they will not like to thrown out of their present groove. As for the commercial classes they be the greatest sufferers by a change of rule. As matters at present st

they are not able on account of foreign competition to make as handsome profits as they wish, and some steps in the direction of the encouragement of indigenous trades and industries to the exclusion of foreign trade would be greatly calculated to keep them loyal to the British interests. As for the Inámdárs, Jághirdárs and Native princes who have been unjustly deprived of their possessions and whose repeated demands for redress have remained unheeded, it is natural that they should cherish notions of possible good from the advent of the Russians and should therefore cast a wistful glance at the event. Be this as it may, it is clear that the people have been very much annoyed by the high-handed acts of the official classes. The people are unable to carry their grievances to the highest authority, and this circumstance serves to destroy all good feeling between the rulers and the ruled. The people censure the officials and the officials censure the people. And here the matter rests. The truth is altogether lost sight of and several complications are raising their heads. These complications and the oppression practised by the officials must disappear in order that a feeling of loyalty may spring up among the people. The ultimate effect of a conciliatory policy would be that a strong tie would be created between the people and Government, and the former would not only be averse to a Russian invasion but would actively assist Government in keeping off foreign invaders like Russia.

Does not approve of the appointment of a commission for demarcating the boundary line of Afghanistan.

In an article headed "The Demarcation Commission" the Sind Times (5) of the 8th August says :—We think what is most to be regretted and deplored is the appointment of such a commission at all. As Sir T. Mádhav Ráo happily puts it, the frontier line to be demarcated by the commission would after all be no better than "length without strength." And where again would this line be drawn? Not near Afghanistan, for that would be giving in the long run an unwelcome, dangerous neighbour to our ally the Amir. Not far away from Afghanistan, for the wild tribes inhabiting the Trans-Afghan frontier own no one's sway and are sure to draw down a Russian expedition by their raids in Russian territory. There is another consideration, moreover, which has escaped the attention of our contemporaries. If the line of demarcation is to be drawn in a territory which does not belong to the Amir, may we ask by what right the English and the Russian commissioners can assume to divide it without taking the rights of its inhabitants or their sardárs (if they have any) into account? The Amir, we read, declines to guarantee the safety of the English commission even while they pass through his territory, and there is some talk of the commission going viâ Persia. Here is our sturdy ally, to whom we give a handsome subsidy every year to enable him to serve as a good buffer, so to say, between us and the Russians and to keep Afghanistan in unity, integrity and independence, and he tells us that he cannot undertake to give a safe conduct to the commission through his kingdom. But suppose however that he does give this safe conduct, that the commissioners succeed in laying down a satisfactory line, that a new map is made, and that England is at last able to say to Russia "Thus far shalt thou go and no further," can any practical politician believe that Russia can never find a casus belli because of the existence of this paper line? Can it in the least curb the ambition of a future Skobeleff? Can it prevent the semi-savage tribes on the outskirts of the present Afghan boundary from coming in contact with Russia and from falling at last in her all-mastering grasp? It is inevitable that a civilised military power like Russia should subjugate the erratic, lawless tribes on her border. It is inevitable, we say, because the law of her existence necessitates such subjugation. Is such inevitable subjugation to be made a ground for war with Russia? It may be however that the object of the commission is not to draw a line in neutral territory, but to define the exact boundaries of Afghanistan in order to prepare the way for a formal treaty protecting Afghanistan from Russian encroachments. But will not such definition hasten, if anything, the progress of Russia towards the extreme outskirts of the Amir's territory? The Afghans are above all a mercenary people, and a skilful Russian general can easily stimulate their cupidity to a dangerous point,—to the point even of rebelling against the Amir, should the latter oppose their alliance with Russia for the plunder of Ind It cannot be denied that the Amir has no adequate control over his peop He does not occupy the position of a despot or independent monarch. He be unmade by his subjects, and he rules more or less on sufferance. The wh Afghan history is full of instructive lessons on this point, and it is in ignori them that the Russophobists who advocate the occupation of Kandahar sh their greatest weakness. The Cabulis and the Kandaharis would as one m rise in indignation against the perfidious "Feringhee," as they call our rule Before the Russians could invade us, we would have to dip our hands in blood of our Afghan allies and to well-nigh reduce India to insolvency. Charles Napier with true insight relied upon our present frontier as adequ for all purposes. Peshawar is no less than 690 miles from Samarkand, 4 miles from Balkh, and 200 miles from Cabul. "An army working its w by the northern line would still find the Khyber before it. Rightly Skobeleff say that the rank and file of such an army ought to enter upon th task with their thoughts on their Emperor and their trust in their God, surely they would never be likely to return to their country." Why th should the present base of operations be removed to a remote line, vulnera at all points? India has a natural frontier, which it would be folly to give All the money spent on railways, on occupations and on probable wars, wo mean internal misery and disquiet, the depletion of India's resources, and pauperism of her already impoverished sons. This internal discontent wo be more formidable than any Russian invasion, and if any preventive measu are required, they are required to prevent this certain discontent rather th any Russian invasion, of which the contingency is even now remote. W England wants above all is a policy of frankness and generosity towards Indian people—doing her duty for the day and leaving the morrow to take c of itself. She could have no stronger armour to combat the foe, supposing comes at all, than the attachment of her Indian subjects. There is no bet way of securing her hold on India than by directing all her thoughts to t object alone. [The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 11th August says:—For oursel we think the British power is too well placed and fortified to induce e Russia to lightly attack it. As observed by General Hamley, it is more lik that Russia would use her proximity to India as a check on England in Eu pean politics than that she would use it for any overt act of aggression India herself. But in any case the British Government in India must be the alert and be prepared for any emergency. The presence of Russia on borders of Afghanistan must always be a matter of anxiety. No delimitat commissions and no settlement of boundaries can withstand Russia's advan if she is so minded, and it is highly important that the British Governm should take time by the forelock and look to their frontier coast and inter defences, as Rája Sir T. Mádhav Ráo advises. There is no present occas for any alarm, but it is best to be prepared for the worst.]

Disapproves of the recent order of the Secretary of State that stores for State railways should be insured.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 10th August says:—The Secretary of State India appears to be just a Secretary of State English merchants. Latterly many cases have b brought to our notice in which the Secretary of S was prevailed upon to make arrangements perfe detrimental to the interests of India but highly c ducive to fill the pockets of English merchants. The latest instance of s scandalous jobbery is the resolution of that officer that the stores brought for State railways should be insured. The Times of India has succeeded showing that last year the loss at sea amounted to ½ per cent. But now Secretary of State has ordered that these goods should be insured at 1 per c against loss by sea. Such cases ought to be noticed and we shall be glad to our vernacular contemporaries, instead of fighting over trifles among th selves, spare their breath to fight common battles over such questions. Do right abuse may be good in its way, but when it is carried on for a lengt time it degenerates into a moral blemish and quite unfits the person to th rationally on any other topic.

Comments on the reforms proposed by the Government of India in the administration of revenue.

In an article headed "The proposed Land Revenue Reform" the same newspaper says:—Among the numerous evils brought into this country by the advent of the British may be reckoned the land revenue system as at present obtaining throughout the British territory. The rayats who are directly concerned with it and are the victims of it have on several occasions exerted themselves to the best of their powers to get the system reformed and settled once for all. But we are sorry all their endeavours have proved fruitless. It is only now during the Viceroyalty of the noble Marquis of Ripon that they expect to get the long merited reward of their former mighty efforts. The Government of India, we are glad to say, have set about working in right earnest in the direction of ameliorating the condition of the cultivating classes and have hit upon a scheme of improving the position of the tenantry by improving upon the present system of land revenue administration. The intended reform is based upon three considerations, viz., (1) increase in cultivation, (2) increase of produce due to improvements made by the State, as for instance by works of irrigation, railways, &c., and (3) rise in general prices. It is a happy circumstance that all these considerations have been duly attended to in the proposed measure. We are sorry however that considerations far weightier than these have been left unheeded. Everything has its dark side as well as its bright one, and this question is by no means an exception to that rule. We will confine ourselves solely to laying bare the faults of the reform, so that, whatever its merits, Lord Ripon may see his way to devising a more practicable measure, if he is at all bent upon having one. The main fault appears to us to lie in declaring the present revenue of a district to be its initial assessment without inquiring int the circumstances of each estate. The high-handedness of revenue officers and the subordinates of the Survey Department and the illiberal policy of the late Inám Commission have already worked immense mischief and account for the hue and cry that is so often raised everywhere against high assessments of land revenue. Asessments fixed and levied under those condition cannot therefore be taken as standard valuations and made the permanen basis of land revenue assessments in future. We would evidently have th present assessments thoroughly revised on a certain fixed principle before any ste is taken to improve upon them. Another objection is with regard to the price of the future. In some places cultivation and production grow faster than rent but in others where population is increasing the reverse is the case. Again th tenants are in the habit of profiting by way of competition, and it is quite clea from this that prices must vary from time to time. But the State would onl consider the prevailing prices for purposes of comparison. With these principa causes of frequent fluctuation in prices it is impossible to expect any paymen of rent from the rayat, who is known generally to support himself and his famil not on money but on the produce of his soil. Thus it is clear that prices, o fluctuations of prices, are not an index of the ability of the rayat to pay an cannot therefore be the basis of future revisions. The next objection is equall strong but of a more practical kind. "Accurate agricultural statistics are to b kept in the future." This is utterly impossible, for these statistics are generall kept, as they must be, by ordinary village officers, who being mostly uneducate cannot but be inaccurate and who being not adequately paid are often tempte to become dishonest. For all these reasons we hope the Government of Indi will be cautious in adopting the newly proposed reform, which, as above pointe out, is pregnant with a vast amount of mischief and injustice. Government ha better think seriously of their own responsibility and of the situation of th rayats before introducing such a change.

Makes suggestions regarding the appointment of successors to Lord Ripon and Sir James Fergusson.

A correspondent of the Indian Spectator (1) of the 10th August says:— Your Anglo-Indian contemporaries have more tha once nominated Lord Ripon's successor. The thre names that have been most often brought forwar are Lord Spencer, Lord Rosebery and Lord Dufferin All three are likely names, and I should like to hav any one of them in the order in which I have placed them. But none can sa with certainty whom the gods will give us. The India Office oracles do no seem to have made up their minds. They would be the last to recomm any of the three peers named above. They want a "safe" man, who will w in secrecy and silence, profiting as much as could be by their "experienc If the Premier does not take the matter in hand soon, they are likely to r in a "dark horse." We must make a stand against doubtful appointments all kinds—an effete service man, a used up diplomat, an ignorant party man, bureaucrat who would be the source and centre of corruption. Let have a man whose sense of duty will survive all shocks. A man of hi reputation, socially and politically, with knowledge, sympathy and unswervi independence. We want a man of character to succeed Lord Ripon and carry on the work inaugurated by him amidst a hurricane of denunciatio Lord Ripon came in high hopes. Perhaps he underrated the force of Angl Indian opposition. Perhaps he exaggerated the strength of Native suppor Perhaps he attempted too much at a time. But whether he has succeeded c failed in his attempts, one thing is certain—he has energized the national lif Old India has become new India under him; and whatever happens now, th new India will never stagnate politically. It is the knowledge of this fact tha has made the Anglo-Indians so bitter in their opposition. They knew the ma to be honest, earnest and faithful to his word, and they did not like him instinctively. His very first measure of any importance justified their fears they felt that an avalanche was coming on and they set their teeth together swearing never to forgive him, to hate him with undying hatred, hound hi step by step, misrepresenting everything he said or did, so that he might retur home utterly discredited and fallen. His fate was to be a warning to othe rulers similarly minded. Such appears to have been the Anglo-Indian programme. Whatever Lord Ripon has failed in doing, he has certainly succeede in doing one thing—he has kindled in us a sense of political importance of whic most of us were scarcely conscious. He has done for us that which the wors of Viceroys after him will not be able to undo. The progress we have mad under him is of a nature that knows no stopping. It must go on and on, wha ever happens. But for a smooth working of the administrative wheel it i necessary that we should have a new Viceroy as like him as possible. Next t the Viceroy the appointment of the Governor is of the greatest importanc It is indeed of greater importance to us. A good Governor can save us from bad Viceroy, whereas the best of Viceroys will find it hard to save us from bad Governor, who may thwart and baffle the Supreme Government at ever turn. Bombay has been very unfortunate in her Governors. They have nominated Sir Arthur Gordon as Sir James Fergusson's successor. After s much experience of colonial men I would rather decline further offers of th kind with thanks. Why can't we have Lord Reay, one of the most promisin Liberals? He commands a fine position, has generous sympathies and is a ardent advocate of education. But all things considered, I would prefer S James Caird. Sir James is a friend of the rayat, the best English authority o agriculture, and the trusted adviser of his Government on all land questions. H has had Parliamentary as well as practical public experience for years. The he has been to India in an important capacity and has acquitted himself in manner that is highly creditable. His writings since his visit to this countr have raised him into an Indian authority. And I cannot point to a better proo of this than the way in which some of the Anglo-Indian papers have abuse and ridiculed him. While in India, Sir James looked at things with his ow eyes, and he stated his views on the bureaucratic administration of the countr without fear. His deductions were on the whole marvellously correct. Ther was a small flaw here and there, and his critics therefore tried to discredit hin But they have failed in the sight of responsible and competent judges. Wha a good thing would it be to have this fine old Scotchman as Governor! H warm interest in the country, his tact, judgment and well known impartiality together with the special knowledge of which he is master, mark him out a the likeliest successor.

Suggestion regarding the appointment of a successor to the late Mr. Kristodás Pál.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 10th August says:—The gap in the Vic regal Council and the other vacancies caused by th lamented death of Mr. Kristodás Pál will have to b shortly supplied; and we cannot name a bette successor than Mr. Narendra Náth Sen, the editor our only daily journal, the Indian Mirror. Unless h is more usefully employed, Mr. Sen may well be invited to fill at least some of the places vacated by his contemporary. He has position and ability, and always takes a prominent part, if not the lead, in the discussion of public questions. Mr. Sen is known to be an enlightened citizen and bears a blameless character. It is not always that we approve the strain in which the Indian Mirror criticises official irregularities, but we feel assured from an intimate knowledge that a greater friend of the Government and the public is not to be found in the country. The Sens, as a rule, shrink from public notice. But that is no reason why Government should not strengthen their own hands and win the confidence of the people by utilising the services of a family which stands foremost in more than one department of public usefulness.

Comments on the proposal to encourage the candidates selected for the Indian Civil Service to undertake a college course.

The same newspaper says:—It is doubtful if the offer recently made by the Secretary of State to selected candidates for the Indian Civil Service will be found tempting enough to detain them a year longer in England. The taking of a degree may not be a difficult matter; but it will disturb arrangements as to seniority and involve more expense than can be covered by the bonus of £150. And will the candidate be wise to undergo further strain for a year when the high pressure training of the previous two years has already taxed his energies to the utmost? The poor fellow must have some regard for his health. [The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that there is no necessity for framing new rules for regulating the grant of the six scholarships which it is proposed to revive for the encouragement of Indians studying in England.

The Shiváji (65) of the 8th August hears that the Government of India have under consideration certain rules for regulating the grant of the six scholarships which it is proposed to revive with the object of encouraging Indian students to undertake a course of study in England. In the opinion of some these scholarships should be awarded to the Statutory Civilians, who should be sent to England, while others say that they should be conferred on candidates going to England for the Civil Service examination. The Shiváji disapproves of both these proposals, tries to show that the object of reviving these scholarships will be frustrated by the imposition of such conditions on their grant, and says that the Government of India will do well not to trouble themselves with any new rules on the subject but to continue the arrangement which obtained in the case of the old scholarships.

Suggests some measures for preventing crimes committed for the sake of ornaments.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 10th August says:—Is anything like a record kept by the authorities of the murders committed in the country for ornaments? Not a week passes without cases of this kind coming to notice—poisoning, stabbing, drowning and often frightful mutilation of persons for their ornaments. And the victims are generally helpless children. What arrangements have the police made for their protection? If it is impossible to prevent such crimes, why don't they rule that infants with trinkets on shall not be left alone in out-of-the-way places? The British Government is so virtuous that it does not like interfering with the rights of a citizen. It will poke its nose where such meddling is least wanted; but where lives have to be saved and heinous crimes of every-day occurrence to be put down, it plays the prude—"Oh dear, dear, how sorry I can't do it!" Now in this matter we do not see why a rule may not be laid down once for all and a few stupid parents may not be lightly fined if they persist in tricking out their children in cheap jewelry and then leaving them to be robbed and murdered by the nearest beggar. We are living in very good times indeed—with castes busy excommunicating people, patriots busy clamouring for political rights, and Government busy humbugging everybody.

Attributes early senility and early death amongst the educated classes of Natives to political causes.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 14th August says:—We quite agree with the Amrita Bazár Patrika in the matter of the causes of the death of educated Natives at an early age. Early senility and early death amongst the educated classes of Natives are due more to political than to social causes. It is true that such customs as child-marriages and other social usages prevailing amongst the Native very pernicious and that their mode of living is defective. But it is a mi to attribute early death amongst them to these causes. Child-marriages other customs are some centuries old, but the educated men of the past ge tions did not as a rule die early. On the contrary they were robust and to a ripe old age. Even at present the inhabitants of those villages whic free from political influences and where the English language is unknow stout in body and live to a ripe age. Though the ruling authorities are anxious to deal justly with all their subjects, they do not quite succeed in object owing to the rash and inconsiderate conduct of many of their su dinate officers. The Natives have therefore reason to be somewhat un and the chief burden of that anxiety falls on the educated. As service, Gov ment or private, is not remunerative, and as indigenous arts and indus have very nearly become extinct, many persons find it difficult to main themselves. Their labours in acquiring knowledge of a high degree foreign language are seldom rewarded. If they are at all well rewarded, reward is secured at the sacrifice of other things. It is very difficult for th to work conscientiously. As leaders of Native society or as Governm officers, the educated Natives have frequently to fill delicate situations and h to strive their best to please both the rulers and the ruled. They seldom succ in doing this, for they cannot please the one without displeasing the other. M over educated Natives occupying high positions in life are frequently ill-trea and openly insulted by Europeans of the lowest classes with impunity. Na Viláyat Alikhán Báhádur, C.I.E., of Patna was insulted by an ordinary E pean. Though Lord Ripon sent an intimation to the Nawáb asking hin prosecute the offending European, he refused to do so, alleging that it would difficult for him to get redress. Such being the political condition of educated classes of Natives, their nerves and brains are very often severely ta The result is that they become weak in body, and it is natural that they sh die at an early age. This condition of things is painful, though it is r and it is necessary that measures should be taken to reform it. The rem does not lie with the Natives but with the rulers, who should not be behindh in looking seriously into the matter. [The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the August says that educated Natives do not as a rule die at an early age, considers that it would not be safe to generalize from individual instances that of the Honourable Kristodás Pál. The writer thinks that the hot clin of India has much to do with the question.]

Advises the Committee of the Bombay International Exhibition to ask the Home Government to extend Sir James Fergusson's term of office.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 10th August enumerates the services done His Excellency the Governor of Bombay in the ca of the Bombay International Exhibition as the h of Government and as the head of Bombay soci and says:—The Exhibition Committee should m in the matter of asking the Home Government extend the term of Sir James Fergusson's office, it is necessary that the undertaking should continue to have the support advice of the chief through whose efforts the whole thing has been set going is no exaggeration to state that the Committee have asked his advice at ev step and that he has done his best to encourage the Committee. We are debted to him for giving the Exhibition a national character and for prevent it from becoming a mere speculative concern in the hands of some professi speculators.

Says that Madras time should be done away with throughout the Bombay Presidency.

The Yajdán Parast (128) of the 10th August says:—After the abolition the Madras time in Bombay it was expected tha would be done away with in other places also in Presidency. It is satisfactory that Government h wisely put an end to the inconvenience caused by observance to the people of Karáchi by ordering discontinuance. It is now clear that Madras time does not suit this Presiden and Government should order its discontinuance in those parts of the Pr dency where it is still observed.

Comments on the decrease in the consumption of opium in Káthiáwár and makes some suggestions for improving its consumption in that province.

The Gujarát Monthly Journal (100) for the Hindu m and Jyeshth 1940 (May and June 18
on the 12th August says:—The peo
and the petty Girásias complain tha get is dear and not of a good quali complain that the consumption of op is falling and infer that smuggling increase. Both the complaints are true. Experience ha opium sold in Káthiáwár from the Government warehouse i quality, while the price charged is high. The farmers sell Native princes, their adherents and those who pay a high pric receive a bad stuff and have to pay a high price for it. Th ought to be remedied. Arrangements ought to be made for cheap opium from the Government warehouse, and instead o of two sorts to be imported into Káthiáwár arrangements sh bringing a good and moderately-priced drug into the pr
farmers should be prevented from selling an adulterated st
of the bad quality of the drug sold from the Govern appears to be that opium is now brought from the Ahmed and not from the Málwa market, as was the case formerly. C of the dearness of the Government drug is that Government d mediate payment and therefore the merchants charge a highe
the adulterated state of the drug, defective examination is resp regards the decreased consumption of opium in Káthiáwár, i that its use is going out of favour in the province. The great from 1879-80 to 1882-83 was in 1880-81, and even this falls expectations. Taking an average of one tola of opium per he tion of opium amounts to about 37,500 pounds. But the falls short of this figure by 5,000, and this circumstance stre picions regarding smuggling. Several Tálukdárs attributed the consumption of opium to the fact that the drug was sold in those parts of the province which belonged to the Gáikwád certain remedial measures, the effect of which is yet to be see not known if the Gáikwád is bound by the condition wh Káthiáwár Chiefs, that opium purchased by the State must be its own subjects.

Some suggestions to the Bombay Factory Act Committee.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 11th August is informed t Act Committee propose to work f
every Saturday. This is not enou the Committee will not be able to g
work even at the end of six months
the labours of the Committee may prove beneficial to tho necessary that they should use as much despatch as possible i of their business. Moreover it is necessary that the Com their work with open doors, in order that the public may kn experts on the important questions on which they are examine

Grievances of the public regarding tramways.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 11th August says:—The se Government on the subject of tram-c course of preparation, is now ready an by a large body of people. It ma suggestions. They are all good suggestions, and we hope comply with the request of the petitioners. [The Yajdán Pa
10th August says that the suggestions made in the seco Government are just, and it is to be hoped that His Excellen will pay attention to them now that the manager of the Tra has disregarded the suggestions privately made to him by a g Shápurji Sorábji. The travelling public hope that His Excell
the Company to do the needful in the matter.]

Complains against the defective measures for the conveyance to hospitals of men injured by accidents in Bombay.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 14th August says that it is high that the municipal and police authorities shoul something to supply the means of carrying per injured by accidents to hospitals with more fort and safety than are afforded by buggies other hack-carriages. If the authorities have n yet determined upon a particular kind of dool
carry the unfortunate poor to the hospitals, they might make use of si cots until a better mode of conveyance suggests itself to them. More the system of taking injured persons to police stations before they are t to the hospitals is objectionable and should be done away with.

Complains against delay in the transaction of business by the treasury branch of the Collector's office at Karáchi.

A correspondent of the Sind Times (5) of the 8th August says :—The n papers descant freely on "law's delay," but the that takes place in the transaction of business in ernment offices seems to me to be a matter for eq serious comment. I will instance the treasury b of the Karáchi Collector's office, where holde Government promissory notes are subjected to great inconvenience i covering the interest due to them. The Government paper is received kept there for days together before the interest receipt is issued. The p must dance attendance in the meantime and suffer worse consequences.
agents of Government who are charged with the duty of paying intere Government paper seem to be oblivious of the fact that their principals contracted to pay interest on a particular day, and if the obligation is no charged on that day a breach of the contract is committed. Whether this b will render Government liable to an action in a civil court is another ma but it is not difficult to form a conception of the serious consequences that ensue to the holders, apart from the loss of interest for a number of day the amount due to them as interest. Many people live on the interest receive on their Government paper and have no other source of income. T are others who time their engagements with creditors and others in su manner as to be able to fulfil them on the day they expect to receive int on their Government paper. The delay under notice is inexcusable. I if an explanation is called for from the treasury office the answer will be the office routine occupies the clerks fully. But this is no answer. The c in the public offices must learn to distinguish between emergent and ord work. If the filling of a few printed forms of receipts cannot be done hour or two, surely there is something rotten in our public offices. The cal tion of interest on a few thousand rupees involves no great arithmetical pro
I write in the public interests, and trust the treasury office will give no fu cause for complaint to the public.

Grievances of suitors in the Court of Small Causes at Bombay.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the 10th August complains of the tr
and inconvenience caused to suitors in the Cou Small Causes at Bombay by the clerks employe the different departments of the Court. Clien vakils, members of European firms, and cunning p manage to have their business done sharp. As the Court is intended for benefit of the poor, it is the duty of Government to see that the poor ar oppressed.

Complains of the want of grazing ground in the district of Ahmednagar.

The Nyáyă Sindhu (50) of the 11th August says that great inconveni is caused to the people of the district of Ahmedn
by the closure of grazing grounds. Orders prohib
the grazing of sheep and cattle in forest nun
have been issued and crowds of people can be se the streets of Nagar wishing to present petitions against those orders. S are a very useful class of animals to the cultivating classes, and it is very dist ing that Government should have deprived people of the facilities for gra sheep. It may be urged that waste revenue numbers should be utilized grazing purposes, but in many cases such numbers do not command the veniences of ingress and egress for cattle, being surrounded on all side cultivated fields. Where such conveniences are available we do not urge forest numbers should be granted. There has been a great clamour f grazing grounds, and we suggest that the authorities should see their way silence it.

Points out the necessity of enacting a uniform rule for Native and European servants of Government in the matter of attending public meetings.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 10th August says:—The unconstitution proceedings of the authorities at Umballa in prohib ing Native officials from joining the public meeti convened there some time ago to memorialise t Secretary of State for India with regard to the age candidates for the Indian Civil Service has been ve properly taken notice of by the Committee of t Indian Association of Calcutta. That energetic body has addressed a comm nication on the subject to the Government of India calling upon them to la down definite rules regarding attendance of officials, European and Nativ at public meetings. If European and Eurasian officials can attend a publ meeting to inveigh against constituted authority, because an "exalted" offic secretly or openly supports it, how can Native officials be prevented fro joining a meeting not for the purpose of overthrowing the Imperial Go ernment, but for submitting a humble memorial and praying for redre of what is admittedly a universal grievance? Is there to be one rule f attendance at public meetings for Europeans and another for Natives? Th is the question which needs to be disposed of to avoid future bickerings. supporting the prayer of the petitioners we sincerely hope that, born and br as he has been in the free atmosphere of England, the noble lord at the he of the Government of India will not fail to accede to it with a view to deci the important point which has more than once created ill-feeling in t country.

Says that orders regarding the acceptance of presents by Government officers should not be made applicable to school-masters.

The Dhárwár Vritt (28) of the 7th August says that the rules laid dow by Government in the matter of acceptance presents by Government officials, though very ju and proper, ought not to be enforced in the case school-masters. The writer cites a case in whi Government ordered a school-master to make over the Oriental Translator the turban that was present to him by the Gáikwád of Baroda in token of the satisfaction of His Highne with the answers of the boys of the school, observes that such presents do n constitute illegal gratification and adds that it is to be regretted that Gover ment should have insulted the Mahárája by such an order.

Points out the necessity of constructing a bridge on the river Chandrabhága at Pandharpur.

The Shetakaryáncha Kaivári (14) of the 15th August refers to the inco venience caused to the pilgrims going to Pandharp by the absence of a bridge on the river Chandrabhá to connect the Bársi road with the town, and poin out the necessity of diverting towards this obj a portion of the funds which it is proposed to ra for the construction of dharmashálas for the convenience of pilgrims.

Suggests a reduction in the charges of the Postal Department for money orders, &c.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 10th August says:—Probably few thin are more cheerful to contemplate than the gradu expansion of the work of the Postal Department India. The readiness with which complaints of sorts are attended to, the solicitude which the depa ment displays to meet the conveniences of the peo as a whole, and the improvements and beneficial changes which it always w lingly admits, secure for it the confidence and popularity of the Natives. T novelties which it introduces are never looked upon with suspicion, but so succeed in ingratiating themselves into popular favour. One thing howev we will suggest, though we will not venture to say that it is not alrea present before the minds of those who rule the department. It is that in things cheapness of charges should above all things be aimed at. That is t great secret of success in India. For this reason we would suggest that t Postal Department should try and see if it cannot reduce some of its charg such as the rate of commission on inland money orders. We are almost certa that even a small reduction in that direction is likely to benefit bo department and the public. The same may be said of the commiss value-payable parcels and some other charges of the same nature.

Grievances of the letter sorters in the Postal Department.

A correspondent of the Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 14th August cor of the hardship caused to letter sorters in the Department, and particularly to those employed railway mail service, by the meagre and insu remuneration received by them and by very st leave rules, and points out the necessity of increasing their salaries. The says that Superintendents and Inspectors receive batta when on tour, necessity for granting batta is more apparent in the case of sorters than in t of the higher class of officials.

Complains of delay in the payment of money orders at Pátan.

A correspondent of the Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the 13th August, from Gujarát Pátan, says that the people who r money orders suffer great inconvenience by being obliged to call at the local post office fo ment for two or three days, the post office not sufficient funds to meet the calls. The postal authorities ought to make arrangements for removing the cause of this complaint.

Local Self-government.

Comments in connection with the appointment of a committee to frame rules under the Local Boards Act.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 10th August says:—Though th Boards Bill and the District Municipal Bil become law for the Presidency for the last four r the executive have found little leisure to giv any practical effect beyond appointing a con of the Collectors of the various districts to fra rules under the two enactments. What between migrations from P to Mahábaleshvar and back again to Poona, the state of the weath many State affairs of graver import, it is scarcely possible that loc government can be taken in hand so as to provide the machinery to work out the details in practice. For that matter Hon'ble Councillo as well sleep over the affair, at any rate till the retirement of the V Meanwhile the framing of rules may account for the delay. And who a persons who have been invited to assist the Government in drawing the Of course the band of district autocrats, the very persons who almost to have set their faces against giving a fair trial to the scheme of loc government on the broad lines laid down by the Government of India resolution of 18th March 1882. Is it possible that these officials, to power is so sweet, sitting in solemn conclave in a secret chamber, can rules that will in any way promote the objects for which the two Ac been passed? It must be remembered how indefinite are some of the im sections of those Acts, notably those that refer to the qualifications and of members and financial control. The Right Hon'ble the President a Senior Member of the Executive Council assured the Hon'ble Mr. M and the Hon'ble Ráo Sáheb Mandlik that every care would be taken th rules were not framed in a hole and corner fashion and smuggled i official Gazette without first giving the public an opportunity for criticis we all know the ways of bureaucracy and the value to be attached to promises and assurances. Had the author of the Local Self-governmen been at all serious to make them a reality rather than mere legislative m he would not have contented himself with inviting District Collectors frame the rules. Two weeks ago we asked whether non-official Native men were invited to co-operate with these officials. We repeat that questi Surely it would be absurd for the Government to say that half a dozen gentlemen of education, fully conversant with the practice and de municipal administration under the old Acts, were not to be found to g benefit of their experience to this conference of Collectors. If there earnest desire on the part of the Government to take the people into co and to show them that it is intent upon making self-government a even on the lines of the "cautious" and "safe" policy it has laid d ought to have ere this invited a representative from each o of the Presidency. Is outside light needless? Of course i officials believe in their own infallibility, no light from wit avail. Judging from the attitude of Government all throug hope that any independent non-official representatives will be a the conference. So that there is not the faintest hope of local s being fairly tried. Even after the rules have been published Gazette there is little chance of the objections which public bodie tions or representative individuals may take being considered.

assurance that they will be attended to? The Government i dental wisdom may reply that these have no weight or that material. What then will be the net result of the procedure Government will draw up a roseate report for submission to th of India, saying that local self-government has been fairly la Presidency and the rules framed for practical work have met from the public. It may not be so pharisaical as to make no m objections which the public may have advanced. It will only in a passing manner and characterise them as either impracticable consideration. Whatever is feasible or whatever is worthy of conside emanate from the bureaucracy itself—that bureaucracy which has voice already declared that it has not the least desire to transfer managing local funds hitherto vested in its own body to the popular bodies, for it has administered them hitherto in a "hig manner. The official presidents sit in judgment on their own their hands in admiration at the miracles they have worked chiefly consisting in diverting or even misusing local funds fro mate purposes to objects the most illegitimate. These are the men invited to frame rules under the new Acts! Can the independen any confidence in them? So virtually, as we have said over a local self-government will only prove a delusion and a snare—a which to deceive the Supreme Government and a snare to those w bute to the local funds either in tálukas or districts. Nay, we surprised if the experiment halts at the preliminary stage by Ripon retires. The moment he turns his back on India the rea the bureaucrats have been anxiously waiting in all parts of the begin. The Collector-presidents may by their action so fa experiment as to make it out a complete failure, and the legisla may not be allowed to stand idle. Inspired reports may pou Revenue Commissioners of Divisions openly declaring that t lutely take no interest in the experiment, that meetings have be postponed for want of a quorum, that the members of the l
more or less hopelessly illiterate, and that there is a retrogression gress, and winding up with the conclusion that in the interest themselves the old system temporarily superseded,—the syste
the administration of local funds was "highly successful,"—sho to. And then farewell to the fads of the "radical" Viceroy!
end. That we do not make this forecast in a haphazard manne spirit will be plain from the two latest instances that have com ledge. These emphasize what the public have said about Colle namely, that they are determined to give no scope whatever t the matter of self-government. And so far the experiment mus only. Our readers are well aware of the exposure we made reckless mismanagement of local funds by the late permane the Ahmedabad Municipality. Though the Government tried resolution to screen the wrong-doer, we are still of belief tha cation of the funds of the Ranchhodlál Chhotálál Charitable Di from other illegal acts, is sufficient to bring that official before t
Had the Government meant well by the people, it would hav example of Mr. Fernandez. Instead, we see him indirectly re present Collector getting the new bridge connecting two parts road" named after him! Fancy the official who wasted tw city's funds on a road which is unimportant, and otherwise plung abad Municipality into heavy liabilities, being considered so far worthy public honours! But even in giving names to the new road and the bri the municipal commissioners were never consulted! A road on which pu moneys had been expended was named without consulting the representati of the public in the local committee! What was commenced illegally been thus concluded illegally. But of course from the Collector-preside point of view the mismanagement of the funds is considered "highly succ ful." Such are the ways of your Collector-presidents, who are now sitting solemn conclave to give effect to Lord Ripon's scheme of rude political edu tion! But let us point out another instance of official high-handedness. H we speak in reference to meetings of municipal commissioners. These called as it best suits the convenience of the president himself, as if the con nience of the majority of the commissioners was no concern of his. The ob may be this. The more inconvenient the hours of holding meetings the les opposition from the independent representatives, most of whom may not be a to attend. The president can then ride a coach and six through the busi before him. He can drive before him the servile and effete jo-hukums. T may follow the cry "Wah! Wah!" How wonderfully is business despatch That is the proper way to carry on local self-government! And so the lector and the jo-hukum congratulate each other, salam and be salamed, return home happy at having assisted at the solemn farce! But ther another phase of convening meetings at hours inconvenient to the major

The Collector-president may call a meeting at the unearthly hour of six in morning or a little later on. He may find himself unable to attend it. S circular will go round coolly changing the hour of the day. These alterati so annoying in themselves and otherwise inconvenient, appear to be rather rule than the exception. Under such a regime is it possible for any independ citizen to act as a municipal commissioner? Yet such are the general tactic Collector-presidents everywhere! And the independent commissioners of Ahm abad to their bitter chagrin got the same experience at the hands of t present president. On the 2nd instant a meeting was convened by that off at 8 A. M. The hour was afterwards changed to 12 in the noon. It is not for commissioners to ask for the reason. Their duty is simply to obey. Tha the way the spirit of independence is fostered and local self-government mulated on the "safe" and "cautious" line on which Mr. Peile and his colleag have passed the Act. And these are the Collectors who are now sitting to fr rules. May we hope that some curb will be put upon the power of presid to convene meetings at inconvenient hours or to change the hours when f every now and then? Certainly not. And as with the calling of meeting with the graver matters of qualification, election, financial control and so There is not the least inclination to leave the people to do things for themsel
This convention of meetings at inconvenient hours, inconvenient places, and e alterations of hours, sometimes without any notice at all, are the crying e everywhere. The wail comes from every quarter. We have just before similar complaint from Chingleput in the Madras Presidency. The presid of the local fund board of that place, Dr. Macleane, called a meeting of board on the 31st ultimo. Two gentlemen of the committee, Messrs. T.
Chariar and K. Naidoo, pleaders, left Chingleput and repaired to the offic the Collector about 1-30 P. M. only to be told that the meeting was to be l at his house instead of at the kacheri. Proceeding thither, though not with inconvenience, they were to their astonishment told by the peon posted at gate that Natives should enter the bungalow by the southern gate, the north being reserved for Europeans. Fortunately one European gentleman, Nailer, who met them on the road, accompanied them. So they took their course with Dr. Nailer. This gentleman, when in the meeting room, was as to take his seat, while the two Native vakils were not. Nay more; as t were taking their seats, to which they were entitled by membership, Dr. M leane exclaimed discourteously—"The business is not commenced. You wait outside. We shall call you." It is added that at the time the pro hour of the meeting had passed. It was 2-35 instead of 2 P.M., and yet it was served in that defiant tone, for which Collector-presidents are everywhere kno
"that the business of the meeting had not commenced"!! We give these ticulars as they have been given to us. Is it possible for Native gentlem position and independence to help Government under such conditions?

they, with a spark of self-respect, attend meetings convened in the fashion scribed above? Is it possible, we ask, that self-government can ever su even experimentally when the instruments employed by the State are s mical? It is owing to such high-handed procedure of Collector-presidents e where that there is a loud cry, and a most reasonable one, that non-o presidents are most desirable if self-government is ever to become a re
What is said of Ahmedabad and Chingleput is true of every other locality.
Lord Ripon must be convinced by this time how formidable and deadly i opposition which the bureaucracy in India offers and will offer in order to b his statesmanlike measure into contempt and to thus indefinitely retard political education of Natives which alone can make them better citizens e way. [The Gujaráti (99) of the same date expresses somewhat similar timents.]

Education.

Does not approve of the contemplated cancellation of the resolution excluding Eurasians from the Engineering College at Roorkee.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 16th August says:—The Simla c spondent of the Bombay Gazette states tha Secretary of State for India contemplates cancellation of the resolution excluding Eura from the Engineering College at Roorkee. If statement be true it will be received by the N public with feelings of regret and consternation simply because the proposal will narrow the field of competition for Nat but chiefly because it is calculated to encourage a handful of Europeans in objectionable tactics against Natives, and they will be emboldened to set faces against any and every measure for the benefit of Natives. After carr the day in the controversy regarding the Ilbert Bill, if the Europeans s succeed in having things their own way in this instance, it will be dif to say what they will not do. The order of the Secretary of State in the m of the Roorkee College is every way just and there are no weighty groun favour of its rescission. If however the Secretary of State is led to canc order by the threats indulged in by the Anglo-Indians, it will be no insi cant proof of his imbecility. We hope however that the Secretary of will not give occasion for such a charge and that the report above allud will prove unfounded.

Complains that drawing classes in Government schools have not been successful and makes suggestions for improving them.

The Yajdán Parast (128) of the 10th August says:—Nearly three ago drawing was introduced as a subject of stu
the Government schools in Bombay, and the p have a right to know the progress it has made in period. We hear that the work of teaching the drawing is being carried on very perfunctorily slowly, and that the number of students is dwin down day by day. The great obstacles in the way are the inconvenient of instruction and the system of levying a special fee of 4 annas. It is the of the Director of Public Instruction to enquire into the matter, to publ report, and to make suggestions for putting the work on a new and sound ing. The reforms needed are:—(1) The system of levying a special fee annas for teaching drawing should be abolished; (2) instruction on the su should be imparted during school hours; and (3) the study of drawing s be made compulsory.

Railways.

Approves of the scheme of railways proposed by the Government of India.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 10th August says:—The Governme India deserve the gratitude of the people of country for having matured a scheme of rail which, without imposing additional burden on the payer, is calculated to benefit the country imme and to insure it, so far as human agency can, from famine. More railway unquestionably the pressing want of the times. The Famine Commissi recommended their construction as highly urgent, and the press has long b crying for it. Railways have conferred immense advantages on rich and vanced countries like England, but they have also their uses for a poor coun like India. The country at large is indeed poor, yet it has unexhaus resources for supplying food to its millions of inhabitants. At no period time is the country as a whole ever wanting in the quantity of food necess to feed its inhabitants. What is necessary is that in some way or other food already existing in the country should be brought within the reach of t portion of the population which for the time may be starving for want of In modern times railways are the best known means of cheap and easy conv ance. It is plain therefore that we must have as many railways as our circu stances can afford to bring food from our granaries to our very doors. T scheme reflects great credit on Lord Ripon's Government and puts forth additional claim for the gratitude of the teeming millions of India.

Necessity of constructing over-bridges upon the railway level-crossings on the Frere Road and the Queen's Road.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 12th August says:—We agree with local English contemporaries in thinking that railway companies should be compelled by Gove ment to construct over-bridges upon all import level-crossings of their lines. The railway compan put the public to great inconvenience by not constru ing such bridges. The necessity for constructing over-bridges upon the seve level-crossings of the G. I. P. Railway on the Frere Road is very great. It not be unjust to compel the G. I. P. Railway authorities to do the need Though much has been said regarding the necessity of erecting a new bri near the Byculla Station, nothing has been done in the matter and the tr line cannot be extended to Parel. The B. B. & C. I. Railway is a open to a similar charge with respect to the level-crossing at Chaupáti. T railway authorities agreed to construct staircases on their line passing al the Queen's Road when the stations on that road were built. But this has been done up to this time. Such a state of things ought not to be allowed continue any longer. [The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the same date expres similar sentiments.]

Requests that the railway line from Bijápur may be opened for passenger traffic.

The Rámdás (58) of the 10th August hopes that the mana of the Southern Marátha Country Railway will no time in opening the Bijápur line for passen traffic. It cannot be that the line is not yet fit traffic inasmuch as it has been opened for go traffic, having been certified to be safe. We think that the authorities will well to remove the inconvenience suffered by the public by opening the line passenger traffic.

Complains of the disregard shown by the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company to the interests of Natives.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 10th August says:—Though the Nat receive justice in the matter of employment in traffic department of the B. B. & C. I. Railway, locomotive department of that railway is still ba ward in doing justice to them. The company's act will be enough to show how the railway companies generally carry out orders issued by Government to employ Natives as engine-drivers whene possible. The authorities of the G. I. P. Railway Company act as if the was created for the maintenance of Europeans only. There are 108 eng drivers in the locomotive department of the B. B. & C. I. Railway, am whom it will be difficult to find 25 Natives. Many Natives are fit for the p but every year when a certain number of new Native drivers is taken Europe are also brought in. Thus the high proportion of European drivers is kept The privileges enjoyed by European drivers in the matter of pay, batta, leave, are superior to those enjoyed by Natives. Native engine-drivers are not per ted to work on the mail trains, but are generally employed on local or goods tra They are made to work from 15 to 20 hours during the busy season, tho they get overtime allowances for the extra work. The maximum allowance a Native driver is Rs. 4 per diem, while that of a European is Rs. 8. Europ apprentices get from Rs. 1-8 to Rs. 2-8 per diem, but the Native apprent not get more than ans. 12. While a new European driver gets rapid pro his Native seniors do not get any. But the difference of treatment ow the difference in the colour of the skin does not end here. European driv one month's privilege leave after serving for one year and sick leave on ha Native drivers do not enjoy these privileges, and when they are absent o leave they have to sacrifice their whole pay. Government wish to see N extensively employed as engine-drivers, but are they aware of these pract railway authorities?

Points out the necessity of starting a railway station at Málád on the B. B. & C. I. Railway.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 11th August says:—For years past has been a cry for a station at the town of Má
the Sálsette Táluka of the Thána District, apparently no heed has as yet been given to it.
town of Málád is situated on the B. B. & C. I.
way line midway between the stations of Gorega
the south and of Borivli on the north. In point of the number of inhab Goregaon and Borivli are far behind Málád. A suggestion was made by interested in the new station that the railway company might well clo two stations and open a central one, but the company are naturally disin to incur the additional expense of erecting a new station. The disincli of the railway authorities to abolish the two existing stations appears r able enough, and no one, we think, can well complain of it. But we fail t that there is any just ground for refusing the request that a temporary s should be opened at the desired point as an experimental measure, and perhaps at the cost of the people, if the railway authorities grudge the
This reasonable request of the people has now been finally refused by the way authorities. We observe that the G. I. P. Railway Company are fast plying their stations in the suburbs of Bombay. Whilst they have on local line between Byculla and Kalyán no less than 12 stations, the B C. I. Railway Company have on their own local line between Grant Roa Verár only 10 stations.

Comments on the system of making appointments in the revenue department of the Indus Valley State Railway.

The Sind Times (5) of the 5th August says:—When the Indus Valley Railway was in its infancy almost all the officer inexperienced, and in an intellectual point of
they were, with a few exceptions, half-edu
Times have now changed, and the plea of ne can no longer be sustained. The Government been constrained to make this admission, and have therefore recently deter upon conferring superior revenue appointments according to the stand meritorious service. This is as it ought to be. Service on State railway not be an exception to service in other Government departments, and t nothing, in our opinion, which justifies such an exception to be made.
matter of fact, however, service on State railways, whether considered so politically, or in any other imaginable light, stands much below other G ment employments. Now what we should like to know is whether the torious service alluded to above is really the standard by which appoin are now governed. We believe it is not. We will, in the way of an ex take the recent announcements in the Gazette of India. Two very youn subordinate clerks of but small education, have been nominated as traff didates of the superior scale. We enquire on what grounds these nomi have been made and whether they are in accord with the instructions o ernment recently recorded. Can any of the candidates lay claim to superiority (a term held in extreme ridicule among the educated and th to-do), or to long and meritorious service, or to practical knowledge heterogeneous materials which comprise the railway administration must answer in the negative. Their having been selected in violati distinct promise by Government as to the manner in which such sel should be made, and in supersession of many deserving men, should hav denounced by us as a piece of jobbery, were it not for the respect we en for the officials of the Indus Valley State Railway, in whose power it n to make a representation to those concerned to rectify what is looked u
the service as a scandal. We said that three essentials are considered

State as necessary to qualify a person for the superior· scale. more generous were it ruled that any one of the three was su pretensions rank high, and we know for certain that they prep most every instance to the detriment of the service. We are r admirers of social distinctions and privileges, especially on rail of the candidates claim any social superiority, or as much as a the rank of officers now on the Indus Valley Railway? Where i meritorious service? Their selection appears to us wrong in pr therefore consider it our duty to draw public attention to it.

Municipalities.

Draws attention to the dangers of overhead telephone wires.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 10th August says:—We b attention of the members of the Town Municipal Corporation to the dange telephone wires in the city. We de that the Telephone Company should b underground wires. High officials interested in the compan into consideration any appeal which the Corporation may mak But if local authorities cannot be moved, the next best thi memorialise the Government of India. The Corporation should public interests entrusted to its care so far as its relations wi prise, such as the Tramway, the Electric Light and the Teleph are concerned. Hard and fast agreements once made are al cancel, and the greatest care is needed that public interes prospective, are in no way jeopardised. See how the Tra behaves with the public! And why? Because the concessio too much in its favour, while the interests of the public were by the Commissioner, the Corporation and the Government of t

Advises the Municipal Corporation of Bombay to put a stop to the further construction of drainage works.

The same newspaper says:—It is not too late to hope th effort may be made by the Corporatio put a stop to the further constructi works in divers parts of the city till t experiment in the completely sewe Kámáthipura have been fully tested. membered that there was a distinct resolution passed some y effect that no leap in the dark should be taken until the trial in t district had fairly succeeded. That resolution was not agreed t struggle. From the very day that the slavish Corporation of adopt the report of the make-believe commission on drainage been divided as to the success of the scientific scheme. Th sewerage is a mistake has been contended for a long time. B committed the city to the scheme, it is meet that a trial of the alone should be made before taking any further step. That und are a sine quâ non for a large city is a proposition that is being c Even in so cold a climate as England, says the Madras Mail, " of sewer gas in subterranean sewers is extremely rapid, and i the houses connected with the sewers is of frequent occurrence train typhoid and other fevers." Further on it is observed tha efficient gas traps such a system is apt to produce evils much m those it abated." The Paris Roving Commission observed th cleanliest habits of the French poor it was so difficult to ma syphons that the system had proved a disastrous failure, result the rate of 45 to 50 per 1,000. Now is it possible that an o Bombay can succeed when Paris has failed? And can anybod cleanliness of the poor Hindu is to be preferred to that of the F still they try to force upon us their precious system of traps an are only traps to ensure death. It is clear that Madras has controversy on underground drainage. The difficulties which municipality there to construct surface drainage are precisely Bombay. But Madras, with a cooler head and knowing character of the underground system, has adopted the cheaper, safer and ever way wiser plan which our officials here have condemned in their wisdom. T system they have adopted at Madras suggests one important question, wheth it is not wisdom even at the present stage of our drainage works to pause. is not too late yet. Under the circumstances is it not needful to first undertal the scheme for a plentiful supply of water and in the meanwhile fully test t results of the Kámáthipura sewered district? Nay more, to watch the resul of the open drainage system in Madras? Surely there can be no harm do by delay. Delay in the matter will rather be advantageous than otherwis We earnestly appeal to the sense of the members of the Corporation to pause ar consider before they allow themselves to be further betrayed into acceptanc of a system admittedly defective. "It has been said," says our able conten porary of Madras, "that if the ten principal cities in India with their populatio of 3,000,000 applied their sewage to agricultural purposes instead of pollutin the seas, canals and rivers, they would be capable of producing manure equal value to £1,500,000, and capable of producing £15,000,000 worth of food p annum." And yet the wiseacres of the local Corporation were not afraid pass with a light heart that resolution to pollute the breeze blowing from th westerly side by diverting the night soil there! Even as a temporary measu it was the rashest step ever taken by a body of men supposed to have comm sense. Did it not occur to any one of them that as a temporary measure manuring establishment might be improvised at some place near or behi Kurla? They could have saved Warli from being fouled and might have test the value of converting night soil into poudrette.

Comments on the resolution of the Municipal Corporation of Bombay in the matter of the diversion of the night soil from the Carnac Bandar to Warli.

Referring to the report that was recently submitted to Parliament touchi the scheme drawn up by Mr. Harrison for deali with the drainage of the valley of the lower Tham the Indian Spectator (1) of the 10th August says: What have the Municipal Commissioner, Color Merewether and the devoted band who have divert the outflow of the night soil from the Carnac Band to Warli to say to this project, which, be it remembered, is no make-belie scheme of small men with small experience, but a project which has be drawn up by experts and has been approved in almost every detail? V ask the Corporation whether it is too late even now to retrace the step it to the other day to have the night soil pumped out at Warli? Is not Mr. Har son's scheme feasible for Carnac Bandar? The cry about the "vile abomi tion" and unmitigated "nuisance" has emanated from Colonel Merewet and his confréres. The nuisance has been, we believe, greatly exaggerat It is not felt beyond 200 yards of the depôt east, west, north and south. B as the chairman sáheb of the Port Trust cannot put up with the smells, t affair must be denounced as a huge nuisance and vile abomination. T pollution of rivers in England, and especially of the Thames, has been lou protested against for years, but so long as there was no effectual remedy p posed the citizens had to endure it. And here it is necessary to remember t the nuisance in the Thames is far greater than the paltry one at the Carnac B dar. The evils of the pollution of the Thames are real and affect large clas of people using or visiting it. There is no large class which is affected by t Carnac Bandar nuisance. The "vile abominations" are confined to a limit area and to a few hundred men at the most. We appeal to the independ Corporators, who have all along been strongly opposed to the diversion Warli, to insist upon the scheme of Mr. Harrison being tried at the Carn Bandar. Let one of them call for the report by that gentleman, and in t meantime a resolution be recorded that the experimental pumping out of t night soil at Warli be held in abeyance sine die. [The Indu Prakásh (10) the 11th August says:—In the face of the Municipal Commissioner's warni that sea-water is unsuitable for flushing purposes, that surface-water is r enough and that no scheme for the introduction of night soil into the sewer feasible until our water-supply is improved, the wise heads of our Corporat have sanctioned the introduction of night soil into the Kámáthipura drain. W poor Kámáthipura, which ordinarily is the greatest sufferer from mortali should be chosen for this foul experiment it is difficult to say wether may well pooh-pooh the fears of the residents of Ká would be interesting to know if the gallant Colonel would l sincerity of his convictions by himself residing in the heart of

Native States.

Censures the Anglo-Indian press for its unfair treatment of Native States.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 11th August says:—Th press that was recently much exerc
of Holkar now appears to have turne
mir. A correspondent of the Eng
that there is anarchy all over Káshn subjects of the State are desirous of the British rule. If there this report we ask if there is a single instance of a subject of t emigrated and lived in British territory. On the contrary s may be cited in which British subjects have of their own accor territories of Native States. We cannot say how far the subj dent Native States may be attracted by the imposing exterio administration. It appears that some Englishmen have ma their profession to make much of small matters concerning N thus to expose them to public ridicule. It is the duty of Gove the lie to such ignorant and ungrateful persons as indulge in tions of annexation, forgetting how useful Káshmir proved dur

Disapproves of the policy of degrading the Native States of Káthiáwár for the faults of their rulers.

The Gujarát Monthly Journal (100) for the Hindu months
Jyeshth 1940 (May and June 1884) bu
12th August says:—It is but reasona doer should himself suffer for his evil should not be affected by them. A principle a prince ought himself to su deeds and not his State. In civilized countries if a king is fo he is deposed but no change takes place in the rank or status
But this world-renowned principle is not observed in Káthiáwá if the Rána of Porbandar is unfit for continuing on the thro honours and powers should have been curtailed. But why have been reduced from the first class to the third for the fa
If the prince is unfit why not appoint a person to represent hin the State? If there are some political reasons for not a policy during the lifetime of a prince, why not assure his su rights will not be interfered with? Until this policy is adopte prince, and his heirs and subjects must remain discontented instance. If the prince Káluba of Jámnagar is unfit to be heir Chief, how can his son, who appears to be innocent, becon heirship? It therefore seems necessary by way of justice prevailing in Káthiáwár of making the States suffer for the fau rulers should be reformed.

Approves of the advice said to have been given by the Honourable Mr. Peile to the Diván of Navánagar to desist from intrigues.

The Gujaráti (99) of the 10th August says:—Mr. Maganl Navánagar, has not succeeded in his
and now intends going to Calcutta of appealing to the Supreme Gov
the decision of the Government of matter of the adoption of an hei
But if the information given by one of our friends be true, the Peile is said to have severely taken Mr. Maganlál to task and is sa ly reprimanded him for his intrigues. The Honourable Mr. P folly of undertaking disgraceful jobs for the sake of service, indeed very valuable to such men as wish to become independ

A complaint against the Rána of Porbandar.

The same newspaper says:—We cannot say when the Rá will mend his ways and when his s happily. He can never be expected benefit the State. There is some everyday in the State. Religious feuds frequently occur, a other States, and the Rána is unable to put a stop to the his weakness. A few days ago a marriage procession of the H caste was proceeding with tom-toms along a street where was situated a mosque. The Mahomedans obstructed them and a fight ensued. The tile-turners went to the Rána and complained of the ill-treatment they had received. The Rána told them to start another procession the next day and to pass by the same quarter, and he promised to be on the alert. The result was a serious affray. The Rána arrested several Mahomedans, liberated them on bail and sent the case to Rájkot for trial. Colonel West is making enquiries in the matter. What we say is that the Rána is very much to blame for fomenting the quarrel. Why does he not attend to the protection of the life and property of his subjects and why does he not introduce reforms into the State? It would be well if the Political Agent passed some resolution regarding this state of things, now that he is engaged in enquiring into the matter of the affray between the Hindus and the Mahomedans. The way adopted by Colonel Barton for reforming the Rána was quite improper and unjust. Instead of imposing fines on Native princes it is better to adopt conciliatory ways for reforming them.

A complaint against Major Nutt in connection with his management of the Gondal State.

The Ahmedabad Samáchár (84) of the 13th August says:—Major Nutt gives over charge of the Gondal State on the 25th August. We recommend him to do justice to those who have unjustly suffered at his hands before giving over charge. The Police Superintendent, Miya Ismáel, trumped up certain cases against Ravji Jhaverchand, the vahivatdár of Dhánk. Five of these cases have been investigated by the First Class Magistrate of Dhoráji. Not only did he dismiss them, but he also pronounced them to have been got up. Major Nutt should therefore duly punish the parties concerned in getting up those cases. Mr. Ratanji, the Chief Justice, had also joined the party of Shirastedár Báwámiya, and therefore there were little hopes of getting justice from him. The subjects of the Gondal State believe that Mr. Ratanji had also a part in misleading Major Nutt, for he produced a letter alleging that he had received it by post but which was pronounced on enquiry by Mr. Hammick, the Judicial Assistant, to have been fictitious. Mr. Hammick also stated that Mr. Ratanji had deceived Major Nutt in making the latter believe that the letter was genuine without first making any enquiries into its genuineness. The Government then issued a resolution ordering the prosecution of the guilty parties. But Major Nutt has not taken any steps in that direction, fearing perhaps that further investigation might bring him and Mr. Ratanji into more disgrace. A duly qualified vakil has been without cause prevented from practising in the Gondal State. Major Nutt should withdraw this order before giving over charge.

Disapproves of the proposal to grant allowances instead of territories to the younger brothers of Káthiáwár princes.

The Samsher Báhádur (110) of the 8th August says:—A perplexing question has recently cropped up in Káthiáwár. It is the custom in that province that the heir-apparent succeeds to the throne and his younger brothers are granted two or four villages in proportion to the extent of the dominions. But as this system diminishes the power enjoyed by the State, the heirs-apparent have resolved to discontinue that system and to grant an allowance to their younger brothers. It does not appear that the latter will be satisfied with this arrangement, because the grant of territory helps them to keep up their position, while the grant of an allowance does not. As the offsprings of the younger brothers multiply their condition will become miserable, and after the lapse of many years their progeny will be inferior in status to a low Rajput. Government ought therefore to adhere to the present system.

Berár Affairs.

Points out the necessity of encouraging the study of scientific agriculture in Berár.

The Pramod Sindhu (13) of the 11th August says:—The population of Berár is mainly composed of the agricultural classes, who depend for their livelihood upon the produce of their soil. Nearly seventy per cent. of the population of the province are agriculturists. The impoverished condition of the agricultural classes in the Deccan and other provinces furnishes a lesson which our authorities here ought not to los sight of. The agricultural classes of Berár ought to become the object of thei constant care, and everything that may tend to encourage them in the pursui of their profession should be done. Education is now-a-days making its influence felt among the lower classes, and in order to make the agricultural classe take more interest in it they should be initiated into the science of agriculture The fertility of the soil in Berár, coupled with its power to retain moisture, and the advantage of light assessment—advantages which are really exceptional—are a great inducement to people to pursue the agricultural profession, and in order to make this profession a more profitable one a knowledge of the science of agriculture is absolutely necessary. How to impart this knowledge of the science of agriculture is the question. In the Bombay Presidency agricultural classes have been attached to high schools, where students are given scientific instruction and are trained in the management of small farms. These classes have formed the nucleus whence the sons of agriculturists may go to their fields and profitably make use of the scientific instruction received by them in the improvement of their lands. The want of such agricultural classes has been felt here and the educational authorities should remove this want by establishing agricultural classes for giving instruction in the science of agriculture to the sons of agriculturists of this province. The establishment of these agricultural classes would give employment to our Bachelors of Science and would also encourage many young men to pursue a scientific study of agriculture.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
20*th August* 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Administration of India: Expression of opinion that the present policy of Government is characterized by inconsistency 3

Advance of Russia in Central Asia:

  Disapproval of the appointment of a Commission for demarcating the boundary lines of Afghanistan 5

  Discussion on the question of the possible effects of Russian conquest on the different classes of the people and advice to Government to effect a reconciliation between the people and the official classes 4

Appointments: Suggestions regarding the appointment of successors to Lord Ripon and Sir James Fergusson 7

Bombay Tramway Company: Grievances of the public regarding the— .. 11

Bridge on the river Chandrabhága at Pandharpur: Necessity of constructing a— 13

Civil Service of India: Comments on the proposal to encourage the candidates selected for the — to undertake a college course ... 9

Complaints:

  Defective measures for the conveyance of men injured by accidents to hospitals in Bombay 12

  Delay in the transaction of business by the treasury branch of the Collector's office at Karáchi 12

  Want of grazing grounds in the district of Ahmednagar ... 12

Conquest of India: Attempt to expose the fallacy of the assertion that India was conquered by the sword and is maintained by the strength of the same instrument 3

Direct Parliamentary control over the affairs of India: Comments in connection with the question of a — 4

Factory Act: Suggestions to the Bombay — Committee 11

Grant of six scholarships for the encouragement of Indians studying in England: Expression of opinion that there is no necessity for framing new rules for regulating the — 9

Judicial matters: Grievances of suitors in the Court of Small Causes at Bombay 12

Land revenue: Comments on the reforms proposed by the Government of India in the administration of — 7

Madras time: Expression of opinion that — should be done away with throughout the Bombay Presidency 10

Opium: Comments on the decrease in the consumption of — in Káthiáwár and suggestions for improving its consumption in that province. 11

Police: Suggestions regarding some measures for preventing crimes committed for the sake of ornaments 9

Postal matters:

  Complaint regarding the delay in the payment of money orders at Pátan 14

  Grievances of letter sorters in the Postal Department 14

  Suggestion regarding reduction of the charges of the Postal Department for money orders, &c. 13

Presents: Expression of opinion that the order regarding the acceptance of — by Government officers should not be made applicable to schoolmasters 13

Public meetings: Necessity of enacting a uniform rule for Native and European servants of Government in the matter of attending — ... 13

Senility and early death among the educated classes of Natives: Attribution of — to political causes 9

Sir James Fergusson's term of office: Advice to the Committee of the Bombay International Exhibition to ask the Home Government to extend — 10

Stores: Disapproval of the recent order of the Secretary of State that — for State railways should be insured 6

Viceregal Legislative Council: Suggestion regarding the appointment of a successor to the late Mr. Kristodás Pál 8

Part II.—Local Self-government—

Local Boards Act: Comments in connection with the appointment of a committee to frame rules under the — 14

PART III.—Education—

Drawing classes in Government schools in Bombay: Compl
the — have not been successful and suggestions for improvi Engineering College at Roorkee: Disapproval of the cont cancellation of the resolution excluding Eurasians from the

PART IV.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway:
  Complaint regarding the disregard shown by the — Compa
  interests of Natives ... ...
  Necessity of starting a railway station at Málád on the — Indus Valley State Railway: Comments on the system of makin
ments in the revenue department of the — ...
Over-bridges upon the railway level-crossings: Necessity of c
ing — on the Frere Road and the Queen's Road ...
Railway line from Bijápur: Request that the — may be opened senger traffic ... ...
Scheme of railways proposed by the Government of India:
of the — ... ...

PART V.—Municipalities—

Bombay:
  Advice to the Municipal Corporation of — to put a stop to t construction of drainge works ...
  Comments on the resolution of the Municipal Corporatio
  the matter of the diversion of the night soil from th Bandar to Warli ... ...
  Request to the members of the Town Council and the Corporation of — to attend to the dangers of overhead wires ... ...

PART VI.—Native States—

Gondal: Complaint against Major Nutt in connection with the ment of the — State ... ...
Káthiáwár:
  Disapproval of the policy of degrading the Native States
  the faults of their rulers ... ...
  Disapproval of the proposal to grant allowances instead tories to younger brothers of Native princes in — Native States: Censure on the Anglo-Indian press for its treatm Navánagar: Approval of the advice said to have been give Honourable Mr. Peile to the Diván of — to desist from in Porbandar: Complaint against the Rána of — ...

PART VII.—Berár Affairs—

Study of scientific agriculture in Berár; Necessity of encouragi

---

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

AL.]

NAT

ISHED IN T

the Wee

List of N

Names of Newspapers.

ENGLISH.
pectator
Star
Journal of the Sabha
es

ANGLO-MARA'THI.
dhu hakshu
ayă rakásh kásh pinion
ar
Sindhu
yáncha Kaivári
Patrika
(Berár) Samách r

MARA'THI
yă
t Samáchár
dhákar[1]
k
yă Samáchár
Vritt
Vritt
Bodhak
ágar ahari unch
hu arsh
itră ru
k Mitră[2]
h Vaibhav Judaism
vádi
htră Hitechchhu
htră Mitră
amáchár
ritt Chandrika
indhu
an i Vaibhav
náth
aibhav
Chandrika
árvajanik Sabhech
m Dip
ă Dipika
dan odhak
i uchak
nt
ă
Hitechchhu

quently admits English ar

Pag

ay: Complaint that
s for improving them.
of the contemplated 17
ns from the — ... 17

e — Company to the
...
on the — ... 18
m of making appoint- 19
...
essity of construct- 19
... 18
be opened for pas-
... 18
f India: Approval
... ... 17

stop to the further
... ... 20
orporation of — in from the Carnac
... 21
nd the Municipal
verhead telephone
... ... 20

with the manage-
... ... 23
States of — for
... ... 22
instead of terri-
... 23
treatment of — 22
en given by the
from intrigues ... 22
... ... 22

ouraging the —. 23

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON NATIVE PA

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESID

For the Week ending 23rd

List of Newspapers and Pe

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of pu
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator ...	Bombay
2	„ Mahrátta ...	Poona ...
3	„ Morning Star ...	Ahmedabad
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha ...	Poona ...
5	„ Sind Times ...	Karáchi
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu ...	Bombay
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu ...	Poona ...
8	„ Dnyánodayă ...	Bombay
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh ...	Poona ...
10	„ Indu Prakásh ...	Bombay
11	„ Native Opinion ...	Do.
12	„ Prabhákar ...	Do.
13	„ Pramod Sindhu ...	Umráwati (
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári ...	Bombay
15	„ Subodh Patrika ...	Do.
*16	„ Vaidarbh ...	Akola
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár ...	Do.
	MARA'THI
18	The Arunodayă ...	Thána ...
19	„ A'ryávart ...	Dhulia...
20	„ Bakul ...	Ratnágiri
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár ...	Belgaum
22	„ Bhála ...	Sholápur
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1] ...	Sátára ...
*24	„ Chháva ...	Dhárwár
*25	„ Chikitsak ...	Sholápur
26	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár ...	Bombay
*27	„ Dakshin Vritt ...	Kolhápur
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt ...	Dhárwár
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak ...	Belgaum
30	„ Dnyán Ságar ...	Kolhápur
31	„ Ganga Lahari ...	Násik ...
32	„ Hindu Punch ...	Thána ...
33	„ Hitechchhu ...	Kaládgi
34	„ Israel[1] ...	Bombay
35	„ Jagadádarsh ...	Ahmednagar
36	„ Jagan Mitră ...	Ratnágiri
37	„ Kalpataru... ...	Sholápur
*38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2] ...	Belgaum
*39	„ Katáksh ...	Poona ...
40	„ Kesari ...	Do.
41	„ Khándesh Vaibhav ...	Dhulia...
42	„ Lamp of Judaism ...	Bombay
43	„ Lokahitavádi ...	Poona ...
*44	„ Mádhavi ...	Dhárwár
45	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu ...	Bombay
46	„ Maháráshtră Mitră ...	Sátára...
47	„ Nagar Samáchár... ...	Ahmednagar
48	„ Násik Vritt ...	Násik ...
*49	„ Nibandh Chandrika ...	Poona ...
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu ...	Ahmednagar
51	„ Panchánan ...	Málvan
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav ...	Pandharpur
*53	„ Pisháchanáth ...	Bombay
54	„ Poona Vaibhav ...	Poona ...
*55	„ Prabodh Chandrika ...	Jalgaon
*56	„ Pratod ...	Islámpur
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak ...	Poona ...
*58	„ Rámdás ...	Bijápur
59	„ Saddharm Dip ...	Alibág...
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika... ...	Bombay
61	„ Satyă Sadan ...	Alibág...
62	„ Satyă Shodhak ...	Ratnágiri
*63	„ Sharabh ...	Alibág...
64	„ Shetakari ...	Umráwati (A
*65	„ Shiváji[1] ...	Poona ...
66	„ Shubh Suchak ...	Sátára...
67	„ Suryakánt... ...	Ellichpur
68	„ Suryodayă... ...	Thána ...
*69	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu ...	Bombay

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contain

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Editi
	Mara'thi—continued.
70	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly
71	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly
	Anglo-Gujara'ti.
79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.
82	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.
83	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.
	Gujara'ti.
84	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly
85	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily
86	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly
87	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.
*88	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.
89	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily
90	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly
91	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.
92	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly
93	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly
94	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.
95	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly
96	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.
97	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.
98	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.
99	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly
*100	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly
101	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.
*102	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly
103	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily
104	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly
105	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly
*106	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.
*107	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly
108	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekl
109	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly
110	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly
111	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly
*112	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly
113	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.
114	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.
115	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.
117	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.
*118	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly
119	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly
124	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly
125	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly
126	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly
127	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.
128	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly
	Ka'narese.
129	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly
*130	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.
131	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.
132	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.
*133	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.
	Sanskrit.
*134	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnight
	Urdu.
*135	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.
	Persian.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly
	English, Mara'thi and Urdu.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly
	Sindi.
139	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the paper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the nu
In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same a Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that or d) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well kno with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Gover
the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

cation.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
...	Weekly	400
...	Do.	200
...	Do.	175
...	Do.	200
...	Do.	200
...	Do.	300
...	Do.	200
...	Do.	200
...	Monthly	400
...	Weekly	200
...	Do.	400
...	Do.	349
...	Do.	600
...	Do.	137
...	Weekly	25
...	Daily	750
...	Monthly	304
..	Do.	500
...	Do.	200
...	Daily	1,090
...	Weekly	700
...	Do.	60
...	Monthly	600
...	Weekly	525
...	Do.	1,000
...	Monthly	200
...	Do.	475
...	Do.	400
...	Do.	100
...	Weekly	1,000
...	Monthly	200
...	Do.	659
..	Quarterly	200
...	Daily	525
...	Monthly	1,400
...	Weekly	115
...	Do.	200
...	Monthly	200
...	Tri-weekly ...	700
...	Monthly	300
...	Weekly	200
...	Monthly	381
...	Weekly	200
...	Do.	225
...	Do.	700
...	Do.	1,814
...	Do.	200
...	Do.	400
...	Monthly	200
...	Do.	375
...	Do.	533
...	Do.	200
...	Do.	408
...	Quarterly ...	200
...	Monthly	200
..	Weekly	50
...	Monthly	738
...	Do.	300
...	Weekly	500
...	Weekly	150
...	Do.	200
...	Do.	225
...	Do.	768
...	Do.	100
...	Fortnightly ...	100
...	Weekly	200
...	Do.	160
...	Weekly	300
...	Weekly	200
...	Weekly	500

in the Report under different heads,

alics, and the number of the News-

as to the number of copies issued.

is the same as that adopted in the tem is that when the long a (आ in gun) is, to prevent confusion, hat when the short a appears to be the well known Mitra, it is printed

the Government of Bombay in

Makes certain remarks on the British rule in India.

The Sind Times (5) of the 15th August says:—The
to be founded on a rock, and a thousand years more. It is we should often compare the rule with the old year of the M
the prestige of the Moghul name had faded into a anarchy reigned in its stead for a short time, and th
English bayonets, followed by English order and peace.
the mission of civilisation to barbarism. Indian ba English civilisation. Undoubtedly a civilised governn
A feeling of security, justice and growing enlightenment of the numerous blessings that we have received at the Government. There are no thugs, no dacoits. Our inst
our superstitions are all respected. Instances of in oppression do not affect the real liberties and comforts t enjoy. Yet we constantly feel that the British Govern that it can do for us. There are no Mán Singhs and T are not trusted so much as we have a right to. We are the consciousness that we are a conquered people.
turn. And we wonderingly ask ourselves how long going to last. We are two different peoples bearing each other, but there is no cordiality, no sympathy, b
if we are a weaker people; no matter if the position of t all notions of equality; there must be at least sympathy be one of kindness and of love to last for any len English and the Indians stand as far apart as ever. The Englishmen are in India for India's good is a standing men themselves. But all Englishmen from Mr. Glad ready with it whenever there is any necessity. It is pr really profit by British rule, but not in the way that is the great difference between the Moslem and Christia Moghul emperors were resident sovereigns, and India India. The gold that was every year sent in heaps to t always found its way back to the Indian bázárs and to ministers, or contributed towards the construction of glories of India as well as of the emperors that raised luxury-loving of the Moghuls knew the necessity of a no exodus to the hills and the enormous expense atte subjects were not made to pay the expenses of an Egyp
But England rules India from a distance. India has no
Her wealth is sent over to England. English Governo permanent residents. They carry away periodically m of Indian money along with them to England. Thu poorer every day, and India is being daily impoverish has it in her power to remedy all this. The wealth of India. More kindliness, cordiality and sympathy mi the two races. England would then be impregnable rule would be broad-based upon her Indian people's wil

Complains that England does not take any interest in India.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 17th August says:
Secretary of State presented end of the session to a jaded, a Commons, the members of wh impatient for the attractions of speech must have been a very tame affair, as he seems either to attract or to distract the attention of the Hou from forests, which he fixed upon as a sign of the prosp finances. Of course to one whose business is to tell the the revenue has increased, the wails and groans of the p ships in respect of our forest laws know no bounds, are Perhaps Mr. Cross found no injustice in the continu which, while it disproportionately taxes the trade, leave services and the professions untouched. There were other importance, but the Under Secretary did not think them w

We are sorry to observe that even in the case of those who with India professions and actions should not correspond motion is brought forward about this time asking the minist Indian budget earlier, and a promise to that effect is given unfortunately for us these promises are honoured more in the their observance. These tactics force upon us with greater r sion of Mr. Slagg that unless a standing Parliamentary Comm to look after our affairs no permanent improvement can be r dition. [The Kesari (40) of the 19th August expresses similar Pársi Punch (113) of the 17th August makes similar comm style.]

Says that it is not safe to count upon the fidelity of the Afghán people.

The Sind Times (5) of the 12th August but received o says:—"His Highness the Amir of Civil and Military Gazette, "is guaranteeing the safety of the Afghá mission. Abdul Rahman alleges t unable to cope with the hostility of h Englishmen." This statement is an unvarnished fact. T which the Amir gets from the English Government every go any way towards softening the ill-feeling between the English. It is absolutely impossible to count upon the Ami when the hour of danger really comes. The Afgháns are t were in the days of Sir William Macnaghten and Sir Louis C
if the English had never set foot in Afghánistán these stalwa have been anything but friendly towards them. And now th the British as their mortal enemies, as the devastators of home, nothing can eradicate the deep-rooted hatred that th powerful neighbours. The Amir may be pensioned, he may in English gold, but his people will as surely prove too stro
the time comes to choose between the Russians and the En known how readily the Afgháns run with the hounds and st
They will take English gold and secretly welcome the Russ and loose in all ways. It is also quite possible that they Russians and English alike as enemies so soon as an army of ob among them, whether it is an English or a Russian one. I to look to India and to count on the Indians when the great s for Afghánistán never did and never will deserve the confiden government.

Suggestions for reform in the constitution and powers of civil and criminal courts.

The Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha (4) received on the 20th August says:—" conditions which every civilized justice must fulfil are, firstly, that should be presided over by competen
according to the quality of the work before them, and whose fai taint of corruption; secondly, that the justice administered possible, carry public feeling with it and give assurance to th fair and impartial hearing in all cases; and thirdly and lastly administered should be cheap, speedy and final, as far as may tration of justice in British India necessarily presupposes t another essential condition for which there is no place in self-g namely, that the machinery of administration must be cont resort by a foreign race of rulers, whose political prestige a should be preserved intact. Judged by these tests we do n existing constitution of our civil and criminal courts, howeve be upon the old Native models, is as satisfactory as one would in keeping with the advance that has been made in all other fact is that while fair progress has been made in all other dep
the subject of judicial reform, especially in the constitution criminal courts, has not received the same measure of attentio been codified and the procedure of our courts has been ela

model of the most advanced countries, but the machinery of th antiquated and unsympathetic as it was in the early part of the cen in the interval public spirit and intelligence of the people have ac grown the condition of things in view of which the courts w instituted. The main principles on which this constitution was or may be described to be a jealous exclusion and depreciation of po and a distrust of the purity and efficiency of the Native judiciary of the scale. This jealousy and distrust can alone account for th system of checks and appeals involving in their operation an en of power, money and time, and untold vexation and harassment parties. It was thought at the time that European supervision could not possibly be made too thorough and minute, although th tion made it necessary that the second hearing of every conte criminal proceeding should take place before a relatively more ine nal than the court of the first instance. The association of the p work of administration was in those days thought to be unsafe, anc the old pancháyats and village authorities were stripped of their p were summarily transferred to stipendiary officers whose chief rec was that they were inaccessible to popular influences. The same foreign domination made it necessary to centralize executive an functions in one and the same hands, and for the same reason Native agency was jealously excluded. These guiding principles quite intelligible, and might have been even necessary, in those ea it cannot be denied that this necessity has long since ceased. The of the Native judicial service on more liberal salaries, the institutio
tive examinations, the growth of higher education, the codificatior the elaboration of the procedure, the amalgamation of the Sadar a Courts, the rise of an independent and respectable bar, the admit and intelligence of the Native judges, the development of public sp secured recognition for itself in the co-operation of jurors and ass honorary magistrates—all these and many other indications of the a strong justification for advocating a reform in the constitution
These reforms being too long delayed, the evils and abuses which up in the course of years have brought discredit upon the adminis vaxatious delays and the heavy costs of our civil litigation, the system of appeals and second appeals, the oppression practiced by authorities who subordinate their judicial functions to the needs o tive power, the alienation of public feeling which but too often with the wrong-doer from its suspicion of police and magisterial ness—all these evils call for urgent and speedy reform. These co stitute the main subject of criticism in the Native newspapers, anc to the bitterness of race antipathies. We think that the time has n full and careful investigation of these complaints with a view to th adequate remedies. Under the East India Company's rule advanta of the renewal from time to time of the Company's charter to inquir administration of the country, and measures were adopted to redres grievances. This periodical revision has been discontinued since therefore becomes more than ever necessary that the Government o itself undertake this inquiry by means of a small committee compo sentatives from the different provinces. A mixed Native and Euro tee formed on the model of the Education Commission, which h excellent work, should go about and make enquiries on the spo
the varieties of constitution and national aptitudes, and discuss wi men on the spot the reforms called for by the altered condition and approved by practical men conversant with the details of this ant subject. With the report of such a committee before it the G India will find its hands strengthened for effective action, and deliberately proceed to carry out such legislative and executiv may be deemed necessary and practicable. The main heads of might be laid down for the guidance of such a committee may b set forth:—1st, how far and in what direction the present constit civil courts of original and appellate jurisdiction can be safely al

avoid the complaints of vexatious delays and heavy costs and conse failure of justice; 2nd, whether the complicated system of first and s and third appeals can be simplified without prejudicing the necessary g tees for the administration of justice; 3rd, to what extent is the p combination of judicial and executive functions undesirable, and if a c has to be made, what plan can be proposed which will secure the main in view; 4th, can the system of trial by jury be extended to all serious of triable by the sessions courts, and if so, under what guarantees? 5th the agency of honorary magistrates and civil arbitrators be extended its efficiency increased by the adoption of bench tribunals? In regard first point our view is that a radical reconstruction of our courts is urgently called for, and the plan we propose has the merit of being a safe, economical and efficient, and it has the high authority of Sir Fitz Stephen. At present the subordinate courts are found to be establish every táluka or two and exercise jurisdiction in all manner of suits
Rs. 5,000, and there is one subordinate court in each zilla town with unli jurisdiction. The District and Assistant Judges exercise no original jurisd except in a few rare cases where Government or its officers are concer parties. The test of value as separating jurisdiction is a fallacious About 80 per cent. of suits are of the nature of small causes in respect of only one appeal is allowed to the district court. For the most part, ho no appeals are preferred, except where parties wish fraudulently to gain
In the remaining 20 per cent. of suits relating to land and houses by f most part are contested, and they go up in appeal to the District or As Judges. This illogical division of work entails a needless waste of tim money, and often causes vexation and failure of justice. The plan we p is to reconstitute these courts on a more logical basis. We would stren the court at the zilla town by constituting a District High Court, composed District Judge, the Assistant Judge, and one or two first class Subordinate J
The court so constituted should have cognizance of all cases which do not within the category of Small Cause Court suits. The District High Court sit as a bench or in division courts to decide all cases regarding land houses and personal status in the first instance and finally. The other should exercise only small causes jurisdiction within their limits, and the Su nate Judges presiding over them, being thus relieved, could be utilised for nal work as magistrates of the first or second class. This arrangement distribute civil work according to the presumed competency of the judge strong District High Court would do away with the necessity of first a thereby diminishing the chances of delay and minimising costs to a most se extent. It would also strengthen the district bar and promote cordial rel between the Native and European members of the district courts. The in fact based upon the model of the original side of the Presidency High and the Small Causes Court. As regards the second point the present sys appeals from the Subordinate Judges to the Assistant or District Judges is o two objections. Firstly, the District and Assistant Judges are not trained discharge of original work to deal effective justice in appeal. Too often the is, in the words of Sir FitzJames Stephen, from a presumably more compet a less competent tribunal. And secondly, the Subordinate Judge knows th guage and manners of the people, takes down the evidence in his own han decides according to his knowledge of the credibility of the witnesses an probability of the facts attested to by them. The superior judge is a foreig race and feeling, is imperfectly acquainted with the language, has not the wi es before him, and yet is called upon to sit in judgment upon questions b law and fact, and his appreciation of the facts is final, the second appeal confined only to points of law. This arrangement appears to us to be very a lous and defective. As might be expected, in a large majority of cases he co the decisions appealed from, and to that extent the costs and delays of this s hearing are needlessly thrown away. In the minority of cases whe reverses the decision of the lower courts, the chances are equal that he m in the wrong, and parties take up the matter in second appeal to the Court, which as often confirms the decision in appeal as it sets it aside a stores the decree of the Subordinate Judge's court. All this procedure is un sarily burdensome. Under the plan we have proposed the first s appeal would be to the High Court, which should not be, as at pr to accept decisions on questions of fact any more than those greater work would be thrown upon the district court if proper p taken to give finality to every well-considered judgment. The d would moreover be relieved of its appellate functions in conside additional original work thrown upon it. The third point relates t tion of judicial from executive functions. In this Presidency the completely carried out in civil matters, and in criminal cases it is as can be wished so far as the higher grades of courts are conc only in the case of District and Assistant Collectors and Mámlatd combination of functions is maintained. As a matter of fact, I District Collector very rarely exercises original powers. His appe may be left with him, and if it is necessary for maintaining pres be still allowed to have in reserve his criminal powers. As regards l and deputies, we think that it would be a change for the better in of their duties to relieve them of their criminal functions. These necessarily on tour throughout the district for eight months in th it is a great inconvenience to the parties and witnesses to be oblig their camp. We are aware that the prestige of criminal power necessary by these officials for the exercise of their other funct radical change like this may not be practicable or safe. Sir FitzJa attaches great weight to this consideration, and in deference to h are willing to concede that these officers may be allowed to ex criminal powers when they are at head-quarters for one-third of th regard to the Mámlatdárs, no such prestige can be pleaded as an e have no objection to this class as a body, but it cannot be deni miscellaneous work takes up too much of their time. They ca compared with the Subordinate Judges in judicial training. Under have proposed, the Subordinate Judges, being relieved of their hea work, would find time to take over from the Mámlatdárs much of th work. If a sudden change be not desirable we are prepared to lea latdárs in possession of their third class powers, and would relega work to the Subordinate Judges, assisted in convenient places by in the numbers of honorary magistrates wherever available.

ment of transferring criminal work to the Subordinate Judges w Government during the last famine, and the results were very Such a transfer would tend at once to increase the confidence of provide checks against all possible abuse of power, and educate t habits of self-reliance and obedience to law in a way which is possible under existing arrangements. On the fourth point w the time has now arrived for a judicious extension of the jury sy trial of all sessions cases. The Government has already under law power to extend the jury system to all districts, but, like the r
tion to municipal boards, this power has been very sparingly exerc Presidency the jury system has obtained outside the Presidency
Poona District only, and there the results have been eminently
The system of assessors labours under the defect that no r attaches to the office. It is no wonder therefore that the work is done. In the Poona District the same set of people act as jurors a and there can possibly be no reason why the same set of men satisfaction as jurors and work indifferently as assessors, except not feel the same interest in their work. The jury system may s tended under proper guarantees, and it will associate the people in criminal administration. It is the most practical adaptation u circumstances of the old pancháyat tribunals. A criminal co jury is condemned not by Government authorities but by the voic people. This in itself is a very great advantage to both the Gov the public. Its educating influence need not be enlarged upon be no loss of prestige in the free concession of this right to peop proved that they are well fitted for it. The conferring of this ri European accused by the recent Amendment Act has made it m than ever that this invidious distinction between Europeans and N be removed from the statute book. As regards the guarantee ful working, we think that the provision which allows a refere the High Court in cases where the judge and the jury differ i provision. It has worked admirably hitherto, and may be exp the same results hereafter. No other guarantee appears to us for the safe working of the system. In regard to the fifth Government have already taken the initiative in appointing hon in a few places and in directing them to sit as bench magistra lature has conferred this power on the local authorities, and as already been made we think there can be no serious objectic extension. The justices of the peace in England correspond magistrates, and the powers of these latter should be develope model. The right to try all municipal cases and all cases under as the forest, ábkári, salt and opium, the right of licensing liqu lar other powers should be conferred upon these mofussil ge person able to read and write who has an assured annual inco five hundred rupees should be made a magistrate within defined magistrates should not be permitted to sit separately. Sittin stated times, there would be no chance of abuse of power. T one of them would be corrected by the action of his colleagu and a healthy publicity would be ensured. In this way a gr cellaneous work can be safely handed over to the representativ

In civil matters they would act as conciliators and munsifs towns or villages. This extension of powers would make local a reality. It would enlist the sympathies of the people a interest. Without these powers the recent concessions in reg municipal boards might not unlikely in the course of yea failures. In England these powers are joined together in the this combination of functions accounts for the success of the s similar trial must be attempted here if Government are anxio of their liberal policy.

Asks Government to inaugurate a system of trials with the aid of juries instead of assessors in the Sholápur District.

The Kalpataru (37) of the 17th August says :—Now that thought fit to raise the city of Shol
tion of the judicial head-quarters st tricts of Sholápur and Bijápur, it i they should consider the question o system of trials with the aid of assessors. The training of the past twenty years is enough for the concession asked for. The High Court may be c matter.

Comments on the severity of the sentence passed by an Honorary Magistrate of Poona in a certain case.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 18th August takes Mr. B Honorary Magistrate in the city of P
the severity of the sentence of three passed on a person who was guilty of flowers from the Budhwár municip accused pleaded that he did not kno any prohibition against plucking flowers in the garden, and co was an ignorant menial the excuse appears to be very plausib municipality has provided no boards in the garden prohibit touching fruits and flowers, and this circumstance ought to h due weight by the Magistrate in passing the sentence. Mr.
inexperienced, and we would therefore suggest that he should e vested in him with caution. It is reported that the accused an appeal against the Magistrate's decision, and though it is the probable result of the appeal, it is sad to think the a actually undergone the sentence of imprisonment though the subsequently cancelled. This case is very well calculated to importance of the suggestion put forth some time ago that se nal cases should not be enforced until appeals are dispos
recommend to Government the adoption of this suggestion.
of the 15th, the Poona Vaibhav (54) of the 17th, and the 19th August also comment on the severity of the sentence in

Comments on the scheme of allowing discount on instalments of land revenue paid in advance.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 19th August says:—The resolutio Government of Bombay anent the scheme of ing discount on instalments of land revenue advance, though apparently beneficial to the turists, seems on a closer examination to be lated to prove detrimental to the interests class, and we cannot therefore be very sanguine about the result of th scheme. Even Government are not very confident in the matter an therefore intend this as a merely tentative measure. The earliest notice reform came from the Government of Lord Ripon, and this circumstance fies to the fact that His Lordship has been constantly working at the prob amelioration of the condition of the Indian peasant. However, the new s would not appear to have been conceived as much for the benefit of th as for that of Government. The major portion of the peasantry of Indi especially of this Presidency, is in a wretched condition. It is true that throw their very heart into their work, but what with the demands of Gover and the sávkár, they find it very difficult to maintain themselves. It is fore not understood how such people can pay their instalments of land re in advance,—people that generally meet Government demands from the pr of the harvest of the year. For if they could be in a position to pay in ad they would be the last to allow themselves to be ruined by the sávkárs. Th scheme does hold forth encouragement in the shape of discount, but it enough. A discount of an anna in the rupee cannot be sufficient in the such people. It is not enough even to cover the interest on a loan raised the view of paying Government instalments in advance. In these circums if Government at all desire that their scheme should bring forth good they must raise the rates of discount considerably. The evils of this s would come into greater prominence in times of scarcity. Of course Gover revenue would not be jeopardized by the instalments of land revenue been paid in advance, but the ryots would be the greatest sufferers on a of their scanty savings having been already utilized for payment of Gover instalments. Unfavourable seasons have of late been rather the rule th exception, and the new scheme would on such occasions produce results s to those which follow from the present system of realizing revenue under a cumstances. [The Dátardun (93) of the 21st August expresses similar senti
The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 19th August says:—The resolution is creditable to the Government of Sir James Fergusson. The ryots wil by the earnestness displayed by Sir James in this matter, and we hop they will not fail to avail themselves of the scheme. As the rate of di is not very attractive, we suggest that, if possible, it may be raised to cent. Moreover Government should notify that in times of famine thos who may have paid their instalments of land revenue in advance will proportionately share in any remissions that may be granted or will hav share credited to them to be adjusted with the amount due in subsequent This arrangement would give a fresh stimulus to the ryots to avail them of the scheme. We also suggest that this excellent resolution should be lated into the different vernaculars in a simple style, and that the trans should be freely distributed amongst the ryots with a view to make acquainted with the scheme.]

Distress in the districts of Sholápur and Ahmednagar on account of want of rain.

The Kalpataru (37) of the 17th August says:—Rain having held off date, the people of Sholápur have begun to lose and the effects of a famine are being felt. The of the villages which entirely depend upon the harvest are intent upon leaving their homes.
distress among cattle is unbearable. There is no fodder and in some place has been a water famine. The price of fodder has run up as high as Rs. 3 per thousand sheeves. The circumstance that the people of some of the in the Sholápur Táluka and of Tuljápur and Dháráshiv are purchasing fo such high rates is enough to give an idea of the general state of affairs.
will Government attend to this? [The Nyáyă Sindhu (50) of the 18th makes a similar complaint regarding the Ahmednagar District.]

Complains that no information regarding the number of persons attacked by cholera in the district of Dhárwár is available in the recent weather reports published by Government.

The Arunodayá (18) of the 17th August asks if the which regulates the contents of the reports published by Government. do they not furnish information rega ber of persons attacked by cholera die from the disease in the district perusal of the recent reports publishe ment Gazette shows that the informa has not been furnished, not only for any particular week but fo We have faith in the information furnished by Government, an necessary that information on this important subject should be public. We are afraid that the district officers are responsible noticed by us, and we hope that our attempt at bringing it to l its being supplied. It appears from the figures given by the that cholera is raging violently in the district of Dhárwár, but official figures are available for comparison has given room jectures.

Grievances of Native Hospital Assistants.

The Military Instructor (138) of the 17th August says:— the tapis that Government propose t Mr. Hanmantráo Ghorpade or Mr. Yerrowda Hospital to the Pánchgani ship. If there is any truth in the rumour we say that the ought to open his eyes to the injustice that would be caused t men who have experience of field service. The Hospital Ass class greatly discontented, and the reason assigned by them f tent is that there is no justice in their department. It is Surgeon-General should look into this complaint and set ma 1877 a circular was issued directing the separation of the m civil portion of the Medical Department. But the separation ha effected. If it is not proposed to carry out the separation, the should see his way to direct a change of places between the offic and military branches with a view to place all of them on a The salaries of apothecaries have recently been increased thou was made in the matter, while there has been no increase in t of Native Hospital Assistants, though we have fought for then Nay, some concessions in the matter of pensions have also be the apothecaries. Native Hospital Assistants are equally, than the apothecaries, and it is therefore just that Governmen to the demand for increased remuneration to the former class o

Objects to the adoption of Maráthi as the language of the Agricultural Department in the four Kánarese-speaking districts.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 18th August says:—We in the new Agricultural Departme organizing, Mr. Ozanne intends to a the language through which all cor be conducted even with reference to t districts of Belgaum, Dhárwár, Kána We doubt whether this will conduc of the agricultural classes in the districts we have just name department is to do the good expected of it, it must try to be than a department of mere routine and red-tape. It must be itself to the sympathies of the ryot; in other words, the ryots o in the Presidency should be able to understand its proceeding appreciate its work. Departmental convenience may be secu one language for the whole Presidency, but it will be secure of public usefulness. It is even to be doubted whether the Ozanne intends adopting will secure departmental convenien ment will have to correspond with most of the other dep Kánarese districts whose proceedings are all conducted in K Mr. Ozanne's department will correspond with the Collector' Maráthi, the latter shall have either to correspond with the for or to adopt Maráthi for the special purposes of the Agricultu

The arrangement will only tend to produce confusion as far as the Kána districts are concerned. Nor are we able to see any justification for dispen with a language which is spoken by 31½ lákhs of people in the Presidency. Government of Bombay some years ago sanctioned Mr. Pritchard's schem substituting Maráthi for Kánarese in the customs offices in the Kánarese tricts. Persons knowing Kánarese but not knowing Maráthi who had ser in the offices for many years were directed either to learn Maráthi withi stated period or to resign service. A similar tendency is being betrayed no connection with the Agricultural Department to the detriment of the Kána districts, and we cannot too highly protest against it.

Says that Dr. Maconachie, Opthalmic Surgeon, Sir J. J. Hospital, should be prevented from serving as medical adviser to a Life Assurance Company in Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 21st August says:—Mr. Slater of Oriental Life Assurance Company states in his le on the subject of the controversy regarding the c parative longevity of Europeans and Natives Dr. Maconachie is medical adviser to another Assurance Company in Bombay. We ask the B bay Government why such highly-paid Governm doctors should be allowed to accept private serv Government servants are prevented from engaging in private business and fr becoming directors or auditors of joint-stock companies. How then can Maconachie act as medical adviser to a private company? We suggest Government should order Dr. Maconachie to give up the post of med adviser to a private company, which he now occupies, in order that he devote more attention to his work in the hospital.

Complains of the arbitrary conduct of the A'bkári Department in the matter of closing a distillery at Uran.

The Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the 20th August says:—About the en July last Mr. Mervánji Kharsedji Háthikhánávála informed that the authorities saw no necessity renewing the license for his distillery at Uran f the month of August. The distillery, which is closed, was an old one. Its license was renewed ev year and its proprietors have not been guilty of anything for which they co be deprived of their license. The authorities have not hesitated to cr down without any cause the business of poor men in order to satisfy avarice of a few rich men. Such an act of blind justice in the British do nions, though unworthy of credence, has actually happened. We recomm Government to send for the papers connected with this case and to exan the length to which the arbitrary conduct of ábkári officers has gone. proprietors of the distillery had spent a large amount of money on it and entered into contracts with others for the supply of liquor. Is there no of getting compensation for the loss thus entailed without any cause? hope that if Government send for the papers connected with this matter enquire into it they will not fail to see in this an instance of unwarrant arbitrary conduct on the part of their officers.

Disapproves of the reduction in the number of Márfatiyás carrying on business in the Customs House at Surát.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 17th August, sig himself "A Merchant," points out the inconveni caused to the merchants of Surat by the customs thorities having issued licenses to only two Márfat (agents who transact business for their principals) of about ten persons who have hitherto been d that work, and says that by Section 102 of Act VIII. of 1878 merchants ha right to nominate Márfatiyás with the sanction of the Customs Commissio The two Márfatiyás who have been recently granted licenses have been appo ed by the Commissioner without any merchant having asked for their n nation. The merchants do not know the new Márfatiyás and are unwillin empower the latter to sign for them. The Márfatiyás are not paid by Gov ment and they have no advantage in curtailing their number. During the b season the two Márfatiyás will be unable to cope with the work. I to be hoped that the customs authorities will pay attention to this complaint grant licenses to all the Márfatiyás with a view to afford convenience to mercantile community.

Disapproves of the policy of condemning public buildings on the reports of whimsical officers.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 21st August c
the policy of condemning as useless
which are declared by crotchety offi
some reason or other. The writer d able length on the loss suffered by the demolition of the Peshwa's palac by the transfer of the District Court to Shahibág and by th arsenal from the Gáikwád's palace, and says that whenever pro
ing particular buildings are made by whimsical officers Go try to know the truth by appointing a commission of Nat
into the allegations of those officers.

Does not approve of the proposal to postpone the Bombay Exhibition till 1887.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 18th August says:—The d projected Bombay International Ex seem to be over. The scheme has be the guarantee fund has swollen to a more than meets the expectations o enthusiastic supporters; and now comes the depressing news from the Secretary of State is on its way here postponing t 1887. This is putting it off to a period distant enough to chi and interest in the project just when the president and membe ing committee have succeeded in attracting public attention t with their labours. The reason of the postponement is said to there will be a Colonial and Indian Exhibition in London, and i the International Exhibition in Bombay be held in the same with the former. But the Bombay Gazette has well shown that less fear. The London Exhibition will be held in the autumn will begin in the cold season. The exhibitors at the former w time to send their articles here. The India Office is perhaps no the whole thing stands. It is to be expected that Sir James F his best to prevent the postponement of the exhibition to a 1886.

Says that a Mahomedan gentleman should be appointed sheriff of Bombay for the next year.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 19th August says:—Con
about the next Sheriff of Bombay.
Sir James Fergusson wishes to gra giving the shrievalty to Mr. Navroji
we and the Pársi community sh
We must not, however, forget th
Mahomedan community. Though twelve Native gentlemen, have up to this time been appointed to the shrievalty, no M man has yet been appointed to it. It is Sir James Fergus forget any more the claims of the Mahomedan community t
The Mahomedans will never forget this good deed of Sir James able Badrudin Tyabji, Professor Mirza Hairat, Messrs. Rehi Sayáni, Jairájbhái Pirbhái, Fájalbhái Visrám, Jumábhái Lá Kamrudin and other Mahomedan gentlemen are fit for the ho hoped that Sir James will not fail to act upon this suggestion.

Grievances of the passengers by the tram-cars.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 17th August says:—We very numerously signed petitions ha
ed to His Excellency Sir James F certain useful changes and improvem ing of the Bombay tramways. We fully sympathise with the hope that His Excellency will take the various recommendatio favourable consideration. Some of the improvements suggest those relating to the number of persons to be accommodated the issuing of printed time-tables, the shortening of delays ca
the different stations, and the lowering and reducing to a sys charged, are so urgently required that we think the Tramway might have granted them of its own accord. But if the Tra which is not always unmindful of its true interest, shows itself instance to meet the wishes and conveniences of the people, w

ment ought to intervene in the interests of the very large classes the tram-cars. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the same date e sentiments.]

Disapproves of the reply sent by Government to the petitioners who complained of the inconvenience suffered by passengers by the tram-cars in Bombay.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 21st August says:—Th Government to the petitioners who co inconvenience suffered by passengers
in Bombay is not at all satisfactory.
India stated that His Excellency the G authority to interfere in the manageme way Company, but the reply shows that has the power. It is however to be re has not used the power for the public good. The reply does not pal complaint regarding the inconvenience caused by the new sy tickets. The bye-laws regarding transfer tickets, a copy of whic to the reply, are a simple reiteration of the old bye-laws in a be shed is built near the Bori Bandar junction for the convenienc the public will not be satisfied. While some notice appears to principal complaint made by the petitioners, other grounds of co even been touched upon.

Does not approve the contemplated abolition of the system of transmitting money orders by telegraph.

The Satyá Shodhak (62) of the 17th August understan several cases of fraud the authorities Department propose to abolish the sys
ting money orders by telegraph, whi cently inaugurated. Apart from the proposed abolition is calculated to en graph Department, it will cause serious inconvenience to the pu wise to take measures for preventing frauds, but it will not be p ther do away with an institution which contributes to the public at the same time adds to the revenues of a public departmen
Chronicle (79) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Local Self-government.

Comments on the rules for municipal elections recently published in the Sind Official Gazette.

The Sind Times (5) of the 12th August but received on the 1
There is one thing which we cannot u
rules for municipal elections recently Sind Official Gazette. In the last general rules for the whole of Sind which were incomplete only because the wards of each city were A complete set of rules, with the scheme of wards, was publishe that very Gazette and now a similar set of rules is published
The clause we refer to occurs in all these three sets of rules, but stand its bearing in the last of them. It takes the form of an runs as follows:—"The registered owner of a house recorded i Land Registers shall be deemed the person assessed for house-tax and so qualified to vote." Now clause (j) gives the franchis assessed to house-tax at not less than Rs. 3 per annum, or to ot cipal taxes at not less than Rs. 5 per annum. It so happe there is no such thing as house-tax at Hyderabad, and what we stand is the necessity of this clause (j) and its explanation in for the municipal elections of that city. It will be remembere opposition was made in and out of the Legislative Council to th Municipal Amendment Bill conferring on the Government a frame executive rules. In justification of them it was urged by Mr. Peile that the local circumstances of each municipal town diverse and peculiar, and that such sections were peremptc provide for these diversities and peculiarities. In Sind, howev ties appear to think that one set of uniform rules is all that follows that in their opinion there are either no peculiarities a the cities of Karáchi, Hyderabad, Sukkur, and Shikárpur, o liarities and diversities need not be consulted in framing rules

If they hold the latter view it is clear they are running directly counter t opinion of the Bombay Government as expressed through Mr. Peile. If hold the former, then they are bound to explain to the public what is mea giving municipal suffrage to house-tax-payers in Hyderabad, when as a m of fact there are no such tax-payers in that city at all. We are not quite s any direct municipal tax is at all levied in Hyderabad; at least the printed co the municipal rules and bye-laws is quite silent on the point. We have how a faint suspicion that the wheel-tax is levied, and if this is so, clause (j), s as it relates to direct taxes, is not without meaning. But every boy in Hy abad knows that house-tax is not levied there, and surely our worthy C missioner in Sind knows this fact as well as ourselves. May we not there ask what the explanation and the clause, so far as they refer to house-tax, m
What strikes us is that in their ardent passion for uniformity the author have forgotten the fact that there is but little, if any, direct municipal tax in Hyderabad, that house-tax is quite unknown there, and that a qualifica based upon the payment of these taxes is therefore quite out of place in city. What is decidedly not out of place in it is exactly what finds no pla the rules. The property qualification is specially appropriate to the circumstances of Hyderabad, and was therefore proposed by the municip in the draft rules published by us in this paper. Why it has not met the approval of the Commissioner in Sind we do not know. But we know if this qualification is not adopted, the result will be that a landlord posse of property worth more than Rs. 5,000, who is neither a Government ser nor a Government pensioner, neither a pleader nor a trader, will hav right to vote at all, while a hackney-carriage driver paying Rs. 5 or mor respect of wheel-tax will have this right. The fact that a qualification re upon the payment of a tax which does not exist has been inserted in Hyderabad rules proves that very little care has been bestowed on them.
matter is very important and we trust it is not too late to rectify the mis that has been evidently committed and to sanction the original rule dr by the municipality conferring the municipal franchise on owners of ce immoveable property.

Education.

Approves of the withdrawal by the Secretary of State of the resolution excluding Eurasians from the Roorkee College.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 18th August says:—We are not sor hear that the Secretary of State has withdraw famous Roorkee Resolution which formed the t of much not unnatural denunciation. Lord was, we think, fully justified in demanding its drawal, since it professed to benefit one class a expense of another. The natives of India, we it necessary to repeat over and over again, are not for measures of this All they wish for is justice and fair play. But we do not think the withd of the Roorkee Resolution will lead to much good unless the agitati followed up and the abolition of the Cooper's Hill College is secured i interests of the Engineering Colleges in India. This is the question really deserves to be fought out by Natives and Eurasians alike, for bot equally interested in maintaining that the Government is not justified in p nising a college in England for the supply of engineering talent to I when the latter country has talent of the sort more than enough fo necessities.

Does not approve of the withdrawal by the Secretary of State for India of the resolution excluding Eurasians from the Roorkee College.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 17th August says:—A telegram rec from Simla by a daily contemporary announce the Secretary of State for India has determined the rescission of this well-considered resolution.
hope the announcement proves untrue. Bu should like to know the grounds of the alleged mination of the State Secretary and how the lution affects the interests of those who have vociferating to the top of their voice for its abolition. The service intere Englishmen in the Engineering department are served by the existence Cooper's Hill College in England, and they can have therefore nothi complain against. When the interests which the Englishman has m heart are thus served, we fail to see what it is that makes the resolution. It is a pity that while indulging in tall kinship and A'ryan brotherhood he should attempt to mov in the breast of a Native for an honourable career. We are of State should show a disposition towards weakness in a noble Viceroy has shown a clear-sightedness worthy of imit Kimberley. Before giving his ear to false and groundless beseech His Lordship to consult the Viceroy on the subj

both the sides of the question.

Comments on the question of encouragement to female education.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the 17th August says:—Th correct in holding that it is a gross to devote nearly the whole of the tional grant to the education of th
The decided tone of the reply g
Fergusson to the deputation that recently waited on him
the projected Female High School, however, inspires us wi injustice will not be allowed to continue. The Times of In length of saying that if the financial position of the local G admit of an increased educational grant it might abolish high schools for males and divert the funds towards the new F
This suggestion appears to us to be inadequate. Why shoul to spend exactly one-half of the present educational grant tion? Looking at the question from a standpoint of jus female section of the population is entitled to that consi Government were justified in spending large sums on the But circumstances have now changed and the cause of fe greater claims on the liberality of Government. If Mount immortalized his name as the father of male education Sir James Fergusson perpetuate his memory by promoting education? [Several of the vernacular papers, the most which are the Indu Prakásh (10), the Native Opinion (11), (54), and the Shiváji (65), do not favour the idea of start for females. They consider that the present state of not reached a stage at which such institutions can be Prakásh (10) of the 18th August in its Maráthi colum in favour of not only a high school but a college for contend however is that the present state of our society do taking advantage of such institutions, and the scheme mu off. The funds that have been collected are considerable a some interest, which should be utilized for establishing p
the existing female schools and in founding a respectable to the girl that passes the Matriculation Examination.
gradual development of education in females and will in 50 years bring about a revolution in popular ideas which for the establishment of a female high school.]

Says that the authorities of the University of Bombay should publish reports of the meetings of the Senate.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 18th August points that would result from the public rities of the Bombay University meetings of the Senate and says:—
stand why meetings of the Senate closed doors. Important matters
those meetings and the public have a right to know them.
Madras allows reports of the meetings of the Senate to ap
If any of the Fellows of the Bombay University were to meeting of the Senate that it should allow reports of its in newspapers, we feel sure that the proposition would be majority.

Says that the District Book Depôt at Kaládgi should be placed under the management of a separate officer.

The Hitechchhu (33) of Kaládgi of the 17th August doe policy of saddling the Head Maste school at that place with the wo Book Depôt. School-masters have writing work in order that their le not suffer, and it is therefore uni

Head Master of the Kánarese school should be burdened with the work o District Book Depôt. The latter work is enough to engage a separate of It is said that a gentleman offered his services for the work, but his offer rejected. It is to be hoped that the educational authorities will direct attention to this matter.

Railways.

Comments on the report of the Special Committee of the House of Commons on Indian railways.

Reviewing the report of the Special Committee of the House of Com on Indian railways, the Indu Prakásh (10) of the August concludes as follows :—Thus the Commi
while they confirm for the most part the proposa
the Government of India and lay down general as regards some points of railway administra
leave open questions of detail which may still become the battle ground bet the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India in Council.
cannot help expressing our disappointment at the somewhat indecisive tor
many of the answers of the Committee, and regret that so much time and la should have been expended for the attainment of so little good. The only tinct gain from the deliberations of the Committee is the settlement o general beneficial character of railways, which perhaps scarcely admitted o serious doubt, and of the question of gauge. On other points there mus main the same uncertainty that prevailed before. The decisions of the mittee will cast but very faint light on their right settlement. As regards proposals of the Government of India it is to be regretted they were not p before the Committee at the very threshold of the enquiry, as in that they would have received discussion from every succeeding witness. As most of the witnesses who preceded Major Conway Gordon groped i dark with regard to the exact character of those proposals, and muc their evidence was thrown away on random guesses. The particular prop of Lord Ripon's Government we have no objection to, but we do think have not received the discussion before the Committee which they dese
[The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 17th August expresses similar sentimen

Complains of the disregard shown by the G. I. P. Railway Company to the necessity of constructing overbridges on the level-crossings on their line.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 17th August says:—Unless Govern adopt some stringent measures to check the arbi conduct of the G. I. P. Railway Company in obs ing traffic in the thickly populated parts of the
by not constructing overbridges on their line, is no chance of relief. The complaint regarding narrowness and the dilapidated condition o Byculla bridge has continued for some years wi any action having been taken in the matter, and the Company have pa attention to the necessity of constructing an overbridge on the level-cro at Nesbit Lane. The Company also evade erecting an overbridge on the Road level-crossing, where the traffic has of late immensely increased.
Company disregard the performance of their duty to construct overbridg level-crossings and ask the municipality and the Port Trust to contribute respective shares towards the construction of such bridges. The munici ought not to contribute anything for the purpose and the Company s bear the entire cost of constructing the overbridge on the Frere Road.
agree with the Times of India in saying that Government should n deterred by this arbitrary conduct of the Company, and that they should some stringent measures to compel the Company to remove the hindran present caused to the public by the absence of an overbridge on the Road.

Requests the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company to erect a station near the Indála Tank.

A correspondent of the Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the 21st August ref
the controversy regarding the removal of the st
of Borivli and Goregaon from their present sit the construction of a new station between these places, points out the advantages that would
by the erection of a station near the Indála Tan says that if the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company were to erect a stati the vicinity of the Indála Tank, as promised by them s convenience would be afforded to the inhabitants of about rounding Málád.

Points out the advisability of extending the Ahmedabad-Wadhwán line of railway as far as Hyderabad.

A correspondent of the Sind. Sudhár (139) of the 16th must be well aware that there are way stretching from Bombay to di One of these lines goes to Ahmed and runs as far as the frontier c Government spent large sums of n by which to bring this line as far as Hyderabad. This rou villages of Nagar Párkar, Rahmaki, Badin and Tando Mu this line had been opened commerce would have increased, found it easier to go to places of pilgrimage and important near the route, provinces lying to the east, which are fr famines on account of want of rain, would have been easily and other necessaries of life, and the line would have prove the people of Sind and even to the Government. It is not b Government pay no attention to this matter now.

Municipalities.

Comments on the general character of the proceedings of the Municipal Corporation and the Town Council of Bombay.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 17th August says:— the Corporation and Town Coun late been quite erratic. Both bo play such an amount of imbecilit outside public who watch the pr government. To these Bombay grading instead of advancing. A sion is to be attributed to one cause more than another, it subserviency of some of the city's representatives. Where allowed to have sway over those of the city, no other resul Between the committee of local funds in the districts and Council there is hardly any difference. If any, that differe and not of kind. As to the Corporation, that body is ability and debating powers it is so limp. If it follows more than another, it is the lead of the chief executive—tha on whose acts, at times so high-handed, the members ar judges. In short, while the Town Council is growing iml tion is earning the unenviable reputation of being designat

A complaint against the Assessment Department of the Bombay Municipality.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the 17th August complains which the Assessment Departm Municipality tries to increase its When the department failed in securing increased assessment b according to the number of rooms in them, it has adopted vacant pieces of ground within the compounds of bungalows a will be the principal sufferers by this system. In the distr Gámdevi, where it is customary to leave open space betw large gardens and where plots of ground are kept apart as ing with the Hindu ideas of living, endeavours are being mad to assess these vacant pieces of ground irrespective of th redound to the credit of the department if it assessed all t city on an equitable basis and made the rich pay their due But it is tyranny to thus squeeze out money from poor inl or those living on their rent. Moreover, great trouble ha preferring appeals to higher authorities and a strong-mi often succeeds in carrying his point while the poor have assessments imposed on them. As the officers of the de well that they cannot succeed in their plan if they begin the well-to-do and influential classes, they first try their hand Complaint against the Municipal Secretary of Sholápur.

The Kalpataru (37) of the 17th August, referring to months' imprisonment passed on employ of the Sholápur Municipal ting a sum of Rs. 3, asks why the should not be prosecuted for a similar offence. The Municipal Secretary also been guilty of passing a receipt for a certain sum which has not credited in the municipal accounts. What then accounts for the differe treatment accorded to the latter officer? Is it because the former was an offic receipt of a salary of Rs. 8 or Rs. 10, while the latter is an officer with a resp able salary of Rs. 200? Is not the Secretary bound to account for the s received by him? But who should say it? The investigation made by Managing Committee into this and other charges against the Secretary was made with open doors. It is difficult to say what mysteries are involve this affair. More than a year has elapsed since the President directed that papers on this subject submitted by the Managing Committee should be culated to all the Commissioners for perusal, but nothing has yet transpire the matter. Who knows if there have been no secret intrigues in the affair

Complains of the sale of rancid ghee and oil in the bázárs of Surat.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 17th August complains of the sale of ra ghee and oil in the bázárs of Surat and of the inj caused to the health of the consumers of those artic who are chiefly people of the poorer classes, and s that no stringent measures appear to have b taken to put a stop to the sale of those articles. Not only is fat mixed with g but oils of various sorts are also mixed with it. The perpetrators of s frauds should be brought to justice. It is to be hoped that some string measures will be adopted for preventing the sale of rancid ghee and in Surat.

Complains of mismanagement in the municipality of Ahmedabad.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 15th August says:—The managem of the Ahmedabad Municipality is going from ba worse instead of improving under the auspices of scheme of local self-government. Injustice and management are rife and the poor and the rich not equally treated. The Municipal Commissioners are allowed to put build materials on public roads, their drains are allowed to discharge water on s roads and they are at liberty to violate the municipal law, while the poor are secuted for these very offences. Such a state of things is to be regretted. wish that the management were reformed for the sake of the poor payers.

Points out the necessity of a road between the Camp and Gharikáta in Karáchi.

The Sind Times (5) of the 15th August says:—It is a matter of g surprise to us that with all the innovations introdu into Karáchi no thoughts have yet been given to introduction of a road through the plain betw the Camp and Gharikáta. It is a notorious that for years past this way has been used as a public thoroughfare, inasmuc it saves a distance of a quarter of a mile's tramping to the weary pedest proceeding to the town. It is a common occurrence to see scores of peo traversing this way from Rambaugh to the Camp and vice versâ. We wo propose that a road be started from Elphinstone Street, skirting the Artil Lines and passing along the plains over the present beaten paths, connected with the metal road edging the east side of Gharikáta w runs nearly at right angles to the Bandar road near the jail. We trust subject will now meet with due attention from our city fathers, particularly there is a flourishing surplus from municipal funds available.

Native States.

Complains that the tours of Káthiáwár officers are a matter of great expense to the princes.

A correspondent of the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 18th August says:—W ever a Political Agent is on his tours, his establish is generally fed at the expense of the State in w territory it may be travelling. I am told that so times the advent of Political officers is celebr with illuminations in their camps, as if their arr was an event of some special importance. I shall give one or two partic instances which will show how much is done by the Native States for the Po cal officers. Verával is a town on the sea-shore in Junágad territory. Political officers of the province generally resort to this place during the weather and make long halts there to enjoy the refreshing sea-breeze. Junágad Darbár had to erect a good many bungalows on the sea-shore for residence of the officers and some in the town for their establishments. La amounts have been spent, and more are being spent on these buildings, and for whom? Is it for the benefit of the poor ryots from whom the money is rigorously exacted, or even for the convenience of the State officials who are to look after the good of these ryots? No; it is for the convenience and comforts of the Political officers and their establishments, who are paid princely salaries and who also receive good battas. The money spent on these buildings would have been more usefully applied to works of public utility. It is really a pity that the authorities of the State should be so liberal in such expenditure when hundreds of other public works of general utility remain unnoticed for want of funds. At Bhávnagar a separate department has been started under the title of Sarbharai Kháta (purveying department). Its duties are to look after and provide for the comforts of all the Political officers and their retinue whenever they travel through the Bhávnagar territory. A large establishment consisting of a number of clerks, servants, carriages, carts, &c., is entertained for the purpose, and lákhs of rupees are spent on that account every year. This is what they call the hospitality or liberality of Native States, but in my opinion it is misdirected prodigality. I entreat the Chiefs and the Kárbháris of Káthiáwár to look to the real interests of the dumb subjects whom the Almighty has entrusted to their care and avoid such useless prodigality. The Political officers also, who have been specially appointed to look after the good of the people, should check such expenditure. Many of the Chiefs in Káthiáwár are solely guided by their Kárbháris or agents, and some of them are so ignorant that their agents make them believe in any stupid thing calculated to serve their own purpose. The Rájkumár College is a means of dispelling this sort of ignorance, but the good which that institution actually does is not as much as was expected of it. Many of the Chiefs for whom high expectations were entertained when in the College have failed to meet those expectations. They have either given themselves up to pleasures, or their Kárbháris have intentionally and interestedly kept them out of the management of their affairs.

Requests the Political Agent of Káthiáwár to help the Thákor of Morvi in constructing a tram line from Morvi to Wadhwán.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 15th August says:—The young Thákor of Morvi projected a tram line from Morvi to Wadhwán, but the project has for the present fallen through. The construction of the projected tramway would have greatly benefited the inhabitants of Káthiáwár and Cutch. The Thákor agreed to keep the road in repair at his own expense should the other States give the necessary land. But at the annual meeting of Tálukdárs recently held at Rájkot some of them declined to permit the line to pass through their lands. We hope that the Political Agent will interfere and make arrangements for the carrying out of the scheme and thereby lay Káthiáwár under deep obligations. The necessary plant and materials have already arrived from England and the Thákor is very anxious in the matter. It is manifest that great works are not accomplished save with the assistance of Government. If the Political Agent intervenes the matter will soon be settled.

Complains of the inconvenience and trouble suffered by the Hindu pilgrims to Ambáji at the hands of the Rána of Dánta.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 21st August dwells on the inconvenience and trouble caused to the Hindu pilgrims to Ambáji by the conduct of the Rána of Dánta and says that the pilgrims chiefly suffer in three ways, viz., (1) by the Darbár having enhanced the pilgrim tax to more than double its former proportions; (2) by the Darbár having granted a monopoly for the supply of the necessaries of life, which circumstance accounts for the sale of unwholesome articles at high prices; (3) by the accumulation of filth on the hill. It is to be hoped that the Political Agent will speedily attend to this matter. Some cases of cholera have already occurred in different parts of Gujarát, and if the epidemic breaks out on the hill owing to want of sanitary measures it will do great harm.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
27th August 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Complaint against the arbitrary conduct of the — Department in the matter of closing a distillery at Uran 11
Administration of India by the British: Complaint that England does not take any interest in India 3
Advance of Russia in Central Asia: Expression of opinion that it is not safe to count upon the fidelity of the Afghán people 4
Agriculture: Objection to the adoption of Maráthi as the language of the Agricultural Department in the four Kánarese-speaking districts ... 10
Appointments: Expression of opinion that a Mahomedan gentleman should be appointed Sheriff of Bombay for the next year ... 12
Bombay International Exhibition: Disapproval of the proposal to postpone the — till 1887 12
Bombay Tramway Company:
  Disapproval of the reply sent by Government to the petitioners who complained of the inconveniences suffered by passengers by the tram-cars in Bombay 13
  Grievances of passengers by the tram-cars 12
British rule in India: Remarks on the— 3
Customs: Disapproval of the reduction in the number of Márfatiyás carrying on business in the — House at Surat 11
District Book Depôt at Kaládgi: Expression of opinion that the — should be placed under the management of a separate officer 12
Hospital Assistants: Grievances of Native— 10
Judicial matters:
  Comments on the severity of the sentence passed by an Honorary Magistrate of Poona in a certain case 8
  Request to Government to inaugurate a system of trials with the aid of juries instead of assessors in the Sholápur District ... 8
  Suggestions for reform in the constitution and powers of civil and criminal courts 4
Land Revenue: Comments on the scheme of allowing discount on instalments of — paid in advance 9
Postal matters: Disapproval of the contemplated abolition of the system of transmitting money orders by telegraph 13
Public buildings: Disapproval of the policy of condemning — on the reports of whimsical officers 12
Public Service: Expression of opinion that Dr. Maconachie, Opthalmic Surgeon, Sir J. J. Hospital, should be prevented from serving as medical adviser to a Life Assurance Company in Bombay ... 11
Want of rain: Distress in the districts of Sholápur and Ahmednagar on account of— 9
Weather reports: Complaint that no information regarding the number of persons attacked by cholera in the district of Dhárwár is available in the recent — published by Government 10

PART II.—Local Self-government—

Rules for Municipal elections: Comments on the — recently published in the Sind Official Gazette 13

PART III.—Education—

Engineering College at Roorkee:
  Approval of the withdrawal by the Secretary of State of the resolution excluding Eurasians from the— 14
  Disapproval of ditto 15
Female education: Comments on the question of encouragement to— ... 15
University of Bombay: Expression of opinion that the authorities of the — should publish reports of the meetings of the Senate ... 15

PART IV.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway Company: Request to the — to erect a station near the Indála Tank 16
G. I. P. Railway Company: Complaint regarding the disregard shown by the — to the necessity of constructing overbridges on the level-crossings on their line 16

PART IV.—Railways—continued.

Railways in Sind: Advisability of extending the Ahmedabad-Wadhwán line of railways as far as Hyderabad ... ...
Report of the Special Committee of the House of Commons on Indian railways: Comments on the— ... ...

PART V.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad: Complaint regarding the mismanagement in the municipality of— ... ...
Bombay:
  Comments on the general character of the proceedings of the Municipal Corporation and the Town Council of— ... ...
  Complaint against the Assessment Department of the — Municipality.
Karáchi: Necessity of a road between the Camp and Gharikáta in— ...
Sholápur: Complaint against the Municipal Secretary of— ...
Surat: Complaint regarding the sale of rancid ghee and oil in the bazárs of— ... ...

PART VI.—Native States—

Dánta: Complaint regarding the inconvenience and trouble suffered by the Hindu pilgrims to Ambáji at the hands of the Rána of— ...
Káthiáwár: Complaint that the tours of — officers are a matter of great expense to the princes ... ...
Morvi: Request to the Political Agent of Káthiáwár to help the Thákor of — in constructing a tramway from Morvi to Wadhwán ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 30th August 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
*16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	200
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
22	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*24	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*25	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
26	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*27	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
30	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
31	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
32	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
33	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
34	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
35	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
36	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
37	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*39	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
40	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
41	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
42	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
43	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*44	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
45	„ Mahárásthtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
46	„ Mahárásthtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
47	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
48	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
*49	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
51	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*53	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
54	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*55	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*56	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*58	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
59	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*65	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*69	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also

CON 443

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 30th August 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
*16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	200
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
22	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*24	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*25	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
26	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*27	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
30	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
31	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
32	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
33	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
34	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
35	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
36	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
37	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*39	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
40	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
41	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
42	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
43	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*44	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
45	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
46	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
47	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
48	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
*49	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
51	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*53	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
54	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*55	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*56	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*58	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
59	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*65	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*69	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Ed
	MARA'THI—continued.
70	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly
71	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.
82	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.
83	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.
	GUJARA'TI.
84	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly
85	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily
86	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly
87	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.
*88	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.
89	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily
90	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly
91	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.
92	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly
93	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly
94	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.
95	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly
96	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.
97	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.
98	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.
99	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly
*100	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly
101	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.
*102	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly
103	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily
104	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly
105	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly
*106	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.
*107	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly
108	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-week
109	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly
110	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly
111	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly
*112	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly
113	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.
114	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.
115	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.
*117	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.
*118	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly
119	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterl
124	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly
125	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly
126	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly
127	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.
128	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly
	KA'NARESE.
129	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly
*130	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.
131	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.
132	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.
*133	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.
	SANSKRIT.
*134	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnigh
	URDU.
*135	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly
	SINDI.
139	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Repor which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and th paper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the n
In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that or d) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when th absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well kn with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Gove
the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Points out the necessity for a reform in the governing machinery of India.

Reviewing Mr. Slagg's articles on the subject of real control on Indian affairs by Parliament, the Indian Spectator (1) of the 24th August says:—Though fully agreeing in the statesmanlike view that the only safe policy on which the government of India should be carried on is to govern for the sake of the governed and to judge of the success of that policy by the extent to which the subject populations are educated to dispense with British aid, we are not one of those who long for the day when the British must leave India bag and baggage. Situated as the Indians are, it may be centuries before such a consummation takes place. The writer then dwells at considerable length on the views of Professor Seeley, Mr. J. S. Cotton, Mr. DaCosta, Lord Northbrook, and Mr. Knight on the subject of a scheme for the better government of India and concludes as follows:—We have now shown exhaustively how vital is the urgency for a reform in the Council of India. That reform will be incomplete if it fail in making the new machinery responsible to Parliament for every act. That better government can only be brought about by demanding from time to time of the servants of the Crown here an account of their stewardship is a proposition which will hardly be challenged. In the days of the E. I. Company stock and reckoning were taken every twenty years by means of a Select Committee or Royal Commission. All that has changed, and the twenty-six years that have elapsed since the direct government of India by the Crown have amply shown how great the urgency is for a sort of committee performing similar functions so that the just grievances of Indians may be redressed and the highest aim of the Government of British India may be attained. This can be achieved only by reforming the governing machinery. The defect, and a most serious one, lies there. The object for which Miss Nightingale, Mr. Slagg, Messrs. Digby, Knight and others have been agitating is therefore identical. But each proposes a different remedy. In this article we have endeavoured to the best of our ability to adduce conclusive evidence from the most recent writers on Indian politics to show how imperative is the necessity for a reform, root and branch, in the governing machinery—that initial foundry wherein all legislative and administrative acts are formed for the weal or woe of two hundred and ten millions of Her Majesty's subjects.

Does not approve of the policy of subsidizing the Amir of Cabul by supplies of arms.

The Sind Times (5) of the 22nd August says:—It is really strange that the British Government should go on supplying the Amir of Cabul with money and arms, when he is unable to guarantee the safe passage of a commission of peace through his dominions. The arms sent to the Amir will pass into the hands of his people, whose hostility to the British the Amir cannot overcome. Strange political foresight that arms a fierce and revengeful enemy with murderous weapons, and disarms loyal and peaceful fellow-subjects!

Points out the necessity of exercising strict supervision over the doings of Anglo-Indians.

The Poona Vaibhav (54) of the 24th August says:—Coming events cast their shadows before. We observe a change in the attitude of the rulers towards the ruled. Does a comparison between the treatment accorded to Natives during the early days of the British rule and that now accorded furnish any indications favourable to the future of the British administration of India? Now let us examine who are responsible for this state of things. If there is any danger to the British rule in India from any quarter it is from the Anglo-Indians. If the Indians are oppressed, if they are denied justice, if they are excluded from high administrative posts, nay if they are obliged to starve themselves, it is on account of these Anglo-Indians. Again if the people are now disaffected, if their disaffection hereafter grows wider, if Government in spite of all their wishes are unable to accord just treatment to their subjects, if the latter are not able to obtain their due privileges, nay if Government are subjected to the necessity of losing this empire (which God forbid), the Anglo-Indians must be responsible for every one

Politics and the Public Administration.

Points out the necessity for a reform in the governing machinery of India.

Reviewing Mr. Slagg's articles on the subject of real control on Indian affairs by Parliament, the Indian Spectator (1) of the 24th August says:—Though fully agreeing in the statesmanlike view that the only safe policy on which the government of India should be carried on is to govern for the sake of the governed and to judge of the success of that policy by the extent to which the subject populations are educated to dispense with British aid, we are not one of those who long for the day when the British must leave India bag and baggage. Situated as the Indians are, it may be centuries before such a consummation takes place. The writer then dwells at considerable length on the views of Professor Seeley, Mr. J. S. Cotton, Mr. DaCosta, Lord Northbrook, and Mr. Knight on the subject of a scheme for the better government of India and concludes as follows:—We have now shown exhaustively how vital is the urgency for a reform in the Council of India. That reform will be incomplete if it fail in making the new machinery responsible to Parliament for every act. That better government can only be brought about by demanding from time to time of the servants of the Crown here an account of their stewardship is a proposition which will hardly be challenged. In the days of the E. I. Company stock and reckoning were taken every twenty years by means of a Select Committee or Royal Commission. All that has changed, and the twenty-six years that have elapsed since the direct government of India by the Crown have amply shown how great the urgency is for a sort of committee performing similar functions so that the just grievances of Indians may be redressed and the highest aim of the Government of British India may be attained. This can be achieved only by reforming the governing machinery. The defect, and a most serious one, lies there. The object for which Miss Nightingale, Mr. Slagg, Messrs. Digby, Knight and others have been agitating is therefore identical. But each proposes a different remedy. In this article we have endeavoured to the best of our ability to adduce conclusive evidence from the most recent writers on Indian politics to show how imperative is the necessity for a reform, root and branch, in the governing machinery—that initial foundry wherein all legislative and administrative acts are formed for the weal or woe of two hundred and ten millions of Her Majesty's subjects.

Does not approve of the policy of subsidizing the Amir of Cabul by supplies of arms.

The Sind Times (5) of the 22nd August says:—It is really strange that the British Government should go on supplying the Amir of Cabul with money and arms, when he is unable to guarantee the safe passage of a commission of peace through his dominions. The arms sent to the Amir will pass into the hands of his people, whose hostility to the British the Amir cannot overcome. Strange political foresight that arms a fierce and revengeful enemy with murderous weapons, and disarms loyal and peaceful fellow-subjects!

Points out the necessity of exercising strict supervision over the doings of Anglo-Indians.

The Poona Vaibhav (54) of the 24th August says:—Coming events cast their shadows before. We observe a change in the attitude of the rulers towards the ruled. Does a comparison between the treatment accorded to Natives during the early days of the British rule and that now accorded furnish any indications favourable to the future of the British administration of India? Now let us examine who are responsible for this state of things. If there is any danger to the British rule in India from any quarter it is from the Anglo-Indians. If the Indians are oppressed, if they are denied justice, if they are excluded from high administrative posts, nay if they are obliged to starve themselves, it is on account of these Anglo-Indians. Again if the people are now disaffected, if their disaffection hereafter grows wider, if Government in spite of all their wishes are unable to accord just treatment to their subjects, if the latter are not able to obtain their due privileges, nay if Government are subjected to the necessity of losing this empire (which God forbid), the Anglo-Indians must be responsible for every one of these results. If any complaints of oppression are made at the present day they are made against Anglo-Indians. If anybody alleges that immorality is fast spreading among the rulers, the allegation must be taken to have reference to the Anglo-Indians. On the whole the Anglo-Indians wish ill of the British Government and therefore resort to acts of the nature above indicated. Government however seem to countenance their acts. Government connive at the offences of these people, courts of justice deal leniently with them, and the authorities shrink from reforms which however beneficial to the country are opposed by the Anglo-Indians. The recent case in which one Mr. Webb, who was charged with having assaulted a person and confined his wife in his cabin where she died, was discharged by the Calcutta High Court with a fine of Rs. 100, is an instance in point, the particulars of which cannot but make every human being shudder. To show leniency to an offender of Mr. Webb's stamp is to court disaster. Do not our administrators recollect that the death of Lucretia was enough to bring down a royal family like that of the Tarquins? The Indian people may lack the spirit which characterized the Romans, or they may not be as impatient as the latter, or their loyalty may be very firm, and singular cases like that above referred to may not be enough to disturb their equanimity; but when such instances recur frequently and when it becomes clear that Government encourage such acts by conniving at them, the result is difficult to anticipate. We think that the consequences of such a state of things will be very serious. It is therefore advisable that Government should take due note of this warning and recognise the necessity of consulting the interests of the ruled and of exercising strict supervision on the enemies who obstruct the stability of the empire.

Comments on the case in which one Mr. Webb, who was charged with having assaulted a person and confined his wife in his cabin where she died, was discharged by the Calcutta High Court with a fine of Rs. 100.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 24th August says:—The more one looks into the particulars of the Webb case, the more is he struck at the complete and scandalous failure of justice in this matter. The Magistrate himself had declared that the object of Mr. Webb in confining the coolie woman was dastardly, and yet he was fined Rs. 100; and Her Majesty's High Court of Judicature at Calcutta declared that the fine was adequate and that no case had been made out by the Appellate Judge for the High Court's interference. We must say with our Bengalee contemporaries that this case is a typical one, and many more such cases will dim the prestige of British justice.

Complaint against the conduct of European soldiers at Sátára in a certain case.

The Bodh Sudhákar (23) of the 27th August says:—The European soldiers of Sátára have invented a new way of amusement. They introduce lighted matches into the head-loads of hay carried by the road and conceal themselves behind trees to see the fun. Recently we witnessed a scene of this kind and we advised the sufferer to lodge a complaint with the Huzur Deputy Collector, but he would not do so, nor would he mention his name and the name of his village, but said that he would fain lose his head-load instead of subjecting himself to the trouble of criminal prosecution. These sufferings of the poor are traceable to the defects in the administration of Government. Thanks to the administrators and their laws! Ye who sing the praises of the British Government and discredit the Marátha rule, take note of this case!

Comments on the administration of the Forest Department.

In an article headed "Forest Conservancy," the Mahrátta (2) of the 24th August says:—The Secretary of State for India is rather taken aback with the prompt and energetic zeal of the officers of the Forest Department. From his remarks on the report of the department for 1882-83 he evidently appears to think that their zeal has gone rather too much beyond even the most sanguine hopes of the highest authorities in Indian affairs. He does not say so plainly, because that would damp the hearts of the zealous officers—a result by all means to be deprecated. Moreover it is not in the Anglo-Indian bureaucratic policy to snub an officer for over-zeal, especially when this over-zeal is so highly beneficial to the State as to throw every year in its coffers something like nine lákhs of rupees. We, however, who have no such traditional policy to keep, may be allowed to suggest that the departmental officers should now be told to put a check on their departmental zeal. In their anxiety to show themselves off in the annual reports the forest officers have been rather blind to supplying the legitimate wants of the agriculturists. The law on the point has all along contemplated the necessity of providing for the wants of the people. The Secretary of State, it is said, has expressed in general terms his approval of the measures taken by the department "to supply the people with the means of obtaining wood for fuel and agricultural purposes." Government have given certain distinct pledges in this matter, and we are glad to see that the State Secretary recognises the solemn necessity of fulfilling those pledges. We are disposed to think that the officers of the department do not show the same laudable desire to fulfil those pledges. Forest after forest has been reserved. Even the hill slopes in private occupation are all being included in forests. By a pure and simple notification in the official Gazette lands containing forests are reserved. The result of such an indiscriminate reservation is a great diminution of private forests. It may perhaps be said without much error that the Forest Department has a tendency to monopolize this important branch of trade. We therefore propose that this tendency towards monopoly should be checked, as it renders the people dependent on Government. The forests are mostly of the "reserved" kind. The so-called gáiráns (grazing lands) have also been partially reserved, and almost all places from which the villagers used to get their supply of fuel and wood for agricultural purposes have been shut against them. The natural wants of the people must, however, be supplied, and the consequence has been that numbers of trees in private lands have been felled down. The work of destruction, stopped in one direction, is being carried on in another with full vigour. No method of rearing forests can be called perfect or complete which does not make due provision for fulfilling the natural wants of the people. They have been, in this Presidency at least, hemmed in from all directions. We therefore recommend the immediate opening of all village gáiráns for the free use of the villagers without any restrictions and the gradual creation of village forests. We have already on more occasions than one remarked that the department ought to make free grants of wood more liberally than has been hitherto done. It is only in extreme cases, when the distress is too palpable, when for instance the whole of a village or the majority of houses have been destroyed, that such free grants are made. This is not just. The people have been accustomed from times immemorial to use the forests freely. Now that these time-honoured privileges have been curtailed, Government are bound to make free grants on a more liberal scale. The department has been quietly raising its revenue. The officers assert that even now the limit has not been reached. In one year the increase in the revenue amounted to Rs. 2,62,264. Now we ask if the Forest Department was first started with the object of making money. Ought not the department to show more liberality than it has hitherto done? The department tries to show that the increase in the revenue was due to greater receipts on account of grass lands. Now to our unsophisticated minds this does not appear to account sufficiently for the large increase in the revenue. Is it not rather owing to the fact that the department sells the use of the grass lands to the highest bidder? These lands are of great use to the agriculturists and others. Hence they try to possess them at the price which competition determines. These lands were formerly allowed to the cultivators at a reasonable price. Why should they not be allowed on the same terms now? Why should the money-making tendency of the department be allowed to grow? The Secretary of State requests Government to keep a watchful eye on the working of the department. We are glad to see that the complaints against the severity of the forest laws have reached the Secretary of State. This rigour ought to be remedied. Government have already taken steps, we hear, to mitigate the rigour of the rules under the Forest Act by limiting their application to those districts and to those articles of forest produce only in respect of which strict measures of conservancy are necessary. We hope they will also consider our suggestions. [The Arunodayă (18) of the same date expresses similar sentiments regarding the tendency of Government officers to monopolize forests.]

Suggests a reduction in the stamp duty charged for applications for patents.

The Khándesh Vaibhav (41) of the 22nd August says that the stamp duty of Rs. 100 prescribed for applications for patents is almost prohibitive and must be reduced. For a similar application in England a fee of £1 is charged. Looking to the present state of arts and industries in England and India it would appear proper that the scale of fees should be reversed. In the present fallen condition of India it is necessary that Government should encourage inventions by rewarding them, but it is very strange that instead of following that course they should have clogged inventions by means of this heavy burden.

Makes suggestions in the matter of nominations to the Legislative Council.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 25th August says:—The original period of two years for which the Honourable Ráo Báhádur Khanderáo Vishvanáth Ráste and the Honourable Badrudin Tyabji were appointed members of the Bombay Legislative Council has well nigh expired, and there will be soon two vacancies in the Legislative Council which must be filled up. In connection with the appointments of Native Additional Members of the Legislative Council we must first of all admit that many of them are as a general rule quite unexceptionable. For instance no one—not even the most fastidious—can find fault with such appointments as those of Ráo Sáheb Mandlik, Mr. Badrudin Tyabji, and Mr. Telang. We shall even go further and say that even if such appointments were made by popular election better selections could not be made. All this is true, but none the less the system of nomination is faulty and unsound, because under it there is no guarantee that the fittest selection will always and in all cases be made. It is only under a system of nomination that the appointment of a magnificent nobody like the Honourable Ráo Báhádur Khanderáo Vishvanáth Ráste is possible. Heaven only knows what his claims and qualifications to be a member of the Legislative Council representing the Hindu community are. There are to be found persons in this world—a large class in themselves—who cannot be expected to represent even themselves, much less anybody else, because of their possessing less than average intelligence. We have not the slightest hesitation in putting Mr. Ráste in this class. He is not a representative man in any sense whatever, much less has he any influence over his countrymen. He is absolutely unable to command any following whatever, for he does not belong to the real aristocracy of the land, nor has he any education worth the name. What is he then? We can only answer that question by saying that he is a "magnificent nobody." His appointment two years ago was simply scandalous to a degree, and excited such ridicule in every quarter, official or non-official, that if Sir James Fergusson had been aware of it he would have been astonished; for we have not such a low opinion of human nature as to believe that Sir James could have been aware of all this and yet could have sanctioned such an appointment deliberately and wilfully. We know of several high and influential European officers of Government who expressed their surprise to us at that most scandalous appointment of the "red Sardár." We therefore earnestly entreat Sir James not to reappoint Mr. Ráste. Mr. Badrudin Tyabji deserves renomination for an additional period of two years. We do not believe that there are two opinions on that point. But public opinion is quite unanimous as to Mr. Ráste and his qualifications. We want a really efficient member, and happily there are Native gentlemen who can worthily fill the vacancy with credit to themselves and to Government alike. For instance, there is Ráo Báhádur Nána Moroji, whose selection will give universal satisfaction. We can mention other names, if necessary. As to the appointment of the young Thákor from Káthiáwár, we really know nothing of his qualifications and claims to have such a distinguished honour conferred upon him. But we must certainly object to such appointments on the ground that, even if intellectually and otherwise qualified, such persons have no intimate knowlege of the people in legislating for whom they are to assist, nor have they much interest in those people,—we mean such knowledge and such interest as can make them efficient and safe legislators. They accordingly stand in a very awkward and false position. We hope, however, that the time is not far distant when the reform of our Legislative Council will force itself upon the attention of the authorities.

Does not approve of the nomination of Mr. Naylor to the Legislative Council and suggests the name of Mr. Navroji Fardunji.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 24th August says:—The Legal Remembrancer is, it is said, to be appointed to the Legislative Council to help in the enactment of a new Municipal Act, and the English dailies think highly of the measure. It seems to us that if improvement of our municipal machinery be the object, the gentleman whose assistance ought to be asked is our distinguished fellow-citizen, Mr. Navroji Fardunji. The Remembrancer, by virtue of his office, does all he can to prepare our Bills, and in the Council his presence will only add one more vote to the official majority.

Comments on the Government resolution on the subject of allowing discount on land revenue instalments paid in advance.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 25th August says:—To induce thrift among cultivators and to avoid accumulations of arrears of land revenue Government propose to encourage payments in advance by allowing discount thereon. At the outset we cannot help remarking that the idea is altogether a very happy one and bids fair to prove in the long run more truly beneficial to our agricultural classes than many of the other remedies proposed and tried. The chronic impecuniosity of agriculturists is now generally recognised as a hard fact, and while philanthropists are busy devising schemes for delivering the ryot from his poverty, Government are at their wits' end how to prevent a deficit in their chief source of revenue. Whether in years of plenty or in years of scarcity, whether the weight of assessment is light or heavy, whether Government give facilities or multiply penalties, the average condition of the ryot is one of want. Out of this perpetual hand-to-mouth living how the ryots should be enabled to live a life of ease and comfort, and how Government should be assured of their revenue, is one of the most difficult problems of the day. Government have for long tried coercion and force. These have failed. Now begins the age of conciliation and encouragement. It is this spirit of elevation and enlightenment which is the chief distinctive feature of Lord Ripon's measures, and it is out of the same motives of policy that the present resolution proceeds. We agree with His Excellency in not being "sanguine," but we do think that the measure, if worked well, is capable of being extremely useful both to Government and the ryots. The one condition of its usefulness is that the ryots should be induced to avail themselves of its benefits, and in settling the details every care must be taken to increase its attractiveness and to facilitate its working. To make the measure more useful and attractive we think the unit of instalments for which discount may be allowed may advantageously be reduced to a lower fraction than half an instalment, and that whether the payment is made for the current year or the following years. The rate of discount may likewise be increased, considering that the Government pay 4 or 4½ per cent. on their loans. The restriction as to payments for two years should be removed and the system should as far as possible be made uniform for the whole Presidency. The rate of discount ought to increase with every increase of years for which payments are made in advance. The higher the rate of discount the greater will be the inducement to make payments in advance. In thus proposing more liberal terms than Government seem disposed to give we do not ignore the fact that the allowance of discount means the remission of so much revenue in favour of agriculturists to the detriment of the general tax-payer. But though Government have thus apparently to forego a part of their dues, no real injury will be done to the general tax-payer in so far as Government may earn more by the advance payments than the loss caused by the discount. They may invest the sums on productive public works and thus be saved the necessity of borrowing. Government are sure to find some profitable investment for whatever amount may come into their hands under this scheme, and thus will make up all loss of revenue. In fact there need be no fear of any excessive accumulations. However attractive the terms offered by Government, it is only the rich landowners who will be prompt in securing their benefit. The average ryot, the person for whose behoof the measure is framed, will, whatever his wish may be, rarely have the means to avail himself of its benefit. Ordinarily the standing complaint against him is that he is a very irregular paymaster. The time of paying in the instalment is mostly so inconvenient to him that he has to resort to the sáwkár to tide over the difficulty. If sáwkár's assistance is necessary to pay the instalment due, it is scar possible that the ryot should be able to find any money for advance payme Government cannot be asked to offer at the outside more than 4 per c discount (if so much), and it will not pay any sáwkár to advance money lower rate. Under the present circumstances therefore there is small cha of success for the measure. If the ryot can be induced to make any adva payments at all, it must be out of his excess earnings in a good year. Th earnings must be small, and they can only be reached if the ryot can pay th in immediately after he gets them. As Government are so solicitous to h the ryot they must not grudge further concessions so as to put it within power of the ryot to help himself. The condition of the ryots is quite exc tional, and it is not, we think, unreasonable to ask Government to make s concessions as may be fairly made without doing serious injustice or causing to the other subjects of Her Majesty. Besides the concessions above sugges there is one which Government could make without any loss to themselves with the greatest convenience to the ryot, viz., that the time of payment sho be so fixed as to enable the ryot to pay from the produce of his crop, not mortgaging it with a sáwkár as now, but by selling it in the market. If time is so regulated there is a chance of the ryot's having in his hands m money than what may be necessary to cover the instalment then due, and may be persuaded to deposit in the Government treasury some future ins ments or portions of instalments. In prosperous years there is some chanc the ryot's being in possession of funds above his requirements, though e then he has to face a fall in prices; but such as the funds may be they only be secured if he can pay them in forthwith. Not only must the pres time be changed, but greater latitude as to time must be allowed. In sh the demands of a civilized creditor, the Government, must be suited to means and intelligence of the uncivilized debtor. It is the rigorous exaction an unreasonable time of punctual payment enforced by a penalty of 97 cent. on default that does more harm to the ryot than the actual weight of assessment, and if a reform is effected in this direction a great step will h been taken towards the accomplishment of the object aimed at by resolution. Other steps necessary for the success of the measure are giving of wide publicity to the intentions of Government as regards measure and the explanation to the ryot of its true import. Not o in districts liable to famine but all over the Presidency the people m be "advised and encouraged to pay in as much as they can of the proceeds of abundant harvest at the time when they are realized." A great deal depend upon the personal exertions and influence of district officers. If ryots are once exhorted and induced to practise thrift and self-denial, advantage of a remission of revenue will not be lost upon them. If this sche proves successful the gain will be great. Not only will the ryot be relieved his neediness, but the Government treasury will be brimming with mon There will be no occasion for remissions, bad debts, and accumulation of rears. Government may even get enough funds to avoid borrowing. Above "a direct premium will be given upon providence." In bad years the ry will be secure in their holdings by virtue of their advance payments in g years. Thus being free to enjoy all their crops, famines will not press heavily upon them as when they have to pay the assessment. Governm will likewise be saved from the blame of cruel exactions and the loss fr remissions, such as signalized the administration of Sir Richard Temple, wh in spite of sanguine protestations, strenuous efforts and merciless exacti eight lákhs of rupees had to be written off. These results are sure to foll the successful working of this new experiment. On the earnest direction of Government and the sympathetic co-operation of district officers depends success of the measure. Government have already evinced considerable terest in its success, and we trust they will in future lend it their unflagg support. One thing is certain that the resolution marks an epoch in history of land administration in this Presidency. It shows that the of coercion has passed away and that of persuasion has dawned upon us. trust the latter era will further develop itself and ultimately prove the wisd of the statesman to whose genius India owes such happy projects as the presen resolution. [The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 24th August expresses approv of the policy of Government regarding land revenue as exemplified by th resolution regarding the allowance of discount on revenue instalments paid i advance and that regarding the survey and settlement of Gujarát.]

Comments on the Government resolution on the subject of allowing discount on instalments of land revenue paid in advance.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 24th August says:—The Bombay Government is not sanguine that the measure will meet wit any large success. Nor do we see how it can b For, in the first place, the discount proposed to b allowed is not sufficiently high. At the best it represents an interest of 12 per cent. per annum, whilst i some cases it amounts to not more than about 6 pe cent. So long as a higher rate of interest rules in the neighbourhood it canno be the interest of a prudent ryot to pay the Government assessment in advanc when probably he can employ his money at greater advantage elsewhere, eithe in giving small loans to others or in paying off his own debts which must b carrying a higher rate of interest. Secondly, the scheme takes for granted tha the cultivator may have at some time or other during the year enough in hi hands to pay not only the current year's assessment but the whole or at leas half of the next year's in addition to what may be required to maintain himsel and family. Speaking generally this is a somewhat bold assumption to make and if you take the creditor and his demands into consideration, you canno well say that it is not. In any fair estimate of the means of the ryot th creditor, who has long been advancing funds to pay off the expenses of cultivation and often of maintenance, cannot be ignored. In these circumstances we d not believe that the measure will be availed of to any extent in the Presidenc generally. In the parts of the country, however, subject to violent fluctuation in produce on account of capricious rainfall it may be the part of a pruden occupant of land to make payment of the Government assessment in advanc For one year of good harvests may be followed by another of great scarcity an drive the ryot to his wits' ends to provide for bare maintenance, still mor to pay the assessment. Except therefore in such places, we cannot suppose th scheme will offer any inducement or be at all availed of, and there too th benefits of it will have to be specially impressed upon the minds of the people There is moreover just a likelihood of the measure giving rise to frauds o the part of the village collectors of revenue. Sufficient care will have to b taken to guard against them. On the whole we do not expect much out of thi measure. But there is nothing like trying. It is possible that an experienc of its working may induce the Government to raise the rate of discount an lead to other benefits. Not the least of these will be the fresh insight into th real condition of the ryots which the scheme may furnish to impartial witnesses. We therefore earnestly wish that it will meet with a fair trial. [Th Mahrátta (2) of the 24th August says:—The proposals are so novel and appea so very beneficial that we welcome the trial. The Government intend also t allow greater discount in exceptional cases. We think that even with the ver moderate rate of discount the scheme deserves to succeed. We shall therefor watch it with interest. The Native Opinion (11), the Poona Vaibhav (54 and the Satyă Shodhak (62) of the 24th August and the Dnyán Prakásh (9) o the 25th idem express sentiments similar to those of the Subodh Patrika. Th Native Opinion and the Satyă Shodhak urge that no reforms that do not touc the high assessments charged on lands are likely to prove beneficial to th ryots. The Satyă Shodhak advises Government to give an assurance to th ryots that the scheme will not interfere with their claims to remissions o land revenue in times of scarcity.]

Does not approve of the policy of assessing sub-soil water enunciated in the resolution recently published by Government on the subject of the revision settlement of Jhálod in Panch Mahâls.

The Kesari (40) of the 26th August says:—In the recently published resolution regarding the assessment of sub-soil water i revenue settlements an attempt has been made t prove that Government have a right to levy a tax o sub-soil water, but we do not think the attempt ha been successful. If a tax of this kind were levie agriculturists would not dig wells and a deterioratio in the produce of the soil and consequent loss to th people would be the result. Government can receive in some indirect wa share of the increased profits accruing on account of the exemption of w from assessment. [The Native Opinion (11) of the 24th August expre similar sentiments. The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 21st August says :— think the statement as to the aims and objects of Government in the matte the application of the new principle ought to prove satisfactory and reassur to the intelligent public.]

Draws attention to the oppressive working of the A'bkári Act.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 27th August says :—We humbly entr Sir James Fergusson's attention to the most pite complaints about the A'bkári Act. We are quite s that if Sir James will kindly devote one or two d to the perusal of the papers in connection with entire ábkári question, his sympathising nature will prompt him to im diately issue a resolution for putting a stop to the bewailings and suffering thousands of men. It is very natural that he should wish to show that Government exchequer has been in a prosperous condition during his regi but he should at the same time take into consideration the distress cause the people by the adoption of unjust means for increasing the revenue. Pritchard, the A'bkári Commissioner, who is very anxious to increase the G ernment revenue, may hereafter be rewarded with a title; but it is now h time to check his growing ambition, for the wails of the poor melt the heart many a man. We are quite prepared to prove by facts and figures that the come from ábkári in the island of Bombay will this year be 4 lákhs of rup and not 7 lákhs, as Government exultingly seem to suppose. Perhaps it be news to Sir James that 5,000 toddy-drawers have given up their busi and that some of them have left Bombay for their native country. Some them have with a rueful heart adopted other callings, while others still ren unemployed and suffer distress with their families. We beg to assure James that this is no strike but merely an attempt to escape from oppress If Sir James had lived here long and had become familiar with the people, he were a native of this country, he would have known that toddy drawn f cocoanut trees is largely used by the poorer classes in an unfermented st With this knowledge he would never have sanctioned the punishment of a per for selling toddy drawn from cocoanut trees. Has anybody ever heard of s oppression as that involved in the order that toddy drawn from cocoanut t should not be turned to any use except that of liquor-making? Máhim great toddy-producing district, and it is easy to understand the extent of de ciation in the value of property in that district caused by the imposition of oppressive restriction. Another illustration of the severity of the work of the A'bkári Act is given in the Bombay Gazette, and if its perusal does produce any effect on the mind of Sir James, it may safely be said that ther no one who will pay attention to the complaints of the poor in Bombay. writer here refers to the complaint made by a correspondent of the Bom Gazette of the 26th August regarding the loss suffered by the proprietor of refreshment-room at the Nándgaon station by his having been obliged to several bottles of European liquors for inspection by the local Mámlatdár, proceeds :—Is it not the height of tyranny that an A'bkári Inspector, of a g however low, should visit a liquor-shop, cause all wine bottles to be ope and return, comforting himself with the idea that he has done faithful servic Mr. Pritchard, leaving the shopkeeper a ruined man? We are aware of pernicious effects of spirituous drinks on the poorer classes and we wish to the consumption of liquors diminished as much as possible, but it cannot be that the Bombay Government is actuated in this matter with benevolent moti [A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (115) of the 24th August, writing f Kolak, complains of the heavy duty imposed on the drawing of toddy from trees in the Surat District, and says that if oppression like this continues Gov ment will in the course of the next ten years find it difficult to recover the revenue assessment from poor ryots, most of whom are proprietors of date tr Government will then adopt stringent measures to recover the assessment, result of which will be nothing but ruin to this industrial class of to drawers.]

Discusses the question of the necessity of legislation to prevent infant-marriages.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 25th August, in an article he marriages," says:—Although the ques marriages, on which Mr. B. M. Malabá an instructive memorandum, seems at involve considerations of a social and re ter, we think that the country has now arrived at that stage effort on the part of Government and the educated section of the munity might be made towards the gradual abolition of the custo fringing the principle on which British rule in India is founded should not interfere with the religious and social customs of the evil results of infant-marriages being indubitably clear and ed opinion being ready to acknowledge them, the question arises wh be wise for Government to interfere and adopt such measures as end to the physical and moral degeneracy which is fast eating the people. It seems to us that prohibitive legislation is not matter of this kind; nor would it be prudent to let things alone the time when the people should for themselves be able to recog of a change in the present state of things. There is of course th favour of prohibitive legislation in regard to this question, that i duties of the State to protect the interests, moral and otherwise, under its jurisdiction, and if they are married by their guardians they are not able to judge for themselves, they should on arrivi discretion have the option of breaking the tie. But a law to th be looked upon with jealousy by the masses as a direct interfer customs and practices and lead to discontent. Parents would i be deterred from marrying their children early. If the people a at all, they must be reached indirectly by means which would h ance of coercion, but would at the same time serve the purpose the evil practice as far as possible; and any attempt which may b the eradication of the practice should be such as to affect mainl who are intelligent enough to understand the object of Gover by these two conditions, the proposal that the reform should the Educational Department and the Universities seems to us t practical and sound. Candidates for degrees should be admitt are bachelors, as in some of the universities no candidate is examinations unless he has undergone vaccination. The Gove will in the long run be composed more or less of men educ and schools, and Government are entitled to say that none sho versity degree who has married early in life and has incurred sibilities before he has prepared himself to discharge them. question has been so prominently brought before the public by we think Lord Ripon would add to the reforms for which the already indebted to him, were he to signalise his career by call both from the leading Natives and Europeans throughout the proposal that the Universities should undertake the reform. belief that educated Native opinion will be mostly in favour [The Dnyánodayă (8) of the 28th August says;—Government a to begin some legislation to help this reform, and public sentim enlightened to support such a course. If we wait till Hinduis demand the reform we shall have to wait for an age. Hence directing force of Government is needed, and needed now. I of the reform will ask for Government help in the matter, we Government will take some action.]

A suggestion to the Factory Act Committee.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 28th August says:—T Committee has framed nearly 125 qu to witnesses coming before it, and the vantages of extending the existing tirely depend on the answers to these questions. We should know the parties who will call upon persons to give evidence. only who are selected by the Committee be allowed to give e or will everybody willing to do so be allowed to give his te perienced persons wishing to give evidence should of course n but experts willing to do so without being called upon by the Committee shoul be permitted to appear as witnesses. Though the number of questions prepare is large, some important ones may have been omitted from the list. Witnesse should therefore be allowed to give their opinion on matters which may no have any connection with these questions.

Points out the necessity of holding Fine Arts Exhibitions in different parts of the Bombay Presidency.

The same newspaper of the 27th August, in referring to the opening of th Fine Arts Exhibition at Poona by His Excellency th Governor, points out the advantages of having suc exhibitions held at different times in the principa cities in this Presidency, urges the claims of th city of Bombay to hold such an exhibition, an remarks:—It is necessary that Government and the leading Native an European citizens of Bombay should strive to have an exhibition on a sma scale held in Bombay, as is done at Poona and Simla. This exhibition shoul consist as much as possible of the industrial products of this Presidency. Ther is greater necessity of creating a taste for manual arts amongst Natives tha amongst Europeans, and one of the best means of attaining that object is t hold exhibitions. Owing to want of encouragement the condition of Nativ arts has become deplorable. The majority of exhibitors and prize-winners the exhibitions now held are Europeans. Natives could take a similar pa if drawing were taught them from their boyhood along with other subjects study, as is the case with Europeans. Unfortunately nothing of the kind done for them either in Government or private schools in Bombay as in oth places. The writer then deplores the condition of Indian schools of art a says that drawing should be taught in every school, as is done in Englan France, Germany and other parts of Europe. As long as drawing is not taug in all the high schools in Bombay, and as long as the local School of Art is n placed on a better footing, no improvement in this respect can be expect from the Natives. The same newspaper also points out the necessity of holdi at all military stations soldiers' industrial exhibitions like those annually he at Poona, and requests the attention of the military authorities to the matter.

Says that the records of the Agricultural Department should be kept in Maráthi.

The Belgaum Samáchár (21) of the 25th August does not approve of t sentiments expressed by the Indu Prakásh (10) of t 18th August and reported at pages 10 and 11 of t Report on Native Papers for the week ending 23 August 1884 that the adoption of Maráthi as t language of the Agricultural Department throughout the Presidency is calc lated to cause inconvenience to the people of the Kánarese-speaking districts Belgaum, Dhárwár, Kaládgi and Kánara. The Samáchár says that scarcely a persons will be found in these districts who do not understand Maráthi, a adds that the Agricultural Department should keep its records in that langua

Suggests that a Native graduate should be deputed to England to learn the science of agriculture.

The Kesari (40) of the 26th August says:—A suggestion is on the car that a civil servant should be deputed to England the expense of the State to receive a training in science of agriculture in order to provide for contingency of Mr. Ozanne, the present head of Agricultural Department, going on leave. We s gest that a Native B.A or M.A. should be deputed to England, and after pa ing the necessary examinations should be rewarded by the post of assistant the Director of Agriculture being conferred on him. This suggestion has t recommending feature about it that while involving less expenditure it will able a native of this Presidency to acquire a knowledge of the science of ag culture, and it is to be hoped that it will engage the attention of Governmen

Disapproves of the policy of marring the prospects of graduates in the revenue service by yielding too much to the demands of old servants.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 28th August says:—It appears that the de entertained by Government to encourage graduate enter the revenue service by conferring high posts them has abated and Government do not much c for them. Some time ago a writer to a daily conte porary complained that the grant of fresh concessi to the old members of the department served to ret the promotion of the new men. If this be the case it is the duty of Governm to remove all cause for complaint. We do not advocate a policy of tramplin the rights of old servants, but at the same time we think it undesirable t throw obstacles in the way of new men by yielding too much to the demand of old men.

Grievances of watandár village kulkarnis.

The Shiváji (65) of the 22nd August dwells on the miseries of watandá village kulkarnis. In former times these distric officers received cash allowances in addition to th produce of the lands allotted to them, but their income has now been very much reduced on account of the queer system according to which their remuneration is calculated. In former times they levied cess call "Ghugri" upon the agriculturists, but that cess has now been abolishe While their income has thus been reduced to the lowest possible limits thei duties have been largely increased. Looking to the fact that Government officer have been convinced of the soundness of the principle that low pay means ba work, it is strange that the case of the kulkarnis should not have attracted thei attention. Recently Government have started an examination with the view o securing a body of efficient kulkarnis. While Government thus consult thei own interests, is it not unjust that they should not attend to the demands of th kulkarnis?

Disapproves of the reply sent by Government to the first memorial on the subject of the inconvenience suffered by passengers by tram-cars in Bombay.

The Gujaráti (99) of the 24th August, in referring to the reply sent by th Bombay Government to the first memorial on th subject of the inconvenience suffered by passengers b tram-cars in Bombay, says:—The Bombay Tramwa Company has gone the length of utterly disregardin public comforts and there is no hope of any improvement. It is to be regretted that Mr. Kittredge, th Manager of the Company, should be so indifferent t the comforts of passengers, and it is more to be regretted that the Government of Sir James Fergusson should protect the interests of the Compan instead of paying attention to the comforts of the travelling public. It woul have been strange if the Bombay Government, which is always crotchety, ha done better in this matter. Its reply is evasive. [The Yajdán Parast (128) c the same date says that the reply is very disappointing. Instead of affordin relief the Government has on the contrary increased the inconveniences suffere by the public by sanctioning the new bye-laws.]

Complains of distress in Sholápur.

The Kalpataru (37) of the 24th August says:—Rain still holds off. Ther is now a regular famine. Corn is selling at the ra of 10 sers and the prices of fodder have run up co siderably. The agriculturists have no stores to fa back upon, while the money-lenders do not accommodate them with loan They are therefore being starved. The rates of wages have also fallen.

Suggests that a special officer should be deputed to relieve the sufferers from cholera in the Bádámi Táluka.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (33) of Kaládgi of the 24th Augu complains that scarcity of rain and consequent sca city of fodder and cholera have combined to mal the whole táluka of Bádámi miserable. The writ points out the necessity of special medical aid, an suggests that the authorities concerned should tal measures for affording speedy relief to those that are falling a prey to th epidemic by deputing a special officer for the purpose.

Says that advertisements relating to public departments must appear in largely circulated papers.

The Din Bandhu (6) of the 24th August complains that the object causing advertisements to be published in newspape is not served because no discrimination is exercised selecting the recipients of such advertisements. Mar of the newspapers in which public advertisemen appear have a very limited circulation either c account of the worthless matter some of them contain or on account of the heav rates of subscription charged for them. To meet this complaint the Din Bandh suggests to the Sheriff of Bombay, the Executive Engineer and the Collector, ar the Commissariat, Postal, Municipal, and Railway Departments the advisabilit of seeing that the advertisements issued by them appear in papers that comman a large circulation.

Approves of the contemplated introduction of the scheme of overland value-payable postal parcels.

The Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the 26th August says:—Leaving out of consideration the interests of a few firms which carry on agency business, the new scheme will confer a great boon on the public. There is no necessity of consulting the interests of a few agency firms, for they will not suffer much by the introduction of the scheme, which will open up a large field for transaction of business. Moreover, the Postal Department will not be able to convey articles of large size, and business in respect of such articles must remain in the hands of these firms. We wish that the scheme were introduced as soon as possible.

Does not approve of the proposal to initiate a system of making payments on account of money-orders without the payees being compelled to go to the post offices.

The Poona Váibhav (54) of the 24th August does not think that the system which it is proposed to inaugurate from the 1st October next and under which payments on account of money-orders will be made to the payees without their being compelled to go to the post offices will be fraught with good results. The system obtaining at present requiring payees to resort to the post offices for receiving payments is not disapproved by the public. The proposed system is likely to cause confusion and inconvenience. The authorities are requested to give due consideration to the matter.

Want of a branch post office in Táluka Pál, Iláka Mahi Kántha.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 28th August points out the inconvenience suffered by the people of Táluka Pál, Iláka Mahi Kántha, by the absenc
of a branch post office, and says that the merchant of that place keep correspondence with those a Bombay, Poona, Ahmedabad and other cities.

Supports the proposal of Colonel Ewart for the organization of a detective police force.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 28th August refers to the suggestions o
Colonel Ewart, Deputy Inspector General of Polic
in the Panjáb, regarding the organization of a de tective police force, and says:—It will be conceded o
all hands that it is imperatively necessary to effect reform in the present constitution of the police force
The assertion of Colonel Ewart that in the absence of a detective force severa crimes remain untraced is literally true. In police investigations in cases o theft the complainants are asked to name persons who are suspected of com plicity in the offence; but nobody ventures to specify individuals lest the table might be turned against him in case the suspicion is not substantiated. Thi leads to the suppression of several offences for which a system of detectiv police is the best remedy. It is not known if Government are prepared t face an expenditure of 6 lákhs on the scheme, but considering that the protec tion of life and property is the first duty of an administration, Governmen must provide funds by effecting retrenchment in all possible quarters. Th necessity of taking precautions to keep detective officers from abusing thei powers must be admitted.

Objects to the levy of a tax upon village cart-men by Rámoshis.

The Shiváji (65) of the 22nd August does not understand why Rámoshi
(a sort of village watchmen) should be allowed to lev
a tax varying from half an anna to one anna on cart
that halt at cart-stands in villages during the nigh
The Rámoshis are a great power in villages and thei capability for evil is admitted on all hands. Government ought not to counte nance such illegal levies. Government have posted policemen in villages wit the view of protecting cartmen from thieves, and it is not understood wh Rámoshis should levy this blackmail and why Government should put up with i

Complaint against the conduct of the Sholápur police on the occasion of the recent affray between the Hindus and the Mahomedans of that city

The Káside Mumbai (108) of the 25th August publishes an account of a recen affray between the Mahomedans and the Hindus Sholápur in which only 48 Mahomedans were arreste
by the local police, and observes:—If the account
true, not only is the conduct of the authorities
Sholápur reprehensible but is worthy of punishmen
We recommend the Government of Sir James Ferguss
to take measures for preventing such affrays betwe

these two communities, which are very common. The conduct of the po in entering the Mahomedan mosque with shoes on and in arresting persons w were then engaged in prayers is exceedingly blameworthy.

Complains against the conduct of the police officers of Sholápur in the matter of a certain dispute between the Hindus and Mahomedans of the place.

In an article headed "The oppression of the police at Sholápur," the Armag (135) of the 29th August says:—We have receiv two letters on reading which we are sorry to find th officers of the British Government remind us of t time of Zuhák (an ancient tyrannical king of Persi The Mahomedans of Sholápur submitted a petition the Collector of the district, in which they pray that the beating of drums, &c., by the Hindus befo the masjid on the occasion of the Shrávan procession might be stopped. T Collector sent the petition to the Faujdár. The latter officer took insult this conduct of the petitioners (because the petition was addressed to the Co lector and not to himself), and was so inimically disposed towards them that brought with him a Hindu Shrávan procession with music near the masjid be longing to Báwa Sáhib Kadiry and pushed the Mahomedans who were passin inside the said masjid and caused stones to be thrown at them by the Hindu Afterwards he falsely represented the case to the Collector and brought him the said masjid. He then put one of his legs with shoes on on a pulpit in th masjid, prepared the case against the Mahomedans, and arrested 48 of the They were kept for two days in custody and were released after taking fro each a bail for five hundred rupees. But as this is a case of insult to th masjid it will cause great excitement in the minds of our Mahomedan brother It is to be hoped that the vakil of the Anjuman-i-Islám of Bombay will try h best on behalf of the Mahomedan community and take revenge on the police offic for his oppression. It is the duty of all the Mahomedans to assist those wh have been arrested, because all of them are poor.

Local Self-government.

Remarks in connection with the constitution and control of local and municipal boards under the new scheme of local self-government.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 24th August says:—While the Local Sel government Bills were under discussion in the loc Legislative Council, we submitted that non-offici presidents, European or Native, might be appoint whenever available. We further suggested that th proportion of members should be a little better tha half and half. If the people are to be allowed manage their own affairs the constitutions of th board ought to be popular. But His Excellency and the honourable gentlema in charge of the Bills "assured" their Native colleagues that the suggestio would be utilised in time under the "elastic" arrangements. We knew at th time that the "assurance" was given in a bonâ fide spirit. But we also kne that for purposes of self-government in the mofussil the Governor and hi responsible Councillors could do nothing against the wishes of the omnipote district autocrat. Apart from other considerations the Collector has so man duties to attend to that, even when well disposed, he can pay but little attentio to the experiment under his care. We are at times reminded by the official that it is not their fault if Natives of education and influence do not impres their presence on the boards. But what is the proportion of educated men They are generally in a hopeless minority. We would once for all advise th officials not to trust too much to this argument. What must be the nature o the education given for the last fifty years and more, when the recipients hav not yet learnt the value of independence? And what must be the nature of th Government which has failed to teach public spirit to men of position? Th educated man and the man of means ought to defy any paid officer in a goo cause. If they fail in this elementary duty, then your systems of education an government must be very un-British indeed. For ourselves we think the tw classes above referred to will do their part well enough even in the mofussi if given a fair opportunity and relieved from oppressive influence. Then agai it has to be remembered that the provisions of the new Act have not yet bee fully enforced. The Collector-president tightly holds the powers given hi under the old Act, and we do not think the average official will making a show of parting with those powers. This is but natural. L municipalities of Surat, Broach, Ahmedabad, and Viramgám. The commissioners is 30, out of which only 12 are elected, and not a fe again under the influence we have above referred to. Thus what we h the trouble to explain ought to satisfy the "friends of local self-gover

Comments in connection with the framing of rules under the Local Self-government Acts.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 25th August says:—Early in th
while commenting upon the Government n
published in the Bombay Government Gaze 17th July, in which rules were promulgated lating the elections under the Bombay Loc Act and other matters connected therewith served that the Bombay Government had violated its plighted fait having first published the rules in a draft form so as to invite critic are now in a position to announce that the point about the preliminar tion of the rules in a draft form for criticism by the people concerne the attention of Government, that there was no intention whatever o its plighted faith, and that the rules already published may be treate rules only, which would be gladly altered if sufficient cause were sho to be hoped that the defect we have already pointed out will be remed mistake is also to be greatly regretted, but we do not wish now to say regarding it, and express a hope that such an unfortunate mistake w repeated. But we cannot refrain from stating in clear and unequiv that so long as a distinct statutory provision laying down the pro question authoritatively is not enacted, such mistakes must freque and lead to unnecessary and avoidable misunderstanding between the a and the people. It was for this very reason that we strongly insis time upon such a definite statutory provision being enacted in the t Self-government Acts. If such an unfortunate mistake as the on noticing is possible so soon after distinct pledges have been vouch that too when those who plighted their word on behalf of themselves successors are in office, he would be a bold man, unfamiliar with hum and its frailties, who would maintain that such mistakes would not quently occur when those who are now in office are replaced by their s
What is possible in one case soon becomes probable, and later on almo Under such circumstances we do not feel the slightest hesitation in i upon the attention of the Bombay Government the paramount ne introducing a small Bill into the local Legislative Council with the remedying this defect. The Bill need consist of only one section ena the Governor in Council shall always publish all rules, regulations and under any of the Acts in a draft form for public criticism and shall pass them before three months shall have passed from the date of suc tion. It is also further necessary that all these rules, regulations an should be translated into the vernacular languages, for it stands to r if the original laws are so translated, all rules, regulations and bye-la when passed, have the force of law should also be translated into all t cular languages. Unless they are so translated, how can people be e criticize them intelligently and to express an opinion on them? That desideratum which ought to be forthwith supplied. Before concludi glad to be able to announce that further rules under the Bombay Lo Act, which are now being considered and framed, will be published i form for public criticism.

Education.

An attack on European manners, customs and household life in connection with the question of giving higher education to females.

The Poona Vaibhav (54) treats in a series of articles the sub propriety or otherwise of imparting higher to females according to the plan suggest promoters of the Poona Female High Scho
that female education is not likely to do go agricultural classes, and proves by means o that half of the number of pupils that the hi might possibly secure would be from the non-Hindu sections of th honourable families. From these statistics, the writer says, the natural that the minority must take its colour from the majority w associated. This line of argument brings the writer to the consid question how far the traits of the characters of the non-Hindu and pr are objectionable and therefore likely to affect those who associat

In article No. 5 of the series which appears in its issue of the 24
Vaibhav proposes to itself the task of making a comparison b prostitutes and ladies of the non-Hindu classes as regards their man and household life. The writer however shuns a direct attack Christian, Israel and other non-Hindu classes, fearing to wo ceptibilities of a people whose lot is fast bound with that of the assails the manners and customs of Europeans as being the patter these non-Hindu classes. The writer then gives a picture of the Hindu prostitute, compares it with a picture of the life of Europe says that the life of a European lady even excels this picture in point and lewdness. The sketches are interspersed with a very obje obscene description of a lady's bath and a European ball.

Railways.

Comments on the report of the Indian Railway Committee.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 24th August says:—The ful report of the Select Committee on Inc has now come to hand, and we are const
from a perusal of it that Parliament mig something better than permit the do to fritter away public time in making lengthened investigations up a report thereon, which, as far as practical proposals for th extension of railways in India are concerned, leaves the subject
We had never any sanguine expectations of the Select Committe proposing something substantial to accelerate railway progress o scale compatible with the Indian finance and without additiona
the people. The evidence obtained from the majority of witnesse limited value. The whole investigation seems to have been carrie less in an aimless way. Even the evidence of experts was not fr judice or bias. Even the evidence of Mr. Westland, so far as the railway loans for state railways goes, was one-sided and ill inferences implied. The only witnesses who did place in a thorou manner and on broad foundations the views entertained by the G India as to future extension of railways and the financial policy to in reference thereto were Major Conway Gordon and Dr. Hunter.
as those officials were concerned we may say that it might hav advantageous had they alone been deputed to put in their proper li of the case before the Secretary of State for India and his Council.
the report is extremely disappointing—it is a story without a c Royal Commission might have once for all definitely laid down the future of Indian railways. A commission of experts, with po in India and to take exhaustive evidence, official and non-official, Native, would have been preferable. Had such a body been a dare say many an independent Native would have given out his v economic revolution" wrought by railways in India on Indian la dustries. We thought Dr. Hunter would discuss this subject at le have been disappointed. No attempt has been made to answ regarding the effects of railways on the actual condition of th labourer and the artisan in general. Has it been for good or evil of the eighty millions of people who go with but a scanty mea
according to non-official testimony owe their impoverishme railways? How much also of the ryots' depressed condition is t ed to the same cause? These are questions which have long awa
Mr. Slagg, in his second article in the Contemporary Review that as a member of the Indian Railway Committee he was impressed by the utter absence of official evidence as to the economic railways on the condition of the people." The absence of thi may be easily accounted for. Mr. Slagg has himself given the following sentence: "We know well enough what the I of their own achievements in the East; but of the actual con its people—whether they are thriving under our rule or the r little accurate knowledge, and respecting these all-important class, so far as I can see, can supply us with no information wh tion." Here lies the secret of the Select Committee's failure of evidence. It was for submission of evidence from the poi condition of the people that we urged that qualified Native ge deputed to England. The Government found funds for paying witnesses it deputed there, but it had no desire to offer the sa a single Native of India! Now a Royal Commission m obtained Native evidence on this "all-important" subject.

actual government of the country is controlled by "a body to the people of India and to the people of the United Kingdo course be ever expected? But most probably such an inquir scope of the Select Committee. Perhaps also it is no eas Supreme Government itself to give an accurate or even a fairl the queries of the nature above indicated. That, we are awa variety of statistics available for the purpose. It is undoubt task to collate and analyse them, covering as they do full thirty-critics may even question the utility of publishing a blue-tables arranged under the different heads for the purpose of fa
the information disclosed. But at any rate cannot the Gove small compass such results as may be generalised by the Di Statistics? We shall be quite content if some such attem political utility of the information will for the present be lim have an abiding interest. If we find from the results of such that some of the economic evils from which labourers as we tural population and the artisan classes suffer owe their origi or indirectly to railways, as has been so freely alleged, then of those evils it would be well that the Government should p matter of extended railway construction from the social and of view. If the interests of the indigent masses are to be co contentment promoted or assured, then statistics of the natur
for will become of the first importance. [The Gujarát Mitrá
Goftár (115) of the same date express disappointment at t
Select Committee.]

Comments on the recommendations of the Indian Railway Committee.

In an article headed "The recommendations of the Railwa Kesári (40) of the 26th August s recommendation of the Railway almost all the railway lines should This recommendation, which has ou necessary a broad division of railways into productive and un
in their second recommendation the Committee have discoun of effecting such a division. This circumstance gives a proo ency of the proposals of the Committee. It appears that th is no such division made in European railways, which are perous, has much to do with the second recommendation
If however the Committee, while making this recommen account of the present condition of India, they would not h error involved in it. In European and American cou necessity for a division of railways into productive and unp
the existence of various trades and industries and the conse
resorting to railways for carrying large quantities of goods e in those countries to pay their way, independently of the rece traffic. But here the case is quite different. In the presen India it would be wrong to advocate the inadvisability o nature above referred to. Goods traffic on Indian railways able except in famine times, and at other times the receip traffic constitute the major portion of their revenues. The l on of the people." The absence of this kind of evidence ed for. Mr. Slagg has himself given the explanation in

: "We know well enough what the Indian officials think ents in the East; but of the actual condition of India and ey are thriving under our rule or the reverse—we possess dge, and respecting these all-important topics the ruling ee, can supply us with no information which bears examinasecret of the Select Committee's failure to elicit this kind or submission of evidence from the point of view of the
that we urged that qualified Native gentlemen should be The Government found funds for paying all expenses of the here, but it had no desire to offer the same opportunity to India! Now a Royal Commission might have easily nce on this "all-important" subject. But so long as the
the country is controlled by "a body irresponsible alike and to the people of the United Kingdom," can any other ed? But most probably such an inquiry was without the Committee. Perhaps also it is no easy matter for the itself to give an accurate or even a fairly accurate reply to ure above indicated. That, we are aware, depends on the vailable for the purpose. It is undoubtedly a formidable lyse them, covering as they do full thirty-three years. Some ion the utility of publishing a blue-book of statistical the different heads for the purpose of fair inferences from
sed. But at any rate cannot the Government give in a sults as may be generalised by the Director General of be quite content if some such attempt is made. The information will for the present be limited. But it will
est. If we find from the results of such desirable statistics omic evils from which labourers as well as the agriculthe artisan classes suffer owe their origin either directly ys, as has been so freely alleged, then for the mitigation be well that the Government should pay attention to the ilway construction from the social and economical points ests of the indigent masses are to be consulted and their d or assured, then statistics of the nature we have applied first importance. [The Gujarát Mitrá (80) and the Rást me date express disappointment at the report of the

ed "The recommendations of the Railway Committee" the Kesári (40) of the 26th August says:—The eighth om- recommendation of the Railway Committee is that ian almost all the railway lines should be self-supporting.
This recommendation, which has our approval, renders ision of railways into productive and unproductive, while mendation the Committee have discountenanced the idea vision. This circumstance gives a proof of the inconsist-of the Committee. It appears that the fact that there ade in European railways, which are nevertheless pros-
do with the second recommendation of the Committee.
mittee, while making this recommendation, had taken t condition of India, they would not have fallen into the
it. In European and American countries there is no n of railways into productive and unproductive, because us trades and industries and the consequent necessity of for carrying large quantities of goods enables the railways ay their way, independently of the receipts from passenger case is quite different. In the present circumstances of ong to advocate the inadvisability of a division of the
to. Goods traffic on Indian railways is never consider-times, and at other times the receipts from passenger major portion of their revenues. The lines that have till now been started have established a communication between the principal commercial centres, but leaving out of consideration those places which command considerable goods traffic it will be found that intermediate stations cannot claim any credit for receipts from that source. This recommendation of the Committee would be appropriate only if some encouragement were given to Native arts and industries. Another recommendation of the Railway Committee is that the work of railway extension in India should not be carried on with the help of increased taxation. From this the inference is clear that a scheme for railway extension at the cost of Government money has the consent of the Committee. The policy of devoting Government funds to the construction of railways is positively prejudicial to the interests of the country, In England unproductive railways are undertaken by the aid of loans raised in the public market, and if the same policy had regulated the conduct of the authorities here, we, who are now overburdened with taxes, would have been fa happier. But who cares for our happiness? Government look to their own interests. If it is urged that Government are unwilling to raise debts, the argument will not hold water, inasmuch as the heavy public debt which hang over India's head has been contracted by Government. Again it may b argued that unproductive works are undertaken at the cost of Government in order to guard against the possibility of lavish expenditure, but a reference to the proverbial extravagance of the Public Works Department is a sufficient refutation of this argument. Perhaps Government do not like that their countrymen should lose their money in unproductive concerns, and it is quite in keeping with thei generous disposition, but it is difficult to understand why the same generosity should not be extended to this country. Things must continue in statu quo s long as India is not represented in Parliament.

Comments in connection with the question of railway extension in India.

The Sind Times (5) of the 19th August says:—A few months ago there wa a very general complaint that the extension of railway in India met with very tardy consideration at the hand of Government; and now that the extension of railway on a very large scale is in contemplation we hear complaints of another natur from all sides. It is so far true that the people of India will derive no othe benefit from any number of railways than the convenience of rapid travelling But the evils consequent on a close network of railways in India evidentl outweigh the little good. Immense exportation of Indian corn and India industry is generally effected by the railways. So that instead of preventin famines these railways often bring them about. Grain is never allowed to b stored, and in the event of scarcity the railways are not of much use. This i undoubtedly a great abuse of the good that railways can do. Pecuniaril railways are of no benefit to the Indians. No impulse is given to the nativ resources of the country. Indian enterprise remains at the same low level as eve It is therefore quite natural that the intended extension of railways should no be received with that enthusiasm to which it has on the face of it such a goo claim. But it is not against the extension of railways that we protest, for since the Government is bent upon it, it will become an accomplished fact er long. It is against want of foresight in laying the railway lines that we rais our humble voice. The track of the Indus Valley State Railway has been foun to be a mistake when too late. If the line had been laid along the Hyderabad sid of the Indus the traffic would have been much greater and the line would hav been safe from the encroachments of the river. From Kotri to Karáchi th line might lie as it has lain all along, and passengers could easily cross over t Kotri from Hyderabad. In laying the new lines of railways we hope th Government will not imitate the Russian autocrat, who, when asked for hi opinion about the railway line from St. Petersburg to Moscow, ruled a straigh line on a map from the new capital to the old one and said "Make it thus. The proposed railway line from Benares to Puri in Orissa might become a lin of very great traffic if laid with forethought and under good advice. Th recent Penistone Railway accident, the heart-rending details of which are no going the round of the papers, makes us shrink from imagining the dangers t life and property which must attend a close network of railways. How blac the smoke which the fire of civilization carries with it!

Complains of the disregard shown by the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company to the interests of Native engine-drivers and mechanics.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 24th August says:—We have al issue of the 10th August drawn attentio regard shown by the B. B. & C. I. Railw to the interests of Natives (vide para the Report on Native Papers for the week August 1884). We now mention some ances of Native engine-drivers. The B Railway Company, and we suppose all other railways in India, have arrangements for the comforts of engine-drivers and mechanics— European drivers and mechanics only. Fine quarters for residence, mechanics' institutes for their use, and well conducted schools for t have been provided by the railway companies at some expense. ways are guaranteed railways this expense necessarily affects the p public. How very unjust is it then that Europeans only should p arrangements, whilst their Native brethren, who enjoy equal ran should be excluded from them? We wish to lay special stress on of the children of Native engine-drivers from the schools establi railway companies. We see no reason whatever for their exclusion it is not convenient to admit Native children into schools intended children, we do not persist in holding that the former should be a them. But then why should not separate schools be established fo of Native drivers?

Makes certain suggestions to the G. I. P. Railway Company in the matter of providing comforts for pilgrims visiting Násik during the approaching festival.

In a paragraph headed "The Násik Fair," the Native O the 24th August says:—The Hindu c anxious to know what arrangements the way Company is about to make with re large passenger traffic to Násik in connec great Hindu festival. Twelve years ago lákhs of pilgrims went to Násik by rail, the number is likely to be quadrupled as the Rájputána an Neemuch lines have closely connected Central India with this ho is said that the Company is going to run one special train daily to offer discount on the gross amount of fare to large numbers travelling in a body from distances of beyond one hundred miles These arrangements may result in large profits with less expenditu not, we believe, succeed. We hope the Company will do well to of the leading and experienced gentlemen of our communitty on We think one special train will not suffice as the number of pilgri be very great. To us what appears to be more reasonable and conv reduction of the third class rates and the issue of weekly third tickets. One of the Company's rules is that not more than fift should travel at a time in one third class carriage, but this honoured in its breach than in its observance even in ordinary time we cannot find fault with the Traffic Manager personally for this sta but we hope that at least during the festival he will give his spec to this complaint and peremptorily call upon his subordinates alon make the complaint books accessible to the meanest passengers. W same time request Mr. Keily to impress upon his subordinates, wheth or Native, that every act of discourtesy or rudeness on the part of th servants towards passengers will be immediately visited with severe As in the case of ferry-steamers, Government will do well both interests and in those of the Railway Company to instruct their the line to check the number of passengers in railway carriage their best to suppress the abuse of excess passengers travelling carriages. The comforts and conveniences of the community a importance than money, and it is these that ought to rule any cha Company may contemplate in reference to this great festival.

Complains of the inconvenience caused to travellers by railway from Bhusával to Nágpur by the absence of lights in carriages.

The Vaidarbh (16) of the 23rd plains of the inconvenience caused to railway from Bhusával to Nágpur o unsatisfactory arrangements for lightin and requests the attention of the G. authorities to the matter.

Municipalities.

Remarks in connection with the conflict between the Calcutta Municipality and the local Government.

In a paragraph headed "Municipal Affairs in Calcutta" the S
(15) of the 24th August says:—The w very painful to contemplate. We ha better counsels would prevail. But o naturally leads to another and the resul worse each time. The present imbrog may bring forth one good result, if the law which gives such ext of control to the Government—powers which by the way have th extreme cases—is a little modified so as to restrain fictitious c should not be any complaint made by anybody that should jus vention of Government, but a complaint substantiated after an in tigation by competent persons should; and that too after giving sioners an opportunity of mending, if they are willing to do so.
in the law would prevent such unbecoming conflicts as the presen urgently called for. For very few will now be found willing to a sioners on the present conditions. Those gentlemen who in the i public gratuitously devote their time and energy to municipal af have a better security than they have at present that they and th be adjudged impartially and not left to the mercies of any gentle happen to catch the ear of Government.

Does not approve of the policy of abolishing petty municipalities without an explanation of the reasons for so doing.

In an article headed "The abolition of petty Municipalities Sind Times (5) of the 22nd August say it is a bad policy to abolish small mu
those of Ubauro and Johi. It is a pi Municipal Amendment Act does not ma
on Government to state categorically th thinking that a local area should cease to be a municipal district mation announcing the proposed abolition of the municipalities Johi calls on all persons interested to submit written objections t sioner in Sind within two months, but does not contain a single w enlighten the public as to why it is considered advisable to aboli cipalities. According to ordinary principles of the law of evide have thought the burden of proving that these municipalities were heavily on Government. Besides we have never yet heard of called on to show why he should not be convicted without his being of the complaint lodged against him. What is the complaint these petty municipalities? Have they misbehaved in any way?
say that they have been contumacious to Government or that they guided by the advice of Government officers. As a matter of fa dents, vice-presidents, chairmen and executive commissioners a ment nominees. The whole municipal business is transacted und sion and control of these officers. Indeed the executive commiss mukhtyárkar may be said to constitute the municipality in small tov and Johi. This, we admit, may be a very good reason for pu what is at best a sham. But we should like to know if this is r relied on by Government. The theory of municipal self-go forward in the famous September resolution of the Bomba was that a full-fledged autonomous municipality could only brought forth out of the chrysalis of an official-ridden m this theory is correct, and if the Government are committed to a self-government, then we fail to see, in the absence of any impu conduct, why even a single municipality should be abolished. I municipality can only grow out of an official municipality, and municipalities are desirable, does it not stand to reason that the official municipality means the destruction of every chance of its non-official municipality, or in other words the extinction of every enjoying local self-government? If however it is denied that the of official regime are an indispensable preliminary condition to the self-government, then we should like to know why all the town mu existing are subjected to them. Either official schooling is necess

If it is, then the municipalities of Ubauro and Johi, which enjoy t which without such schooling can never expect to enjoy the boo ment, should not be abolished. If it is not, then introduce an tion in every town municipality and do away with direct interna Of course this argument presupposes that local self-government in every town, city and táluka. If it is not to be fostered, then understand the abolition, not of the municipalities of Ubauro an municipalities and local boards. If the seed of local independen administration of urban and rural affairs is an unwholesome see uprooted not in Ubauro and Johi alone, but in every institution c have yet only discussed three possible reasons for abolishing the Ubauro and Johi, and we think it is abundantly clear that none of water. What then is the reason which has led the authorities mind that these municipalities should live no longer? Is it that selves are sick of them? Is it that the truth is now more forcib the town municipalities, as our Commissioner himself styled the Destroy the shams by all means so long as you are determined by beneficent realities. Our sham municipalities can be governing bodies by giving them an elective and quasi-independ Such a drastic measure as their total extinction seems hardly ju cannot give them such a constitution at this stage, if you th some more experience and instruction, then put them in the these requisites. The question is whether the present municipa instruction, and not whether instruction is desirable or not. afford it, then let them be made to afford it; for surely they a of affording it. In fact, without them you have no other eff for "political and popular education"; and surely you cannot best way of giving such education is to destroy the only instru it at your disposal. Even supposing that these petty municipa of education, for what sins of theirs are you going to put an end t It is not a sin assuredly to light the streets of a town, to keep i to supply it with a market and a garden, with good roads and Nor is it a sin, we presume, to remove obstructions, to abate nui articles of food are not adulterated and that diseased cattle are It is a sin to levy octroi and to fine people for breaking sani but these are sins against which are to be weighed a very benignant virtues.

Native States.

Advises the Holkar to appoint a Diwán.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 24th August says:—His Highn Holkar has now attracted the attenti Thunderer. The Times, we are glad as severe on His Highness as some Indian contemporaries. The Times does not believe all th are afloat regarding the Mahárája. That the Mahárája or rather exacting in his demands cannot be gainsaid supporters. But at the same time we think that this e not without its parallel even in the British territory. As British Government ought to have some fixed limit to the en assessment rates, so with the same urgency we call upon Holkar to reduce the assessments in his territories where the If we compare the present state of the Native States with wha ago, we shall find a decided change for the better. The effe the conquered territories has influenced the adjoining indepen recent agitation, which has now happily subsided, has clearly is something in the Holkar's administration that is not in stric the principles of good government. His Highness is now ge first prince is a hot-headed young man; hence a third man is at once firm and yielding, learned in the knowledge of the West with the ignorance and superstitions of the East; a man wh paramount power ought to be pleased but who knows much mo under his charge ought to be treated. Such a man is at th wanted to get the frail bark of the State out of the dangerou was foolishly taken. The Diwán, whosoever he is, if he is to he ought to be, will not play in His Highness's hands. Ma those who are his advisers shall now have to yield to him in though the Diwán will be bound to show deference to His H in some matters. We again therefore press on the Holkar t pointing a Diwán. [The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 25th A Holkar not to have a Diwán through the intervention of th

ment, as in that case the Diwán would not be ruled by the Ma would return to their present unsatisfactory state.]

Deplores the occurrence of a second tragedy at Junágad.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 27th August says:— of the Native States must be griev
second Junágad tragedy so soon aft
the Maiyás by the Junágad police.
that after the severe lesson it received in the matter of th
the State has adopted the necessary precautionary measure into the present difficulty. However, it is not desirable that i ally resort to extreme measures against some of its brave subje
the like of which did not occur in former times, lead us to s thing is rotten in the State of Junágad and that these are indi satisfaction which may be prevailing in some classes of its sub well if the Junágad authorities understood their position and s to the times.

A complaint against the Thákor of Morvi.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 24th August expresses d action of the Thákor of Morvi in construction of a tramway between wán and says:—There is no experie
State of Morvi. The Thákor is guided by the advice of his pe who do not possess high abilities. There has been no Kárbhá nearly six months. Why does the Political Agency allow th unsupplied? How can the Thákor alone look after all the d State? It is no wonder then that some mismanagement sho writer then complains against the removal of Mr. Kalyánr from the post of Police Superintendent and the appointment i Vishvanáth, a favourite with the personal attendants of the T
of bad repute, and proceeds:—This appointment has caused g
amongst the people, for the personal attendants of the Thá everything their own way. As the Assistant Political Agent Agent are not acquainted with the antecedents of Mr. Vishv has taken this opportunity to make the appointment. It is to b that these political officers will now order Mr. Vishvanáth's sp the post of Police Superintendent. The public will be s nomination of Mr. Kalyánrái, who is an experienced police off about 20 lákhs of rupees handed over to the Thákor on his ins almost exhausted by lavish expenditure. Not only this, bu rupees, which sum can be saved every year out of an annual lákhs, have been in addition spent. Owing to want of funds t palaces and other edifices has been stopped, and it is rumoured and other employés of the State will receive their pay every 6 portion of money has been spent on the comforts and pleasur himself, while the public has benefited very little thereby. We r for his own good to remove his personal attendants from his p according to the advice of good officers.

RAOJI BHAVANR
Acting Reporter on

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
2nd September 1884.

INDEX.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

- A'bkári: Oppressive working of the — Act ... ...
- Administration of India:
  - Necessity for a reform in the governing machinery of India
  - Necessity of exercising strict supervision on the doings of Anglo-Indians... ... ...
- Agricultural Department:
  - Expression of opinion that the records of the — should be kept Maráthi ... ...
  - Suggestion that a Native graduate should be deputed to England learn the science of agriculture ... ...
- Amir of Cabul: Disapproval of the policy of subsidizing the — supplies of arms ... ...
- Bombay Legislative Council:
  - Disapproval of the nomination of Mr. Naylor to the — and sugge tion for the nomination of Mr. Navroji Fardunji ...
  - Suggestions in the matter of nominations to the — ...
- Bombay Tramway Company: Disapproval of the reply sent by Gover ment to the first memorial on the subject of the inconvenience s fered by passengers by tram-cars in Bombay ...
- Cholera: Expression of opinion that a special officer should be deput to relieve sufferers from — in the Bádámi Táluka of the Kalád District... ... ...
- Complaints:
  - Against the conduct of European soldiers at Sátára in a certain ca
  - Objection to the levy of a tax upon village cartmen by Rámoshis
- Factory Act: Suggestion to the — Committee ... ...
- Fine Arts Exhibitions: Necessity of holding — in different parts of t Bombay Presidency... ... ...
- Forests: Comments on the administration of the Forest Department
- Indian Patent Act: Suggestion for a reduction in the stamp duty charg for applications for patents ... ...
- Infant marriages: Discussion on the question of the necessity for legis tion to prevent — ... ...
- Judicial matters: Comments on the case in which one Mr. Webb w was charged with having assaulted a person and having confined wife in a cabin, where she died, was discharged by the Calcut High Court with a fine of Rs. 100 ... ...
- Land revenue:
  - Comments on the Government resolution on the subject of allowi discount on — instalments paid in advance:
    - The Indu Prakásh ... ...
    - The Subodh Patrika ... ...
  - Disapproval of the policy of assessing sub-soil water enunciated in t Government resolution on the subject of the revision settleme of Jhálod in the Panch Mahàls ...
- Police:
  - Approval of the proposal of Colonel Ewart for the organization o detective — force ... ...
  - Complaint against the conduct of the — officers of Sholápur in t matter of certain disputes between the Hindus and Mahomeda of the place:
    - The Armagán ... ...
    - The Káside Mumbai ... ...
- Postal matters:
  - Approval of the contemplated introduction of the scheme of overla value-payable postal parcels ... ...
  - Disapproval of the proposal to initiate a system of making paymen on account of money-orders without the payees being compell to go to the post offices ... ...
  - Want of a branch post office in Táluka Pál, Iláka Mahi Kántha
- Public advertisements: Expression of opinion that — must appear newspapers that command a large circulation ...

Page.

T I.—Politics and the Public Administration—continued.

Public Service: Disapproval of the policy of marring the prospects of graduates in the revenue service by yielding too much to the demands of old servants 12
Want of rain in Sholápur: Complaint regarding distress on account of — 13
Watandár village kulkarnis: Grievances of — 13

T II.—Local Self-government—

Constitution and control of local and municipal boards: Remarks in connection with the — under the new scheme of local self-government. 15
Rules under the Local Self-government Acts: Comments in connection with the framing of — 16

T III.—Education—

Female education: Attack on European manners, customs and household life in connection with the question of giving higher education to females... 16

ET IV.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway Company: Complaint regarding the disregard shown by the — to the interests of Native engine-drivers and mechanics 20
Extension of railways in India: Comments in connection with the question of the — 19
G. I. P. Railway Company:
  Complaint regarding the inconvenience caused to travellers by railway from Bhusával to Nágpur by the absence of lights in carriages 20
  Suggestions to the — in the matter of providing comforts for pilgrims visiting Násik during the approaching festival ... 20 Report of the Indian Railway Committee: Comments on the —
  The Indian Spectator 17
  The Kesari 18

ET V.—Municipalities—

Conflict between the Calcutta Municipality and the local Government: Remarks in connection with the — 21
Sind: Disapproval of the policy of abolishing minor municipalities without an explanation of the reasons for so doing 21

ET VI.—Native States—

Indore: Advise to the Holkar to appoint a Diwán ... 22
Junágad: Expression of sorrow at the occurrence of a second tragedy at — 23
Morvi: Complaint against the Thákor of — 23

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

C. R.
7470
IA OFFICE
CT 1884

NAT

PUBLISHED I

For the We

List o

No.	Names of News
	ENGLISH
1	The Indian Spectator ...
2	„ Mahrátta ... ...
3	„ Morning Star ...
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of janik Sabha ...
5	„ Sind Times ...
	ANGLO-MARA
6	The Din Bandhu ...
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu ...
8	„ Dnyánodayă ...
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh ...
10	„ Indu Prakásh ...
11	„ Native Opinion ...
12	„ Prabhákar ...
13	„ Pramod Sindhu ...
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaiv
15	„ Subodh Patrika ...
16	„ Vaidarbh ... ...
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samá
	MARA'THI
18	The Arunodayă ...
19	„ A'ryávart ... ...
20	„ Bakul ... ...
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár
22	„ Bhála ... ...
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1] ...
*24	„ Chháva ... ...
*25	„ Chikitsak ... ...
26	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár
*27	„ Dakshin Vritt ...
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt ...
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak ...
30	„ Dnyán Ságar ...
31	„ Ganga Lahari ...
32	„ Hindu Punch ...
33	„ Hitechchhu ...
34	„ Israel[1] ... ...
35	„ Jagadádarsh ...
36	„ Jagan Mitră ...
37	„ Kalpataru... ...
38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]
*39	„ Katáksh ... ...
40	„ Kesari ... ...
41	„ Khándesh Vaibhav
42	„ Lamp of Judaism
43	„ Lokahitavádi ...
*44	„ Mádhavi ... ...
45	„ Maháráshtră Hitechch
46	„ Maháráshtră Mitră
47	„ Nagar Samáchár...
48	„ Násik Vritt ...
49	„ Nibandh Chandrika
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu ...
51	„ Panchánan ...
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav
*53	„ Pisháchanáth ...
54	„ Poona Vaibhav ...
*55	„ Prabodh Chandrika
*56	„ Pratod ... ...
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik S Pustak ... ...
*58	„ Rámdás ... ...
59	„ Saddharm Dip ...
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika...
61	„ Satyă Sadan ...
62	„ Satyă Shodhak ...
*63	„ Sharabh ... ...
64	„ Shetakari ... ...
*65	„ Shiváji[1] ... ...
66	„ Shubh Suchak ...
67	„ Suryakánt... ...
68	„ Suryodayă... ...
*69	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu

---

[1] Frequently admits

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

C. R.
470
OFFICE
CT 1884

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 6th September 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
22	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*24	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*25	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
26	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*27	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
30	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
31	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
32	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
33	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
34	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
35	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
36	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
37	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
*39	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
40	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,350
41	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
42	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
43	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*44	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
45	„ Mahárashtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
46	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
47	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
48	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
49	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
51	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
*53	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
54	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	450
*55	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*56	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*58	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
59	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*65	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*69	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also

Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
Mara'thi—continued.
The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
" Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	300
" Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
" Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	250
" Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
" Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
" Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
" Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
" Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	500
Anglo-Gujara'ti.
The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
" Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	475
" Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	485
" Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
" Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	200
Gujara'ti.
The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
" Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	850
" A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	394
" A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
" A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	415
" Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,175
" Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	500
" Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	50
" Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	700
" Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	585
" Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,025
" Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
" Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
" Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
" Fursad	Do.	Do.	325
" Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
" Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	300
" Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
" Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
" Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	800
" Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,350
" Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	125
" Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	810
" Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
" Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	925
" Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
" Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
" Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	350
" Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
" Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
" Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
" Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,750
" Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
" Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
" Saurástră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
" Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
" Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	620
" Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	1,700
" Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
" Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
" Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
" Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	85
" Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	778
" Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
" Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
Ka'narese.
The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
" Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
" Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	300
" Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	915
" Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	115
Sanskrit.
The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly ...	100
Urdu.
The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
" Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
Persian.
The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
English, Mara'thi and Urdu.
The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
Sindi.
The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

---

s.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, e printed in italics.

The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the News-
the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued.
cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the pelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ he last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, ced at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be y necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed rk over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in ral Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics

Points out the necessity of reforming the India Council.

In an article headed " T co say
to Council should be altogethe sound basis whereby real re whereby the real interests of in the spirit of the policy lai
the proclamation of 1858 ; a change in the Supreme Gove
the first question it presents cerned with the question of England are actively engage its abolition or reform. T reference to the Indian Ho taken as a miniature upper to India. As the House of their object the good of the p
half a century, the India Co Directors, have obstructed
last fifty years. Though th India should be entitled to the Court of Directors set a wrote christian despatches, government of India. Whe
tions and policy of duplicity is oligarchical. It has tena wielded its powerful influe
with their intellectual progr
power and patronage in th attempts at deprivation of t
more numerous body of oli time to time, it has on the
to monopolize power in the
do. But the House of Lo force is representative and i
There is no such thing eith oligarchy sitting at Westr population of 210 millions,
of Lords is strong enough,
and the constitution, to thw
there be for the people of this connection let it be re mitted to Parliament was t fate of Fox's Bill of 1773.
condition of the Indians n
the present day, and the t Irishmen for the last half a offered to Indians by the I East India Company first number of the Pall Mall
govern Ireland ?" Becaus obstructive. The main ca
we must say that Fenianis nellites have artificially e
asked fifty years ago : "
explained, " for seven hun
and through a faction."
discontent in India is owi
not be misunderstood for Politics a eaded " T

con
ity of uncil.
say
to altogether
y real resp nterests of policy laid f 1858; an reme Gover
t presents
estion of th
ly engaged eform. The ndian Hous
re upper ch House of
od of the peo
India Cou
bstructed r
Though the ntitled to a tors set at espatches, t
dia. When f duplicity t
has tenaci
ful influence
tual progres
nage in thei
vation of tha
ody of oliga
as on the wh
wer in the w
se of Lords
ative and is
thing either at Westmin millions, al enough, de ion, to thwar
people of In t it be reme
nent was thr
of 1773. B Indians may and the trea
last half a ce
s by the Indi
pany first, a Pall Mall G
" Because, i
e main cause
Fenianism
tificially enc ago: " Wh
seven hundre
action." Ma dia is owing stood for poi

ation.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
... ...	Weekly	400
... ...	Do.	300
... ...	Do.	175
... ...	Do.	250
... ...	Do.	200
... ...	Do.	300
... ...	Do.	200
... ...	Do.	200
... ...	Monthly	500
... ...	Weekly	200
... ...	Do.	475
... ...	Do.	485
... ...	Do.	600
... ...	Do.	200
... ...	Weekly	25
... ...	Daily	850
... ...	Monthly	394
... ...	Do.	500
... ...	Do.	415
... ...	Daily	1,175
... ...	Weekly	500
... ...	Do.	50
... ...	Monthly	700
... ...	Weekly	585
... ...	Do.	1,025
... ...	Monthly	200
... ...	Do.	475
... ...	Do.	400
... ...	Do.	325
... ...	Weekly	1,000
... ...	Monthly	300
... ...	Do.	659
... ..	Quarterly	200
... ...	Daily	800
... ...	Monthly	1,350
... ...	Weekly	125
... ...	Do.	810
... ...	Monthly	200
... ...	Tri-weekly ...	925
... ...	Monthly	300
... ...	Weekly	200
... ...	Monthly	350
... ...	Weekly	200
... ...	Do.	225
... ...	Do.	700
... ...	Do.	1,750
... ...	Do.	200
... ...	Do.	400
... ...	Monthly	200
... ...	Do.	375
... ...	Do.	620
... ...	Do.	1,700
... ...	Do.	408
... ...	Quarterly ...	200
... ...	Monthly	200
... ..	Weekly	85
... ...	Monthly	778
... ...	Do.	300
... ...	Weekly	500
...	Weekly	150
...	Do.	200
...	Do.	300
...	Do.	915
...	Do.	115
...	Fortnightly ...	100
...	Weekly	200
...	Do.	160
...	Weekly	300
...	Weekly	200
...	Weekly	500

in the Report under different heads,
lics, and the number of the News-
as to the number of copies issued.

the same as that adopted in the em is that when the long a (आ n gun) is, to prevent confusion, at when the short a appears to be e well known Mitra, it is printed

the Government of Bombay in

Points out the necessity of reforming the India Council.

In an article headed " The Government o control " the Indian says:—Here two mo
to be carefully cons Council should be altogether abolished or wh sound basis whereby real responsibility and whereby the real interests of the people in this in the spirit of the policy laid down in the stat
the proclamation of 1858; and (2) how far t change in the Supreme Government of India
the first question it presents to us some aspe
cerned with the question of the utility of the E England are actively engaged at this moment i its abolition or reform. The same question reference to the Indian House of Lords. For taken as a miniature upper chamber of final ap to India. As the House of Lords has obstru their object the good of the people and based on half a century, the India Council and its prot Directors, have obstructed reforms for the be last fifty years. Though the statute of 1833 w India should be entitled to a higher share in t
the Court of Directors set at naught the provis wrote christian despatches, they displayed un government of India. When they ceased to e tions and policy of duplicity to their successors is oligarchical. It has tenaciously reserved to wielded its powerful influence for keeping the
with their intellectual progress and growing as power and patronage in their own hands. T attempts at deprivation of that power. The more numerous body of oligarchs. And thou time to time, it has on the whole maintained to monopolize power in the way in which the
do. But the House of Lords eventually suc
force is representative and is besides amenabl
There is no such thing either in India or in oligarchy sitting at Westminster as the fina population of 210 millions, almost voiceless an of Lords is strong enough, despite these politi
and the constitution, to thwart the popular wi
there be for the people of India to control t this connection let it be remembered that the mitted to Parliament was thrown out by the I fate of Fox's Bill of 1773. But the analogy d condition of the Indians may be fairly comp
the present day, and the treatment which th Irishmen for the last half a century may well offered to Indians by the Indian House of Lor East India Company first, and the India C number of the Pall Mall Gazette that jour govern Ireland?" Because, it says, the House obstructive. The main cause of Irish discont
we must say that Fenianism and the agitati nellites have artificially encouraged it to a asked fifty years ago: " Why are the Irish explained, " for seven hundred years England and through a faction." May we not be pe discontent in India is owing to a somewhat s not be misunderstood for pointing out the a

been governed by a faction—the faction known as the Indian bureaucracy—th faction which would do everything by itself and leave nothing to be done b the people—the faction which has presumed too much on its special knowledg of finance and agriculture, of district administration and local self-government, and a thousand minor matters that constantly engage attention. There is one faction, and a most stalwart one, in the Supreme Government know as the Executive Council, and there is the other equally potential faction a Westminster alternately bullying and flattering the Mahárája installed on th gádi for the time being. The Pall Mall Gazette says that in matters relating to Ireland the House of Lords "had done their utmost to perpetuate the ol mode of governing by a faction and for a faction, and the result is that the have perpetuated discontent. In small things as in great the House of Lords has been an instrument of unmitigated evil to Ireland. Its veto has constantly been employed to destroy the most promising efforts of English people to heal th wrongs of their Irish fellow-citizens." We have italicised the significant portion. Is it not a fact that the power exercised by the India Council and its predecessors in office has oftener than not been instrumental in destroying the most promising efforts made by the British Parliament for the last fifty years to redress the wrongs of the Indian people? Is it not a fact that they have "postponed redress of abuses until the heart of the people has grown sick"? As long as this India Council, this oligarchical body or miniature House of Lords, continues in power on the basis of its present constitution, Indians will never be governed "on the principles of justice and freedom" which British statesmanship is sincerely desirous of applying to India.

Does not approve of the contemplated rescission of the resolution excluding Eurasians from the Roorki College.

In an article headed "Mr. Cross at the Cooper's Hill College" the Nativ Opinion (11) of the 31st August says:—The annua ceremony of prize-distribution at the Cooper's Hil College passed off as usual with great éclat, an though the Under Secretary of State in rising t make a post-prandial speech expressed diffidence i himself to do justice to the subject in the absence o Lord Kimberley, he did more than make up for the absence of his official supe rior by clearing away the fear that the college as an Indian institution woul be closed or that the Indian patronage to English engineers would be curtailed Nay, he gave a distinct go-by to the Cooper's Hill-men by pronouncing hi verdict against the civil engineers, though to outsiders such a decision mus appear to bespeak partizanship. To us the preferential side of the Cooper' Hill-men is not clear, and the question that even Cooper's Hill-men have ofte to apprentice themselves to civil engineers requires elucidation and explanation. The contention between these two representative sections of engineering science raises the side-issue why Government should act the rôle of a quasi protectionist and should not give a fair chance of competition to all civi engineers, Cooper's Hill-men, and engineers produced in India when the suppl of engineers is larger than the demand. There are here the Poona Scienc College, the Roorki Engineering College and other Presidency colleges an schools for teaching engineering, and a large number of graduates are turne out every year. But what awaits them? In Bombay only one post in th higher grades is allotted to a graduate who comes first at the University engineering examination; and out of the eight posts annually given away to Roork men only the last two, as far as we are informed, are given to Natives, th rest being given to candidates of Anglo-Indian birth. Bengal and Madras hav probably the same tale to tell. Almost the whole class of Native engineers i absorbed in the lower grades to which even a mistry of ordinary intelligenc can aspire. It will thus be seen that while in India the doors of this servic are strongly barred against Natives by unreasonable restrictions, they are kep wide open to Cooper's Hill-men, civil engineers, royal engineers, as of righ And yet a howl is sent forth against the Roorki resolution of Lord Ripon a if his Lordship were doing an act that would drive the empire to the verge o ruin. But what does the Roorki resolution promise at the most? It says tha a certain number of posts in this service will be allotted to Natives of pu birth. We would appeal to fair-minded Englishmen and ask them to say fro the very consciousness of their hearts whether the Roorki resolution is not a bare act of justice to the sons of the soil. And yet his Lordship's detractors have kicked up a storm which would seem to have overwhelmed the present Secretary of State in a moment of weakness and led him to disown the said resolution. Again the sphere of usefulness of Cooper's Hill-men is not to be confined to engineering only; they are to be drawn upon for our forest service, a service for which schools for Europeans have already been established at our hill stations. We regret that even the Indian Government in England should show a prepossession for a monopoly of service. We dare say forestry can require no great scientific knowledge, and yet to train a few officers in the art of its conservation the assistance of such an institution as that at the Cooper's Hill is called into requisition. The plea of scientific education may serve as a cover for the moment, but the policy of exclusion, as in the case of the Civil Service, will necessarily be seen through. We appeal to the good sense and generous instincts of the British people and ask them whether it is polite or expedient to make scientific education a scape-goat for the exclusion of Natives from these services. We are excluded from the Civil Service on the grounds of political expediency, but we regret that the policy of exclusion should find place in departments where such expediency can have no existence. We hope Lord Kimberley will fully deal with the question before he takes any decisive step with regard to the Roorki resolution.

Comments on the recent appointments to the Bombay Legislative Council.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 5th September expresses approval of the re-appointment of the Honourable Badrudin Tyabji to the Bombay Legislative Council, and says:—On what principle has the Honourable Khanderáo Ráste been re-appointed to the Council? He has not done anything worth notice during his period of office and the seat which was given to him with a view to please the class of Sardárs ought now to have been conferred on some better and more deserving man. Sir James Fergusson had this last opportunity of strengthening his Council and of making it more popular, and it is surprising that he should not have availed himself of it. If an independent and educated Hindu gentleman had been appointed in his place the appointment would have commanded public approval. But why should a Hindu gentleman only be appointed in his stead? Five Native gentlemen are members of the Legislative Council, three being Hindus, one Pársi, and one Mahomedan. If therefore a Pársi gentleman had on this occasion been appointed to the Council in the place of Mr. Ráste justice would have been done to the enterprising Pársi community. Formerly two Pársis sat in the Council, and now when three Hindus have been its members for a long time the Hindu community would not have been sorry at the election of a Pársi gentleman for a term of two years. Government ought to have honoured the Bombay Municipal Corporation on this occasion. If they had nominated Mr. Pherojshah Merwanji Mehta, Chairman of the Corporation, to the Council, the choice would have been splendid. The President of the Chamber of Commerce is generally elected a member of the Legislative Council; why then should not the Municipal Corporation enjoy the same honour? Such a policy would encourage independent men like Mr. P. M. Mehta to take active part in the conduct of municipal business—a result which would prove highly beneficial to the public. Now that Mr. Ráste's appointment cannot be cancelled, Sir James should nominate Mr. P. M. Mehta as an additional member and thus make amends for the mistake committed. Sir James has authority to do so and an additional member would be a new ornament of his Council. Mr. Pherojshah's services would prove as useful as those of Mr. Naylor in framing a new Municipal Act for Bombay. It remains to be seen how far Sir James acts on this suggestion. The appointment of either Mr. Dadabhoy Nawroji or Mr. Nawroji Fardunji in the place of Mr. Ráste would also have proved as satisfactory as the nomination of Mr. Badrudin.

Makes certain suggestions in connection with the appointment of an assistant to the Director of Agriculture.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 31st August says:—We hear that Government intend to send to England some Assistant Collector to learn agricultural science. The proposal has been made in view of the contingent difficulty of finding a fit successor when Mr. Ozanne, the present head of the Agricultural Department, takes leave.

We are against the proposed remedy on the ground that even granting t
the Assistant Collector comes back with a thorough knowledge of agricultu science he will very likely forget it, not having any opportunity to keep knowledge fresh by practical experiments, &c. Moreover it might happ that both he and Mr. Ozanne would ask for leave at the same time, and t Government would be under the necessity of refusing leave to one of the
We have therefore to propose an alternative scheme:—(1) That the pres Director of Agriculture should be given a permanent assistant, who should a Native; (2) that this Native should be chosen from amongst the gradua in medicine or engineering, either by selection or competition (we would pre the latter); (3) that on the choice being made the gentleman should be se to England at the expense of Government to study the science of agricultur
(4) that on his return he should be appointed to the assistant's place on salary which the Government may fix, but which should be made known to t selected candidate before he leaves India. In this manner there will be assistant on the spot who will be well acquainted with the theory as well with the practice of the science of agriculture.

Suggests that Honorary Magistrates should be appointed in Sind.

The Sind Times (5) of the 29th August says:—It is high time that Kar chi and other principal cities in Sind should ha Honorary Magistrates. We have a large mercant population, and our citizens can boast of at least much average enlightenment as the citizens of Multa
Láhor, or Amritsar, or for the matter of that the citizens of Surat or Broa
In January last the Bombay Government framed rules for the guidance Honorary Magistrates in Broach, and we have every reason to believe that t Honorary Magistrates appointed there have given satisfaction. Those ru with some modifications may be enacted for Karáchi, Hyderabad, Sukkur, a Shikárpur, and benches of Honorary Magistrates may at once enter upon th duties and relieve the regular salaried magistracy of much of their work.
course we do not advocate the giving of higher powers than those of a 3 class magistrate in the first instance. The District Magistrate can easily p scribe the classes of cases triable by them, and it will be no difficult task for o of our young lawyers to write a short manual in Sindi which may serve a vade mecum to our Honorary Magistrates. All offences under the Municip Act, the District Police Act, the Cattle Trespass Act, the A'bkári Act and su other Acts, as well as offences under the Indian Penal Code cognisable by 3rd class magistrate, may be left to be tried by them. The bench consisting not less than two and not more than three Magistrates should be so constitut that at least one of the Magistrates should know to read and write English Sindi. Without this qualification the record, we are afraid, will not be ke so well as it should be. The benches may sit twice a week, as in Broach, days appointed by the District Magistrate. The Magistrates may serve rotation or draw lots. One Munshi will be needed to take charge of the r cords and to do other office work. It will be advisable, we think, to appoi separate benches for the camp and the town. The Pársi gentlemen who m be selected so serve as Honorary Magistrates will naturally prefer to perfo their functions in the Sudder. The arrangement we advocate will be conve ent to the Magistrates, the police, the complainants and the accused. But w are to be our Honorary Magistrates? Colonel Boulton has done well to ask t Sind Sabha to name the gentlemen whom that body considers competent serve as such. Local knowledge is specially requisite in this matter, and if a body ought to have this knowledge it is the Sabha. Colonel Boulton hims possesses much more of it than any of his predecessors and it speaks volun for his liberality that he should have felt it right to consult the Sabha bef selecting his nominees. The two classes who will do very well for the off are of course lawyers and Government officers, but we think none of them w be appointed. The latter have generally heavy duties to perform and cann afford to curtail what little leisure they enjoy. The former generally sell th time to their clients and are too busy professional men to consent to serve on honorary bench. Retired public servants, especially pensioned Mukhtyárkars, w be the right men in the right places, and at Hyderabad many such can be foun

In Karáchi there is not a single pensioned Mukhtyárkar. W in Karáchi what neither Hyderabad nor Shikárpur possesses, mercantile class. We have also a limited landed gentry, whic so large as that in Hyderabad. We have however a larger cated men here than elsewhere in Sind, and we feel no hesitati a sanguine hope that Honorary Magistrates will not prove a fa and that they will show themselves deserving of the trust r Time may come when our citizens may be allowed to elect t trates like the Forest Cantons of Switzerland. But at present that Government should nominate them after consulting repres ations and men of proved integrity and undoubted influence.

Comments on the Government resolution on the subject of allowing discount on land revenue instalments paid in advance.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 31st August complains aga cal enhancement of land revenue ass out the disadvantages resulting from says that the resolution on the subj discount on land revenue instalments will not prove beneficial to the ryots Government and the sáwkárs. By th Government will be able to collect their revenue without trou it is not known whether Government will refund to the ryots amount of the payments made in advance in case it becomes ne remissions of land revenue on account of failure of crops or rav It is advisable that other measures should also be taken for condition of the poor ryots. The heavy land revenue assessn reduced, the burden of periodical enhancements should b other measures should be adopted for the encouragement of agri ral Maráthi papers express similar sentiments.]

Complains of the oppressive nature of the new rules framed by the A'bkári Department.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 5th September says:—We complained against the oppressive A'bkári Act and we now give a fres distress caused by the new ábkári the poor liquor shopkeepers know of tem of keeping accounts recently in A'bkári Department? The liquor shopkeeper or his specially ant is required under the new rules to be always present in said that about ten liquor shopkeepers have in the course of t been deprived of their licenses for acting in contravention of th Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 31st August says:—The strange by a correspondent of the Bombay Gazette of the 26th Augus loss suffered by the proprietor of the refreshment room at the N by his having been obliged to open several bottles of Euro inspection by the local Mámlatdár may be taken as an instanc effects on tradesmen and others of the arbitrary and hars and put in force by the A'bkári Department. That statement with what light heart the officers of the department under th autocrat Pritchard Sáheb Báhádur may step by step go on r subjects of the Queen-Empress engaged in legitimate and peac

Complains of the hardship caused by an order prohibiting the people of Gokák from taking wood for fuel purposes from the Gokák hill.

A correspondent of the Dhárwár Vritt (28) of the 28th A of the hardship caused to the peop an order of the Assistant Conserv Mr. McGregor prohibiting the public to the Gokák hill for taking wood fuel, and requests the attention of t the matter.

Says that it is not just to levy court fee on subsidiary applications, which are mere reminders of original applications.

A correspondent of the Bodh Sudhákar (23) of the 3rd Sep often happens that the negligence officers makes it necessary for suito applications as reminders of their cations. These subsidiary applicati to be stamped in the same manner applications. Nothing can be said a sity of stamping the original application, but it is just that subsidiary a cations of the nature above referred to should not be required to bear a c fee stamp. If Government are not prepared for the decrease in stamp rev that would follow if the suggestion made above were adopted, they shoul least prescribe a lower rate of court fees for subsidiary applications.

A suggestion to the Bombay Port Trustees for increasing the utility of the Chaupáti Bandar.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the 31st August points out the inconvenie and trouble caused to merchants dealing in firew chunam, bricks, tiles, &c., by the want of arran ments for landing these materials from the na craft at Chaupáti Bandar, and says:—If the sea sh were reclaimed up to the low water mark, or if a bri were constructed at the bandar, great facility would be afforded to mercha
This will not involve large expenditure; and even if it does, the Port Trus are quite able to meet it. They have recently resolved to extend the Prin Dock at a cost of 84 lákhs of rupees, and to improve some of the adjoin wharfs. If they were to take this work in hand along with that of the wh in the vicinity of the Prince's Dock, it could be easily accomplished.
Port Trustees derive a good income from the fees on firewood, chunam, bri and tiles, in which a brisk trade is being now carried on. It is to be hoped t the authorities concerned will pay attention to the suggestion we have mad

Some suggestions to the Factory Act Committee.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 4th September points out once more necessity of allowing the representatives of the p
to be present at the meetings of the Factory Committee to report the evidence of the witne examined by it, and of asking the committee to hold its sittings every day three hours with a view to speedily finish its labours, and says:—We hope t
Sir James Fergusson will not fail to comply with the important request m by the committee for the nomination of a medical sub-committee to examine mills and to report the result. If the sub-committee were composed of Sanitary Commissioner Dr. Hewlett, Dr. Blaney and one experienced Na doctor their advice would prove very valuable in regard to the sanitary con tion of the mills and the operatives engaged therein. The committee ough finish its labours by the end of October next to enable Sir James to introd reforms in this important matter before the expiry of his term of office.
committee should suggest to Sir James the advisability of again moving Supreme Government to frame a Factory Act for the whole of India, for i Act were passed for Bombay only its operation would prove very detrime to the interests of this city. [The Rást Goftár (115) of the 31st August that as long as the committee will not make special arrangements for hea a statement of the woes of the poor mill hands from their own mouths it not be able to know them well.]

Says that the scheme of appointing Honorary Surgeons to hospitals has not failed and requests Government to try the experiment once more.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 5th September says:—We are sorr observe that Government have resolved to appoi paid Assistant Surgeon in the place of the Hono Surgeons of the Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital.
effects of the new measure will be undesirable i
far as it will restore the burden on municipal f
which existed before the system of Honorary Surg was initiated and will deprive young Surgeons of the opportunity of deri that experience in the healing art which can only be acquired in public pitals. The system of appointing Honorary Surgeons is beneficial to individuals as well as to the public. It is strange that the Bombay Governm which but very recently pronounced the scheme a success, should after lapse of a short time declare it a failure. Again if Government found scheme to be a complete failure, why should they have gone on extending u the very last moment the period of office of the Honorary Surgeons? The that the term of office of the Honorary Surgeons was extended shows Government did not at first think that the scheme was a failure.
vacillating policy on the part of Government cannot be approved. It is on few doctors in the service of Government who are against giving a fur chance to the scheme; but the entire public of Bombay are in favour of tinuing the experiment. It is the duty of Government to act in accord with public opinion. Dr. Hojel has stated in his report that failed, but he has not been able to substantiate that statemen will therefore be unable to prove satisfactorily that the experi

[The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the same date expresses similar remarks:—We do not know of such an instance as this of a injury, of glaring injustice, and of allowing the great to triumph like over the small, having occurred within the last five years.
strange that a kind hearted Governor like Sir James Fergu yielding to the influence of an arbitrary and influential clique inju of the poor unfortunate Honorary Surgeons who rendered gratu a long period and sacrificed their private interests. The Surge officers of the stamp of Dr. Blanc will consider this resolution and will strive to keep down the class of young Native doct paper of the 6th September expresses disapproval of the rumour of a European as Assistant Surgeon in the Gokuldás Tejpál Hosp the Municipal Corporation to decline to pay his salary from the
and to declare that the scheme of Honorary Surgeons has not Native doctors do not now come forward to offer their services g Corporation ought to advertize for two Native doctors on a s each.]

Some suggestions to the Bombay Government in the matter of the appointment of the next Sheriff.

The Káside Mumbai (108) of the 3rd September exhorts come forward at this juncture and to u to the shrievalty of Bombay. The wr that Khán Báhádur Shekh Kásam, geon, is trying to secure that honour,
his appointment would be unimpeach
respondent of the Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 5th Septembe name of Mr. Gulám Mahomed Munshi as the next Sheriff, and s done his best for the spread of English education amongst the community in this Presidency. The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of says that it need not assure Sir James Fergusson that the entir will be glad to see a Mahomedan gentleman appointed Sheri year. If however His Excellency is going to favour a Pársi the honour, the Kaiser suggests the name of Mr. K. N. Kábráj

Approves of the contemplated introduction of a scheme of value-payable overland postal parcels.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 31st August says:—The India has been sounding the trade o reference to its scheme for a value-pa parcel post. In this laudable attemp the Indian post office we again pe citude of the Government of India for of the masses. We have more than once drawn attention in to the great desirability of offering the people at large inc for travel by rail, for correspondence of all kinds and degrees b transmission of messages by telegraph. We have urged these with the full conviction that in the end such facilities benefit and the State. We have observed how great is the urgenc third class passenger service and for reduction of fares. When eighths of the passenger traffic is carried from third class passe that their comfort and convenience should be the first care of t fortunately they are the least cared for customers of the d companies. Something has been done by the Government in this matter, but much yet remains to be done. In matters p
the Government has every year showed greater energy and incre
And the more the facilities it has offered the more have the rec
This is a patent fact that can be learnt at a glance on ref statistics. The reduction made two years ago in charges on ac telegraphic messages has also been considered satisfactory, tho tion has been somewhat tentative. We are still of opinion t could be much benefited and the mercantile and general pub served by reducing the rate for ordinary messages to 8 anna
And it is to be earnestly hoped that this much-needed reduct attended to. Meanwhile we are glad that the Government of I taken up the question of the initiation of value-payable overland parce various trade associations and the mercantile chambers have bee to give their opinion on the scheme now formulated. We have n in saying that the institution of such a postal service will be generall Selfish interests may perhaps prompt the retail shopkeepers to raise but we would set them aside, for they must in the end prove groundl interests will not at all suffer by the system. On the contrary that they will be the first to be benefited by it. It may be that th classes, who have now to depend on retail traders and dealers from England and the Continent small articles under £5 or £10, with the services of these middlemen and get the valuable things direct from the producers. But this class is limited in number, so long run it will be the shopkeepers who will be found to take the mos of the new service. At any rate the experiment is fully deserving even if the Government should find that the trading associations ob scheme. [The Mahrátta (2) of the 31st August is also of opinio system will prove beneficial and that it promises to succeed.]

Points out the necessity of initiating a system of life insurance through the agency of the Postal Department.

The Vaidarbh (16) of the 30th August says that the convenie insurance through the agency of the Po
ment is a great desideratum at the presen that if it is provided many people will co
to take advantage of it.

Comments on the proposal to initiate a system of making payments on account of money orders without requiring the payees to call at the post offices.

The Shiváji (65) of the 29th August says that the proposal t system of making payments on account of m without requiring the payees to call at the though likely to prove useful to the peop villages in which there are no post offices, to give rise to cases of fraud on the part servants of the department. It is proper the proposal is adopted measures should be taken to guard agai mischief. [The Maháráshtră Mitră (46) of the 28th August expre sentiments. The Jagadádarsh (35) of the 30th idem says that the adopted, will be very beneficial to the people in villages where there offices.]

Points out certain defects in the postal money order system.

The Sind Times (5) of the 26th August says:—A correspon from Quetta draws our attention to a committed there through a defect in the order system. A gentleman signed the of a money order handed over to him a order on his table. He missed it after some time and on enquiry it had been paid off, but the postal authorities could not say to wh had been made. The result was that the loser of the money could offender and bring him to justice. Our correspondent suggests th should be kept in every post office, wherein the signature of every
the money is actually paid should be taken. There is no doubt th register had been kept the chances of detection in this case woul
very great, unless the thief who stole the order and committed a f post office was also an adept in forgery and in personation. We suggestion to the Postal Department and hope that some remedy wi to check such practices in future.

Requests Sir Frank Souter to take measures for checking the traffic in girls said to have been carried on in Bombay.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 31st August condemns the decoying girls for immoral purposes,
This traffic in girls is openly carried on The wicked men who are engaged in openly live in a company at Grant
well known that certain foreigners, Eu Armenian, freely carry on this business he not think that the Bombay police will meet with any obstacle in out red-handed. If Sir Frank Souter employs his able detecti purpose, this mean traffic will be easily checked, if not entirely sto inhabitants of certain parts of Bombay strongly complain against this traffi It has made certain quarters quite unsafe and full of crime. It is the duty the police to combat with the evil.

Legislation.

Comments on the Khoja Succession Bill.

In an article headed "The Khoja Succession Bill" the Native Opinic (11) of the 31st August says:—The Bill under cons deration possesses one disagreeable feature from whic we wish it to be free. It leaves certain matters un defined, the determination of which would have been greatly advantageou to the Khojas themselves. The cases of sons and undivided family are in poin No doubt it is rather hard to give a precise definition of "undivided family," bu we do not think it impossible to do so. Chapter II. of the Bill deals with succes sion to the undivided property of a male Khoja dying intestate, and in the previou chapter "undivided property" has been defined as meaning "a share in propert belonging to an undivided family." The Bill prepared by the commission that wa appointed in Bombay some time ago purported to define the phrase "undivid ed family," but the definition proposed has on inquiry been found to be unsaf Undivided family among the Khojas appears to come into existence chiefly i connection with trade, and would seem to be an institution of a peculiar natur somewhat resembling an undivided family among the Hindus; but on th other hand it is clear from the rules laid down in certain sections of the Bi prepared by the commission and from the papers submitted with that Bi that an undivided family among the Khojas differs in important respects fro the Hindu undivided family. What it is exactly and when property is to b regarded as undivided property, it is difficult to ascertain from the pape before the Government of India; but judging from the analogous case in Hind law, it would seem that these are matters which it would be almost hopele to attempt to define in an Act of the legislature; nor does it appear to b necessary to define them in a Succession Act. It may well be assumed that fundamental distinction which goes to the root of the family constitution, an which is not confined in its operation to matters of succession but applies als inter vivos, is established outside this Bill. For these reasons it has bee thought best to make no attempt to define "undivided family" or "undivide property" in the present Bill. This apology is, we think, not a sufficient on and does not conduce much to the credit of the draftsmanship of the leg member. If once it has been undertaken to settle and codify matters inheritance and succession of the Khojas, the difficulty to which the honourab member confesses ought to have been as a matter of necessity overcome an removed. The proper office of a court of law is to construe the wording of th law and not to make the law itself. Before any attempt was made to codify th subject in hand the courts of law were managing these things as best they coul and what with the evidence of custom and with the assistance of general princip they decided disputes as they arose. But when the matter is to be taken o of their hands it seems improper that it should be so taken only partially. Th Bill yet leaves the courts to settle for themselves the question "what is u divided family among the Khojas" without assisting them a bit towards i solution. Moreover a confession of the difficulty looks like a confession inability to grapple with the subject. If the papers before the Governme of India did not show exactly what is the Khoja undivided family, the B should have been postponed till the matter was settled after a more searchi inquiry. We are sure if the matter had been referred back to the Honourab Mr. Melvill, and if some such lawyer as the Honourable Mr. Justice West had be associated with him, the legal member would have found no difficulty in getti a reasonably correct definition of the term in question from these two distinguish lawyers. The present act of introducing the Bill without settling this importa question looks like a show of activity without efficiency. Most of the matte which the Bill settles are really not half so difficult to determine as the impo ant subject of joint family in the Khoja society. Such omissions, we hop will not be allowed to remain in the Bill when it becomes law. A commissi of competent lawyers can without difficulty be appointed and the Bill may shelved awaiting their decision. Another point of difficulty left unsettled the Bill to which we have alluded above is that of the sons of a Khoja by non-Khoja wife. The excuse given for this by the learned mem of the Bill is as hollow as that which has been given for leav "undivided family" undetermined. The Khojas of the Sunni Ja statement of objects and reasons, though apparently unwilling t to recognise any other than a Khoja widow as entitled to inhe husband, proposed that the sons of a Khoja by a wife who is not a have some share in the inheritance. To this the Khojas of the would not agree, and the commission ultimately adopted as a con plan of assigning to the offspring of the marriages in question a nally intermediate between those of legitimacy and illegitimacy, them in the definition clauses the designation of "alien sons," them nothing more than what is allowed to illegitimate sons sections of the Bill. It is stated that the Khojas as a rule are v and rarely take wives from outside their own community, and so state of things continues the mode in which this point is dealt great practical moment; but there is an important principle inv which even the compromise adopted by the commission appears to ment of India to offend. The exclusion of the non-Khoja wife fro and the degradation of her sons to a position altogether lower tha legitimate son involve a view as to restrictions on marriage which it may have obtained acceptance with a majority of the Khoja sec Government have no desire to interfere with it, it is manifestly u have affirmed by the legislature. The present Bill will accordin to contain no reference in its definition clauses or elsewhere to "alien son." It defines "son" to be a legitimate son and leav undefined, and then proceeds to declare the rights of sons and wid to the courts to decide as they will on principles lying outside succession who are legally entitled to the status of sons and widow

Local Self-government.

Comments on the constitution of local boards in the Broach District.

The Arunodayă (18) of the 31st August says:—By Resolut recently published in the official Gazette have delegated to the Divisional Comm powers conferred on Government by secti 32 of Act II. of 1884. Henceforth the C will be our Government so far as the Municipal Act is concerned. that this as well as the Local Boards Act will come into force fro next. A resolution has already been published intimating that the Act will come into force in the Broach District from that date. A of the resolution, as also of the particulars published in connection that the system which it is proposed to inaugurate in this Presid recognise the fundamental principles which were emphasised in th tion on the subject of local self-government published by the G India. Nay, the arrangements under the new Act do not diff obtaining under the old Act beyond making room for the express members." Five local boards have been established in this distric or 17 members, and it has been ruled that Government will ele half the number of members on a particular board besides nomina sident. This means that the affairs of the boards will be conducted the desire of Government. If this was the consummation that is unintelligible why big resolutions, legal enactments, and simi should have been adopted.

Education.

Attack on European manners and customs in connection with the question of giving higher education to women.

In continuation of its article comparing the manners and cus pean ladies with those of Indian prostitu at page 16 of the Report on Native P week ending 30th August 1884, the P (54) of the 31st August says:—In our dwelt on the points of comparison manners and customs of Indian prostitu of European ladies, but for want of space we were unable to comparison was good only so far as appearances went and that the case entirely differed from the reality in the other. We say w that the high colours in which we depicted the exterior and customs of European ladies have been laid simply with th ing that European ladies are pre-eminently the masters of t passions inasmuch as they are able to effectually resist al immorality. The high order of education which is genera Englishmen and their ladies makes the chances of abuse of the by them very remote. [The Bakul (20) of the 31st August and

(8) of the 4th September express disapproval of the artic
Vaibhav (54) of the 24th August.]

Educational wants of Sind.

The Sind Times (5) of the 26th August says:—What we out forcibly is that in Sind at least tion is paid to English and too little t
It is admitted that Sanskrit is the mother of the Sindi lan without a good knowledge of the former no one can expect t Sindi scholar. Yet how many are there in the whole of Sind Sanskrit primer? It is a subject of regret to us that the ed rities have not yet taken any step to impart even an elementar Sanskrit in our schools. While Bengali is growing richer eve accumulated treasures of Sanskrit, and even Maráthi bids fair be as copious and expressive as Urdu, the Sindi language r and poor, though capable of indefinite improvement. Our wor Inspector should give us three things—a technical school, an for females, and Sanskrit teachers in our high schools.
desiderata of education in Sind, and we trust it will not be l are supplied.

Railways.

Comments on the recommendations of the Indian Railway Committee.

The Kesari (40) of the 2nd September, commenting on t
tions of the Indian Railway Commi
committee recommend that new rai constructed partly by Government private companies. In the present the country there is no hope of Native capitalists undertaking nature of railways, and it is therefore plain that the compan
the committee mean European companies. At present all th in this country are owned by English companies under agreem
ernment which are unduly favourable to themselves, and sev are even now in favour of entrusting the projected railways to But as the proposal is likely to prove prejudicial to our interes just to call in the assistance of private companies, and Govern up the business. The committee have mentioned the advant over such projects to private companies, but the disadvantag advantages a hundred times. The loss entailed on this countr the amount of railway profits that go into the pockets of the pr and this would be obviated by Government taking the railway hands. Moreover there being abundance of capital in England a the British Government being very high, there is no doubt t will be able to raise capital at lower rates of interest than private companies can. Again Government will be freed from lity involved in the guarantees which they have to give to private when during a period of 25 to 30 years the whole capital on railw profits accruing from them will go to swell the Indian exchequer unintelligible how the committee should have made the recomm alluded to in the face of these facts. The committee also rec loans should as far as possible be raised in India. This is indee
but the committee would not have made this recommenda bestowed some thought upon the present condition of Ind
the light of present circumstances we must look upon the pr capital being made available for schemes like railways as lying of possibility. We suggest that these remarks should receive f before the Home Government and the House of Commons come ment of the question. [The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 31st

The public will be anxious to know what the Government of In to do. Their plans ought to be made known to the public as soo
They can lose nothing by taking the people into confidence matters of such vital concern.]

Comments on the report on Indian railways for 1883-84.

Commenting on the report on Indian railways for 1883-84
(18) of the 31st August says:—The nished in the report, which is necess amination of the advantages and di railways in India, is not only untrustworthy but is misleading throw dust into the eyes of the public. At a meeting of the East India Railway Company in London the chairman said t year the company received a profit of 6¾ per cent. The repor however says that the profit was a little over 8¾ per cent. Is between the two figures immaterial? Does it not appear tha
General of Railways aimed at practising deception upon th Parliament by exaggerating facts? It is shown that the ne guaranteed railway companies amounted to 25 lákhs of rupees, is that the cost of transmitting money to England even excee of net profit, and it is surprising that an attempt should be m
this fact with a view to show that the country has been profiti ways. The Director General himself is of opinion that the fi him cannot be quite correct in the absence of information rega of money remittances. Why should the Director General have about the correctness of which he himself has doubts? Coul obtained information regarding the cost of money remittances
If all the information is doubtful, is it just to place it befor
If Government secured the proprietorship of the East India heavy cost, was it not proper that they should have reserved to right of making alterations in the rates of fares? The report cont to the refusal of the railway company to lower the rates charged do not Government compel this company to do so, as they ha case of other companies? Is not such conduct likely to indu Government encourage English merchants in making money by
When the rulers take it into their heads to despoil people all prove ineffective. It is evident that so long as the English purs double dealing there is no chance of any real gain to this countr

Suggests certain changes in the time table of the Sind Railway.

A correspondent of the Sind Times (5) of the 26th Augus Sukkur, says:—The railway time tab siderable modifications. It is very engers for Sukkur should have to s at midnight, and that passengers for K to arrive there at 2 A. M. and to remain on the flats until day-brea accommodation at all at Kotri for railway passengers, and t that the railway authorities go on in listless indifference from da caring to provide any.

Native States.

Comments on the recent fight with the Makránis in the Junágad State.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 1st September says:—The r
the State of Junágad and some of its appear to be in a satisfactory cond
must be loose somewhere when we f
year and a half has elapsed since the oc
Maiya massacre another similar tragedy has been enacted in th
as present information goes, the Darbár appears to have borne the tragedy. The desperation of the Makránis is something har
We think, as suggested by the Times of India, that Government a careful enquiry into the relations between the Darbár and its Native Opinion (11) of the 31st August says:—There is some seems, in the State of Junágad, and it requires an independen inquiry. We are sorry that on the very heels of the last mass fatal collision between the Junágad police and the Makránis of a vil should have followed. The casus belli seems to have been a dis prietary rights of the said village between the warlike Makrán

This time the collision has an authoritative appearance; and th authority has been thus avenged by the brisk activity of an Agent, surely the Nabáb of Junágad's dignity and respect in jects must considerably suffer. Our contemporary of the Ga that the belligerent Makránis could have easily been brought t giance by a few days' close siege and consequent starvation. Bu have greater enchantment than the advantages of peace, and rising was much more the result of the influence of the forme
The Kesari (40) of the 2nd September expresses similar sentim Chronicle (77) of the 31st August says:—The second traged
a melancholy incident in itself, cannot fail to be instructive Native States who are disposed to rebel against their own rul paramount power. The Makránis had no decent excuse to be they did towards the Native Darbár and the British authoriti
the just penalty of their stubborn recalcitration, and their f warning to others disposed to imitate their dangerous exampl

Blames the Junágad State for the enactment of the second tragedy in that State.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 4th Septemb
Mr. Haridás, the Diwán of Junága shirk all responsibility in the ma tragedy at Junágad, we still hold h
it. We expected to see all ev Junágad by his appointment as Diwán, but our expectati realized. The battle with the Makránis was a splendid aff Scott! The Major displayed great bravery, but did not sen deceased Makránis in a cart to Junágad! With the exceptio there is no difference between the massacre of the Maiyás
We do not think that the appointment of Mr. Haridás as Div faction and peace to the subjects and removed all that is r
Great mismanagement still prevails in the judicial depart
When such is the case with the judicial branch, what wrong committed in standing up for their rights when injustice has
We await the explanation which the State may have to offer time we suggest the advisability of adopting some special me everything that is rotten in the State of Junágad and for princes from snatching away the rights of their subjects, bh inámdárs. Though a Bháyát Court is in existence, it does the rights of inámdárs and others. [The Gujaráti (99) of th presses similar sentiments. The Rást Goftár (115), the Gu
the Yajdán Parast (128) of the 31st August absolve the J
all blame in the matter of the fight with the Makránis.]

Berár Affairs.

Suggests that the agency of school-masters should be utilized in effecting sanitary improvements in villages.

The Varhád Samáchár (17) o points out the necessity of effecti ments in villages and suggests utilizing the agency of school-mas

RAOJI BHAVAN
Acting Reporter o

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
10th September 1884.

INDEX.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Ábkári: Complaint regarding the oppressive nature of the framed by the — Department ... ...
Agriculture: Suggestions in connection with the appointm
assistant to the Director of— ... ...
Bombay Legislative Council: Comments on the recent appo
the— ... ...
Bombay Port Trust: Suggestion to the members of the — fo
the utility of the Chaupáti Bandar ... ...
Court fees: Expression of opinion that it is not just to subsidiary applications which are mere reminders of origi tions ... ...
Factory Act: Suggestions to the — Committee ... ...
Forests: Complaint regarding the hardship caused by an biting the people of Gokák from taking wood for fuel pu
the Gokák hill ... ...
Honorary Magistrates: Suggestion for appointing — in Sind Honorary Surgeons: Expression of opinion that the scheme
ing — to hospitals has not failed and a request to Go try the experiment once more ... ...
India Council: Necessity of reforming the— ... ...
Land revenue: Comments on the Government resolution on
of allowing discount on — instalments paid in advance ..
Police: Request to Sir Frank Souter to take measures for traffic in girls carried on in Bombay ... ...
Postal matters:
  Approval of the contemplated introduction of a scheme
  able overland parcels ... ...
  Comments on the proposal to initiate a system of makin
  on account of money orders without requiring the pa
  at the post offices ... ...
  Defects in the postal money order system ... ...
  Necessity of initiating a system of life insurance through
  of the Postal Department ... ...
Resolution excluding Eurasians from the Roorki College: D
the contemplated rescission of the — ... ...
Shrievalty of Bombay: Suggestions to the Bombay Gover matter of the appointment of the next Sheriff ...

Part II.—Legislation—

Khoja Succession Bill: Comments on the— ... ...

Part III.—Local Self-government—

Constitution of local boards: Comments on the — in District... ... ...

Part IV.—Education—

Educational wants of Sind: Enumeration of the— ...
Female education: Attack on European manners and custom tion with the question of giving higher education to wo

Part V.—Railways—

Indian Railway Committee: Comments on the recommendati Report on Indian railways for 1883-84: Comments on the—Sind Railway: Suggestion of certain changes in the time ta

Part VI.—Native States—

Junágad: Comments on the recent fight with the Makrá State ... ...

Part VII.—Berár Affairs—

Sanitary improvements in villages: Suggestion that th
school-masters should be utilized in effecting— ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS,

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

06
FICE
884

REPORT

ON

NATIVE PAPERS

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND B

For the Week ending 13th September

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Wee
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Mont
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quar
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-w
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Wee
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-w
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Wee
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Dail
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Wee
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fort
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Wee
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	D
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	D
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Wee
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do
22	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do
23	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do
*24	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do
*25	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do
26	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fort
27	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Wee
28	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do
29	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do
30	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do
31	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do
32	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do
33	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do
34	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fort
35	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Wee
36	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do
37	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do
38	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do
*39	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do
40	„ Kesari	Do.	Do
41	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do
42	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortn
43	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Mont
*44	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Week
45	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.
46	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.
47	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.
48	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.
49	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Month
50	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Week
51	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.
52	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.
*53	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortn
54	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Week
*55	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.
*56	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.
*57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Month
*58	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Week
59	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Mont
60	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortn
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Week
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Mont
*65	„ Shivájí[1]	Poona	Week
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do
*69	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánares

CON 503

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	Mara'thi—continued.
70	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
71	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	300
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	250
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	500
	Anglo-Gujara'ti.
79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	475
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	485
82	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
83	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	200
	Gujara'ti.
84	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
85	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	850
86	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	394
87	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
88	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	415
89	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,175
90	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	500
91	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	50
92	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	700
*93	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.	200
94	„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly	585
95	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,025
96	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
97	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
98	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
99	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	325
100	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
101	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	300
102	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*103	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
104	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	800
105	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,350
106	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	125
107	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	810
*108	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	925
110	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	250
111	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
112	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	350
113	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
114	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
115	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
116	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,750
117	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
118	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
119	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	327
120	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
121	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	620
122	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	1,700
123	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	423
*124	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
125	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
126	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	85
127	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	778
128	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
129	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	Ka'narese.
130	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*131	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
132	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	300
133	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	915
134	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	115
	Sanskrit.
*135	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	Urdu.
*136	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
137	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	Persian.
138	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	English, Mara'thi and Urdu.
*139	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
	Sindi.
140	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, ich are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the icial Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, er placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be olutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed n a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Po

The Vichárshil (75)

Lamentations of India.

tions of India personif have I been reduced to now? I have been re miserable existence wi
doled out by foreigners.
for this miserable pligh called in foreigners to he when they found on thei
of ignorant children and of this state of things, u
use of it as if they wer wealth became elated by This state of commotion
have neither the ability son of mine restored or not last for even a whol prompted to admit int
that was brought with t one and sent back to the every year millions of ea
state of things has con
me to believe that inv
oppressed me once for al constantly extracting m verting it into gold.
I stand a fair chance of ingredients of my body applied unto me, and gold. So much for the have not yet awakened
forsake such of my child property. They remain white crows of the whit
little bits in their possess years ago is fresh in faults. This much for set of my children are tho annually fall a prey to th
my state has been unifor excessive rain in another single year unattended reduced to a fearful plig
thousands of leeches an producing excruciating p
Mitră (46) of the 11th S

The Bodh Sudháka

Popular ideas regarding the British rule in India.

it is that many reform
train. The English peo educate the people and t
this mission they would tration based on such s
comments of three-fourth British rule set forth by most ignorant cultivator

Politics and the Public Administration.

Lamentations of India.

The Vichárshil (75) of the 1st September but received on the 13th idem, in an article headed "A Crying Woman," expresses the following sentiments in the shape of the lamentations of India personified as a destitute woman:—What a miserable condition have I been reduced to! What should an unfortunate creature like myself do now? I have been reduced to a state of widowhood and am eking out a miserable existence with my children with the help of a few crusts that are doled out by foreigners. But perhaps the vices of my children are responsible for this miserable plight. My children began to fight among themselves and called in foreigners to help them in their internecine warfare. These foreigners, when they found on their advent that the affairs of the house were in the hands of ignorant children and that the matron of the house was effete, took advantage of this state of things, usurped the whole of the property, and began to make use of it as if they were the owners. All the foreigners that had access to my wealth became elated by its possession and in their turn made way for others. This state of commotion has been going on for a number of years. My children have neither the ability nor the means of setting matters right. Once a son of mine restored order in the house by punishing all foreigners, but it did not last for even a whole century. By a sad irony of fate my children were prompted to admit into the house some white Márwádis. The earthen pot that was brought with them by these Márwádis was soon converted into a golden one and sent back to their country, and they have been sending to this country every year millions of earthen pots and carrying golden ones in return. This state of things has continued for the last one hundred years, and it has led me to believe that invaders like Nádir, Taimur, Mahomed and others who oppressed me once for all were better than these terrible people who have been constantly extracting my blood by the application of cupping glasses and converting it into gold. And if I remain under them for a hundred years more I stand a fair chance of losing not only my blood but my flesh, bones and other ingredients of my body under the powerful operation of the cupping glasses applied unto me, and all these will go to enrich their country in the shape of gold. So much for the usurpers. As to the condition of my children, they have not yet awakened from their state of infatuation! Evil fate does not yet forsake such of my children as are still possessed of small bits of my immoveable property. They remain off their guard even when the all-absorbing avaricious white crows of the white island are watching for an opportunity to snatch the little bits in their possession! When the fate of one of their brothers a few years ago is fresh in their memory, it is strange that they should repeat his faults. This much for the condition of one set of my children. Another set of my children are thoroughly destitute and half-starved. Thousands of them annually fall a prey to the diseases engendered by absence of food. Latterly my state has been uniformly miserable. What with scanty rain in one year and excessive rain in another, and with rat and locust plagues, there has not been a single year unattended with its special misfortune, and I am being gradually reduced to a fearful plight. There is not even a drop of blood in my body, while thousands of leeches and krors of cupping glasses applied unto me have been producing excruciating pain. Better death than such misery! [The Mahárásthtră Mitră (46) of the 11th September expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Popular ideas regarding the British rule in India.

The Bodh Sudhákar (23) of the 10th September, in a communicated article headed "Ideas of Hindus about the English Nation," says:—India has been under the English rule for several years and the first impression about it is that many reforms that are beneficial to the people have followed in its train. The English people frankly maintain that their mission to India is to educate the people and to give them a political training, and that after fulfilling this mission they would gladly return to their country. A system of administration based on such sweet talk finds favour with the educated youth, but the comments of three-fourths of the population of India on the vindication of the British rule set forth by these educated men are worth noting. People from the most ignorant cultivator to those who know to read and write Maráthi are unanimous in holding that English rulers are adept in th money under cover of measures ostensibly meant for the people. The proposed agricultural banks are looked upon as a ing the gains of the Native money-lender to the pockets of th and similar ideas are indulged in in respect of the policy of Go ing education, agriculture, public works, forests, railways a

In short it is believed that the rulers are actuated by a desire to false pretences and thus to maintain a never-failing stream of m England. Even the census operations of Government are conne mate object of imposing a fresh tax on the people. It may b ideas are entertained by people who are ignorant and de and are therefore mistaken. But it is not correct to jud views that are held by 19 krors of people. No lasting benefi derived by India from English rule, nor is there any possi benefits in the future. The rulers are solely bent upon augme their country and upon promoting the interests of people of the want of courage we have become thoroughly incompetent task of protecting our own interests. The sum and substance o is no benefactor of India. If the English nation had been a beneficent motives they would not have resorted to the polic education imparted by them produce a feeling of utter h recipients. May God gift us with sense and courage to enabl
the rulers on several matters relating to the administration
Why has not the experiment of admitting Indian representative been tried? Why were the provinces of Oudh, Nágpur, Sá hundred others taken up in the face of a public disclaim annexation? If you profess to do us good by means of civiliz you not open coal, iron and other mines in this country?
encouragement be given to the export trade in wheat, cotton, &
no measures be taken to stop the exportation of food grains
If you profess a love for independence, why don't you impart a and industries to Natives? If these and hundreds of other nature were put to Mr. Gladstone it is difficult to anticipate th give. Recently Government have been trying to forward t education. Is it possible that some secret motives underlie t possible that by this new device the rulers hope to create famil
the ignorant female and male populations, and thus calculate the English rule in India?

Discusses the question of effecting a reform in the present constitution of the India Council.

The Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 7th September says:
impressed we may be with the im stituting the Home Government of much surprised at its present co
public writers agitate the question of the India Office, they commit a blu losing sight of the question of the constitution of the Governm the former had nothing to do with the latter question. In re tion of the Government at London does not radically diffe Viceroy's or any of the Presidency Councils in India. It w effect any large reform in the present essentials of the India chief and local administrations in India have all been so capable of coping with the more rigid requirements which popular Government in London will unfailingly exact. It that the members of the India Council, partly drawn from th
and partly appointed in London, are a despotic bureauc
Secretary of State is mostly the mouthpiece of his Counc Government less despotic in a better sense of the term? The ing the administration in India being poor and inefficient, the proportionately left to their personal resources. Thus they apt to become firmer and more self-willed than they beneficial
a tendency must in all countries be prejudicial to the growi people. Why inveigh against the present India Office as a t

Indian Government, when it serves as a check upon the exer sovereignty in India? Absolute rule in India cannot always one Viceroy as it may be under another. We cannot unres Slagg in throwing unequivocal discredit on the efforts of past and recast the Council. In the absence of mature public opinio and England, in respect of the political, administrative and so taining to India, the ministries on different occasions seem to was practicable in establishing some check on the conduct of the Though we do not think that the remedies pointed out by effectually cope with the progressive necessities of the Indian e doubt for a moment that the time is come for a comprehensive question.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the same date says:—The r
Mr. Baxter's Committee on Indian railways has acquitted itse dicative of how little the members of the House of Commons for the real wants of the country, the welfare of its people, an wishes of its Government and leading men. And this must ten attitude of those who have been objecting to the transfer of the bu by the India Council to a standing committee of the House of confirmation again will grow stronger when they remember the is enacted on the platform of the English House of Commons of the introduction of the Indian budget. The last enactme burlesque has been characterised by English and Anglo-In in words that show their contempt of the proceeding in the mo manner. Indeed all things would appear to conspire to m friends of India wish that the partial direction of the condu now vested in the India Council may long continue in its hand abolition of the Council but an improvement in its constitution procedure that is needed to give India the benefits of a wi control of her affairs by the virtually irresponsible autocrat, t
State. [The Gujaráti (100) of the same date prays for the India Council and advocates the assumption of direct cont
affairs by Parliament.]

Comments on the case in which certain students of Krishnagar in Bengal were prosecuted by the police for clapping their hands on the occasion of a theatrical performance.

The Sind Times (5) of the 5th September says:—The Kris case is over. To comment on a case ordinary nature without losing temp possible. It is really wonderful that questions of justice there should be a opinion between Natives and Euro bitterness of race feeling has been a all other feelings. Whenever any occ parties are equally unreasonable in their expressions of ill feeli ableness. What prompted Major Ramsay to arrest the boys ascribed to race feeling or anything else. What transpired in trial itself is another thing. All lovers of justice, whether India must agree that this trial discloses facts subversive of all justice
It is absolutely beside the question that the students are prosecuting officials Europeans. Justice is presumed to be the s
What should we say of a magistrate who consults the Police S every case and who influences the judgment of his assistant?
wormed out of the unconscious Major by the defending barrist
We have never heard of a covenanted officer with some y display such levity in a public court of justice. The off-ha manner in which Major Ramsay gave evidence, the cool effron
he arrested and unlawfully detained the students, clearly show vagance these mofussil officers are capable. It is a very that the name of British justice is becoming a by-word of repr in the hands of men who drag that honoured name through t British rule will have become a fable in India, as in the course thing must, these unworthy representatives of a worthy gov remembered as the dark spots on its fair fame.

Approve of the appointment of Lord Dufferin to the Viceroyalty of India.

The Bombay Samáchár (89), the Jáme Jamshed (104) and t Sodágar (85) of the 12th September express at the approaching departure of the pres from this country and approve of the of Lord Dufferin as the new Viceroy.

Comments on the forest policy of Government.

Commenting on Government Resolution No. 9288 of 13th A which prescribes a certain scale of fees cattle, the Maháráshtră Mitră (46) of the 1
ber says:—A perusal of this resolution wil excite ridicule about the Márwádi inclinations of Government.
loss what to say of the conduct of Government, who devise measures advance payment of the instalments of land revenue and at the same the cultivator from access to the forest lands and try to secure thei flesh in all cases. The rayats have no right even to touch the trees forests. Nay, they cannot get even a pinch of earth or a small ston ing a house without the payment of the necessary fees. We do n right Government have to resume forests which were allowed to vill time of the revenue survey. It is not good to issue conflicting resol time to time on the strength of authority and to subordinate the the people to those of Government. For the time Government n themselves with the idea of having accomplished their own good, bu them that the consequences must be very serious. The sooner the G and their officers bestow a thought on the grievances of the peo nection with the Forest Department the better.

Comments on the policy of Government in regard to the grant of grazing rights.

In an article headed "Grazing in Forests" the Mahrátta (2)
September says:—In the very beginnin observe that Government do not seem to proposal, which we have made more than in some cases the cultivator should be allo
grass fields freely. Government take into consideration only tw
(1) whether these grazing fields should be sold to the highest bidder, or they should be let to the cultivators of a village at a small fee. N told that Government prefer the latter mode. At the same time think that a farm may prove useful to the villagers if the pátil of the village takes the farm. But we cannot allow this to pass
The pátil is no doubt the headman of the village, but he is no longe man of the village system. He does not now take that interest in t good which he used to take formerly. The reason is obvious. Gover so far taken him under their protection, and have so far curtailed his the rayats that the pátil does not wield the same authority that he d
We do not therefore think that it is possible to satisfy this provis Government, as we have already said above, are perfectly in favour system; and yet they observe that in some cases the farm system i on account of the large amount of revenue yielded by it. Governm same time say that all the area of the Government forests cannot be grazing of the village cattle on payment of a small fee. Now n claims this. So this assurance of Government is superfluous. Wh ment propose is that in each forest village a certain amount of forest be opened yearly for the grazing of village cattle on payment of area should depend, Government observe, on the number of cattl pasturage is required. Here again Government seem to make n grazing land available in the village itself or in the waste land.
grazing land is now left in villages. One thing remarkable about th ment resolutions is that they are so worded that no objection can b them. There are little apparently unmeaning provisions here which are the authorities for all official vagaries ever complai we examine the conduct of Government officials who render obnoxious, we shall always find that there are certain provisions be these worthies generally shelter themselves, and hence they very against the law. To a good officer discretionary powers mean a gr ibility, and he ponders well before he uses those large powers.

officer who interprets discretionary powers to mean full fr ernment interference, these powers leave a large field to in. It is provided that big kurans like the Kátraj one should n year round and should not be given on the fee system at an au kurans sometimes realize as many as Rs. 5,000. This is not Government may well desire that these kurans should not be dis not object to this, but ought not Government at the same t
the legitimate wants of the rayat? The hereditary rights have been curtailed and it is but just that in return Govern them the best consideration and supply their legitimate w escaped the notice of Government that in certain periods of of the poor cultivator get lean, and in most cases die. Now, un poor fellow, rainy season is the period in which he most ne
It has been observed that the stock of fodder, &c., whi
generally stores, gets exhausted by the beginning of t
This shortness of fodder compels the cultivator to fe short or "famine" rations. One Government officer has alrea a recommendation to the following effect: "The vill village should be allowed to cut grass for their own use
They will require this grass for their cattle and also in n
Such cutting should be regulated by the Forest Departm certain specified areas, and the villagers should not be pe random." This is a good suggestion, and if acted upon, beneficial to the people. We hear that in the Southern D practice prevails, but of this we are not certain. Why Gove on this suggestion is a different question. Government ma think that when they entrust the work to their officers the latt see that the rayats are not oppressed. If Government had distinctly that they would not tax the cultivator for fodd purpose of feeding his cattle, there would have been no chan the cultivator; but when they are told to charge a fee for the u zealous officers are likely to look more to the growth of G than to the convenience of the cultivators. We have not th Government have an earnest desire to ameliorate the conditio
We call upon Mr. Ozanne, the Director of Agriculture, to mo behalf of the wretched cattle of the cultivator. The fee syst hearted measure. It is likely to be as bad as the auction scale of fees is fixed moderately. We therefore urge Gov
the cultivator free use of pieces of land for grazing his cattle, to cut grass from them to make provision for the rainy seas

Comments on the policy regarding the assessment of sub-soil water as ennunciated in the resolution on survey operations in Jhálod táluka in Panch Mahâls.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 8th September says:- resolution on the operations of r
Jhálod táluka in Panch Mahâls t Bombay take occasion to review an length the principles of the asse water at first survey and on revis
tion is a clear statement of the polic and makes an effort to meet the arguments and objections r policy in the public press. As an attempt at taking the publ and explaining the views of Government, the present resolu soon upon the resolution of March 26th, must be hailed wit does fresh proofs of a liberal tone in the administration.
summarizes the views of Government on the question and the forward by the opponents, and proceeds:—Among such co objectors to Government policy have, we think, the bette Admitting that the principle of assessment now proposed considerable advance upon the system formerly in vogue—adm system will not have as deterrent an effect upon well irrigatio it is difficult to understand how it will encourage the digging will no doubt be free from the fear of any fresh tax in digging of wells when the assessment already includes a cha bearing capacity of the soil, whether he digs a well or not;

by Government of a charge for subsoil water can scarcely inc dig a well in so far as his capacity to dig a well will depend u circumstances, such as his means, his opportunities, his own water-bearing capacity of his land, and so forth. On the oth a possibility of the system being worked with hardship and return from its working will be comparatively small. If Gov totally abandon their claim over subsoil water, the next best th is to specify some limit of depth and the methods by which subsoil water will be ascertained. Such a definite declarat confidence among the agricultural classes. The present res resolutions which have preceded it, is wanting in definiteness In conclusion, while giving Government the fullest credit interestedness and anxiety for the welfare of agriculturists Government not to treat with distrust or aversion any honest expression of hostile comment. [The Arunodayă (18) of th entirely approves of the policy enunciated in the resolution abo

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 7th September says :— find that the Bombay Government has taken the opportunity resolution on the recent survey operations in the Jhálod Mah its policy of taxing the water-bearing capacities of soils at so cannot sufficiently commend the spirit here shown and have remarking that the resolution in question has removed some which before existed on the subject. In the case of the J resolution states that the existence of accessible subsoil water tained by a very careful investigation by skilled agency elaborate rules. What those rules are and how the existence has been ascertained by skilled agency it would be worth whi hope Government will, in the same spirit which has prompte the present resolution, let the public know those rules and all anxiety on the subject. It will also interest the public meant by "accessible water," and at what depth water must ex the definition of "accessible water." A great deal depends upo is understood and how the water is ascertained to exist. Fo in interpretation or a little unsoundness in the principles adopt gation may result in great hardship and injustice by submitting rate land which ought not to bear it, whilst owing to the exp the rayat may be unable to prove the inaccessibility of water this may be relinquishment of lands—a contingency which oug guarded against. No doubt if it be admitted that Governmen taxing the subsoil water, the system of taxing it, whether it must on the whole be preferred to that of taxing it only though it cannot exactly be said to encourage—as, in fact, it co to make improvements, it is not likely to discourage them rate imposed is sufficiently light. And except that unless very le as it is promised it will be—it may result in hardship, there is said against it. As explained in the resolution, the principl the objections which were once urged against it, and we are ment, in deference to the criticism of the press, has been explain it to the public at great length.

The Sind Times (5) of the 2nd September says :—In th the 26th March last the Bombay Government, while admitti ency of taxing wells, thought it advisable to take the adva water into account in the assessment of land. Public opinion this taxation, and the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha as well as our strong arguments against it. Nevertheless we find from a that Government adhere to their first proposal. The resolut quotations and extracts and contains an elaborate defence ment policy; but we have in vain sought for an answer that there was no ascertained and definite modus operand the extent of the advantage, or, as the Government put it of water" enjoyed by each number. All the informatio us in this connection is contained in the following two se classifying the land according to relative value, account has be inherent advantage of accessible subsoil water, the existenc been ascertained by a very careful investigation by skilled under elaborate rules." "The best evidence of the existence of doubtless its actual use, but it cannot reasonably be asserted that of irrigation by well is already under well irrigation." What th are we do not know; nor do we care to know them if they only en to assess the inherent advantage of accessible subsoil water. W like to know is how the skilled agency employed by Governmen cover "the land capable of irrigation by wells" but which is no well irrigation: in other words, to discover the existence of ina water. Regarding this important question we do not find a si Government resolution. Even as regards accessible subsoil wate the authors of the celebrated Joint Report refrained from givin left the whole matter "to the judgment of the superintending o therefore not a little curious to know what "elaborate rules" framed for the guidance of the aforesaid "skilled agency." M were constructed under express promises that they would n account in revision settlements. It follows therefore that th abstract advantage,—the unrealised "command of water"—w of promise and a breach of faith. We are now asked to believ ment of subsoil water is not the assessment of wells:—but if w assessment of subsoil water would be impossible, then it follows

of wells places the landholder in a much worse position in con settlement than he would occupy without them. But for them no addition to his assessment. It is only because they exist the classer at once presumes the existence of subsoil water and
it. To an ordinary cultivator there is little difference in taxin of a well and taxing the potential existence of subsoil water as well. The main question is whether agricultural improvements be discouraged by either taxation. The agriculturist will not that his well is not the cause but the occasion of the enhanced posed upon him, but will at once conclude that the digging enhancement of assessment on revision of settlement. Had the metaphysical knowledge with which our Government seem were they all unpractical adorers of logical distinctions, the Go would be without a flaw. But unfortunately they are impervi logic but the logic of hard facts, and we can assure Governmen
ment of subsoil water will, throughout the length and bread dency, be held equivalent to the assessment of wells, and th will thus be inflicted on agricultural improvements.

Grievances of the zamindárs of Hála in Sind.

The Sind Times (5) of the 2nd September says:—Some three to the Sind Sudhár (140) on behalf of of Hála representing the excessive new settlement. They go into som tails which we reproduce here for the information of our readers that be. The following is the translation of the letter:—Th however hard, was nothing compared to the present settlement, the zamindárs with the weight of a mountain. Just think formerly assessed at 6 annas an acre now charged at Rs. 3
The minimum area that can be cultivated by means of one nar is 12½ acres. This area, according to the new settlement, has the local fund cess, Rs. 38¾, whereas formerly it paid only words, the assessment according to the new rates is about eight rate. This rate was fixed in violation of the rule that the in ment on a deh was in no case to exceed 66 per cent.; the excess 700 instead of 66 per cent. An idea of the heaviness of the p be formed from the fact that whereas formerly the maximum survey number, including the local fund cess, was about Rs. 5 cess alone now amounts to that sum. There are several lands luka which formerly paid only 6 annas per acre. It may be said exorbitant rate is fixed on first-class lands ; but the assessment on lands is only slightly less, about Rs. 3 for each nar, calculating the di tween the assessments on first and second class lands at 4 annas per is still a little more than seven times the former rate. But most of the Hála táluka have been classed under the first class and very few under class. In the present condition of the táluka most of the numbers ar without takávi and at the division of crops the landholder gets only a wealthy zamindár who pays Rs. 60 takávi on a hurlo and Rs. 100 or a nar, gets one-third. But hardly one among a hundred zamindárs ca who pays this amount of takávi. Considering the expenses now incur nection with cultivation the difficulty experienced in getting manure and the necessity of borrowing at a high rate of interest to make up t

of the assessment, we sadly repent of having ever taken to land cultiva we feel there is no one now to help us in getting out of the mire an none to save the drowning. Formerly it was the custom that land w according to its relative value, but now there is a uniform rate for a fertile soil paying the same as an unproductive one. And the allow for a rayati water-course is very small, only 4 annas. We believe total amount of assessment this year is nearly double the assessment year. The greatest hardship from which we suffer is however different. This year several thousand acres of uncultivated area included in the survey numbers, which require the utmost labour make them fit for cultivation. We say that these cultivated areas c half ghanta of jungle and waste. In order to cultivate one hurlo of a person has to spend about 100 rupees merely in improvin even then it is fit for cultivation only after two years. Besides lands here are so very bad that the survey officers themselve to put them in the survey numbers on the ground that there prospect of their ever yielding anything and that it was mere waste for Government to have them surveyed. And even on such waste Government have fixed a revenue of Rs. 38¾ per nar. This, we subm injustice. It is in contravention of circular No. 28, wherein it is down that such lands are to be exempt from assessment for 30 years be very lightly assessed at a rate not exceeding 4 annas per acre, anc a view to their improvement and consequent increase of revenue t ment every facility is to be afforded to the landholder. But instead being given heavy obstacles are thrown in the way of their improveme waste lands are now placed in the first class with uncultivated lands an ance has been made for the labour required in their improvement."
spondents wind up with a request to the authorities to see into the m we trust the Commissioner in Sind will take their grievance into his tion and enquire whether the facts stated by them are correct. Th signed by the zamindárs and they can be referred to and asked to s their statement. [The same correspondents of the Sind Sudhár (140) September say :—We have something more to say on the subject an you will oblige us by publishing this letter in your paper. In the le referred to it was said that under the original settlement the min charged was 6 annas per acre, but it is not so; the minimum rate pe only 4 annas. There are several lands in the Hála táluka which we at this rate. The same lands are now assessed at rupees 2 and an acre, i. e., the rates at present leviable are eleven times as high as the
What is most surprising is that the land which was subject to an of 4 annas only is now charged 5 annas and 6 pies for local cess only to Rs. 2-12-0 levied on account of Government assessment. Formerl cess was only 1 anna in the rupee; now it has been enhanced to 2 an rupee. Under the old rules if there were two crops in the same cultivator had not to pay anything for the second crop, but at pre if the most inferior sort of the rabi produce were sown in the sam additional charge of 4 annas per acre would have to be paid, i. e., piece which if cultivated twice under the old rules was assessed a only would, if cultivated twice now, be liable to an assessment of Rs.
a local cess of 6 annas.]

Censures Government for the re-appointment of the Hon'ble K. V. Ráste to the Legislative Council.

In an article headed "Our Legislative Council" the Dnyán Prakásh (9) the 8th September says:—The last number of th Bombay Government Gazette contains a notificatio announcing that the Hon'ble Badrudin Tyabji an the Hon'ble Ráo Báhádur Khanderáo Vishvanát Ráste have been re-appointed members of the Legi lative Council for a further term of two years and that Mr. J. R. Naylor, C.S Legal Remembrancer, has been appointed a member in place of Genera Merriman. We have no doubt that Mr. Badrudin's re-appointment will b received with approval and satisfaction, while it is not the slightest exaggeration to say that the news of the re-appointment of Mr. Ráste will be receive not only with feelings of utter disappointment but even of downright indignation. We had some hopes that at least in the last year of his term of offic Sir James Fergusson would not perpetrate the scandal of re-appointing thi "magnificent nobody" to a seat in the local Legislative Council. We have no the slightest doubt that if any local committee, on being permitted to elect it own president under the new Local Self-government Acts, were so foolish a to elect a person like Mr. Ráste for the said post, such a local committee woul richly deserve to be summarily and instantly deprived of the power of electin its own president. Native princes in this country are constantly blamed b Government, by writers in the Anglo-Indian press, and by writers in th Native press also, for conferring responsible offices on their personal favourites minions and pimps. Khanderáo Gáikwád was so blamed for appointing Bhá Scindia to be his minister, so was his unfortunate and ill-starred brothe Malhár Ráo blamed for appointing Balwantráo Ráhurkar to the same responsibl post. This appointment of Mr. Ráste is no better than either of the tw appointments referred to above. And our Bombay contemporary the Time of India, writing possibly under inspiration from the Secretariat, says in it impression of Friday last that the re-appointment for a further term of tw years not only of Mr. Badrudin Tyabji but even of Mr. Ráste will be receive with general satisfaction by the communities to which the two nominees respectively belong. Now we are tempted to ask our contemporary to produce hi authority for such a silly and reckless assertion as the one under notice. Ou contemporary has clearly been misled, and its ignorance is quite unpardonabl for if it had only taken care to ascertain independently for itself the overwhelming and unanimous verdict of the Native press when Mr. Ráste' appointment for the first time was announced two years ago, it would neve have ventured to put forth such an absurd and positively untruthful statemen The hungry set of parasites in the court of Malhár Ráo Gáikwád offered hi their sincere and warm congratulations on his rare discretion and judgment i selecting specially qualified men when he selected that beggar Ráhurkar fo the post of his prime minister. And some of our Anglo-Indian contemporarie appear to us to be adopting the mean artifices of the hungry set of parasites referred to above. The parallel is complete except in one particular. We fancy tha Malhár Ráo with his appreciation of his responsibilities may very probably hav honestly believed that in selecting Ráhurkar he had discharged his duty. W really feel that it would be doing sheer injustice to Sir James Fergusson t suppose that His Excellency's appreciation of his responsibilities is no wa better than that of Malhárráo Gáikwád, or that his discretion and judgmen stand on the same level with those of that unfortunate prince. Sir James was who selected Mr. Badrudin Tyabji and Mr. Káshináth Trimbak Telan for the honour of a seat in the Legislative Council, and it is very difficult t believe that one who is capable of making such irreproachable selections can b capable—nay, we had almost said guilty—of making such a scandalous selectio as the one under notice. We cannot believe that Sir James is really ignora of the utter absence of any qualification in Mr. Ráste to have the honour of seat in the Legislative Council bestowed upon him. Sir James cannot hav failed to observe the ridiculous exhibition which Mr. Ráste made from his sea at the Council Board during the debates on the two Local Self-governmen Bills. What then is the explanation of this scandalous appointment? W should certainly like to be enlightened upon this point. We confess to ou utter inability to suggest any explanation whatever except it be that Go ernment are anxious to secure the presence of some ciphers with a vie to swell the official majority. No other explanation that we is possible. It is needless for us here to remind our contemp Mahrátta (2) that we are quite ready to subscribe to the princi motives should never be imputed to Government so long as any ac them is capable of being explained away by a fairly liberal interpre what is to be done when the most charitable interpretation that ca to satisfy the requirements of common sense? Will Government or apologists, so far as this scandalous appointment is concerned qualifications which Government expect their nominees to the Council to fulfil, and then show how those qualifications are fulfi Ráste? If the qualifications are nameless, indescribable or suc bear being openly avowed, then the system which permits of being solemnly enacted stands self-condemned and the sooner it is the better for all concerned. And in one sense such scandalous a are extremely beneficial, for they afford the strongest proof necessary reform in our Legislative Councils is to make them elect would think of reforming a system which was not full of glaring abuses, and in one sense, as we have stated above, we must offer ou gratulations to Sir James Fergusson on his having for the second such a scandalous appointment and thereby having afforded the st demnation of the present system of nomination. [The Native O

the 7th September (Maráthi columns), the Mahrátta (2), the Gujaráti Yajdán Parast (129) of the same date and the Kesari (40) of express approval of the re-appointment of Mr. Badrudin Tyabji an of that of Mr. Ráste.]

Complains against an order prohibiting pleaders from appearing in courts in the Sibi district.

A correspondent of the Sind Sudhár (140) of the 6th Septe
Although the doors of justice are ever under the British rule, darkness is stil
the district of Sibi. Upto the year 1 used to appear in courts on behalf of plai
as defendants, but when the pleaders ca what stuff the Magistrates were made of, the latter requested the Governor General to pass an order prohibiting all pleaders from any of the courts in the Sibi district. The absence of pleaders has resulted in injustice being done to several poor people. If look this evil in the face and allow pleaders to appear in cour which are at present closed will be opened, better justice will be the people will be saved much hardship; otherwise there is no hop

Comments on the method of carrying out executions prevailing in the Bombay Presidency.

The Jáme Jamshed (104) of the 11th September says:— India supports the suggestion made in
by the Sanitary Commissioner of Berá Bombay Presidency, as in Berár, senten tion should be carried out in jails and public. But we are unable to a suggestion. We, in the first place, condemn executions. The wicked and should be done away with. But if the punishment is to we do not see any reason for giving up the present system of carr public. The way in which it is carried out in this city is not sh said that executions strike awe into the hearts of evil-doers.
punishment were carried out inside the jail, it would not fulfil its Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 11th and the Akhbáre Sodágar (8 September express approval of executions being carried out in instead of before the public.]

Comments on Dr. Hewlett's report on the prevalence of enteric fever among European soldiers employed in this country.

Referring to the report on enteric fever by Dr. Hewl Commissioner for the Government of Jáme Jamshed (104) of the 9th Sep proves of the suggestion regarding lity of demolishing European soldiers' b they have been used for twenty or and of constructing new ones instead in places, and says:—We can believe that the barracks may be defe suggestion appears strange. Even if Dr. Hewlett's statement be true, the stat of the Indian finances will not permit of his suggestions being carried ou Are the krores of rupees spent on the construction of barracks in this country to be thrown away? The health of the soldiers, moreover, will not much improve even if the suggested construction of new barracks every 30 years at grea cost is carried out. If the wretched quarters now occupied by Native soldier at the Marine Lines and near the Crawford Markets were improved, the expenditure on them would be well directed. The barracks at Colába for the use o European soldiers are palaces when compared to those occupied by Native soldiers It is easy to say that the latter are weak and inferior in physique to their European brethern, but when we try to know the real causes we find that the Government are more to blame in the matter than the Native soldiers. No arrangements are made for the maintenance of the families of the latter similar to those made for the families of European soldiers. The food of Native soldiers is very much inferior to that of their European brethern and they have to go half starved with a view to provide for their families. The well-wishers of the Native army desire that nice quarters should be provided for its members and that their pay should be slightly raised in order that life may not prove to them a burden. Dr. Hewlett's anxiety for the welfare of the European army is creditable to him, but he should also look to the welfare of the poor Native soldiers. In fact, as Sanitary Commissioner, it is his duty to do so.

Approves of the conduct of Government in giving up the experiment of appointing honorary surgeons in hospitals.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 8th September says:—Government have given up, it seems, the experiment of honorary surgeons, and we think that under the circumstances no other alternative was reasonably open to them. It i said that Government should not have adopted this step hastily and declared the experiment a failure merely because of the differences between Dr. Hoje on the one hand and Drs. Blaney and Pesikaka on the other. But with severa medical practitioners entertaining prejudices, rightly or wrongly, against the scheme, and especially with the Surgeon General hostile to it, the experiment had we think, slight chances of success from the beginning. The real cause of th disputes and misunderstanding between Dr. Hojel and Drs. Blaney, Pesikaka and Khambata lay in the fact that it was not expressly stated that these honorary surgeons were subordinate to the surgeon of the hospital. If therefore the experiment must continue, the honorary surgeons must be declared either independent of the surgeon in charge of the hospital or subordinate to him. In the forme case, all room for collision between them and the surgeon may disappear, but i they go wrong, who is to check them? In the latter case it is rather awkward fo the authorities to avail themselves of unremunerated services and hold thos who render them liable to censure from a paid surgeon. In either case th system is attended with difficulties and Government have acted wisely in doin away with the system altogether.

Does not approve of the abandonment of the experiment of appointing honorary surgeons in hospitals.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 7th September says:—It is a matter to b seriously regretted that the quarrel between th honorary surgeons of the Gokuldás Hospital and thei superior has led to the abandonment of a most promising experiment. We are inclined to agree with th Gazette that Government have come to the above resolution rather hastily. There is great need in India for the voluntary system and we think it ought not to have been given up in the present case. Can th corporation mend matters? It may be remembered that it was on the strengt of Dr. Cook's suggestion that the corporation readily acceded to the propos for honorary surgeons. The dispute recently witnessed has in no manner show that the system has proved a failure. Is the dictum of the medical trio, wh have the ear of the Government, to override the voice of the corporation? W hope not. We repeat that the experiment will prove a complete success fairly tested. Government should not force their opinion on the corporation whic is now asked to provide the funds for maintaining a paid surgeon. In a matte of this nature the corporation has a right to decide which is the better system The principle on which Government appear to have based their resolution bear close resemblance to that according to which they shaped their course with regar to the Contagious Diseases Act. The corporation questioned the wis ernment in that matter and declined to pay for the maintenance of pital establishment. Our city fathers must repeat that course now. question the opinion of Government that the honorary appointments a failure. [The Native Opinion (11) of the same date says :—It is tion why the experiment of honorary surgeonships should not succe us. We believe the Government verdict in the case is yet prematur have been as well to have given another trial to honorary service. is quite an exotic in India, and if a trial failed in the first instance, evidence that it must fail on every occasion. Possibly Government from the first averse to the scheme and their present resolution on is only one more instance of their anxiety to make their position st Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 7th September says :—It is a pity th ment have hastily come to the resolution of abandoning the experin ploying honorary surgeons in our hospitals. We believe the public public especially, have reason to regret this decision of Government has been a failure of the experiment, the particulars of the unpl cussion of the subject tend to suggest that more than one party must ible for the same. The causes of the so-called failure do not by appear irremediable. At all events the abandonment of the exp what appear to many to be insufficient grounds and after a mere trial under apparently unfavourable circumstances, will not be acce public without grumbling. Very likely the municipal corporation question again comes before it, will not unreservedly acquiesce in arrived at by Government. The Rást Goftár (116) and the Yajdán of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Disapproves of the reply sent by Government to the second memorial regarding the inconveniences suffered by passengers by train-cars in Bombay.

The Yajdán Parast (129) of the 7th September says :—The re Government to the second memorial re inconveniences suffered by passengers b in Bombay is highly disappointing. have not exacted any promise from th Company for redressing the grievances o ling public who are thus left in a state The memorialists did not expect to rece evasive answer as that given by Mr. Kittredge and it is strange t ment are satisfied with it.

Complains of the prevalence of opium-smuggling in Chorwadodra.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of th tember, writing from Chorwadodra, says smuggle opium into that town from the Gáikwádi villages, as the drug is cheape in Chorwadodra. The authorities conc to speedily attend to this matter as the consumption of opium in th fallen from 15 sers and more to one ser and a half.

Scarcity of rain in Kaládgi.

The Rámdás (58) of the 1st September complains of scanty rai Kaládgi district. The first crop has bee destroyed and the rain necessary for p second crop has not yet fallen. Stray showers have been reporte places, but sufficient rain has not yet fallen. This has alarmed Fodder for cattle is not available. Several poor families in village to get enough food, and apprehensions of a famine as severe as the taken possession of all. The fears of the people were enhanced by ance of cholera, but timely and judicious measures taken by the Co checked the disease. Relief works ought to be started in time.

Approves of the contemplated introduction of the system of overland value-payable parcels.

The Sind Times (5) of the 2nd September says :—Communica India and England is becoming closer and it is now necessary that the ove payable parcel system, which has been so l should be introduced. The inland v parcel system has proved successful, and reason why the overland system should not be an equal success.

great facility to the public in the receipt and despatch of small article understand that the Government of India have expressed their desire troduce the measure.

Recommends that postal savings banks should be opened in all post offices.

A correspondent of the Native Opinion (11) of the 7th Septemb that the circumstance that minor village post managed by school-masters are not authorized to deposits intended for the postal savings banks comes in the way of villagers taking advant the scheme. The post offices that are at present entrusted with the w postal savings banks are not as accessible to villagers as village post It would prove very beneficial to the poor people if postal savings bank started at all the post offices in the same manner as money-order office been.

Points out the necessity of making arrangements for the direct delivery of postal packages by and to sub-post offices in the Southern Konkan.

The Bakul (20) of the 7th September, while approving of the new ar ments for carrying letters, &c., by sea to places Southern Konkan, points out the necessity of measures for delivering packages direct to th post offices on the coast instead of their being the head post offices and thence re-directed to th post offices concerned. Similar arrangements also be made for receiving postal packages direct from the sub-post without the intervention of the head offices.

Disapproves of the proposed system of making payments on account of money-orders without requiring the payees to call at the post offices.

The Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 7th September considers the propo initiate a system of making payments on acco money-orders without requiring the payees to the post offices unsafe, and says:—We fear th postal department will be put to great trouble system. Even now we hear of persons other th payees receiving payment on account of money and the new system will enhance the chances o on the part of the public as well as of postal peons. It is true that if the were to make payments after ascertaining from some respectable if the person receiving payment was identical with the payee nan the order the chances of fraud would be lessened. The present sys therefore preferable and may be improved as much as possible.

Want of a branch post office at Chorwadodra and Khádia in Ahmedabad.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 11th S ber, writing from Chorwadora, says that the station is far removed from the village. T twelve small villages surround it. If therefore a post office were opened and a stamp vendor app in Chorwadodra the inconvenience suffered by the people could be removed same paper states that great convenience would be afforded to the people by ing a branch post office in Khádia in Ahmedabad.]

Suggests that official lists of thefts should be published.

The Sind Times (5) of the 2nd September but rceived on the 8th idem noticing the lists of stolen property appearing supplement to the Sind Official Gazette of th August, says:—It is rather curious that of the thefts which are of such frequent occurre Karáchi no official lists are published. It is necessary that the authoriti the people should know the number and amount of the thefts so frequen

Legislation.

Approves of contemplated legislation on the subject of copy-right.

The Sind Times (5) of the 5th September says:—Mr. Ilbert is no ployed in framing a Bill on copy-right. T supply one of the real wants of the country. cular publications are growing very numerous India, especially in Bengal. We hope the copy-right will be such as to encourage the publishers in undertakin precarious enterprise. In India authors are their own publishers and hav ways to pay for the publication of their books. For poor authors this is ra hard. Publishers might be induced to buy the copy-right by means of an A the subject, and the right of authors might also be guarded. It is needless to that an author has not and cannot have the same right in his book as a l holder has in his property. We think it would be more convenient if copy-r could be arranged for editions and not for the manuscript without any conditi In India the price offered for copy-right is likely to be too small and an aut would have hardly any pecuniary right in his books. This would be very couraging. It is but fair that an author should get something more substan than empty praise.

Education.

Points out the necessity of establishing a Government Law School in Poona.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 7th September says:—The movement started some of our Deccan College friends for the estab ment of a Law Class in this city is gaining gro We hear that inquiries are being made as to probable number of students that would attend t classes. Opinions are being called in. It is manifestly unjust to oblige 50 or 60 students of this college, who like to go in for the Law Examinat to go to Bombay and remain there for three years for the simple purpos keeping the necessary terms. The proposal therefore deserves consideration we are glad to see that Principal Oxenham is strongly in favour of the scheme. can well understand the difficulties which have hitherto prevented the sch from being favourably looked upon. But now the stars appear to be propiti Let us therefore move. Sir James has already shown that he is ready to fa and patronize any well-thought-of scheme for giving liberal education. Law Class were established here, we think the chances are that it would succ It is proposed, we hear, to have only a first year's class, but this is a sui proposal. There would not be many persons willing to attend the first y class only. We are afraid the number of students in that case will no exceed thirty. We hope therefore that Government will for once make up mind and establish a Law Class here with the full three years' course.

Railways.

Complains of the indifference shown by the G. I. P. Railway authorities to the comforts of Hindu pilgrims travelling to Násik and Trimbak.

The Gujaráti (100) of the 7th September says:—The G. I. P. Rai authorities do not pay the slightest attention t comforts of passengers. The year in which Hindus repair to Násik and Trimbak on a pilgri has recently commenced. But the authoriti the G. I. P. Railway have not made any arra ments for the comforts of these pilgrims, though were requested to do so long ago. The station masters pack passe like sheep in the carriages. Notwithstanding this several passengers ar at different stations for want of accommodation. The pilgrims suffer hardship at the Násik station. As the number of policemen and c at that station is insufficient, thefts are committed, the poor are hara and no protection is afforded to women and children. On Thursday, the August, 300 passengers provided with tickets were left at the Byculla st owing to want of previous arrangements for their accommodation. Se women were separated from the male members of their household, their chi and luggage. The passengars were closely packed in the carriages, the ra authorities taking no pity on third-class passengers. Mr. Conder, the T Manager, only cares for the comforts of Europeans. Why do not then Go ment bring the authorities of the G. I. P. Railway to their senses? becoming that they should side with the railway authorities? It is adv that Government should pay attention to this complaint, otherwise apprehended that suffocation will cause the death of several passengers.

Yajdán Parast (129) of the same date disapproves of the system of rese third-class compartments for Europeans travelling by the G. I. P. Railwa expresses a hope that the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company will not foll the footsteps of the G. I. P. Railway Company in this matter.]

Municipalities.

Comments on the resolution of the Government of Bombay on the subject of the obstructive character of the elected municipal commissioners of Surat.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 7th September says:—The resolution the Government of Bombay on the affairs of the Sur municipality is quite a study. The resolution is bas on a petition the central point of which is the pray that Government may be pleased to raise the propo tion of elected commissioners to two-thirds. Th prayer Government decline to grant. And here t sturdy burghers of Surat have sustained a defeat. the rest of the matter they come out with flying colours. His Excellency Council pats them on the back for their attempts to enforce economy on t extravagant officials. At the same time they are advised to economise publ time instead of wasting it in "concerted obstruction." We think Governme could have usefully looked into and stated the cause of such "concerted obstru tion" on the part of the elected members, which is no other than the concert combination of the officials. The petitioners further ask that Governme should frame rules for the conduct of business, and are advised to do so ther selves under the sanction of Government. His Excellency wisely suppor the petitioners' view that water-supply and sanitation are more pressi matters for Surat than electric light and extension of the park. The resoluti in many parts goes against the officials.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 8th September regrets that Governme should have refused to increase the proportion of elected members of the Su municipal board from one-half to two-thirds as prayed for by the petitione and says that no weighty grounds appear to have been given for the refus It is necessary that the proportion of elective members of large city municipa ities in this presidency should be increased and that non-official preside should be appointed. But this necessity is not likely to be supplied in Bomb during the present regimè. The charge of being obstructive at the meetin of the municipality laid against the petitioners is objectionable and cannot considered as satisfactorily proved owing to the absence of any explanation that head from the petitioners.

The Yajdán Parast (129) of the 7th September says that the scheme local self-government will never secure that success which it deserves by su resolutions. Such resolutions will encourage Collector-presidents to act in high-handed manner and the independent members will not be very caref in the discharge of their duties. Perhaps the Bombay Government meant make capital out of this affair to strengthen their opinion that the people are n fit to receive that training in local self-government which the Government Lord Ripon intends to give them. The public will receive such intention of t Bombay Government with regret.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 8th September says:—The Bombay Secr tariat has published a resolution with reference to the differences between t Collector-president of the Surat municipality and its elected members. T differences appear to have arisen on account of the refusal of the elected mem bers to agree to a resolution proposed by the president at one of the meetin in April last, viz., that the sum levied as fine from the Electric Light Com pany for failure of the light during last year's floods in Surat be remitted. the facts are correctly given in the resolution in question—and it appears th they are, for Government rely on the statements of the elected membe themselves in deciding that they were in the wrong—we are compelled to co to the conclusion that these members strained the legal aspects of the ca when they refused to remit the fine levied from the Electric Light Compan The precedents relied upon by them wore a different complexion from the que tion of remitting a fine. That a municipality which is bound to impose a tax law should have express power from the Legislature to remit it goes witho saying; but who ever heard of express authority in law being necessary f the same municipality to remit a fine leviable for non-performance of contract? We have striven hard to see if the position which the electe members of Surat maintained in this unfortunate quarrel with their Preside could be defended, but we think that their precedents do not help th and that like every private individual the Surat municipality could, its discretion, forego its rights or enforce them so far as they arose c of a contract such as that between the municipality and the Electric Lig Company. Then again, having the authority they ought to have exercised in the particular case before them. The Electric Light Company had failed provide light owing merely to an unavoidable accident and theirs was therefore a fitting case for a remission of the fine levied on them. Surat mig have done without electric light and its Collector acted very injudiciously entering into a bargain of this kind when more urgent wants required attentic But whether rightly or wrongly, the Electric Light Company was got in, ar having got it in and seen it fail on a particular occasion on account of t floods over which it could have no control, the municipality should have remitt the fine leviable. The resolution therefore seems to us to take a reasonal view of the question.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 7th September says:—Government their dispassionate resolution fairly review all the merits of the question issue. The refusal to comply with the request preferred by several of t commissioners for raising the number of the elected members to two-thirds the total number of members composing the municipal board would appe to be right for the good reasons mentioned in the resolution. All would well to profit by the advice directly and indirectly given by Governme Government have disposed of the whole subject in a fair and considerate mann and it is to be hoped that the president and the commissioners will now retu to the performance of their duty in a conciliatory spirit. [The Rást Gof (116) of the 7th, the Akhbáre Sodágar (85) and the Jáme Jamshed (104) of 8th September express approval of the Government resolution. The Já expresses disapproval of the conduct of the petitioners and praises Sir Jan Fergusson for having on the whole done much for the success of the scheme local self-government in this presidency.]

The Native Opinion (11) of the 7th September says:—We deeply regret t Government have not thought it fit to publish the whole correspondence alo with their resolution on the late Surat municipal squabble. In its absence it impossible to see exactly on which side the major portion of the blame lies. is no use crying from the house-top and making one's voice hoarse with prai of an Act which at no distant date must call for amendment, if our rulers be all sincere in their protestations that local self-government does dese encouragement and promotion from the authorities. With regard to the Su municipal squabble we regard the Government resolution as a hardly courte reprimand to the Surat municipal commissioners in particular and to the e cated classes in general.

Native States.

Some suggestions for securing a reduction in the armies of Native States.

The Akhbáre Sodágar (85) of the 13th September in a communicated art states that the fears entertained by the London Ti from the continuance of the armies of the Nat States of India are false, proposes that these arm should be either reduced or totally abolished, a says:—The British Government should submit the following three proposals the Native States for their consideration, viz., (1) the Native States sho form a body of well-disciplined military police for the preservation of peace a order in their dominions. If such a body be already in existence, it should strengthened, if necessary, and brought to perfection; (2) the cost of ma taining this body should be met either by greatly reducing the armies totally abolishing them; (3) as the British Government is quite able to prot them from foreign invasions and as it will protect them when necessary, Native States should give a certain sum of money every year to the Briti The Native States can very well afford to do so from the saving effected either largely reducing or abolishing their armies. If these proposals w submitted by Government to the Native States, their action could not in any v be styled improper, for they do not contain anything that might be looked up as calling their loyalty into question or tarnishing their honour. By car out these proposals the Native States will do good to themselves, their su and the paramount power.

Complains of the oppression exercised by the police of the Gondal State during the administration of Major Nutt.

The Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 7th September quotes the finding of the Class Magistrate of Dhoráji dated the 13th Dec 1883 acquitting Ráwji Jhaverchand, the Wahiv of Dhánk, of the charge of criminal breach of brought against him by the police, and says :
do not deny that the Gondal State has become pr
ous under Major Nutt. But we very much that those officers who brought several innocent persons into trouble duri administration should not have been brought to justice. We hope tha Bombay Government will appoint a commission of inquiry and bring to j those officers who have in vain harassed innocent men.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVG
Acting Reporter on the Native

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
16*th September* 1884.

w

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

- Administration of India:
  - Comments on the British—in connection with the case in which certain students of Krishnagar in Bengal were prosecuted by the police for clapping their hands on the occasion of a theatrical performance ... 5
  - Lamentations of India ... 3
  - Popular ideas regarding the British rule in India ... 3
- Bombay Legislative Council: Censure on Government for the re-appointment of the Honourable K. V. Ráste to the— ... 11
- Bombay Tramway Company: Disapproval of the reply sent by Government to the second memorial regarding the inconveniences suffered by passengers by tram-cars in Bombay ... 14
- Enteric fever; Comments on Dr. Hewlett's report on the prevalence of—among European soldiers employed in this country ... 12
- Executions: Comments on the method of carrying out—prevailing in the Bombay Presidency ... 12
- Forests:
  - Comments on the forest policy of Government ... 6
  - Comments on the policy of Government in regard to the grant of grazing rights ... 6
- Honorary surgeons;
  - Approval of the conduct of Government in giving up the experiment of appointing—in hospitals ... 13
  - Disapproval of the abandonment of the experiment of appointing—in hospitals ... 13
- India Council: Discussion of the question of effecting a reform in the present constitution of the—
  - The Bombay Chronicle ... 5
  - The Gujarát Mitrá ... 4
- Judicial matters: Complaint against an order prohibiting pleaders from appearing in courts in the Sibi district ... 12
- Land revenue:
  - Comments on the policy of Government regarding the assessment of subsoil water as enunciated in the resolution on the survey operations in Jhálod táluka in Panch Maháls:
    - The Indu Prakásh ... 7
    - The Sind Times ... 8
    - The Subodh Patrika ... 8
  - Grievances of the zamindárs of Hála in Sind regarding—assessment ... 9
- Opium: Complaint regarding the prevalence of—smuggling in Chorwadodra ... 14
- Police: Suggestion that official lists of thefts in Karáchi should be published ... 15
- Postal matters;
  - Approval of the contemplated introduction of the system of overland value-payable parcels ... 14
  - Disapproval of the proposed system of making payments on account of money-orders without requiring the payees to call at the post offices ... 15
  - Necessity of making arrangements for the direct delivery of postal packages by and to sub-post offices in the Southern Konkan ... 15
  - Recommendation that postal savings banks should be opened in all post offices ... 15
  - Want of a branch post office at Chorwadodra and Khádia in Ahmedabad ... 15
- Scarcity of rain in Kaládgi: Complaint regarding the— ... 14
- Viceroyalty of India; Approval of the appointment of Lord Dufferin to the— ... 6

PART II.—Legislation—

- Legislation on the subject of copy-right: Approval of contemplated— ... 15

PART III.—Education—

- Government Law School in Poona: Necessity of establishing a— ... 16

INDEX.

Page.

ART IV.—Railways—

G. I. P. Railway: Complaint regarding the indifference shown by the—authorities to the comforts of Hindu pilgrims travelling to Násik and Trimbak 16

ART V.—Municipalities—

Surat: Comments on the resolution of the Government of Bombay on the subject of the obstructive character of the elected municipal commissioners of—

The Bombay Chronicle 18
The Bombay Samáchár 18
The Indian Spectator 17
The Indu Prakásh 17
The Native Opinion 17
The Yajdán Parast 18

ART VI.—Native States—

Gondal: Complaint regarding the oppression exercised by the police of the—State during the administration of Major Nutt 19
Native States: Suggestions for securing a reduction in the armies of—.. 18

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

C. R.
381
A OFFICE
OCT 1884

NA

PUBLISHE

For the W

List

No.	Names of N
	ENGL
1	The Indian Spectator ...
2	„ Mahrátta ...
3	„ Morning Star
4	„ Quarterly Journal janik Sabha ...
5	„ Sind Times
	ANGLO-MA
6	The Din Bandhu ...
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu ...
8	„ Dnyánodayă
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh ...
10	„ Indu Prakásh ...
11	„ Native Opinion ...
12	„ Prabhákar ...
13	„ Pramod Sindhu ...
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Ka
15	„ Subodh Patrika ...
16	„ Vaidarbh ...
17	„ Varhád (Berár) San
	MARA'T
18	The Aruṇodayă ...
19	„ A'ryávart ...
20	„ Bakul ...
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1] ...
*23	„ Chháva ...
*24	„ Chikitsak ...
25	„ Daivadnyă Samácha
26	„ Dakshin Vritt ...
27	„ Dhárwár Vritt ...
28	„ Dnyán Bodhak ...
29	„ Dnyán Ságar ...
30	„ Ganga Lahari ...
31	„ Hindu Punch ...
32	„ Hitechchhu ...
33	„ Israel[1] ...
34	„ Jagadádarsh ...
35	„ Jagan Mitră ...
36	„ Kalpataru... ...
37	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]
*38	„ Katáksh ... ...
39	„ Kesari ... ...
40	„ Khándesh Vaibhav
41	„ Lamp of Judaism
42	„ Lokahitavádi ...
*43	„ Mádhavi ... ...
44	„ Maháráshtră Hitech
45	„ Maháráshtră Mitră
46	„ Nagar Samáchár...
47	„ Násik Vritt ...
48	„ Nibandh Chandrika
49	„ Nyáyă Sindhu ...
50	„ Panchánan ...
51	„ Pandhari Vaibhav
*52	„ Pisháchanáth ...
53	„ Poona Vaibhav ...
*54	„ Prabodh Chandrika
*55	„ Pratod ... ...
*56	„ Pune Sárvajanik
*57	Pustak ... ...
58	„ Rámdás ... ...
	„ Saddharm Dip
59	„ Sanmárgă Dipika...
60	„ Satyă Sadan ...
61	„ Satyă Shodhak ...
*62	„ Sharabh ... ...
63	„ Shetakari ... ...
*64	„ Shiváji[1] ... ...
65	„ Shubh Suchak ...
66	„ Suryakánt... ...
67	„ Suryodayă... ...
*68	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu

---

[1] Frequently admits

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

R.
381
OFFICE
CT 1884

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 20th September 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	750
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	281
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*24	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
25	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
26	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	275
27	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
28	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
29	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
30	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
31	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
32	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
33	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
34	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
35	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	160
36	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
37	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
*38	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
39	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,350
40	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
41	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
42	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*43	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
44	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
45	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
46	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
47	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
48	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
49	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
50	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	400
51	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
*52	„ Pishháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
53	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	450
*54	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*55	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*56 *57	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
58	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
59	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
60	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
61	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*62	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
63	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*64	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
65	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*68	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also

CON 561

*Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
MARA'THI—continued.
The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	300
„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	250
„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	500
ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	475
„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	485
„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	200
GUJARA'TI.
The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	850
„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	394
„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	415
„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,175
„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	500
„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	50
„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	700
„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.	200
„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly	585
„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,025
„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	325
„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	300
„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	800
„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,350
„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	125
„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	810
„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	925
„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	250
„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	350
„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,750
„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	327
„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	620
„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	1,700
„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	423
„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	85
„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	778
„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
KA'NARESE.
The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	180
„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	300
„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	915
„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	115
SANSKRIT.
The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	150
URDU.
The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
PERSIAN.
The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	500
ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
SINDI.
The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

---

es.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, re printed in italics.

The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the News- the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, aced at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be ly necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed ark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in eral Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politic

The Dnyán Prakásh
ci
ar
pa
In
of

Says that the high-handed conduct of Europeans is calculated to disturb the peace of the country.

of discipline from appearing that a few students were g
of justice is it to punish a w In cases of Natives versus
In this state of anarchy th thrown in jeopardy. At B
why there should be a large
some of them out of the cou few boys clap their hands at tendent at once arrests and local Government pats the a can be cited by thousands.
who pride upon giving their
and property than was to be injustice be rampant under the circumstance that admin pride in treating Natives in British Government ? That that their natural ill-feeling s
to the interests of both partie consequences of this state o
with the faculty of judging r
allow a vicious European wh soon after died) to escape wi mind that if being elated with subjects you indulge in high-tant date is imminent. But the matter. Those who have to take cognizance of the fact is calculated to bring discred
some awkward incident happe tion. We submit that the qu
the attention of Government.
expresses similar sentiments.]

A correspondent of the Si
Your
answ
amb
We
refus
guar

Remarks on the alleged refusal of the Amir of Cabul to guarantee the safety of the Boundary Commission through his dominions.

passing through his dominio enemies of the English. Thi is a pity that the British Gove
and should assist him with mo is after all a wolf. The mor they are injuring their own ca
one day be turned and used ag
he has been for a long time nu arteries, so to say, is impregna ernment to set apart this su against the Russian invasion Fund." There is no doubt t an invasion, would one day

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that the high-handed conduct of Europeans is calculated to disturb the peace of the country.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 18th September says:—From the reports circulated in the Bengal press it is impossible to form any idea of the extent of injustice prevailing in that part of the country. The fiat of the Director of Public Instruction has gone forth prohibiting the students of the Presidency college who were guilty of want of discipline from appearing at their examination for one year. Even granting that a few students were guilty of disrespect towards their professor, what sort of justice is it to punish a whole class for the faults of some individual members? In cases of Natives versus Europeans injustice seems to have become normal. In this state of anarchy the honour of Native women seems to have been thrown in jeopardy. At Bhagulpore a certain magistrate raises the question why there should be a large number of pleaders in a particular case and drives some of them out of the court, and no redress is given to the complainants. A few boys clap their hands at a theatrical performance, and the Police Superintendent at once arrests and prosecutes them; nay, what is more wonderful, the local Government pats the authorities on their back. Instances of this nature can be cited by thousands. What a sorrowful plight is this! Ye Englishmen who pride upon giving their Native subjects greater security of life, honour and property than was to be had in the times of former rulers! Should such injustice be rampant under the civilized English rule? What a deep stain is the circumstance that administrators of justice should be influenced by race pride in treating Natives in any way they like calculated to bring upon the British Government? That Natives should be estranged from Europeans and that their natural ill-feeling should be gradually increasing are alike detrimental to the interests of both parties, and Government must bear in mind that the consequences of this state of things would be terrible. Who that is gifted with the faculty of judging right and wrong can say that it was justice to allow a vicious European who committed rape on a poor Hindu woman (who soon after died) to escape with a fine of Rs. 100? Ye Englishmen, bear in mind that if being elated with pride at the idea that we are your conquered subjects you indulge in high-handedness of all sorts, a dire calamity at no distant date is imminent. But Government ought to exercise greater caution in the matter. Those who have the administrative strings in their hands ought to take cognizance of the fact that the high-handed conduct of rude Europeans is calculated to bring discredit on the British rule, and that in the event of some awkward incident happening it will throw Government in a difficult position. We submit that the question of internal peace has the greatest claim on the attention of Government. [The Bodh Sudhákar (22) of the 17th September expresses similar sentiments.]

Remarks on the alleged refusal of the Amir of Cabul to guarantee the safety of the Boundary Commission through his dominions.

A correspondent of the Sind Sudhár (139) of the 13th September writes:—Your readers must be very curious to know the answer which Amir Abdul Rahman Khan gave to the ambassador sent to him by the British Government. We learn from the papers that the Amir gave a flat refusal to their request. He said that he could not guarantee the safety of the British Commission while passing through his dominion, for the people of Afghanistan were the bitter enemies of the English. This answer must take every man by surprise. It is a pity that the British Government should consider the Amir their friend, and should assist him with money and arms, forgetting that the cub of a wolf is after all a wolf. The more aid the British give to the Amir, the more they are injuring their own cause. The same money and the same arms shall one day be turned and used against us. The Amir is an old pensioner of Russia, he has been for a long time nurtured among the Russians, each of his veins and arteries, so to say, is impregnated with Russian salt. It now behoves our Government to set apart this subsidy, money and arms, like the famine fund against the Russian invasion of India. Let this fund be called the "Russian Fund." There is no doubt that Russia, which has so long been threatening an invasion, would one day really make one. Let us therefore be ready prepared against the day. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the 14th September is greatly afraid of the safety of the Afghan Boundary Commission recently despatched owing to the treacherous disposition of the Russians and the Afghans, and expresses a fervent wish for its safe return.]

Reflections on the retirement of Lord Ripon and the appointment of Lord Dufferin as Viceroy.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 14th September, in alluding to the appointment of Lord Dufferin as Viceroy, says:—In less than two months from now India will have to part with her popular Viceroy, the ruler who more than almost all his predecessors comes nearest to our ideal of what the representative of Her Imperial Majesty ought to be. If righteousness has any value for the practical politician, Mr. Dadabhai Navroji's description of the out-going Viceroy—"the saviour of the people"—will hold good for ever. Here we are reminded of Lord Ripon's first speech in India, in the course of which he said to the citizens of Bombay, "Gentlemen, judge me by my acts." There has scarcely been time enough to form a judgment, and the unexpected has often upset our calculations during the last two years. But still the general verdict will stand for all time in favour of "Ripon the Just," as our poets have already named him. To some he appeared weak in action, whilst others found him strongest in his seeming weakness. Some there are who have resented his nervousness ever since the hour of crisis, and there are others who trace the nervousness to nothing worse than a desire to restore peace between factions which might otherwise have been driven to lasting estrangement. But however divided opinion may be on this one point, no politician worthy of the title will doubt that the retiring Governor General has striven earnestly to rise to his own conception of duty towards the governed, regardless of praise or blame. He has never favoured the Natives as Natives, nor has he slighted the Europeans as such. It is on this account that we wish to set him up as a model ruler. In protesting against the Ilbert Bill compromise the Amrita Bazar Patrika called Lord Ripon "the idol of the people." This is a faithful representation of the popular feeling. They never apprehend harm from him even though they may not always expect good. All this may be small matter to a man who seems to have renounced all personal ambition and whose official career in India has entailed so many sacrifices. But Lord Ripon's popularity will encourage his successor. Lord Dufferin's name has become quite familiar in India, and his appointment raises high expectations. Though nurtured for a time on continental diplomacy, the future Viceroy is known to be a sound and a ripe statesman, with a strong will and a clear vision. Mr. Gladstone deserves our best thanks for nominating as Lord Ripon's successor a ruler with all his enlightenment and culture and with so much of his "enthusiasm of humanity." [All the Gujaráti papers of this week express deep regret at the coming departure of Lord Ripon from India, make different suggestions for perpetuating his memory in the country and express approval of Lord Dufferin's appointment as his successor. The Bombay Samáchár (88) disapproves of the attempt made by some Anglo-Indian newspapers to extol the new Viceroy and to run down Lord Ripon and the legislative enactments of his administration. The Native public is under deep obligations to Lord Ripon for the excellent Acts passed during his regime and for withholding his consent from certain harmful legislative measures, the principal of which are the Game Act and the Factory Act for all India.]

Reflections on the retirement of Lord Ripon from the office of the Governor General of India.

In an article headed "The Change in the Viceroyalty," the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 15th September says:—After a good deal of surmise on the part of the public as to the probable successor of Lord Ripon, Lord Dufferin has been appointed Viceroy of India. The news reached India last Wednesday and we need hardly say that it was not received without considerable surprise and concern, arising, as may be easily conceived, very naturally from the rather unexpected manner in which Lord Ripon's retirement has been decided upon. The empire can ill afford to lose a statesman like His Excellency, who has endeared himself to the people of this country by pursuing throughout a career of usefulness and liberality such as but few Viceroys had exhibited before, and the question which is now in everybody's mouth is not so much about the newly appointed

Viceroy, Lord Dufferin, as about the retiring one. The Native public every hope that Lord Ripon would continue in office for the full period of f years, and do his best to put into working order the several schemes he has augurated. The local self-government scheme has not yet had a fair start, a there are misgivings in the minds of the public as to what would be its fa after Lord Ripon's departure from this country. The report of the Educati Commission, which was an important work of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty, h been for some time before the Government, but it has not had sufficient tin to attend to it so as to begin a new era of reform in the educational policy the country. The question of the agricultural banks for the pauperised raya of the Deccan is yet unsolved, though Lord Ripon has devoted to it conside able attention, and it was expected that before laying down the reins of h office His Excellency would be able to lay down a scheme which would b practicable and useful in that direction. Many other reforms there are whic stand and will continue associated with His Excellency's name, and it is har to say whether after His Excellency delivers charge of his office to his suc cessor there will be a continuity of policy in the administration or things wi change so as to disappoint those who have formed high expectations from th services rendered by Lord Ripon within the short period of four years. I might have been better if Lord Ripon had resolved to stay in India till Ma next and see some of his schemes carried out as far as possible. But it seem to us that in determining to leave India early in December next and mak room for a new Viceroy His Excellency was probably influenced by considera tions involving the good of India. The state of politics in England has bee for some months past of such a character as to show that a dissolution of th Parliament may at any moment take place in England. The rejection by th
House of Lords of the Franchise Bill has already created differences between th
Lords and the Commons, and it is expected on the opening of Parliament nex
November the Ministry may in support of their Bill make an appeal to th country. Should a dissolution take place and the Conservatives come to powe it is quite on the cards that they might choose for Viceroy some one drille into the tenets of Lord Salisbury and instructed to undo all that has been don by Lord Ripon. A Conservative Viceroy is likely to set himself to the tas of proving that local self-government would not do for India, and that Lor Ripon's schemes were all conceived without any regard for the policy of in perialism. To avoid such a conjuncture, Lord Ripon has by resigning h office so early given the present Ministry a chance of making a selection whic will bind the Conservatives in the event of their succeeding at the ensuin elections. Looked at in this light, Lord Ripon's early resignation appea to us to be for the good of India. His Excellency has ensured for th country a continuity of the policy which has distinguished him by ensurin the nomination of a Liberal to succeed him as Viceroy. Lord Dufferin may may not go the length to which Lord Ripon went and administer the empi without entertaining imperial prejudices, but this much is certain that und him there will be less chance of any studied attempt being made to bring Lor Ripon's measures into discredit than under a Viceroy selected by Lor Salisbury. Should, on the other hand, the Liberals be returned to power at th elections, it is quite probable that India will gain in two ways. Lord Ripo may in that case stand the best chance of being appointed Secretary of State f India. It is more than one can say whether these considerations were in th mind of Lord Ripon when he made up his mind to retire early in Decemb next. But though one cannot help regretting in the interests of the India Empire that His Excellency's departure is to take place so shortly, yet conside ing the state of the political parties in England and the loss that might inflicted on India in the event of the Conservatives being returned to power, Lo Ripon has chosen his time most wisely. If he cannot remain here longer, he h done the next best thing for India—given her a Viceroy chosen by the Libera and more or less bound to keep up the spirit of Lord Ripon's noble and tru English policy.

Reflections on the change which is imminent in the office of the Governor General of India.

In an article headed "The Future Viceroy" the Mahrátta (2) of the 14 September says:—It is the misfortune of India to governed by potentates sent out periodically. In o sense this is not a misfortune. Like all things this world, and especially in India under the influen of the British Government, no one thing is allowed be either an unmixed good or an unmixed evil. If the Nativ educated their natural aspirations are not recognised, and if s given to Natives they are made to feel the degradation of their the higher places being reserved for Europeans. Thus then eve instance the misfortune is not a misfortune pure and simple. I Lytton, we justly solace ourselves with the hope that the next on Ripon. The period is only that of five years after which the Vi ernor General retires. Now howsoever one may feel disposed to upon the shortness of the period in the case of Governors Gen made themselves unpopular, one cannot but regret that a G like Lord Ripon, who has been conscientious enough to initiate and to infuse enthusiasm in the minds of the Conservative loc should, according to a tradition of the office, have to leave it. particular case under consideration, is it not preposterous tha most benevolent schemes have hardly taken root before he bids far The local self-government scheme is not yet fait accompli all c Jurisdiction Bill has not yet had a fair trial; the proposal rega licity of legislative measures, which looked so fair and which succeed, is not now heard at all; the schemes about the enc local industries are not yet enforced; the recommendations on Commission's report have hardly been well considered by th State;—in fact all the grand schemes so thunderingly announce world and so applaudingly received by us, where will they go n next Viceroy feel for these schemes that affection which the pr them? Will the successor of Lord Ripon see with that same par no pet child of the latter comes to grief? No! No! He wil hobbies to ride, his own schemes to propose; and then what wi these schemes? We were the first to call upon the people to Ripon to stay for a further period of five years, or at least until thinks fit, so that his benevolent schemes may fairly take root genial soil of Anglo-Indian bureaucracy. But that was not to the people of India that Lord Ripon should tax his energie intellectual, for them? Why should he impair his health, perhap for the blessings of people who are wallowing in heathenish rel an eminent politician. He has already distinguished hims decorations are awaiting him there. The Home Government as one of its strongest supporters. Their call is imperative. The The people are not worth helping who will not help themselves.

Says that Lord Ripon did no substantial good to India.

The Arunodayă (18) of the 14th September says:—Thou Lord Ripon endeared himself to the country, a closer examination of his show that beyond planning new sche substantial good to India. There was the Education Commissi ment do not appear to have made any greater sacrifice of their hitherto in the cause of education. Resolutions were issued for ment of indigenous arts and industries, but they do not appear to the process of impoverishing India by allowing railways to with the aid of foreign capital is gradually receiving greate educated people in the art of administration resolutions on the self-government were issued, and their consequences are well k whole there has not been a single act of Lord Ripon's which ca with the motto which he set to himself in the beginning of his viz., "Judge me by my acts."

Makes remarks in connection with the appointment of a successor to Sir James Fergusson.

In an article headed "Who will be our next Governor?" the (9) of the 18th September says:— Gazette of Friday last a corresponden signing himself "Tellus," has raised question. Sir James Fergusson's ter its close, and the authorities in Englan to make their selection. If on occasions like these the Indian p their voice heard, and thus bring about the selection of the fittes a great change will be effected. We heartily concur in what "Tellus" about the absolute necessity of our having as our next Governor "a m broad principles, trained in English public life, with an active sympathy fo people of this country; a man who will judge for himself upon the evid and who will refuse to look at questions through official spectacles." If we only such a man filling the Viceregal chair, and only official drudges as ou vincial Governors, the principal object in view is not gained. It is accord necessary that the hands of the Viceroy should be strengthened by giving as his lieutenants, so to speak, men possessing the qualifications set fort "Tellus" in his interesting letter. We all admire the genial manners friendly attitude of our present Governor, Sir James Fergusson, and we al delight in honouring him. But his great failing appears to be that he lea much on the opinions of his subordinates. It was that failing alone whic to the friction between Bombay and Simla in the October of 1882. If a like Sir James Fergusson is surrounded by safe and sound advisers, he is su be everything that an Indian Governor should be; while if the surroundin otherwise, he is sure to be the most unpopular ruler. All this is quite exe fied in Sir James Fergusson's career. We need not here go into details what we have stated thus far is quite sufficient to remind the reader o particular incidents to which we have referred here. What we want, therefo a man who will under no circumstances surrender his own independent judg to others, but who will, after having weighed the evidence placed before hi experts, judge independently for himself. In addition to the two names sugg by "Tellus," viz., Sir James Caird and his junior colleague in the Land mission, Lord Littleton, we should suggest the name of Sir Evelyn Baring, v

we should think the people of this Presidency will be very glad to welcon their next Governor. Next to Lord Ripon Sir Evelyn Baring occupies the la place in the popular estimation in this country; for much of Lord Ripon's e ordinary success is attributed to Sir Evelyn Baring. We heartily concur the writer of the article in the Bombay Gazette that Sir Evelyn Baring woul better employed in Bombay than in Egypt. Sir Evelyn Baring fulfils in opinion all the qualifications mentioned by "Tellus." [The Yajdán P (128) of the 14th September says that it is a matter for joy that the sugge for the extension of Sir James Fergusson's term of office has not received support. His career has disappointed the public of Bombay. It is r injurious to public interests that such a weak-minded Governor, who sacri the interests of the people to the cry of selfish Europeans, should remai five years more. The arguments advanced in favour of the appointment o James Caird are worthy of consideration. Bombay has suffered much thr the weakness or arbitrary conduct of Sir Seymour FitzGerald, Sir Philip W house, Sir Richard Temple and Sir James Fergusson. It would prefer to a Governor from a class quite distinct from which the above gentlemen selected.]

Comments on the suggestion made by the London Times for the revival of the Vernacular Press Act for India.

The Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 17th September disapproves o suggestion made by the London Times for the re
of the Vernacular Press Act in this country w view to check the publication of articles ag Government in the columns of the Native press says:—It is derogatory to the high position w
the Times occupies to place implicit confidence o information supplied to it by its correspondent at Calcutta who is not imp and to make such a recommendation. The Times has lost much of its fo weight and confidence among sensible people of this country by such ar
It is not possible that the Act which was condemned on all sides wou revived during the administration of Lord Ripon. But as he will leave a few months hence, opportunity has been taken by those wishing fo revival to bring the matter forward. Perhaps the latter think that Lord Du will be a puppet in their hands like Lord Lytton, but they are much taken. The vernacular press should discharge its functions well and sh try to bring to light the defects and arbitrary conduct of Anglo-Indians an papers conducted by them. When the latter are trying to impress upon the of the new Viceroy the faults of Natives, which have their origin in the b of the Anglo-Indians only, it will not be improper for the Natives to point out to Lord Dufferin the real shortcomings of his own countrymen. The Pall Mall Gazette has laid the Native public and the Native press under deep obligations by pointing out the hollowness of the complaint made by the Times and its Calcutta correspondent and by the suggestion that the Anglo-Indian papers should be brought under the operation of the Press Act if it should be revived.

Condemms the resolution of Government regarding the assessment of lands which enjoy the advantages of subsoil water.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 14th September says:—Though the "wise liberality" of the provincial Government to take the public into confidence regarding its land revenue policy is much to be commended, we are sorry to say we have failed to perceive either wisdom or liberality in the new resolution it has recently published regarding the assessment of subsoil water in the Khálsa villages of the Jhálod Mahál in the Collectorate of the Panch Mahals. The elaborate paper dated "Bombay Castle," 25th July, is in reality a supplement to the one published on 26th March last regarding the finality of survey settlements and the new departure taken in reference thereto in deference to the orders of the Supreme Government. At the same time it contains little that was not known before. In fact we are at a loss to understand why so much energy and public time should have been spent in propounding effete theories supported by superabundant quotations. The critical public, whose opinion the State affects to listen to or consider, scarcely stood at this time of the day in need of those antiquated torches whereby it has made an effort to illumine the old and worn out policy of assessing the water-bearing properties of the soil. If in the resolution of 26th March last the rayats were asked to amuse themselves with the puzzle, namely, when is a well not a well? the sum and substance of the present resolution is to present to the rayats of Gujarát another puzzle, namely, when is an unirrigated land irrigated land? But the wise and liberal Government has not tantalised them. It has in the same resolution tried to solve the riddle to its own satisfaction, and paternally called upon the Jhálod rayat, and for that matter every agriculturist in Gujarát, to nod assent to the solution. Government is so good as to inform the simple khedu that there is nothing "novel" or original about it. The supposed "natural advantage" which would at once convert an unirrigated plot into an irrigated one will depend on the ipsi dixit of the surveyor or classifier. He will adopt some subtle method known only to himself whereby to test the supposed "inherent" water-bearing qualities. The State or its infallible expert will not take sufficiently corroborative borings or dig a well to a certain depth to ascertain beyond the shadow of a doubt the properties the existence of which alone could justify the higher rate now sought to be imposed. It will undergo no expense or trouble. The State is aware that former experienced surveyors have opined that it is next to impossible to make use of such methods for fixing fair assessments. Either actual trials must be taken on each plot and the existence of good water for irrigating purposes at a moderate cost must be ascertained, or this absurd principle must be abandoned. But in the faith of such opinion it says it will not undergo all reasonable cost and trouble which would ascertain the existence of such water and justify it in levying the 'bágáyat' rate for a 'jiráyat' land. It will assume that when the rayat is assessed at that "slightly better" rate it will be his business and interest to work out that problem, never mind if in solving the problem his capital and labour are wasted and the final results prove contrary to expectations. Only let him first unreservedly place his confidence in the principle of the assessment and rely on the "moderation and skill" of the practised and unerring surveyor of the State to diagnose "the natural advantages" with "accuracy" and rate the soil, and he will be placed in a position in future whereby he may uninterruptedly enjoy the benefits of the improvements he may be disposed to make! It is not for him to question the procedure or take exception to the hypothesis put forward by Government. He has no voice. He has simply to submit to the dictum of the infallible surveyor. The so-called "benefits" of improvement may turn out the very opposite. Capital and labour may conclusively prove the "subsoil advantages" as purely illusive. The bait of permanent benefits may plunge him in the slough of deeper indebtedness. But what of that? Is not the rayat suppose to be in contract with the State? When he agrees to let from th State a plot of culturable land, now lying waste, he must take it for grante that sweet water at a little cost will be found, and that the labour an capital expended will not swamp the permanent "benefits" the Governmen is anxious he should in future enjoy without further enhancement of th assessment, unless "general considerations,"—those indefinite series of element which are always forthcoming to justify enhancement,—are visible fo the increase. The rayat need have no apprehension, so the benevolent Stat assures him, as to water fit for irrigating purposes not being found within reasonable depth and at a moderate outlay. Neither should he exercise hi mind as to the possibility of water turning out brackish and therefore unfit fo irrigation. All the same, he must enter into a contract with the Governmen before he puts the plough to his field, that he shall pay the assessment for th land as if it were irrigated! He must understand that land, which is suppose according to the off-hand dictum of the surveyor, to possess facility only fo irrigation is the same thing as land actually irrigated! He need not questio the palpable absurdity of the principle which the State, out of pure benevolenc for him, asks him to accept. His Excellency in Council is advised that " would be better slightly to increase the assessment of all lands which numbe facility for irrigation among the inherent qualities than to assess a special rat of lands actually irrigated." It would be presumption on the part of the raya or for that matter on the part of "the enlightened Native" whom "the wi liberality" of a benevolent Government is so anxious to take into co fidence—it would be presumption on the part of either to take exceptio to this principle opposed to common sense. A person may hold a plot ground where is supposed to exist gold, silver or copper. Government, as a expert, will demand from the holder of such a plot payment of assessment a "better" rate, never mind whether he works his mine or not. That is h business. Government will not wait. It will not care to ascertain by prop surveys and accurate tests that the costly minerals exist underneath at a certa depth. It may not say whether they are to be found in such quantity as to repa cost of digging and leave the owner a fair margin of profit, which is in oth words the permanent "benefit" of his improvements by the application capital, skill and labour. No. It will not do for Government to wait till th holder of the ground undergoes the mining expenses and brings the valuab ores to the surface in sufficient quantity to repay him. The owner may never d or he may dodge the Government. Still the Government must have anyhow fair share of the benefits of the supposed mineral-bearing soil. How is it to reali "a slightly better rate" of assessment? Of course, it must assess the land as su in anticipation. The resolution will in no way benefit the rayat in whose speci behalf it is published. As we said before, if at all, the procedure will discoura well digging. It is contrary to the sound policy laid down last year by the Go ernment of India in reference to improvements. Nay, it is directly at varian with the declaration made by the Bombay Government in its resolution 26th March that the rayats will be left undisturbed in their improvemen You proclaim this principle in one breath and neutralise its effects in anoth by discounting beforehand the benefits for the provincial treasury! But t rayat, simple as he is, is not so far a simpleton as to be easily deluded by th policy, long held in suspended animation, once more sought to be revived. will know that to be so deluded is tantamount to living in a fool's paradi Such are the leading features of this latest specimen of scientific assessment lands in Gujarát. We cannot refrain from repeating our opinion that the ti and ingenuity spent in preparing this elaborate State paper are a waste. Wh is unjust in principle can never be just in practice. And the resolution, so as it purports to be the latest exposition of the views of Government on s soil assessment, must be pronounced abortive. The discouragement to w digging, which the suicidal policy of the past twenty years has made so pa fully conspicuous, is now a good deal aggravated. The sooner the Governm retrace the false step it has taken, the better for its reputation and for interest of the rayats of Gujarát.

Remarks on the allowance of discount in the payment of the land revenue instalments in advance.

The Sind Times (5) of the 12th September says :—The late res
Bombay Government, directing mofussil allow discount to revenue-payers when advance, is allowed on all sides to be a mov direction. But neither the Government no officials are sanguine that the measure will the rayats. It is thought that they are too helplessly and hopel to improvidence and thriftlessness, and that they will not profit by thrift held out to them. The rate-payer pays the revenue in four
The Government promises to allow them a discount of half an anna on every instalment of the current year paid in advance, and an rupee on all the revenue if the next year's revenue be paid in advan Thus a rate-payer paying two or three instalments in advance in the of 1884 will be allowed discount of half an anna in the rupee on ments, and if along with the revenue of 1884 he pay the revenue will be allowed a discount of an anna in the rupee on all the re scheme will apparently hold out a great temptation to the rayats to venue in advance. But no one thinks that the revenue-payers faster than they now do, or that the revenue would not be in arrea
The Indian peasant is averse to any change, and he would always pre from the mahájan at 30 per cent. rather than gain some odd anna the revenue in advance. While agreeing with those who look up santry as apathetic and careless of meeting any promised good cannot bring ourselves to think that their condition could not be be the discount allowed by Government will be too small to tempt ther be expecting too much of them to pay two years' revenue in adv
frequently they could not do it even if they had the wish. Th Indian grain are now-a-days so uncertain, the market price so fluct the peasant can never be sure of his gain. For one year of a goo may have two bad. The shadow of famine haunts him conti think, therefore, that if instead of half an anna, a discount of one rupee were allowed to the revenue-payers on instalments of the paid in advance, and an anna and a half on the revenue of the n proposed scheme will have a better chance of success. This rat might be tried for a few years, and in the event of the trial provi
the present rates of discount might be resorted to.

Some remarks on the report on the Horse-breeding Operations in the Bombay Presidency.

Reviewing the latest report regarding horse-breeding opera Bombay Presidency, the Mahrátta (2) of tember says :—The charges of the H Department are defrayed from provin
fund sources. The latter are to be bur
the extent of half the actual expenditure feed and keep of the stallions, the former bearing the other half cost of the office establishment. The theory on which the local fun with this expenditure is that the breed of the country horses is i thus an indirect improvement takes place in the capital account o turist. Now this is a very vague way of putting it. Even improves, we fail to see how the agriculturist has, or is ever to ha position. Very few of the agriculturists proper have mares to bree have, rarely use them for agricultural purposes. This is one pretences on which Government now and then tries to throw burde shoulders. The real secret of the existence of the Horse-breedi Department is the fact that Government has been badly feeling the horses for the cavalry and strong mules for the Commissariat Depa want was pertinently brought to the notice of Government du Afghan campaign, when any animal that could lay claim to t horse was hurried off to Quetta. Since then Government has b forming the present department, which absorbs nearly one-fourt cost in supervision and establishment. But in doing injustice th is just. It has only burdened the local funds to the extent of half of the purchase and keep of stallions and of horse-shows.
sorry to see that the department is not yet in a position to see the covering of mares give. The department furnishes some tables on point, but the Superintendent himself is not much confident of their correc This is not likely to be remedied immediately, but the department oug make strenuous efforts to obtain, as far as possible, correct and authentic in ation on this point.

Says that if Civilians dislike to serve in the judicial branch of the Civil Service, competent Subordinate Judges should be appointed Assistant Judges.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 15th September says:—What makes the cial line unpopular with the Civilians of this Preside Government, we hear, are in want of candidate that line, but find that most Civilians prefer to re in the revenue line. This has led, we believe, to inconvenience. The District Judge of Poona the arrears of work increasing on his file and req an Assistant Judge to aid him in disposing of them. One or two other Dis Judges have, it is said, called for similar assistance. But Government are able to provide it in the present state of things. Two or three District Ju applied, it appears, for leave, but they have been asked to await the retur certain gentlemen who are on leave but who are expected back here sho This is not satisfactory. The judicial line is as important as the revenue, it seems but reasonable that Government should enquire into the causes w have made the former unattractive. If Government find that Civilians unwilling to join the judicial line, why are not competent Subordinate Ju nominated Assistant Judges?

Some suggestions regarding the constitution of the new committee to be appointed by Government for the management of the Bombay International Exhibition.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 20th September says:—It is said tha General Committee of the Bombay International bition has finished its work and that a new comm will shortly be appointed in its stead. It is repo that the Bombay Government wish the new comm to be composed of 18 members, 6 of whom w nominated by Government and the rest will be ch by the subscribers to the Exhibition Guarantee Fund. The constitution o committee is objectionable in many respects. It is said that Government nominate 6 Europeans to the committee. This conduct on the part of Sir J Fergusson is not at all surprising after the experience we have derived from of his recent acts. Why should the proportion of Government nominees i new committee be half of that to be chosen by the guarantors to the Exhib Fund? Government are only responsible for the payment of a quarter pa the loss that may be incurred, and they are therefore bound to nominate fourth only of the number of members of the new committee. It is objectionable that a Native prince who may have subscribed only two or thousand rupees should send his representative on the committee, while a ci of Bombay who may have subscribed five times that amount should hav right to elect a person to represent him on it. With a view to put an end this difficulty and to protect the interests of the parties concerned we mak following suggestion, which, we hope, will receive due consideration. committee should consist of 21 members, 12 of whom should be elected b guarantors to the Exhibition Fund, 3 should be nominated by Governme nominated by Government themselves for protecting the interests of N princes who may have subscribed towards the fund, 2 appointed by the Bo Municipality, 1 of them being a European and the other a Native gentle and 2 sent by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce. A committee compos the above plan will not fail to give satisfaction to all. But we object t Exhibition Commissioner being appointed the head of this committee. should be more like its secretary than its president. The Municipal Com sioner of this city should never be appointed Commissioner for the exhib M. Joubert's services may either be utilized or an experienced officer may b by Government for the purpose. Such a committee will prove really u will ensure to a great extent the success of the exhibition, and will creditable to the Bombay Government.

Comments in connection with the work of the Factory Commission now sitting in Bombay.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 14th September says:—It appears rather strange for the Government to be so very hard on the Factory Commission. The Commission has been sitting for the last few days only, and yet the Government is reported to be getting rather impatient. This question of a Factory Act is a vexed one; even those who govern differ upon it. Why then such haste? Let the enquiry be full and thorough; let the mill-owners have their say; let the poor, down-trodden and hard-worked mill-hands relieve their pent-up feelings by their own mouths. Why not permit the members to put questions outside the list published? That does not show that Government wants the deliberate opinions of the Commission. Is all this a mere farce intended to throw dust into the eyes of the Government of India who have passed their pen through the recommendations of the Bombay Government for a Factory Act?

Comments in connection with the Factory Act.

The Bombay Chronicle (78) of the 14th September says:—The enquiry of the Factory Commission now sitting in Bombay, so far as it has progressed, does not apparently tend to prove the necessity of any special legislation in Bombay in respect of the large factories, such as the cotton mills and presses. Further it is the opinion of most experts that hardly anything important will be elicited hereafter to justify any immediate interference with the existing Act in respect of those factories. But there can scarcely be a doubt in the mind of any intelligent person that some legislative action and the exercise of power on the part of Government are necessary for regulating the many smaller factories in the interest of the operatives employed in them. The existing Act does not apply to them, and some of them are now proving a curse in a great measure to those who have the misfortune to work therein daily. The claims of these for the protection of their health and lives by the constituted authorities in the country have long been disregarded. Most persons are aware how the owners of factories make the operatives work for long hours each day like so many draft animals in closely packed quarters, at once insalubrious and dangerous to life. No commission was needed to enable Government to take steps to prevent these poor people from being subjected to the dire effects of such a state of affairs. The intelligent portion of the community has been long agreed as to the urgency of some authoritative action being taken in the matter. It merely required some well designed and wisely directed initiative on the part of Government to secure to the said people the much wished for relief from their unfortunate condition. Instead of taking boldly such initiative action in respect of the small factories, Government applied to the Supreme Government for an amendment of the existing Factory Act, and have found that they do not stand much chance of success for any such large measure of new legislation. It is to be hoped however in the interest of the operatives in the smaller factories that the necessity of doing something for them will not be lost sight of, and that steps will be soon taken to afford them the relief which they very sorely need. [The Rást Goftár (115) and the Yajdán Parast (128) of the same date express disapproval of any pressure being exercised on the Factory Act Committee to hasten its work.]

Approves of the action of the Bombay Government in the matter of preventing members of the Bombay Gymkhana from using the ground behind the Marine Lines for playing polo.

The Gujaráti (99) of the 14th September says:—The new resolution forbidding the use of the ground behind the Marine Lines for playing polo is honourable and praiseworthy. This ground is required for recreation. It is unjust to prohibit the public from using this ground because a few Europeans require it for playing polo. Why should encouragement be given to the play of polo, in which the horses are treated cruelly and by which the ground becomes rough and loses its verdure? The new resolution will remove the inconvenience suffered by the people as regards the want of open spaces for rest and enjoyment. It is not only improper but tyrannical that Europeans should monopolize the use of places set apart for recreation in this city, where there is a sad want of recreation grounds. The Government will be discharging their duty towards the people by adhering to the resolution issued by them instead of yielding to the influence of the members of Bombay Gymkhana. [The Rást Goftár (115) of the same date expres similar sentiments and expresses disapproval of the conduct of the members the Bombay Gymkhana in selfishly appropriating the Esplanade to their o use. If the people be deprived of the use of the ground behind the Mar Lines no other recreation ground will be left for them. What objection ha the members of the Gymkhana to utilize the ground near the race course or t Byculla Flats? It is to be hoped that they will see their mistake a think of the comforts of the poor before encroaching upon all grounds reserv for recreation.]

Complaint against the Forest Inspector of Junnar for postponing the auction sale of grazing lands in certain villages.

The Din Bandhu (6) of the 14th September, in a paragraph head
"Tyranny," says:—The Forest Inspector of Tálul Junnar in the Poona District has postponed the sa
by auction of grazing lands in villages the people which have celebrated marriage and other ceremoni
without the assistance of Bráhmans, and has issue strict orders for seizing such cattle as might be foun grazing in fields. All this oppression has led the agricultural classes to kee cattle at home. We have received two letters of this purport from the peop of the village of Otur, and if what is said there be true the conduct of the offic concerned must be very oppressive.

Comments on the cases of bribery against Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth, an interpreter of the Bombay Small Causes Court, and Inspector Collett, of the Bombay police.

The Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 20th September says:—The decisio given by Mr. Cooper, Chief Presidency Magistrat in the case of Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth is just and fulf the public expectation. If Mr. Brewin had referr
the accuser, who sells sweetmeats, to the police cou
when he complained to him of Mr. Bápuji havin accepted a bribe of Rs. 10 from him, or if he had the most gone with him before a magistrate, laid t sworn information of the sweetmeat seller before him, taken out a summo against Mr. Bápuji and then allowed justice to take its course, no objecti could have been taken against his conduct. The Judges of the Small Caus Court were in the first place requested by the police to prosecute Mr. Bápu but as they declined to do so Government were requested to undertake t prosecution. It is surprising that Government should have acceded to this reque and should have ordered the Public Prosecutor to conduct the case. The re impropriety in the case lies in the order of Government. In the first place is objectionable that the police should have set a trap for Mr. Bápuji in t shape of offering him a fresh bribe of Rs. 5. It is the duty of the police check crime and not to give encouragement to the perpetrators of crim Government ought to have taken this fact into consideration at the time ordering the prosecution and ought to have abstained from so doing. Mor over they should have taken into consideration the position of the accus party. Mr. Bápuji had faithfully served Government for 30 years and t European Judges of the Small Causes Court had openly refused to underta the prosecution. Government did not show foresight and discretion in san tioning the prosecution of such an old, trusted and respectable servant of thei on the strength of the evidence of a few insignificant men. The accused h suffered a good deal of anxiety and expended a large sum of money to save h honour. On the other hand the prosecution had nothing to suffer or lose.
the case was conducted by the Public Prosecutor, the accuser had no anxie regarding the payment of expenses. If Government under such circumstanc do not act cautiously, public servants and respectable men will have to live in perpetual sort of dread. Even well-to-do people cannot afford the expense defending themselves and poor persons must of course suffer miserably. T police ought not to be granted the assistance of the Public Prosecutor in eve case, as they can very well conduct most cases themselves. Now who is to p the costs incurred by Mr. Bápuji in defending himself? It is very hard that cannot recover them from the prosecution. Some recompense to him would an act of justice. It would be well if the local Government and the police we to take the necessary lesson from the result of this wretched case. It wou redound to the credit of the police and would give relief to the were to undertake the prosecution of accused parties after suffici and enquiry. [The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the same date expre similar sentiments. It considers the conduct of the police objecti whether some of the witnesses for the prosecution have not given The result of the case leads to the fear that the house of any offic ment service might be visited by the detective police on their rec ation from the lowest of the low that that officer has accepted to be hoped that Sir Frank Souter will not allow his subordinate lengths. Government ought to pay Mr. Bápuji his costs in the to be hoped that the Government of Sir James Fergusson will n Moreover Government ought, after the experience derived fron give mature consideration to such cases before sanctioning the Mr. Brewin's zeal, which oversteps due bounds, should now be k control. The injury that is done to society by such zeal renders ous officer. It is also to be hoped that either the Police Co Government will do full recompense to Inspector Collett for th suffered by him. But why should the police act hastily in such haste is very objectionable and should certainly be avoided. It that the police will not cut a similar figure hereafter. The Ak (84) of the same date says that two important cases, that of Mr náth and of Inspector Collett, have been recently decided. In th have spent thousands of rupees, and though they have been acqu not been able to secure acquittal without being crushed under the expenses incidental to their defence. It is to be regrette clever officer as Mr. Brewin should have tarnished his name by h meat-seller in his intrigues. After the exposures made in the cases Government ought to interfere, and for the protection of th people keep better supervision over the police than is done a

Comments on the trial of Inspector Collett on a charge of taking bribes at the recent criminal sessions of the Bombay High Court.

The Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 17th September says:—In of the Bombay police has been ac recent criminal sessions of the High charge of taking bribes. The cha against a police officer is a very serious be very minutely gone into. Sir Frank in the first place to have exerted hims measures for redressing the complaints made against Inspecto when it was found necessary to send up the matter for judici satisfactory measures appear to have been adopted for produ The presiding Judge at the sessions remarked in his summing pendent witnesses were necessary for proving the charge. It is fore that those who managed the case for the prosecution should to procure independent witnesses from the very beginning, and that Government should take notice of this neglect. The c defence referred to the Ilbert Bill in his address to the jury an was an ordinary practice with Natives to bring false charges agai This is the second time that such a remark has been made in t Court, and it is very much to be regretted that the Court sh taken an objection to it, though it was very much unfavourab upon by the public at the time it was first uttered. The ends o be well satisfied by allowing the free expression of such sen European juries. We are of opinion that such an objectionable to be checked by the High Court.

Construction of protective works against floods at Surat.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 14th September says:—Sur escaped from another flood. Have done anything to protect the town fro inundations, or are they still wrang extension of the Park? Mr. Hope has been after them for yea pendent commissioners have also been pressing the officials for But they are enamoured of electric light and the Public Park.

may wash away the population. But we hope the Collector will be sparec write the epitaph. [The Yajdán Parast (128) of the same date says that flood-works ought to be completed by September next.]

Legislation.

Some remarks on the Khoja Succession Bill.

In an article headed "The Khoja Succession Bill" the Native Opinion of the 14th September says:—As regards the suc sion to a divided Khoja, the order of successior nearly the same as in the case of a separated Hir with some difference. The Khoja parents have the advantage over the Hi parents. In the Khoja scheme they come before the widow and daughter the daughter's son. The Khoja brothers too stand in a more favourable posi than the Hindu. They divide equally with the daughter's son. This is rat anomalous, but if the Khojas like that it should be so there is no objec why it should not be so. As regards the more distant relatives, the Bill pared by the Commissioners differs from the present Bill. The former allo those relatives only on the father's side who stood within seven degree kindred to succeed to the property which in their absence devolved on Jamát. But the Bill as it stands removes the restrictions on the succession the more distant relatives, and, excluding the Jamát, declares that the prope in default of heirs will go to the crown. The reasons given in the statem of objects and reasons for excluding the Jamát in favour of the more dist relatives do not appear to apply with the same force in the case of the exclus of the Jamát in favour of the crown. This is all very well when the claims of Jamát come in opposition to those of the kindred. But the Jamát might w out inconvenience be made the ultimate successor to every Khoja. Now claims of the crown to ultimate succession are founded no doubt upon g principle and ought to be supported as advantageous to the whole commun But looking to the custom among the Khojas, the Jamát, we think, should h the preference. According to the draft Bill drawn by the Commission Jamát excludes the crown, since it succeeds next after some of the dist kindred, and there is no chance of the property going to the crown after it once gone to the Jamát. That the Bill has been differed from in favour of kindred, but as to the claims of the crown we apprehend that the sense of Khoja community is strong against them as evidenced by the draft Bill. Khoja lives and dies intestate in Cutch and has moveable property in Bomb why should not the Government of Cutch take his property in preference the British Government? The arguments advanced against the law of domicile being allowed to operate in the matter of the succession to the mo ables of a Khoja which we have already noted do not apply against the suc sion of the crown of the country of his domicile to his effects in the last instan There is no such uncertainty in finding out who is the sovereign of the coun in which a Khoja lives as there is in discovering the law of that domicile, in principle we think that the crown of the domicile of a deceased Khoja ou to succeed to his effects in preference to the British Government.

Local Self-government.

Complains that in the rules published by the Commissioner in Sind for regulating elections female voters are not allowed to vote by proxy.

In an article headed "Voting by Proxy" the Sind Times (5) of the September says:—We see in the batch of ru framed by the Bombay Government a few days regarding local boards that female voters are allov to vote by proxy. Why then, may we ask, has salutary rule been omitted in the rules framed the Commissioner in Sind for regulating the electi of local board members in Sind? Even supposing that there are no fem voters entitled to vote in these elections, who can assert that in munici cities like Karáchi, Hyderabad, Shikárpur and Sukkur there are no wom qualified to vote? And yet the rule is not only conspicuous by its absenc the Local Board Rules, but in the Municipal Rules recently published.

are told that female voters will object as much to going befo
in order to attest their proxy as to going to a polling statio first place, in large cities where there are Native gazetted offic tion of a proxy should not be restricted to magistrates. And in even if this concession be not made, there are Native magistrat town and táluka before whom few women will object to sign a magistrates can easily be induced in the case of very respectab ladies to go to their homes in order to certify the execution o
there any difficulty felt in the attestation of general power women before a magistrate? Again, under the Registration A necessary for the party in whose favour a deed is executed to tion acknowledged by the executant before the registering offic the executant to be a woman, one would think the difficulty of to acknowledge her act would be insuperable. And yet how m ed by women does Mr. Patton register every year in Karáchi a not mind going to the town to record a personal admission o female executants, and if he does not mind, are we justifie women should not be allowed to vote by proxy because there way by which they can conveniently obtain the certificate of a their execution of a proxy? Surely the local authorities ough argument is worth nothing. To begin with, the Bombay Go superior, has evidently considered it worth nothing, for it has ed women to vote by proxy in rural tálukas. A fortiori it wo to exercise the same privilege in urban municipalities. And i to refuse the privilege to women because they would object t a magistrate, who may be of the same caste or class and may to them, is as good as holding that women should not be allo powers of attorney or Mukhtyárnámás because they would have tion. And yet no one dreams of laying down such a rule, and a moment deny that notwithstanding this objection hundreds of women do acknowledge the execution of powers of attorne námás and several other documents before magistrates. Wh difference? It is not yet too late to amend the rules. In pri not think well of a man who, knowing his mistake, sticks to i it through thick and thin. Consistency is a very good thing, better. Even Government officials are not infallible; and e the addition of a necessary rule will assuredly not weaken th fallibility.

Municipalities.

Condemns the proposal for increasing the duties levied on ghee, sugar, fuel and grain by the Bombay Municipality for meeting the expense of constructing the Tansa Lake.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 14th September protests ag plated increase in the duties levied fuel and grain by the Bombay Mu view to meet the expenses of constru
Lake in conformity with the recom
by the Finance Committee of the loc
and remarks:—The entire public wi to this increase. Articles of food a Bombay, and if the suggestions of the Finance Committee are will become still dearer. It is simple cruelty to increase necessaries of life. If increased taxation is deemed necessar the expense of an additional supply of water, it should be do as to fall evenly on the rich and the poor. The duties on th do not appreciably affect the pockets of the rich, but are a burd classes. As suggested by Mr. Navroji Fardunji, the increase present levied on articles of food should be only Rs. 50,00 house assessment should however be greatly increased, which will be able to easily pay and which will touch the pockets of in proportion to the income derived by them from their estate

Comments on the recommendation made by Government for the office of president of the Sholápur Municipality.

The Kalpataru (36) of the 14th September says that the name o
Náráyan Govind Deshmukh, chairman of the Sho Municipality, ought to have been included in th
of gentlemen qualified to hold the office of pres
of the municipality which the Collector has subm to Government. Mr. Náráyan Govind has for s years discharged the duties of chairman, and i opinion of the Kalpataru is thoroughly qualified for the office of pres
With the exception of Mr. Apáji Ráoji all the gentlemen that have been r mended by the Collector are, with all their general abilities, wanti experience and local knowledge, and it is not prudent to appoint presidents, especially when the experiment is a novel one. The concessi non-official presidents has been obtained with great difficulty, and at such a it is necessary that an experienced man should be appointed to the off president, so that the public interests may be guarded and official interfe with municipal matters avoided. Mr. Náráyan Govind is such a man, an to be regretted that his name should have been lost sight of by the Collect is to be hoped that the Collector will reconsider the matter.

Expresses disapproval of the conduct of certain municipal commissioners in Surat.

In a paragraph headed "Municipal Affairs in Surat," the Subodh P
(15) of the 14th September says:—We wish w
the petition before us which was lately forward
some of the municipal commissioners of Sur Government complaining of certain conduct part of the president of their municipality. Not having had the advanta looking at it, it is possible we may be doing injustice to them. But we say that a careful perusal of the Government resolution on the subject on our minds the impression that their zeal for the public interests carri municipal commissioners a little too far on the occasion complained of.
believe they were wrong in imagining that the municipality had no pov remit the fine which the Electric Light Company had incurred under the
of their contract, as also in thinking that the precedents which they applied to the matter before them. But having believed that they did, duty lay in giving the meeting the benefit of their opinion and refraining voting for the remission. This done, they were freed from all responsi
It was, we think, no part of their duty to prevent the meeting by all po means from coming to a different conclusion. Such conduct can never mend itself to anybody. For if every member attempted to do the sam business would soon come to a standstill. It moreover amounts to assumi fallibility for one's self and his opinions, which it is one of the first lessons art of corporate government to unlearn to do. Corporate action too re that due respect should be paid to the opinions of others, and especially rulings of the chairman on the point of order. Further it deserves remembered that the granting of the privilege of local self-government in or small measure depends upon Government, which keeps itself inform what is done in the districts by means of its local officers. That Gover will only extend these privileges in proportion as we succeed in obtaini spect for our opinions and for our way of urging them. This requires th extremes of obstructiveness and of tame submission should be carefully
ed. Opinions carefully formed and firmly, though moderately, urged a their proper season ensure respect and confidence. Immoderate adv never does. Local self-government is at present only on its trial. An making it a success or failure depends in no small degree on the way in we discharge our duties in the midst of dislike and distrust of its future which it is likely to be regarded in some quarters. These consider ought to make our municipal commissioners in the mofussil very cautiou guarded in their conduct. Otherwise, in trying to serve one particular in they may help to bring into discredit the entire scheme of local self-g ment. [The Suryă Prakásh (82) of the 20th September expresses disap of the conduct of the petitioners and approves of the action of Gover
in the matter.]

Comments on the Government resolution on the differences between the seven elected commissioners and the president of the Surat Municipality.

The Gujaráti (99) of the 14th September says that the resolu
Bombay Government on the differences seven elected members of the Surat Muni their president is one-sided. Governme done justice to the commissioners by cen
from the one-sided explanation of the pre commissioners have been told to implicit president. The former were justified in latter in the matter of the levy of the fine from the Electric Lig Government have not noticed the conduct of Mr. White to that ext it should have been. Why have not Government prevented him i tion from continuing to act arbitrarily? The Surat public appe great consternation. If Mr. White had been reprimanded he woul ently in the future. It is not just that Government should have resolution on the mere report of the Collector-president. The rep have been sent to the petitioners and a resolution ought then t issued. It is however to be hoped that the slight censure passed o in this resolution will make him and the commissioners work
[The Yajdán Parast (128) of the same date regrets that Govern have declined to increase the proportion of elected members to the total number composing the municipal board as prayed for by ers, and says that this concession could not be expected from the which is opposed to the scheme of local self-government. The Hi of Ahmedabad and the Broach Samáchár (89) of the 18th Septemb of the Government resolution, and say that it is not to be expected ernment which is opposed to the scheme will take measures to ch
trary conduct of Collector-presidents in the mofussil.]

Municipal affairs at Ahmedabad.

The Hitechchhu (80) of Ahmedabad of the 18th September says administration report of a large municipa of Ahmedabad is an important affair and all the commissioners are interested. It means of making them feel their responsibility, and there is no earth a draft report prepared by the managing committee should not be a general meeting of the commissioners for approval before submit ernment. There is no conceivable reason why the despotic usa days, when most of the commissioners were more ornamental than taking active interest in what was done in their name or on their be now adhered to. We are at a loss to understand why the pres should insist upon following the old practice. As soon as the lett the report arrived, it should have been placed before the managin
It was, we hear, addressed to the chairman, that is to say, to the mittee and not to Mr. Ranchhodlál as a private individual. The id man cannot be separated from a committee; there can be no cha a committee. When an effort is being made by the Governments o Bombay to teach to the people local self-government, we expected chairman and the president would restore to the managing commi
general body of commissioners the rights usurped by their pred Ranchhodlál is an elected chairman and therefore ought to have mo popular rights and be anxious to do away with the despotic metho cessors who were nominated by the Collectors. Yet when the m managing committee claimed their right of considering the dra written request he appealed to Mr. Reid, the Collector-president, though he had no authority to do so, that the old practice shoul Under a Collector-president of narrow principles, not thinking for looking beyond the surface of things and having a blind aversion local self-government can, under our present circumstances, hard to develope, take root and prosper. Accustomed to acts of arbitr his arrival in this country, he dislikes all control, all opposition a the representatives of the rate-payers; he loses his English insti popular rights, believes that despotism is the best mode of conduc administration, and wishes to act as a Nawáb. If in addition to this h ness to be guided by his subordinates and those who are near him o

access to him, and if these men are not favourable to local s
the efforts of the representatives of the people to have a hand ment according to law will be thwarted at every step. The city has the misfortune to have such a Collector-president. Mr. Re can judge from his acts, appears to be of opinion that the best w ing municipal government is that which existed before April municipal corporation consisted of ex-officio members, all bound and the nominated commissioners, many of whom had little kn tation and municipal affairs and most of whom were awfully afra the all-powerful Collector and his Deputy. Instances of Mr. Reid opposition to his will and his endeavours to prevent local self-be easily given. In one instance he disobeyed the orders of the ernment also. We beseech him to reconsider the subject of lo ment and its future advantages to the people. It is one of the m balancing the disadvantages of a foreign rule. We respectful Reid to modify his policy and help in teaching to the people e charge the art of local self-government. The benefits he will so will endear his memory for generations to come. But Mr. Ra tálál, the elected chairman, has disappointed all the well-wisher government in Ahmedabad. We are told that from the first da charge of the office of chairman of the managing committee h
he would follow in the footsteps of his predecessor, the late offic nent chairman. He began to work as if he were absolute master pality and his colleagues were non-entities. He thinks that all l to the chairman should be answered by himself without consultin forgetting that there can be no chairman without a committee.
colleagues stand up for their rights, off he runs to the president was expected that he would try his best to help the cause o government, but he preferred to win the good graces of the Collec impressed the latter that he is the only person in Ahmedabad f president. The chairman ought to have the tact of keeping h terms with the Collector and at the same time encouraging munic
ment by doing away with the former arbitrary modes of procedu to his generosity and his instincts of patriotism. This is a critic falls to his lot to do harm or good to his fellow-citizens by a generous or selfish way. We trust he will prefer the form conduct.

Native States.

Does not approve of the reduction in the armies of Native States and suggests their remodelling on some better plan.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 15th September says :—The
by the Times of India on the article appeared in the columns of the Lond armies of Native States are genera commend themselves to the approva of those who take a serious and p questions affecting the Native States. Nothing has become certain writers, of whom the writer in the London Times is one abolition of the armies of the Native States. The consequences are not in the least cared for. What is really necessary is that t complete cordiality between the paramount power and the Nati delicate question, and the best way of securing it is for the form armies of the latter, to look upon them as military forces of the
to the work of improving and remodelling them on some defi proposal for a commission is admirable. It is on some such princ of India indicates that our Government ought to go to work in t Native Opinion (11) of the 14th September disapproves of the reduction in the armies of Native States, and says that it shoul thoughtful and far-sighted English politicians to cultivate friend Native princes instead of thus alienating their affections.]

Comments in connection with the question of abolishing the armies of Native princes of India.

The Bombay Chronicle (78) of the 14th September says:—Nobody acquainte with the circumstances of the country and the condi tion of its people either in the British or Nativ territories requires to be told that the armies of Nativ princes form a drain more or less on the resources o the State, that the people put up with them unde the impression of their being a necessary evil, and that any diminution o this drain would prove a source of great and highly welcome relief to the tax-payers and of extreme satisfaction to the British Government. Again no really well-informed person would deny that the maintenance in this country of a large number of British and Native troops will be always necessary for the preservation of its internal order and its protection from foreign inroads. But how large that number should be will always depend upon, among other considerations, the contingency incidental to the existence of the hundreds of thousands of the unnecessary armed retainers kept by the Native princes under one designation or another. These armed hordes are considered by those retaining them as necessary appendages for the existence and maintenance of their power. It is this unfortunate notion with which the minds of all the Native princes are embued that renders difficult the adoption of even the best considered proposals hitherto made for the reduction of the armies of the Native States, and which when adopted would be followed as a matter of course by a proportionate reduction of that of the British Government, to the great relief of the subjects of both. The Times of India, when referring to the lucubrations of a certain correspondent of the London Times, very wisely takes account of this difficulty and condemns the proposals for attempting to deal with the said armies of the Native princes without first persuading them to become willing parties to the arrangement that might be resolved upon for purposes of any such reduction. Any arbitrary overt act on the part of the British Government would prove only the prelude to disaffection on the side of the princes and their retainers and subjects, which every sensible British statesman ought carefully to avoid engendering in the least. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that whatever may have to be done in the matter must depend for its safe and smooth accomplishment on the willing co-operation of the Native princes. These must, therefore, be taken into its confidence by the paramount power whenever any serious modifications are about to be made in the relations of the two parties, and bearing on the treaty engagements between them, in respect of the armed number of men to be kept up by the different feudatories of the empire. The adoption of some such conciliatory course as that pointed out by the Times of India would be the safest plan for the authorities to pursue in the matter. Any arbitrary or high-handed action will fail of its purpose and tend to prove in the end the source of serious danger to the peace and prosperity of the country at large, and to the happy understanding now prevailing between the British Government and the Native princes and chiefs. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (84) of the 17th September says that formerly the question of the inutility of the armies of Native princes held good, but the times have changed and the question now is regarding the necessity of increasing and improving them. No Native potentate will now be so very foolish as to be disaffected towards the British Government and to rise in arms against them. The Native princes know full well the blessings of the British rule.]

Advocates an enquiry by Government into the allegations contained in the memorial of Thákur Báhádur-sing of Bedasir in the State of Bikanir.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 14th September says:—Now and again we receive copies of petitions and memorials submitted to the Viceroy by princes, chiefs or thákurs praying for relief from alleged oppression. The details embodied in such documents form a melancholy study apart from the tale of injustice and oppression they generally disclose. Sometimes it is a chief who appeals from the high-handedness and insolence of the Political Agent. Sometimes it is the thákurs that are suppliant for relief from the rapacity of a powerful kinsman. We have just now before us the memorial of Thákur Báhádur-sing of Bedasir in the State of Bikanir in Rájputána, now a state prisoner at Deoli. Briefly stated, his case stands thus. The Thákur, the premier noble in Bikanir, was asked in 1882, in violation of the previous sanad, to pay increased assessments to the Chief, for resisting which he has been impris

fort blown off and razed to the ground, and the property cont exposed to plunder for four hours. Colonel Bradford's name is pro tioned in connection with these " violent and arbitrary proceedi clines to specify the charge on which the Thákur is imprisoned, on it was of a " political nature." A petty nobleman closely related to the Mahárája is first coerced into paying larger revenue in vi sum agreed upon and out of all proportion to his ability, and the
by a force of 8,000 in his own stronghold for having resisted this matter is communicated to Lord Kimberley as a "rebellion authority of the Mahárája! Judging from the many extracts gi that Bikanir is the scene of chronic disturbances and has not for several years past as at all living peacefully. That would that there is something hopelessly bad and rotten in this State, and must be at fault. Really the memorialist has made out a very s interference by the Viceroy. If the facts stated be correct, and th challenges inquiry, it is to be earnestly hoped that justice may b at once. It is scandalous that under the ægis of the British fl mities are allowed to go unresented. Is there to be no final c for redress of such cruel wrongs of which we hear from time Mahárája of Bikanir seems to contemplate further outrage on the Thákur, as explained in the able memorial before us. Surely this under the British Government, even if the Foreign Office allows i

Supports the petition of the Thákur of Bedásir to the Supreme Government regarding the oppression exercised over him.

The Gujaráti (99) of the 14th September, in noticing the pe Báhádursing, Thákur of Bedásir, to the ernment seeking for redress for the wr have been suffered by him, says:—The
has been much oppressed. The Thák had no right to enhance the tribute pai
but when the Agent and his Assistant ably inclined towards the Bikanir Darbár no justice could be ex latter has undoubtedly exercised great oppression and the Agent has taken part in it. Complaints have been made against th Bikánir since 1865-66, and even Colonel Keatinge reported abo exercised by him. The anarchy that has prevailed in this matt
From the particulars of this affair it appears that the cry of "reb last year was unreal. Captain Talbot has purposely made much controversy and took the Thákur prisoner by fraud. Such a p this is most unjust. Searching enquiries ought to be made in th the Thákur be found innocent, if the conduct of Captain Tal deserving of blame, and if the claims of the Bikánir Darbár prove all the parties concerned ought to be duly punished. Such instan occur in Native States, but their authors are not discovered and yáts and thákurs have to suffer. There was no necessity for s by virtue of the treaty entered into by Aitchinson, and the cry of false. We hope Lord Ripon will do justice to the Thákur.
fer a great boon on Native States by taking measures for preven rence of such events.

Emigration of about 150 Muman inhabitants of the village of Kanodar to Miroli owing to the anarchical government of the Nawáb of Pálanpur.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (80) of Ahmedabad of the ber, writing from the village of Miroli, T
under date the 8th September, says Mumans residing in the village of Ka to the Nawáb of Pálanpur being tire chical government, have come to res about three months ago. There are ab inhabited by the Mumans in Kanod munity is divided into two parties owing to some religious feu opposed to the Mumans who have emigrated to Miroli appreh Pirmad Jethara Umatya by fraud, inflicted 36 wounds by swor killed him. The Nawáb did not make proper enquiries into th
The murderers have been kept in prison. The Mumans ha here owing to their failing to obtain justice in the case and owing acts of oppression and mismanagement. The people of Miroli have helped by providing houses for residence and land for cultivation.

Complains of the arbitrary conduct of Mr. Náthábhái, the Diwán of the I'dar State.

The Hitechchhu (80) of Ahmedabad of the 18th September complains o arbitrary way in which Mr. Náthábhái, the Diwá the I'dar State, manages its affairs, gives a few insta in point, and says that he has neither received high cation nor does he possess experience to manage administration of a large territory. The Mahárá well as the Political Agent ought to have exercised foresight in entrusting with the performance of such responsible duties as fall to the share of the Di The Mahárája who used to look after the judicial administration of his Stat entrusted that work to Mr. Náthábhái and he himself gives up his time to plea The Diwán has under these circumstances begun to look upon himself as an dependent prince. When the mofussil public which is enlightened does dare to complain against the hardships suffered by it at the hands of offic how can it be expected that the ignorant subjects of Native States will do They quietly suffer. The Political Agent ought to enquire into the compla

G. W. KURKARAY,

Reporter on the Native P

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
23rd September 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Administration of India: Expression of opinion that the high-handed conduct of Europeans is calculated to disturb the peace of the country 3
Advance of Russia in Central Asia: Remarks on the alleged refusal of the Amir of Cabul to guarantee the safety of the Boundary Commission through his dominions 3
Bombay International Exhibition: Suggestions regarding the constitution of the new committee to be appointed by Government for the management of the— 11
Factory Act:
  Comments in connection with the— 12
  Comments in connection with the work of the Factory Commission now sitting in Bombay 12
Floods at Surat: Construction of protective works against— ... 14
Governorship of Bombay: Remarks in connection with the appointment of a successor to Sir James Fergusson 6
Judicial matters:
  Comments on the cases of bribery against Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth, an interpreter of the Bombay Small Causes Court, and Inspector Collett, of the Bombay police 13
  Comments on the trial of Inspector Collett on a charge of taking bribes at the recent criminal sessions of the Bombay High Court 14
  Expression of opinion that if Civilians dislike to serve in the judicial branch of the Civil Service, competent Subordinate Judges should be appointed as Assistant Judges 11
Land revenue:
  Condemnation of the resolution of Government regarding the assessment of lands which enjoy the advantages of subsoil water ... 8
  Remarks on the allowance of discount in the payment of the land revenue instalments in advance 10
Polo: Approval of the action of the Bombay Government in the matter of preventing members of the Bombay Gymkhana from using the ground behind the Marine Lines for playing— 12
Public service: Complaint against the Forest Inspector of Junnar for postponing the auction sale of grazing lands in certain villages ... 13
Report of the Horse-breeding Operations in the Bombay Presidency: Remarks on the— 10 Vernacular Press Act: Comments on the suggestion made by the London Times for the revival of the — for India 7
Viceroyalty of India:
  Expression of opinion that Lord Ripon did no substantial good to India 6
  Reflections on the change which is imminent in the office of the Governor General of India 5
  Reflections on the retirement of Lord Ripon and the appointment of Lord Dufferin as Viceroy 4
  Reflections on the retirement of Lord Ripon from the office of the Governor General of India 4

Part II.—Legislation—

Khoja Succession Bill: Remarks on the— 15

Part III.—Local Self-government—

Voting by proxy: Complaint that in the rules published by the Commissioner in Sind for regulating elections female voters are not allowed 15

Part IV.—Municipalities—

Áhmedabad: Municipal affairs at— ... ...
Bombay: Condemnation of the proposal for increasing the duties le on ghee, sugar, fuel and grain by the — Municipality for meeting expenses of constructing the Tansa Lake ... ...
Sholápur: Comments on the recommendation made by Government the office of president of the — Municipality ...
Surat:
  Comments on the Government resolution on the differences betw the seven elected commissioners and the president of the Municipality ... ...
  Disapproval of the conduct of certain municipal commissioners the—Municipality ... ...

Part V.—Native States—

Armies of Native States:
  Comments in connection with the question of abolishing the India ... ...
  Disapproval of the reduction or abolition of the — and suggest for their remodelling on some better plan ...
Bedasir:
  Advocacy of an enquiry by Government in the allegations conta in the memorial of Thákur Báhádursing of — in the Stat Bikanir ... ...
  Advocacy of the petition of Thákur Báhádursing of — to the Supr Government regarding the oppression exercised over him I'dar: Complaint against the arbitrary conduct of Mr. Náthábhái, Diwán of the — State ... ...
Pálanpur: Emigration of about 150 Muman inhabitants of the villag Kánodar to Miroli owing to the anarchical government of Nawáb of— ... ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

85 FFICE
1884

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND B

For the Week ending 27th September

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Wee
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Mon
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quar
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-w
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Wee
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-w
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Wee
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Dail
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Wee
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fort
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Wee
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Wee
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do
*24	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do
25	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fort
26	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Wee
27	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do
28	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do
29	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do
30	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do
31	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do
32	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do
33	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fort
34	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Wee
35	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do
36	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do
37	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do
*38	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do
39	„ Kesari	Do.	Do
40	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do
41	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortn
42	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Mon
*43	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Week
44	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do
45	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do
46	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do
47	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do
48	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Mont
49	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Week
50	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do
51	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do
*52	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortn
53	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Week
*54	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do
*55	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do
*56	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Mont
*57	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Week
58	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Mont
59	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortn
60	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Week
61	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do
*62	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do
63	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Mont
*64	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Week
65	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do
*68	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánare

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.
	MARA'THI—continued.
69	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly
70	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.
71	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.
72	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.
*73	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.
74	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.
*75	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.
*76	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.
77	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
78	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly
79	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.
80	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.
81	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.
82	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.
	GUJARA'TI.
83	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly
84	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily
85	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly
86	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.
87	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.
88	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily
89	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly
90	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.
91	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly
*92	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.
93	„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly
94	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.
95	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly
96	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.
97	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.
98	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.
99	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly
100	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly
101	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.
*102	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly
103	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily
104	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly
105	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly
106	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.
*107	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly
108	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly
109	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly
110	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly
111	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly
112	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly
113	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.
114	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.
115	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.
117	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.
118	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly
119	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.
121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly
124	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly
125	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly
126	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly
127	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.
128	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly
	KA'NARESE.
129	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly
*130	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.
131	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.
132	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.
133	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.
	SANSKRIT.
134	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly
	URDU.
*135	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly
	SINDI.
139	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the paper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the num
In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that or ă) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well know
with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Govern
the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics an Hind (106)
slight ses of rule i ity in the N
dians of the will m
gle-handed
But owing eir benefit,
and India i vould gladly Ripon has
o much opp
hat the Vic
lize all high ntments are o shake the
to largely history of A o rebelled ag
his instance i tish power i
or the Nati
to plunder
t which they daring they Ilbert Bill
tened to disc nservative pa
king addition strengthened Opinion (11)
" Ou
fferin's ventu
eroy. Duffe and of Mr. G in foreign c
tics of the c
of view of H
dministratio
about to be stem of adm
nt. As admi
res, and henc
failure too.
premature.
sent be not a
will not fai
e word by f India, the V ght out our fi
d even Parlia
oint of view husbanding o ts, which by e impoverish
ment, which
sts. It is to nds and ulti

Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
Weekly	400
Do.	300
Do.	175
Do.	250
Do.	200
Do.	300
Do.	200
Do.	200
Monthly	500
Weekly	200
Do.	475
Do.	485
Do.	600
Do.	200
Weekly	25
Daily	850
Monthly	394
Do.	500
Do.	415
Daily	1,175
Weekly	500
Do.	50
Monthly	700
Do.	200
Weekly	585
Do.	1,025
Monthly	300
Do.	475
Do.	400
Do.	984
Weekly	1,000
Monthly	300
Do.	659
Quarterly	200
Daily	800
Monthly	1,350
Weekly	125
Do.	810
Monthly	200
Tri-weekly ...	925
Monthly	250
Weekly	200
Monthly	350
Weekly	200
Do.	225
Do.	700
Do.	1,750
Do.	200
Do.	400
Monthly	327
Do.	375
Do.	620
Do.	1,700
Do.	423
Quarterly ...	200
Monthly	200
Weekly	85
Monthly	778
Do.	300
Weekly	500
Weekly	180
Do.	200
Do.	300
Do.	915
Do.	115
Fortnightly ...	150
Weekly	200
Do.	160
Weekly	500
Weekly	327
Weekly	500

he Report under different heads,

, and the number of the News-

o the number of copies issued.

e same as that adopted in the
is that when the long a (आ
un) is, to prevent confusion,
when the short a appears to be vell known Mitra, it is printed

Government of Bombay in

Says that the real causes of danger to British authority in India are the Anglo-Indians themselves.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the 21st Septembe slightest reason to fear th
rule in India will be endan
the Natives or of Native p
of the loyalty of the 30 mil
will make the British powe
of either Russia single-handed or the other Europear do the least harm. But owing to the wish of many to use India for their benefit, the work of cement natives of England and India is retarded. If the removed Natives would gladly sacrifice their lives
British flag. Lord Ripon has succeeded to some ext of discontent, but so much opposition is shown whe
to be carried out that the Viceroy and the Ministr Europeans monopolize all high offices at present. T any valuable appointments are given to Natives. S
It is calculated to shake the loyalty of Natives Government ought to largely employ Native agenc
the country. The history of America shows that it British settlers who rebelled against the British auth threw it. From this instance it can be inferred that undermine the British power in India it will not b
the Native princes or the Native community, but Anglo-Indians wish to plunder India and exercise arb
The encouragement which they have received has elat receive it the more daring they will become. These at the time of the Ilbert Bill controversy. The A Viceroy and threatened to discard his authority. Th conduct by the Conservative party. It is by keeping control and by making additional concessions to Nati
over India will be strengthened.

Remarks on Lord Dufferin's probable career as Viceroy.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 21st Septem
" Our next Viceroy," says
venture to prognosticate Dufferin as Viceroy will be of Lord Lytton and of Mr. Grant Duff. All three most of their time in foreign countries. They posse
the intricate politics of the continent of Europe
From the point of view of Her Majesty's Cabinet mixture of home administration and foreign relation appointments are about to be made it appears th
our composite system of administration generally British Government. As administrators, Lord Lytt proved utter failures, and hence doubts are entertain may not prove a failure too. But to make such a su is given is rather premature. If the popularity whi wherever he was sent be not a mere phantom, we en
the new Viceroy will not fail to prove that it w anticipations. One word by way of suggestion, a de facto Viceroy of India, the Viceroy is the guardian
he will have to fight out our financial battles manfull State for India and even Parliament. To make his from an Indian point of view no question is of gre conservation and husbanding of our financial resource of land assessments, which by the misguided policy brought about the impoverishment of the ryots. Th local self-government, which while it has a stout p storms and tempests. It is to be hoped that the frail by unfriendly winds and ultimately cast on a roc

Excellency's immediate attention and protection. Perhaps the question greatest significance with the Viceroy for the present will be whether it advisable to annex Beluchistan as an advanced post against the nearer approa of Russia to India. In considering it we hope His Lordship will not pass ov what the late Lord Lawrence has written on the subject.

Strongly supports the appointment of Sir James Caird or Sir E. Baring as the successor of Sir James Fergusson in the Governorship of Bombay.

The same newspaper, in an article headed "The Bombay Governorship says:—The time of the retirement of Sir Jame Fergusson being near, the local public is quite ast with whisper and gossip as to his probable successo
while one of the local Native contemporaries ha already undertaken to announce the name of th Governor of Ceylon as our Governor elect. Ther are yet a few months to run, and the announcement, unless it is autho itatively supported, appears somewhat premature, though for aught we kno the guess may turn out to be true. Considering the progress Bombay ha made during the last quarter of a century, and the consequent claims w have upon our rulers to give us as our Governor a gentleman who would hav the independence and moral courage to remove some of the shortcomings of a administration which may hitherto be said to have been mismanaged in som of its departments, it cannot be allowed to be gainsaid for a moment that w now require for our ruler a person of a sympathetic turn of mind, breadth view, and of peculiarly acute and unbiased judgment when questions of a mos delicate and complicated nature are becoming a matter of frequent occurrenc
We do not mean to over-estimate our local necessities, but a study of our revenu administration for the past twenty years as an instance in point will justify ou remarks. How many of our Governors, whether through ignorance or a pe sistent adherence to official opinion, have been probably the unwitting cause the ryot's misery, all the exposure of the said evil notwithstanding? And a not the local authorities yet aware of the ruinous course they have been pu suing? We do not undertake to say either; but persistence in their ow opinions and an equally persistent endeavour on the part at least of some Sta departments to lay matters in varnished colours before the proper authoriti have been on the whole their great misfortune, but we are not called upon no to commit the sin of repetition here. Suffice it to say that English statesm who have served in India have acknowledged the existence of the evil; b that has not been quite enough for our Revenue Department. Peculiarly gift and ingenious as it is, it has now devised another clever method of enhancing t revenue, and that is not for water which Government canals supply, but for t water the ryot draws at his own expense from a well sunk at his own cost. Th is revenue administration with a vengeance, and yet the mere mention of the fa on the part of the Native press in enough to provoke black blood in some quarte
We have already said that this is not the fault of the Government but of the advisers, who ought to have known better. It is for the removal of this e that a gentleman of peculiarly broad views and sympathies is now urgen needed at the head of affairs. Neither colonial nor diplomatic experience w be of use here. The triumphs of diplomacy are great, but those of agricultu comfort and contentment are still greater. Has any of our rulers ever end voured to achieve them? Individual but lukewarm efforts there may have be but no Government of the province within our remembrance has directly put foot on the particular evil and said with a sympathetic heart, "Thou too sh go." The mind of the nation is now directed towards the new appointme and would to God we get one who will unfetter the down-trodden ryot. As the suggestion before the public that we should ask for a particular gentlem to be our future Governor we are decidedly against it. In the first pl the question is whether such proposal will be ever entertained. In the n place, supposing that the Ministry magnanimously entertain and grant it, Ind official climate being uncongenial even to a sympathetic and genial nature, e the gentleman chosen may fail. And our people should not afford to for Æsop's story of king stork in his fables. The experience of Bengal under most choice Civilian Governors is now before us: how individuals in two diffe positions change now no longer requires proof. Some of our contempora have suggested the names of Sir James Caird and Sir Evelyn Baring—names for which we have the highest regard and respect, and would highly approve of the appointment of any one of them. Of course if a choice were accorded to us we would prefer either of the two as the best possible men available. We are not blind to the difficulties of the official position of the Governor of a presidency; very often he has to stand between two fires—public grievances and official pressure. But the reality of the position is too frequently exaggerated, and we rarely come across any instance in which a presidential Government takes its stand in favour of the ryot against its superiors. The palmy days of the Elphinstone and Trevelyan generations are gone by, and our experience as we advance in life is that every member of the officialdom, from the Governor downwards, is only too anxious to please his superior, no matter how embarrassed and harassed the miserable ryot may find himself to be. It is for these reasons that we shall be glad to hail the appointment of one who is neither a Civilian, nor a diplomatist, nor a colonial Governor. Now Bombay wants rest from her revenue vivisectionists. If we owe anything in the shape of some relief in regard to our land assessments, we entirely owe it to Lord Ripon himself. His resolution in the Revenue Department urging the grant of remissions in cases of drought and other agricultural difficulties is one instance of a tendency to recognize the pecuniary condition of our peasantry, and had His Lordship's term of office been extended we have no doubt the land question in the Bombay Presidency would have occupied his attention early. We view the appointment of Lord Dufferin as intended much more to check-mate the policy of Russia in Central Asia than to consolidate any further the internal administration of the country. And in view of the boundary settlement His Lordship will have left very little time on his hands to direct his attention to those questions of home policy, even if he had an inclination to do so. Under the circumstances we want a Governor who will take a personal, not a relative, interest in the welfare of a presidency entrusted to his care. The personal experience of Sir E. Baring or Sir James Caird will not fail to make either a good Governor for the presidency, and under the circumstances we would hail the appointment of either with satisfaction.

Remarks about the selection of a successor to Sir James Fergusson.

In a paragraph headed "The Governorship of Bombay" the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 22nd September says:—As to the merits of the individuals yet named as likely candidates, the one in our opinion most eligible is Sir Evelyn Baring. If he could be spared for us from Egypt it will be a consummation most devoutly to be wished. Bombay could not entrust her concerns to a better man. As late co-adjutor of Lord Ripon, Sir Evelyn stands second only to the Viceroy in popular estimation and regard. The Native community of Western India will to a man greet Sir Evelyn's appointment as the greatest favour of Mr. Gladstone's Government. In that appointment we shall have a guarantee that the spirit of Lord Ripon's reforms will be fully maintained in this part of the country at least. Sir Evelyn has endeared himsel to our people by many silent acts of kindness, and his appointment will be received with the utmost confidence. The next person named is Sir Arthur Hamilton Gordon, Governor of Ceylon. He is credited with possessing considerable administrative experience in various colonies, and he showed much promptness and foresight on the late crash of the Oriental Bank. But any experience gained in such small colonies as the Bermudas or Ceylon car scarcely be adequate preparation for the proper direction of the vast commercial, political and social interests involved in the Government of Bombay Another name mentioned is Sir James Caird. We would hail Sir James's nomination with unfeigned pleasure. The liberality shown by Sir James a President of the Famine Commission is a sufficient assurance that in his hand our interests will be safe. His varied and intimate acquaintance with the lanc question will render him a valuable Governor to this presidency. He is beside free from any official prejudices, and will come fresh from the free and unbiassed atmosphere of England. There is a fourth person named, Sir James Caird' colleague on the English Land Commission, but he is little known here. Of al the persons named the one who will best meet the desires of the people is it needs scarcely to be said, Sir Evelyn Baring, and we trust the Governmen of Mr. Gladstone will spare him for the people of this presidency. [T Mitrā (94) of the 25th September welcomes the approaching retiremen James Fergusson from the Governorship of Bombay, and says that his d will not cause sorrow to the people. It expresses approval of Sir Gordon's appointment as Governor of Bombay.]

Disapproves of the complaint made by Sir Richard Garth against the Government of India in his recent minute on the Bengal Tenancy Bill.

The Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 23rd September says:—Sir Garth has made himself unpopular with the ment and the Native public by his oppositio Ilbert Bill and the punishment awarded to th of the Bengali newspaper. He has added unpopularity by his recent minute on the Tenancy Bill. He is altogether opposed Tenancy Bill. If he had been content with only expressing his diss views in his minute, his action would not have been considered obj able. But as he has taken an opportunity to make adverse comme the Viceroy his conduct is open to criticism. The Judges of the Court at Calcutta have proved an obstacle in the way of Lord Ripon a measures. Sir Richard Garth does not hesitate to state that the w courtesy shown by Government towards the Judges of the Calcutta High is owing to the fact that their opinions were opposed to those of Gover These sentiments are not only objectionable but dangerous. Sir Richard has not shown that gravity, high sense and liberality as the Chief Jus the highest tribunal in the country ought to show. Sir Richard a brother Judges gave cause for the adverse comments made by the Secret the Government of India and by Lord Hartington. Government have a r ask for the opinion of the High Court Judges and to criticise them necessary, and it entirely rests with them to attach importance to them Richard Garth's attack on Lord Ripon will not in the least lower him estimation of the Indian public. The Native public know full well the r and motives of the attacks made on His Lordship and the weight to be at to them. [The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the same date says:—We ar anxious for the honour and position of the Judges of the High Co Calcutta and wish that their opinions should always receive due deration. But there is no evidence to show that the necessary att is not paid to their opinions. The complaint made by Sir Richard in his minute that the views expressed by him and his brother Judge not been treated with respect by Government is untimely. The Su Government are at liberty to ask for the opinion of any officer, but are not bound to act in accordance with it. The Judges no doubt exp their opinions honestly, but are they on that account to be accepted as co If Sir Richard had well weighed in his mind the responsibility attach Government in the enactment of legislative measures he would not have plained against Government. When he is very anxious for the preserva the position of the High Court Judges, he does not appear to hav slightest anxiety for that of the Supreme Government. We must say the opinions given by the Calcutta High Court Judges in the matter Ilbert and Bengal Rent Bills have not in the least given satisfaction Native public and impartial Europeans. The Dátardun (93) of the 25th tember expresses disapproval of the attack made by Sir Richard Garth o Ripon in his minute on the Bengal Tenancy Bill.]

Takes exception to certain observations in the Government resolution on the revision settlements in Ahmednagar.

In an article headed "Revision Settlements in Ahmednagar," th Prakásh (10) of the 22nd September says:— outset we cannot help expressing our regret t the papers on which the resolution is based a published. The letters from the Commissioner, the Superintendent of Revenue Survey and ment in Poona and Násik, the Collector of A nagar, and the Survey and Settlement Commissioner which are commen in the present resolution have not been published by Government along the resolution, and in their absence it is impossible to discuss the res with any precision or minuteness. Without the letters it is difficu far the results and comments embodied in the resolution are resolution exhorts writers on land revenue settlements "to avail the statistics accessible in the registration offices." May we ask to publish the statistics and all other similar information in a for sible than the books of the registration offices? Among the r Lord Ripon's Government, which have unhappily remained a dea which directed the fullest publicity to be given to official docun James Fergusson's Government are really desirous that writers

tions as assessment and settlement should follow the advice con resolution, they cannot do better than bring into force the reso
Viceroy and put all official information within the reach of ev
As arguments for the position that the ryots have improved in condition two facts are cited, namely, the employment of capital i tion and the increase in the number of children attending school.
this roseate view the resolution fails to take note of other circums would detract from the force of the conclusion. The facts stated tion may be quite correct, and yet the conclusion may not follow i of its overlooking some considerations which greatly affect the question. The circumstances of which the resolution takes no ac absence of any other industry and the growth of population. It i ledged fact that one of the causes of the indebtedness of our ryots of mechanical industries. India has been from the first an agricul What little of mechanical and other industries there was has totally destroyed by the growth of English imports and Indian goods, the extension of railways, and other like accompaniment civilization. However beneficial in other respects these advanc tion, they have resulted in throwing the whole population on increasing the number of those who at first lived by agriculture.
means of living are closed up people must perforce work on land resource, whether with or without profit. If the ryot has no mea the land the sáwkár is ready to supply him with the means on th the land. The result of such an increase in the number of cultiva an increase in the area of cultivation. But such compulsory scarcely be counted as a measure of prosperity. The second cir ferred to above, viz., the growth of population, must have had a si increasing the area of cultivation as a matter of necessity, and result of prosperity or the lightness of the revenue demand.
siderations apply to the apparent increase in the value of land a of cultivators. The figures in sale-deeds and mortgage-deeds are worthy evidence of a real rise in the value of land. Further, i increase, it may be due to the circumstances alluded to above as we petition of capital in the hands of sáwkárs. The outlay on irr forth may possibly have been all effected at the expense of the s resolution mentions the indebtedness of the ryots, but somewh fact of the increased alienation of land made out by Colonel Laug is no increase moreover in agricultural stock,—an increase which expected if the personal means of the ryots had improved. Mr. S says that transfers of land have been accelerated by the Deccan Agr Government do not admit the correctness of this assertion, and in the necessary papers we are not prepared to say who is right.
remember that the Commissioner is on the spot and comes into pe with the people, and that revenue officers are usually incline favourable to Government as possible, we think Mr. Stewart mu from correct. In a former article we ourselves stated the same occurred in the Sátára District, and we shall not be surprised to s occurred in all the districts where the Deccan Agriculturist Act is If therefore, as the Commissioner says, lands have passed out of th actual cultivators, and if the condition of the ryots has not in difficult to conclude that the ryots are in a state of prosperity results of the last settlement have been altogether happy. In the Government claim to have been very magnanimous. Although condition of agriculturists has, in their opinion, improved, communi been multiplied, markets made accessible, and the average price high, Government have been sparing in their demand. The t in the assessment of the occupied area on revision is stated to cent., over three-eighths of the increase being in the assessment of which hitherto paid only the dry-crop rate. The average dry-crop raised from Annas 6-3 to Annas 6-6 per acre, and the average a the occupied area from Annas 7 to Annas 7-6. The assessment of p been reduced. We are not prepared to say just yet how far revision are suitable to the capabilities of the land assessed, but we have not much faith in the calculation of averages. There story in which a giant measured the water in a stream as on an av deep, and a dwarf acting on that calculation was drowned. T happen to some of the lands in new settlement. In the absence of information, however, we must defer our remarks as to the proba

the survey on individual holdings. The principles of assessment slightly modified. There has been a fresh arrangement and cla soils, and the rates have been accordingly altered. Great hardship have been caused to individual holders by these alterations. As re ted land "the rule that land irrigable from old wells should be a the maximum dry-crop rate, and that no extra rate should be impo irrigable from wells constructed during the currency of the origin has been observed, with the result that the average assessment has been reduced from Rs. 2-9-9 to Rs. 1-2-0 per acre." May principle be applied to settlements in Gujarát? It will save all the subsoil water and water-bearing capacity and so forth. On t settlements must be declared to be satisfactory. Having regard to indebtedness of the ryots we wish no enhancements had been mad average increase is not much. How far they will justify the expecta of them by Government will be proved by time. But with th before us we must admit this that whether or no Government ar
the credit for liberality which they claim, and although the pictur is somewhat highly coloured, the actual assessments are levied regard to the interests of agriculture and of the actual occupant
We trust that in the end the ryots will find their burdens so a enable them to earn the due reward of their labour.

Takes exception to the remarks about the prosperity of the ryots contained in a recent resolution of the Bombay Government relating to the revision of land settlements in the Ahmednagar District.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 21st September, in an article he Assessments in Ahmednagar," gives ext recent resolution of the Bombay Govern revision of land settlements in the Ahme trict, and says:—The above extract, to reads like an advocate's argument than t independent view of a judge. Hard fac over without due consideration, while fro inferences are drawn which make the case for Government plaus but not strong. If it is true that in the Ahmednagar Táluka 78·8 the land belongs to persons other than the original owners, what ot is wanted to show that a rapid transfer of land is taking place, a original owners of the land have been reduced from the position o that of labourers on their own farms? We take our stand on Colone statement which has not been disputed. We put out of sight the
Mr. Stewart, and even then the case for the Government utterly Government in their resolution do not at all try to meet the fact cent. of that land has gone away from the original owners. They show that an improvement in the means of many persons has taken is shirking the real question. Even though the alleged improve condition of many persons has taken place, surely no improvemen place in the condition of the ryot. Arguments founded on the pri not show anything. It is a notorious fact that in many cases the r tion that actually passes for sales or mortgages of lands is fa mentioned in the deeds of sale or mortgage, and an inference d amounts named in those deeds must necessarily be faulty. A of mortgages the creditor always tries to burden the security to a takes redemption entirely out of the hands of the mortgagors and mortgage into a sale. Many of these deeds, though mortgages in na sale deeds either in esse or in posse, and must be counted as such w as to the condition of the people who pass them are sought to b is said that the prices of lands show that agriculture is viewed occupation. No doubt it is so viewed in the absence of other c choose from. It is better to have some occupation, even though than to be without any. No conclusion can be drawn from such the country is not in a healthy, economic condition. There be absence of any other occupation people are perforce thrown upon la necessarily spend something upon it even though there be faint hope any proportionate advantage. There is no ground for saying money is invested in land agriculture is a profitable occupati Colonel Laughton and Mr. Stewart say be true, the Deccan Agr stands condemned, and the case is not improved by sophistic drawn from plausible facts. We wish Government will try to without any bias in favour of a pet hobby. Arguments on paper ca real circumstances of our ryots, and however flourishing they mig in resolutions it cannot be denied that they are getting poorer One must reason from particulars to generals in social problems. enough of à priori arguments; and the sooner they are discarded ment policy the better for both the rulers and the ruled.

Takes exception to many remarks about light assessment and the taxing of subsoil water contained in the resolution of Government on the revenue survey of the Párner Táluka in the Ahmednagar District.

In an article headed "Revenue Survey of the Párner Táluka Patrika (15) of the 21st September say ernment resolution on the revenue s Párner Táluka, like that on the survey Mahál, is for the greater part addressed cizing public. The recognition thus public as a body which deserves to be highly commendable. The resolution aims at proving that Government assess is generally light. But we are afraid that the facts adduced in i out the conclusion, whilst the circumstance that the original hol the actual cultivators, in Párner, have in a great many cases been the position of owners to that of tenants on sufferance or of hi possibly points to quite a different tale. The increased area of c think, only shows the increasing pressure of the population on l loss of other employments and the increase in the number of mo which necessitates the raising of increased quantities of food. sinking of Rs. 1,17,000 in the construction of wells only shows ings have got into the hands of the creditor, who no doubt ha cheap bargain still finds it worth his while to invest capital in land lightness which the circumstances of the lands selling at twenty-o assessment and of their yielding rent four times as much as the demand show is a very slight one. These at best only prove th ment does not absorb the whole produce left after meeting th cultivation, including therein the cost of maintaining the cultiv live stock. This is not by any means speaking very highly of th the assessment. On the other hand to estimate accurately its a one must take into consideration the time of the year when it well as the often-recurring bad seasons which reduce considerab of produce left to the occupant, and the exceptionally good ones ernment cash demand absorbs a greater proportion of the produ than in ordinary seasons. When these circumstances are taken i tion, we are afraid it will be difficult to prove that the assessm are at all light. Certainly they will be found higher on the 6 per cent. of the gross produce. The resolution passes lightly tion of well assessment which was so fully treated of in the reso Jhálod survey. But it gives the assurance that the principle of water has been adhered to in the case of the Párner Táluka. The e subsoil water seems here to have been inferred from the lowness of p the regularity of the rains. These, we believe, are not sufficient data t existence of water from. The Bombay Gazette, which has been wr effect on this question of taxing subsoil water, has again in its issue of last pointed out the injustice of the principle. The arguments v journal advances appear to be unanswerable. We hope the Govern reconsider the question carefully and abandon finally the principle w mature consideration it is said to have once given up as inexpe impracticable to work out.

Strongly disapproves of the revival of the Vernacular Press Act as suggested by the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times.

In alluding to the suggestion made by the Calcutta correspon London Times respecting the revival of the Press Act, the Indian Spectator (1) of September says :—We fail to see anything tion" proper in the worst Native paper. prepared to deny severity, or, as the Ti spondent calls it, "scurrility" of tone in little sheet now and then. But those who go upon internal eviden that the writer does not mean, nor does he do as a matter of fact, ar his silly vapouring. The paper has no voice, and every decent Nat ignores its very existence, except when it is dealing with facts. It us that this neglect by the public is a far more effectual punishmen flourishing of a decree of the executive—with this great advantage th now such a paper struggles and dies unregretted its extinction by excite powerful sympathy for the offender. Few readers would hav name of the Dacca Prakásh before the Times' correspondent pushed minence. But even in the case of that paper let the English reade under what circumstances the matter complained of was published. not at all be surprised if recent cases of the ill-treatment of Native v voked even rabid criticism. No language can be too strong in denou outrages and the way in which offenders escape punishment. He tempted to repeat again what we have said on every suitable occasic Anglo-Indian press is bound to set us a better example. The Nati India will be more or less what Anglo-Indian writers will make it. [T Samáchár (88) of the 24th September expresses approval of the de by the Calcutta Statesman and the views expressed by Mr. Gladstone delivered by him at Edinburgh on 1st September in favour of the press of India, and says that Mr. Gladstone's words are very valuable preserving in letters of gold by the Native population. The Dátar the 25th September also acknowledges with many thanks the just given by Mr. Gladstone to the Native press.]

Strongly condemns the attempt of the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times to induce the authorities to revive the Gagging Act.

In a paragraph headed "The Native Press," the Indu Prakásh 22nd September says :—The Calcutta corre the London Times who earned such an unen riety during the Ilbert Bill controversy is ag to relieve his obscurity by crying against press. Our readers may remember how he our people at that time in different unscrup In his present attack against our press he is equally disingenuous and charges the press with disloyalty by selecting a few indiscreet remark obscure vernacular papers and holding them out as characteristic of Native press. It is superfluous to say that the charge is entirely scarcely needs contradiction. Government have in a manner testifie fidence in the press by repealing the Gagging Act, and though the o the press are striving to poison the ears of Lord Dufferin, there is reason to fear that a retrograde policy will find favour with a liber The Gagging Act was the most disreputable product of a disreputal it had been discredited even during the regime which created it. that it should be revived implies the height of absurdity and politica if nothing worse. There is a general agreement of feeling that the Native papers such as enjoy any estimable circulation are condu coming sobriety and good sense, and even our Anglo-Indian bre are sanguine, bear witness to this. The Times of India and the have already signified their approval of the general tone of the and we have no doubt the rest of the Anglo-Indian papers in the c perhaps the most determined foes of Native interests, will speak strain. There may be a few Native papers here and there whi morbid tastes and wild fancies, but such certainly are not man obscure that their circulation scarcely exceeds their local precin tempt of the Calcutta correspondent to throw dirt on the Native pr upon himself. If he has done any good to any one it is to those o which he has selected for his animadversions. By his publication o in the London Times he has secured to the papers a circulation wh not have expected to get in their wildest dreams. Words which w been read outside the district in which they were printed will no the world over. If the writers of those words were guilty of an in publisher is thrice guilty, and if any persons require to be gagged it sons as the Calcutta correspondent of the Times. By trying to breach between the rulers and the ruled he is guilty of the greatest it is he who of all persons stands in need of correction.

Strongly condemns the revival of the Vernacular Press Act and the endeavours of some Europeans to cry down the Native community.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 21st September says:—Is a really wanted? Or is the empire on conflagration that the suspension of a s the press should immediately be called fo peace in the whole country; the Nativ loyal to the back-bone; the north-west fr secure from the imaginary delusion of vasion; the educated section of the Natives is true to their salt. is it that calls for such a powerful drag upon the Native press, whic to enjoy free liberty of speech? We hope the proposal of the Ca spondent of the London Times is not the outcome of a feverish m been long since affected by the mad agitation against the Ilbert may be a few Native papers using scurrilous language, but who are It is the persistent efforts of a portion of the Anglo-Indian press Native community that is at the root of all this evil. Let the dra upon them, and the effusions of a few Native papers will there a These writings, we may assure the correspondent, are but the resu tinuous endeavour of some Europeans in the country to cry do community at large.

Disapproves of the proposal of the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times to revive the defunct Vernacular Press Act.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 22nd September alludes to t made by the Calcutta correspondent o Times regarding the revival of the Ver Act, and observes that the ill-feeling whi by the Ilbert Bill between Natives and not only not ceased, but has actually intense. Such a state of things is mo and is really detrimental to the true interests of all concerned. extracts from the vernacular press furnished by the Calcutta cor the London Times are undoubtedly reckless in their tone, but it i condemn the entire body of the men who conduct the vernacular sin of some of its members. The strong remarks which appear in Bengal newspapers are due to the unsatisfactory manner in wh meted out when Natives come in conflict with Europeans. The o the Bengali that the love of justice and fair play which character men in the early days of British rule had more to do with the rise Empire in India than their statesmanship is perfectly correct. Th who showed their moral superiority at a time when perfect anarchy India are seldom to be met with now-a-days. As between Natives justice is done, but when one of them comes in conflict with Euro not the slightest chance of obtaining justice. This is undoubtedl ence of the present times. It is all very well for Englishmen to t may ill-treat Natives in any way they like because they are the conquerors, it is the duty of the statesmen at the head of affairs to disabuse the minds their countrymen of that idea. If they do not take measures to counteract tendency the result will be disastrous. The Anglo-Indian newspapers sh deeply consider how the constant injustice which is being done to Natives w they come in conflict with Europeans is damaging to the British rule. To tr gag the Native press instead of removing the causes of the discontent am Natives is a most absurd remedy. The gagging of the Native press will make Natives more contented with British rule. It is very desirable that statesmen at the head of affairs should know what is thought by Natives British administration. In conclusion, the Dnyán Prakásh advises the wri in the vernacular press not to indulge in reckless and unrestrained writing.

Gives reasons for not reviving the defunct Vernacular Press Act.

In an article headed "The fresh outcry against the Vernacular Press India," the Bombay Chronicle (78) of the 21st S tember says :—It is a matter for congratulation t the fresh outcry which is attempted to be set against the vernacular press finds no echo or supp from the intelligent and well-informed class of Anglo-Indian journalists. representatives of the British power in England and India could never com a greater or more serious mistake than to disregard the voice of such mem of the Anglo-Indian press on questions affecting the treatment of the sub races by the foreign rulers, especially when that voice is deliberately raised the strength of positive facts and mature deliberation against the unreason coercion of the people. The unshackled freedom of the Native press, espec the vernacular portion of it, forms to all intents and purposes the greatest s guard of the social tranquillity and public order, as well as the well-bein the community and the convenience of Government. That portion of the p generally speaking, has been found to make becoming use of the liberty ceded by Government, to whom it has by its behaviour become the true in and measure of the popular wants and wishes. If there are black-sheep in ranks, they are too insignificant and scanty to form the cause of any ser concern to Government or its well-wishers. This contemptible portion of press can only derive importance from being noticed by either the leading Na or the members of the better portion of the European community. Hence regret of the action of the Calcutta correspondent of the Times in giving u importance to an insignificant portion of the Native press and making ignorant and ignoble career the groundwork of creating an alarm amo Englishmen at home against the whole of the vernacular and Anglo-verna press of India. Our regret is the greater when we find that the respon conductor of the Times has gone without sufficient warrant to the lengt supporting what in effect amounts to proposals for reviving the Pr gagging Act of the Government of Lord Lytton. The major portion of Native press is as loyal in spirit and deferential in tone towards the author as could be wished. The intelligence, moderation and deference to constituted authority in the country with which it is generally condu render the vernacular press an important guide to the councils of the S and a powerful support to its general policy. It is the firm belief o Natives that it would be injurious to the more vital concerns of both State and the people to impair the present power and utility of the Na press by any ill-advised resort to measures for curtailing its freedo action. The British authorities may depend upon it that it is the unche influence of the Native press that powerfully serves to render India in present day such a truly loyal and peaceful, not to say valuable, integral of the British Empire. The best thing the British rulers of the country c do would be to give the people of India—the educated and intelligent cl especially—fresh reassurances of their determination to adhere to the pre wise and liberal policy of the Government in respect of the liberty of the in the country. We say all this deliberately, but without at all disgui our unqualified hatred of such of the conductors of the Native press as see notoriety by indulgence in the abuse of Government or in misrepresenta of its motives and of the conduct of its trusted officers and servants. We not help believing that the best way to let such journalists, European, meet with the fate which they deserve would be unheeded. When they become dangerous enough to be d made amenable to the ordinary laws of the country, let these They are, we believe, quite powerful and sufficient to protect and Government from the undue aspersions of public writers, properly and effectually appealed to in the interest of both i of journalistic improprieties. To think of reviving the Gagg both unnecessary and inexpedient; and it is to be hoped English public will not listen to any wild proposals on the su

Goftár* (115) and the Yajdán Parast (128) of the same date a suggestion made in the Times for the revival of the Ver
The Rást says that the entire Native press is not responsible ible writings of certain wretched Native papers published in views expressed by some of the Bengali Native papers the v Native press in India. It also doubts the faithfulness of the extracts from the Native papers published by the Times.]

Does not approve of the proposed addition to the judicial stuff of the Calcutta High Court.

The Bombay Chronicle (78) of the 21st September says manner in which the Bombay Gazett
of the cry for more Judges for the C is very creditable to that influen contemporary goes fully into the m
and proves conclusively that no cas
to have been made out by the clamour for more Judges.
advanced against the application made to the authorities o have the support of all thoughtful people in the country. It expedient nor fair to grant the application. It is to be hoped the tax-payers and the vital interests of the people claiming allotment of public funds the Viceroy in Council will set his memorial asking for more Judges in a court where any legiti them does not exist.

Condemns the system by which the costs of litigants seeking justice in the local High Court are made so heavy.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 21st September says :—V temporary of the Bombay Gazette
tion to the obsolete and old-fashion that obtains in Bombay or the ori High Court. We do not see wh should be allowed to prevail in one justice is being administered in the of quite a different machinery. It was all very well in the
it was a necessity, but now it is nothing more than an anoma this direction is, we think, a matter well worthy of considera machinery is, to say the least, very cumbrous and costly, advantage to introduce in its place the simple machinery
Those who have been so unfortunate as to have gone through cost how puzzling it is. Though Bombay is comparativel mofussil, yet we do not think that circumstance justifies which a Bombay litigant is made to bear. The work that is outside is done here by more than two.

Gives reasons why vakils should be allowed to practise on the original side of the High Court.

A correspondent of the same newspaper says :—The
by its article anent the High Co itself to the gratitude of the tax-India. The reform advocated b eminently desirable, and it is a p
have been so long apathetic con
all the more necessary therefore that our readers as well of Native public opinion should vigorously agitate the questi rest till the reform is carried out. The Gazette has very the benefits that will accrue from the economy effected by th original side of the High Court. The abolition of the orig substitution in its stead of a District Court will be a great b they will be able to engage the services of a pleader, who is legal adviser than his brother of the long robe. At present only ba allowed to practise on the original side of the High Court, and a cannot be engaged except through a solicitor the parties are put to pense. The Stamp and Court Fees Acts have made litigation cost and when suitors have to buy legal advice at the rate of Rs. 150 per case is really pitiable. If the original side cannot be altogether ab High Court pleaders should be at least allowed to practise in the c cising original jurisdiction. If in order to enable an accused pers the benefit of cheap legal advice Mukhtyárs are allowed to practise courts, it is but reasonable to demand that the same principle be e the original side of the High Court in civil and criminal matters i vakils who are infinitely superior to those legal quacks, the Mukhtyár will object to a High Court pleader who is acting as Judge of the H to preside on the original side. But as soon as he descends from th is unfit to practise in the very court over which under other circum could preside. If a High Court pleader is fit to be Judge of the H are his brother pleaders unfit to practise on the original side? Th same anomaly in the Court of Small Causes. A High Court pleader that court, but his late professional brethren cannot plead in his co they can do so in a court superior to his. These restrictions on the High Court pleader can be explained only by supposing either that is regarded as inferior in point of ability to the bar or that they a to benefit barristers and solicitors at the expense of suitors and pleaders. The public therefore should agitate for the thorough ove the High Court, or, if this concession cannot be obtained, at least for t of obstacles which are thrown in the way of High Court pleaders i prevent them from what is regarded in some quarters as poaching o serves of solicitors and barristers.

Disapproves of the appropriation of the maidán by the Gymkhana people.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 22nd September says:—Gymkh seem intent upon appropriating all the themselves. It is monstrous injustice to public of Bombay that nearly the whole of nade should be enjoyed by a handful of E
the exclusion of Natives. The Government of Sir James Fergusson time firm against the demands of the Gymkhana, but in a moment o interest triumphed over justice and fair play, and since then the enc have been more and more incessant. The exclusive occupation of t by the polo-players for two evenings in a week is hardship enou Native cricketers, but the demand for increasing the number of such and for occupying the grounds opposite the Marine Lines is quite pr and we trust Government will be strong enough to resist any such d

Requests Government to reconsider their decision on the subject of the non-success of the honorary surgeons at the Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital.

The same newspaper says:—The resolution of Government to honorary surgeonships and to appoint a p at the Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital is op objections: first, it casts an unmerited s individuals who did the honorary service on the system of securing to the public th
such gratuitous work; and secondly, it t
the Bombay Municipality a new burden to Rs. 700 a month, the proposed salary of the paid surgeon. As first point, the honorary surgeons concerned have addressed letters t cipality protesting against the treatment meted out to them. As to itself, we think it has not received as fair a trial as it deserved.
resolution of Government will be a bar to its trial at any future t
the interest of the public we think Government should reconsider th Further, if any paid surgeon is to be appointed we fail to see why on such a high salary as Rs. 500 to 700 should be necessary. A surgeon with Rs. 100 to 200 would be quite as efficient for the work pital as any European with Rs. 500 to 700, and we hope the munic not allow itself to be saddled with any needless burden.

Points out the necessity of removing the Arsenal in the Fort to a distant and lonely place.

The Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 26th September, in referring to the recent fire in the Arsenal, points out the great fear o locating it in a densely populated part of the town, and says that it was by God's grace alone that the Fort was saved from destruction by the explosion o gunpowder. It should be removed to a distant and lonely quarter. The present site is not fitted for storing gunpowder in times of peace as well as war. A committee of military men ought now to be appointed to determine the place of its location. When Government have adopted the necessary precautions for the storage of kerosine oil and gunpowder for general use, they should not lose time in making suitable arrangements for storing their gunpowder in the interests of the public safety. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (84) of the 24th September expresses similar sentiments.]

Disapproves of the suggestion made by the Times of India for the appointment of Mr. K. N. Kábráji to the shrievalty of Bombay for the next year and suggests the appointment of a Mahomedan gentleman to it.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 27th September expresses disapproval of the suggestion made by the Times of India for the appointment of Mr. K. N. Kábráji to the shrievalty of Bombay for the next year, says that it is playing a jest to compare him with the late Bábu Kristodás Pál and that it would be a matter for regret to appoint him to the shrievalty, for he only gets the small salary of Rs. 140 per month as editor of the Rást Goftár newspaper, and remarks that the Native public will form a very low opinion of the honour if it is conferred on him. The Mahomedan community is first entitled to claim this honour for one of its members. Sir James Fergusson should not deprive it of that privilege at the close of his career. If unfortunately this right is ignored and a Pársi gentleman be appointed Sheriff, the selection should fall on one of the following gentlemen, viz., Messrs. Dádábhái Navroji, Navroji Fardunji, and Kharshedji Nasarvánji Cámáji. The nomination of one of these gentlemen to the shrievalty will really prove popular. [The Satyă Mitră (117) of the 21st September advocates the claims of the Mahomedan community to the shrievalty, and says that it should not be given to unworthy persons through private entreaties and influence.]

Complains of the oppression practised by Government officials in forcing cartmen and their carts and labourers into their service.

The Khándesh Vaibhav (40) of the 19th September bitterly complains o the oppression practised by officers in the Public Works and Revenue Departments in forcing cartmen and their carts and labourers into their service against the wishes of the latter. Frequently the cartmen and labourers are not paid adequate remuneration, which is withheld from them on some paltry excuse. If they appeal to the local Mámlatdárs these officials take no notice of their complaints. Even the Assistant Collectors, when they are appealed to, do not take sufficient interest. The Vaibhav trusts that Government will soon take action in the matter and put down the above reprehensible practice.

Comments in connection with the resignation tendered by Mr. Kalyánráyji Hakumatráyji Desái, a member of the district local fund committee at Broach.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 26th September, in referring to the resignation tendered by Mr. Kalyánráyji Hakumatráyj Desái on account of the Assistant Collector of Broach having taken his seat on a raised platform by the side of the president at a meeting of the district local fund committee held at Broach on the 16th September, says:—Those who are opposed to the scheme of local self-government try to run it down by making much of a trivial matter, but experience has not shown any signs of failure of the scheme. Though we have respect for the feelings of Mr. Kalyánráyji, his resignation of office as a member of the committee is not wise. But why should such trivial events be looked upon as showing the failure of the noble scheme of self-government? If the Collector-presidents and nominated commissioners be as favourably inclined towards the scheme as Lord Ripon is, the district boards would not only work with harmony but with success. The Native press will always come forward to despise the conduct of the Native commissioners who will obstruct the independent working of municipal boards through evil motives. The Collector-presidents ought not to discard the opinions of independent Native commissioners, but should display an a specting their views and position. The event that has recentl Broach shows that Native commissioners who have to sacrific interests and to work without any gain do not like to put up wit insult, and they should therefore be duly respected. [The Broach of the 25th September expresses regret at the occurrence, and raised seat should have been done away with if any commis insult at it.]

Requests Government to reimburse Mr. Bápuji the costs incurred by him in defending himself against the false charges brought by the Bombay police through reckless negligence.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 22nd September, in a paragrapl Bombay Police," says:—The result of t cutions against Mr. Collett and Mr. Bá throws a somewhat dark light on the cl Bombay police. The disclosures in b betray no uncommon amount of laxit and thoughtless action, and an anxiety disrepute the names of persons who migl ed the gods of the police force. Both prosecutions were levelled lic officers of long standing and of the most unsullied character trivial basis, the evidence in Mr. Bápuji's case being not even e tain a primâ facie charge. That officers of the experience of Sir and Mr. Brewin should have been so far misled as to impugn th two trusted servants of Government on such glaringly inadequ argues an amount of thoughtlessness and hasty action which the personal safety of any citizen at any time. It was somewh the objects of police displeasure were in the present instance means and able to procure the best legal assistance. Without cross examination of Mr. Inverarity it is doubtful how the ca terminated. As it is, they show what questionable means the pol to in tracking supposed crime, and how instead of preventing it t add to it. The remarks of Mr. Justice Hart in Mr. Collett's case be a warning to the police in their future proceedings, and Sir Fr his staff will, we hope, think better in future before they dra innocent Bápuji, and destroy his reputation and his savings of a Mr. Collett's case the enquiry was of his own seeking; in Mr. was absolutely no justification. The high character of Mr. Báp dence in his honesty of Mr. Hart and Mr. Spencer, their refusa proceedings, and the utterly worthless character of his accuser warnings to the police not to proceed too precipitately. But long course for winning cheap laurels all warnings were lost upon the sanction of Government, which is meant to be a protection servants against undue harassment, was obtained in a very hast unfair way, and Mr. Bápuji was put upon a trial which ought taken place. It has not only most conclusively proved his inn shown how on occasions the most experienced officers are ca prepossessions. As Mr. Inverarity observed, it was eminently the police ought not to have proceeded, the Government oug given their sanction, and the magistrate ought not to have issue the parties to the proceeding have erred, and Mr. Inverarity was asking that Mr. Bápuji's costs should be paid to him by Govern the least reparation which Government can do to Mr. Bápuji name and the annoyance which have been so wantonly caused Vártáhar (70) of the 21st September expresses somewhat similar

Says that Government should issue a resolution sanctioning the payment of all costs incurred by Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth, censuring Mr. Brewin and ordering the prosecution of the sweetmeat-seller Babuti Sital and certain other witnesses for perjury.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 22nd September says th ought to take strong notice of Mr. Báp is the duty of Sir Frank Souter to pros jamádár and sepoy who have perju and the sweetmeat-seller Babuti Sital information to the police and thereby As long as he does not do so the public perfect confidence in the police. It is able that men of ill repute should be f in the detective branch of the police entire confidence be put in their actions. Mr. Brewin should not escape scot-free. He should be warned or censured. If Government were to issue a resolution to the effect that they have perfect confidence in Mr. Bápuji, that all his costs would be paid from the Government treasury, that Mr. Brewin's conduct is liable to censure, and that permission for the prosecution of Babuti Sital and certain other witnesses for perjury should be procured from the Chief Presidency Magistrate, their action would give satisfaction to the public and ample amends would be made for the mistake committed by Sir James Fergusson in sanctioning the prosecution. It is to be hoped that the Government of Sir James Fergusson will lose no time in the discharge of their duty in this matter.

Comments on the result of the cases of bribery against Inspector Collett and Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth.

The Bombay Chronicle (78) of the 21st September says:—The trials of Inspector Collett and of Mr. Bápuji Dinánáthji have ended in the acquittal of both the accused, causing a deep stir in the community. Both were accused of the offence of receiving bribes, and both were prosecuted vigorously and at leisure by the police with all the assistance of State support. But in both cases the prosecutions utterly collapsed. The result is the dismay and misgivings to the general public, who find themselves exposed to such machinations as the cases disclosed to be at work for entrapping and accusing any person who may be foolish or unfortunate enough to incur the displeasure or hatred of the authors of them. The particulars revealed at both the trials show that with all our boast as to the enjoyment of protection from evil-doers none is really safe from the most dangerous traps of designing evil-doers laid for ruining the simple and the unwary. Government and the worthy Commissioner of Police would do nothing amiss to read and re-read very carefully the proceedings in the High Court and the Police Court and to reflect earnestly whether they should not take steps to mend the state of affairs which the said proceedings have disclosed. The public will certainly look to them for some action being taken in good time to prevent a repetition of such occurrences as they have recently seen to the disgust of every good citizen. The claims of the poor and the helpless, unable to spend money for their defence in the manner of Messrs. Collett and Bápuji, render such action on the part of the Government and the Commissioner imperative. The duty of the Government, the reputation of the Commissioner, and the safety of the public alike suggest the necessity of prompt action being taken by the proper authorities to reform or mend the sorry state of affairs we have been recently witnessing. [The Gujaráti (99), the Kaiser-i-Hind (106) and the Yajdán Parast (128) of the same date express somewhat similar sentiments. The Gujaráti disapproves of the conduct of the police and asks if they are kept for the protection or destruction of the people and their reputation? The public prosecutor is also to blame in Mr. Bápuji's case. Did he not know that it was an intrigue, and why did he not withdraw the case? It is to be hoped that Government will enquire minutely into this case. The Kaiser-i-Hind says that the public prosecutor and Mr. Brewin deserve blame in vigorously prosecuting Mr. Bápuji's case. The former ought not to have given his opinion in haste. If he had acted with patience and impartiality, such an unworthy and unfounded bubble-like case would not have been prolonged and Government would not have sanctioned its prosecution. It is opposed to the functions of the police that they should lay traps for innocent men. Government ought to take some measures for suppressing such arbitrary and illegal conduct on the part of the police. Government ought to pay Mr. Bápuji his costs. In the case of the prosecution of Mr. Brewin and other police officers by certain Borah shopkeepers of this city, decided some months ago, Government paid all the costs of the police. The Yajdán Parast says that the trap laid by the police for Mr. Bápuji shows the necessity of greatly preventing them from throwing temptations in the way of others and of severely punishing those who thereby injure public morality and encourage crime. The Commissioner of Police ought to speedily attend to this matter. The conduct of Mr. Brewin and his associates in the case richly deserves punishment. The Commissioner ought at least to severely reprimand and warn the latter. Government ought to pay Mr. Bápuji and Inspector Collett their costs.]

Some suggestions to the Bombay police for the prosecution of Government servants who take bribes.

Inspector Collett and Mr. Bapuji is no
the police who prosecuted them. It is regret that the police should have so b
these important cases that they have er
Does the acquittal show that these cases got up by the police and that the witnesses in them perjured then fact is the evidence was imperfect and not as strong as it ought
The Court had doubts in these cases, and as the accused part entitled to the benefit of the doubt they were given that benefit quitted. It is not really desirable that the police should bring u ant cases of bribery as these in an imperfect state. Loud compl of the prevalence of bribery in many public departments such as customs, commissariat, police, courts of law and many other plac much to be desired that the police should detect cases of brib those who take bribes to justice. It is the duty of the police t performance is honourable to them and greatly useful to the publ attempts ought to be conducted where there is chance of succe that the police will not lose their courage in detecting cases of br defeat experienced by them in these cases, but will try to successf expose them.

Strongly condemns the practice of arresting persons on blank warrants.

A correspondent of the Sind Times (5) of the 23rd Septem transpired on Friday last during the
by the City Magistrate of Karáchi of a seven boatmen were charged with assau named Chaboldas and Narain on the near the shop of Harirám Sundarji, goldsmith, at 7 P.M. on the 19 that two of the seven accused had been arrested on blank warrant Town Inspector. They were five days in jail as untried prisone were released on bail on an application to the City Magistrate.
taken up against them on Saturday last and they were at once di complainants admitted that they had never seen any of them bef know them. This they admitted not only before the City Magi before the Town Inspector. Hence it was that two blank warra to a constable with instructions to arrest those of the accused were known, and after finding out the names of the two who from them to arrest these two also. The Town Inspector evid granted that the persons named by those of the accused who w by the complainants must be guilty. He took for granted that t easily find out who were the real accomplices of these suspecte
the suspected persons themselves! It never crossed his imagin suspected persons arrested might, when asked to betray the name persons who were their enemies, or if not enemies at an other than their accomplices. It would be some consolation if o any provision in the law warranting the procedure of the To Then I for my part would acquiesce in it on the ground that th wiser than myself. Of course common sense would tell any one of issuing blank warrants is a most dangerous one. It can be engine of oppression on a very large scale, but still common sen often at war, and it does not follow that because common sense a certain doctrine law must necessarily be opposed to it. On I have known law-students who make it a point to consider eve put to them in their examination against the dictates of comm who generally get a very good percentage of marks on this ac present case, however, law and common sense are in perfect ac 56 of the Criminal Procedure Code runs as follows:—"When charge of a police station requires any other subordinate to him out a warrant (otherwise than in his presence) any person wh be arrested without a warrant, he shall deliver to the officer req
the arrest an order in writing specifying the person to be arrested, for which the arrest is made." Now either the Town Inspector provision or he is not. It occurs in a chapter which has special powers of the police. If he is not aware of it, then the sooner to pass an examination in the Criminal Procedure Code the aware of it, then will he kindly explain how he came to brea liberty is safe if such freaks of power are left unnoticed by the

Education.

Supports the establishment of a high school for Native ladies in Poona and answers the objection raised against it by the Native Opinion and other newspapers.

In an article headed "Higher Education for Females," the
of the 22nd September says:—Th (11) puts his opposition to the fe movement on four grounds: that i out of a desire to imitate Englishm wanted by the people at large; th
poor, and higher education will u household drudgery; and that the useful things, such as the technical education of our boys, whic consideration and resources. The first ground tacitly assume the English is bad, that we are not fit to imitate them, and tha is achieved by such imitation. We admit that the last assu extent true, but not wholly true. There is a certain tend imitate Englishmen in their dress and habits of living, but su
we think, the inevitable consequence of our education and our Under the Mahomedan rule the predominant type of living
so under the present regime there may be an unconscio English modes of living. But because we dress in boots and tables and chairs for our furniture, it does not follow that o
cate our females arises from the fact that we see English Having ourselves partaken of the blessings of education and emancipating influence education has had upon us, we natura partners of our lives should be similarly cultivated. Further, tation is at all a bad trait in our character or that we are Englishmen. Well directed imitation is one of the best means and although there is a wide gulf between our social con
Englishmen, we deny we are so unteachable as not to profit
We shall indeed make ourselves ridiculous if we treat ourselve
Englishmen in all respects without attaining their virtues, bu ashamed to imitate them in their energy, determination and dog their love of manly exercises and sports, their love of constitu fair play. If we do not imitate them in these respects all our e ado about nothing." If we succeed in attaining these qualit
why we should not look forward to attaining complete e
The first condition of greatness is putting before one's self a h second is complete realization of the ideal. If we looked dow as a fallen and inferior race and incapable of ever attaining e never hope to rise. It is highly unedifying and demoralizi Englishmen as a superior godly race and ourselves as an abje people, never to stand on a footing of equality with our better account of all the points of superiority of Englishmen and of comings, but must not regard ourselves as doomed to perp
We must continually strive to improve ourselves, and as part ment we must educate our women. The objections that our higher education for women and that it is unsuitable to equally exaggerated. It may be admitted that there is not a high female education. But may we ask if such a demand w first attempt at high male education was made? The deman there are the means to satisfy it. Unlike the case of other demand for education must be created by well-directed effor doubt not had as much elementary female education as ma there is enough of it to justify the founding of at least one institutions in the whole presidency. There is certainly n female education as our contemporary apprehends, and the fe school at Poona will be a building without scholars may be s simple fact that the committee of the school have now on han than they can respond to. We admit the beginning will b even be not such a success as may be desired. In the tr must be prepared to meet many failures and disappointmen of such likely failures we never attempt a change, we shall n

to poverty, we admit we are poor, but we fail to see why p bar to education. By education the mind is to be cultiva formed. The education which puts false notions of self-respe for doing the duties of any position one may be placed in is But this again is an objection to the details of the movement ment itself. There is nothing in true education which shoul for a life of poverty. The last objection, if carried to its log may prevent the accomplishment of every reform. Female as urgent a reform as any other and cannot brook to be po jects to which our contemporary advises the fund at Poona sh all unexceptionable, but we greatly doubt if the donors wil appropriation. Besides, higher female education is quite object as deserves the employment of the fund in its prom technical education and the other projects mentioned by our be worked for separately. Thus the objections taken by our in our opinion, unsustainable. We think the experiment n Poona is fairly worth a trial. It is, we think, the duty of e to lend it his warm support. On its successful performance being of our community in the future. Any suggestion as t tion ought surely to be made, and will, we doubt not, be rece of the scheme at Poona. But an attempt to throw cold wate is, we think, unworthy of the patriotism and far-sightedne porary.

Railways.

Complains of the inconvenience caused to Hindu pilgrims going to Násik at some of the stations on the G. I. P. Railway.

A Hindu correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (88)
ber says that owing to the larg pilgrims travelling to Násik, some and poor travellers have to suffer
of the stations on the G. I. P. Railw are generally given 15 minutes be of trains, some of the pilgrims do curing them at some of the stations, or procure them with g times the luggage of passengers is stolen at the stations.
of the Dhrángadra State who was going to Násik missed his Bandar station. The police ought to be more vigilant than Some of the police sepoys sometimes obstruct passengers before permitting to buy tickets or book their luggage. It the railway authorities will adopt remedial measures.

Municipalities.

Complaint regarding the insanitary condition of Dhobi Taláv in Bombay.

The Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 27th September com
tary condition of Dhobi Taláv, r
deaths from cholera in that quar
necessity of the municipal authorit tention to the preservation of clea tion of measures for preventing the spread of cholera in tha that the epidemic which broke out there about a month and ing every week. It is difficult to say how far it will sprea end. It is really very painful that it should continue in a th of a city like Bombay for weeks together. A personal inspe Taláv quarter will show that its condition is disgraceful t municipality. The Municipal Commissioner, the Health Off members of the Municipal Corporation ought to visit the
They should adopt speedy measures for cleaning it and sho thoroughly washed and kept clean. Medicine for cholera s in a certain place in Dhobi Taláv for immediate use.

Disapproves of the grant of Rs. 1,500 from municipal funds towards meeting the cost of the new Female High School in Poona.

The Shivdj (64) of the 19th September strongly disapproves of grant of Rs. 1,500 from the municipal fur meeting the cost of the new Female High Poona. If the municipal commissioners considered that the establishment of a for the education of Hindu girls was a thir in itself, they should have opened their purs liberal contributions. It is most unjust to appropriate the money taxation from a large number of poor people towards purposes strongly condemn. Those persons who wish the ladies of their famil English can easily afford to pay for such tuition. The municipal fu not be diverted for their benefit. Major Babington's views on this s sound and well expressed at the meeting of the municipal corporati Poona on the 12th instant, but unfortunately they did not carry conv the rest of the body. It is to be hoped that the municipal com reconsider its decision in the above-mentioned matter.

Native States.

Strongly disapproves of the abolition of the armies of Native princes as recently suggested by a correspondent of the London Times.

In a paragraph headed "The Armies of the Native Princes of Subodh Patrika (15) of the 21st September wonder how long the so-called armies of princes will continue to be a bug-bear and to certain English gentlemen. The truth strength and their efficiency is everywhere and their loyalty to the paramount powe severely tested. Yet in spite of all that it is undoubted that these rel greatness, which as such are prized beyond measure by our princes rise to disquiet and distrust in some quarters. A correspondent of Times only lately made them the subject of an attack in the colum journal. The only object which the writer evinces in his communica recommendation is one of economy. But if that is the sole motive, best way to serve it is not by abolishing these armies altogether, but them into real fighting forces fit for use in the field. This can be ea placing them under British officers and under British discipline. the British Government will have at its disposal a large force for use need without the necessity of paying for its maintenance in ordi For the Native princes will only be too glad to place it at the ser paramount power in the hour of need. The confidence in their attach such a course of conduct unmistakeably implies will only serve to re which bind these rulers to the British Government stronger than Government also will then be in a position to dispense with its own tioned in the Native States for the purpose of watching their arm opposite course will, without doing good to anybody, only create u satisfaction and distrust. [The Gujaráti (99), the Kaiser-i-Hind (10 Rást Goftár (115) of the 21st and the Surat Akhbár (81) of the 22nd express disapproval of the abolition of the armies of Native princes a in the London Times. It would be praiseworthy for the British Gov place confidence in the Native princes and to utilize their forces for defence in times of necessity instead of distrusting them and aboli armies.]

Makes a defence of the Rána of Dánta in the matter of the complaint made against him by the Hitechchhu newspaper regarding the inconvenience and trouble suffered by the Hindu pilgrims to Ambáji.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 19th September makes a de Rána of Dánta from the complaint made by the Hitechchhu (80) newspaper of Al its issue of the 21st August last regarding venience and trouble suffered by the Hin to Ambáji at the hands of the Rána (vide the Report on Native Papers for the week August 1884). The pilgrim tax levied b is not heavy. He affords protection to property of the pilgrims and has to give c in cases where the property of the pilgrims is stolen. The tax is al than it was in former years. It is also necessary that contracts should be giv for the supply of the necessaries of life to the pilgrims, otherwise the thousan of pilgrims that flock there at one time cannot all be supplied with them. It clear that the prices of the articles of food should slightly rise on such occasio A pilgrim states that ghee and other articles are sold cheaper there than Ahmedabad. This shows the Rána's foresight and good management. T Rána has done his best for the removal of filth from the hill and is adopti measures for improving its sanitary condition. It cannot be believed that t Political Agent will interfere, as suggested by the Hitechchhu, without receivi any complaint from the pilgrims. The pilgrims do not complain against t Rána as the Shráwaks do against the Pálitána State. This is a good pro of the Rána's excellent management.

Berár Affairs.

Strongly disapproves of the practice of investing forest and other officers with magisterial powers in the Berárs.

In an article headed “The Berár Magistracy” the Pramod Sindhu (13) the 22nd September says :—The constitution of t entire body of officers in charge of criminal cases Berár is peculiar and therefore calls for much mo comment than it does in other provinces. Here, elsewhere, the magistrates of the higher classes are revenue officers, who have go through a certain amount of official training, and may be said to be select with tolerable care. But here they wield civil powers which they do not el where, and the combination of functions is, to say the least, not very favoural to the interests of public justice. It keeps the hands of officers usually fu and to a very great extent makes efficiency depend upon the doubtful test the largest amount of business within the smallest amount of time. Of cour the quality of the work done is not altogether neglected to make up t required quantity, but we believe we are warranted in asserting that with certain ascertainable limits the one is sacrificed to the other. Probably so such objections to the system were felt by the Government itself when Mr. Jo proposed to lighten the burden considerably by investing certain selected me bers of the village gentry with magisterial powers. To this measure we, in c number of the 5th September 1881, objected on the ground that the kind education which is necessary to the satisfactory discharge of the public functio of a magistrate had not yet penetrated into the mofussil, and that under any circu stances the honour conferred by the euphemistic title of a “special magistrat would be onerous, as the chosen object of the Government patronage would ha to deal daily with persons having opposite interests, and with whom he by l long contact has got into inconvenient relations either of friendship or otherwi These objections were noticed in high official quarters and circulars issued quiring every Deputy Commissioner to report specially upon the quality of t work done by each special magistrate in his district. In the very next ann report then due no such special reports came in and the matter dropped, w the measure passed and the checks devised for it practically ignored. As serious consequences immediately followed and the measure was not opposed principle, though open to grave objections in the detail, we let alone the mat and waited patiently to see its ultimate results. The Residency orders to ha in the last week, however, indicate a further departure by the Government the conferring of magisterial powers, and we think it time to discuss the wh subject afresh and draw the attention of the Government to it. Mr. Ballanti a forest officer of some standing, is given the powers of a magistrate to try criminal cases in Melghat, presumably even those against the forest laws the selves. The public has no particular information about Mr. Ballantine beyo his being a forest officer about whom no complaint has been yet publicly ma Since, however, Government has shown its particular confidence in him by c ferring magisterial powers on him, we are willing to believe that he is a gent man possessing the necessary education and moral rectitude to occupy his n and responsible post; but that does not alter our view of the case. Howe proper in the particular instance, there can be no two opinions about the mista of the Government in investing Mr. Ballantine with magisterial powers. I duties as a forest officer are in some respects the same or similar to those the police in preventing crimes amongst civil populations. In such cases the fore he will be both a judge and a prosecutor, and the poor a hard time of it. To run down a game which you have been time does not require any particular unfairness of mind. He so little entrusted with the duty of weighing the evidence ag that they are excluded from being members of juries, and thei respect to prosecutions are watched with such an amount of c be justified by a well-founded suspicion. If this is properly why the forest officers, who in some respects stand in the sam

police, should be treated differently and with more confidence the forest laws. If administrative economy is the only excus may well be expected one day to declare all District Superin competent to hold criminal trials, and the police may be justif
the present measure as the introduction of the thin end of t believing that we are fast returning to the simple mechani society. That things should acquire this tendency, which is t of the progressive principles of civilization, is not very creditab
in the nineteenth century, and we sincerely hope that those r measure will see their mistake and either cancel or see th nugatory.

Complains of the inefficiency of Honorary Magistrates in the Berárs and makes suggestions about their improvement.

The Vaidarbh (16) of the 20th September complains that th trates in the Berárs are not fit for their duties. There being no sure of qualification, the result frequent of ignorant and unfit persons. Th able to understand on what pri
Honorary Magistrates in the Berárs
Many of them are so innocent of all kind of education that sign their names quickly. Among their number will be freq sons who are deeply involved in debt. It is not right to public authority on the sole ground of their ancestry. Th opinion that the trial of petty criminal and municipal cases s to a bench of Honorary Magistrates composed of not less tha and the decision should be regulated by the opinion of the m likely to be better administered on this plan than when cases cided by Honorary Magistrates sitting singly. It would also were subjected to some educational and professional test befo with magisterial powers. Much dissatisfaction is expressed manner in which Honorary Magistrates perform their duties

G. W.

Reporter on

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
30th September 1884.

INDEX.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Administration of India: Expression of opinion that the real danger to British authority in India are the Anglo-India selves ... ...
Bombay Arsenal: Necessity of removing the — in the Fort to and lonely place ... ...
Forced labour: Complaint against the oppression practised by G officials in forcing cartmen and their carts and labourers service ... ...
Governorship of Bombay:
    Advocacy of the appointment of Sir James Caird or Sir E.
        the successor of Sir James Fergusson in the — ...
    Remarks about the selection of a successor to Sir James F Honorary Surgeons: Request to Government to reconsider the on the subject of the non-success of the — at the Gokuld Hospital ... ...
Judicial matters:
    Comments on the result of the cases of bribery against Collett and Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth ... ...
    Condemnation of the system by which the costs of litigan justice in the Bombay High Court are made so heavy Disapproval of the proposed addition to the judicial st
        Calcutta High Court bench ... ...
    Expression of opinion that Government should issue a sanctioning the payment of all costs incurred by M Dinánáth, censuring Mr. Brewin, and ordering the p of the sweetmeat-seller Babuti Sital and certain othe
        for perjury ... ...
    Reasons why vakils should be allowed to practise on th
        side of the High Court ... ...
    Request to Government to reimburse Mr. Bápuji the costs by him in defending himself against the false charge
        by the Bombay police through reckless negligence Suggestions to the Bombay police for the prosecution o
        ment servants who take bribes ... ...
Land revenue:
    Objection to certain observations in the Government reso
        the revision settlements in Ahmednagar ...
    Objection to many remarks about light assessment and the subsoil water contained in the resolution of Governme revenue survey of the Párner Táluka in the Ahmednaga Objection to the remarks about the prosperity of the ryots
        in a recent resolution of the Bombay Government rela
        revision of land settlement in the Ahmednagar Distric Local Fund Committee at Broach: Comments in connection resignation tendered by Mr. Kalyánráyji Hakumatráyj member of the district — ... ...
Minute on the Bengal Tenancy Bill: Disapproval of the compl
    by Sir Richard Garth against the Government of India in hi Police: Condemnation of the practice of arresting persons warrants ... ...
Polo: Disapproval of the appropriation of the maidán by the people ... ...
Shrievalty of Bombay: Disapproval of the suggestion made by of India for the appointment of Mr. K. N. Kábráji to the next year and suggestion for the appointment of a M gentleman to it ... ...
Vernacular Press Act:
    Condemnation of the attempt of the Calcutta correspond London Times to induce the authorities to revive the
            The Indu Prakásh ... ...
            The Native Opinion ... ...

INDEX.

Page.

I.—Politics and the Public Administration—continued.

Vernacular Press Act:

Disapproval of the revival of the—as suggested by the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times:

The Dnyán Prakásh 11

The Indian Spectator 10

Reasons for not reviving the defunct— 12

Viceroyalty of India: Remarks on Lord Dufferin's probable career as Viceroy... 3

II.—Education—

Female education: Advocacy of the establishment of a high school for Native ladies in Poona and answer to the objections raised against it by the Native Opinion and others 19

III.—Railways—

G. I. P. Railway: Complaint regarding the inconvenience caused to Hindu pilgrims going to Násik at some of the stations on the— ... 20

IV.—Municipalities—

Bombay: Complaint regarding the insanitary condition of Dhobi Taláv in— 20

Poona: Disapproval of the grant of Rs. 1,500 from municipal funds towards meeting the cost of the new Female High School in— ... 21

V.—Native States—

Armies of Native Princes: Disapproval of the abolition of the—as recently suggested by a correspondent of the London Times ... 21

Dánta: Defence of the Rána of—in the matter of the complaint made against him by the Hitechchhu newspaper regarding the inconvenience and trouble suffered by the Hindu pilgrims to Ambáji ... 21

VI.—Berár Affairs—

Honorary Magistrates: Complaint against the inefficiency of—in the Berárs and suggestions about their improvement 23

Magisterial powers in the Berárs: Disapproval of the practice of investing forest and other officers with— 22

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

40387
INDIA OFFICE
3 OCT 884

NAT

PUBLISHED IN

For the We

List of

No.	Names of Newspap
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator ...
2	„ Mahrátta ... ...
3	„ Morning Star ...
4	„ Quarterly Journal of th janik Sabha ...
5	„ Sind Times ...
	ANGLO-MARA'T
6	The Din Bandhu ...
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu ...
8	„ Dnyánodayă ...
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh ...
10	„ Indu Prakásh ...
11	„ Native Opinion ...
12	„ Prabhákar ...
13	„ Pramod Sindhu ...
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivá
15	„ Subodh Patrika ...
16	„ Vaidarbh ... ...
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samác
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă ...
19	„ A'ryávart ... ...
20	„ Bakul ... ...
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1] ...
*23	„ Chháva ... ...
*24	„ Chikitsak ... ...
25	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár
26	„ Dakshin Vritt ...
27	„ Dhárwár Vritt ...
28	„ Dnyán Bodhak ...
29	„ Dnyán Ságar ...
30	„ Ganga Lahari ...
31	„ Hindu Punch ...
32	„ Hitechchhu ...
33	„ Israel[1] ... ...
34	„ Jagadádarsh ...
35	„ Jagan Mitră ...
36	„ Kalpataru... ...
37	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]
38	„ Kesari ... ...
39	„ Khándesh Vaibhav
40	„ Lamp of Judaism
41	„ Lokahitavádi ...
*42	„ Mádhavi ... ...
43	„ Mahárashtră Hitechch
44	„ Mahárashtră Mitră
45	„ Nagar Samáchár...
46	„ Násik Vritt ...
47	„ Nibandh Chandrika
48	„ Nyáyă Sindhu ...
49	„ Panchánan ...
50	„ Pandhari Vaibhav
51	„ Poona Vaibhav ...
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika
*53	„ Pratod ... ...
*54	„ Pune Sárvajanik S Pustak ... ...
*55	„ Rámdás ... ...
~~56~~	~~„ Saddharm Dip ...~~
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika...
58	„ Satyă Sadan ...
59	„ Satyă Shodhak ...
*60	„ Sharabh ... ...
61	„ Shetakari ... ...
*62	„ Shiváji[1] ... ...
63	„ Shubh Suchak ...
64	„ Suryakánt... ...
65	„ Suryodayă... ...
*66	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu

---

[1] Frequently admits E

AL.]

F

NATI

ISHED IN THE

the Week

List of New

Names of Newspapers.

ENGLISH.

pectator
Star
y Journal of the Poo Sabha
nes

ANGLO-MARA'THI.

dhu Chakshu
dayă Prakásh
akásh Opinion
ar
Sindhu
ryáncha Kaivári
Patrika
h (Berár) Samáchár

MARA'THI.

ayă
rt
n Samáchár
udhákar[1]
ak nyă Samáchár
n Vritt
ár Vritt
Bodhak
Ságar
Lahari
Punch
chhu
darsh Mitră
aru
tak Mitră[2]
esh Vaibhav
of Judaism
tavádi
vi
áshtră Hitechchhu
áshtră Mitră
Samáchár
Vritt
dh Chandrika
Sindhu
ánan
ari Vaibhav Vaibhav
dh Chandrika
Sárvajanik Sabhech
tak ás arm Dip
rgă Dipika
Sadan
Shodhak
bh kari
ji[1] Suchak
kánt
dayă
sh Hitechchhu

Frequently admits English ar

Page.

ted by the Calcutta 11 10 12 probable career as 3 f a high school for tions raised against 19

nce caused to Hindu
n the — 20

on of Dhobi Taláv 20
unicipal funds to-School in — 21

on of the — as ren Times 21
e complaint made
ng the inconveni-
o Ambáji 21

iency of — in the 23
ractice of investing 22

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

40 387
INDIA OFFICE
3 OCT 884

REPOR

ON

NATIVE P

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRES

For the Week ending 4th

List of Newspapers and

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place c
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmeda
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwa
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia
20	„ Bakul	Ratnági
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwá
*24	„ Chikitsak	Sholápu
25	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay
26	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápu
27	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwá
28	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum
29	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápu
30	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik
31	„ Hindu Punch	Thána
32	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi
33	„ Israel[1]	Bombay
34	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmedn
35	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnági
36	„ Kalpataru	Sholápu
37	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum
38	„ Kesari	Poona
39	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia
40	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay
41	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona
*42	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwá
43	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay
44	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára
45	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmedn
46	„ Násik Vritt	Násik
47	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona
48	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmedn
49	„ Panchánan	Málvan
50	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandhar
51	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon
*53	„ Pratod	Islámpur
*54	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona
*55	„ Rámdás	Bijápur
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay
58	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág
59	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnági
*60	„ Sharabh	Alibág
61	„ Shetakari	Umráwa
*62	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpu
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána
*66	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Con

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.
	Mara'thi—continued.
67	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly
68	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.
69	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.
*70	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.
71	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.
72	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly
	Anglo-Gujara'ti.
73	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly
74	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.
75	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.
76	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.
77	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.
	Gujara'ti.
78	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly
79	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily
80	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly
81	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.
82	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.
83	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily
84	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly
85	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.
86	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly
*87	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.
88	„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly
89	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.
90	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly
91	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.
92	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.
93	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.
94	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly
95	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly
96	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.
*97	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly
98	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily
99	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly
100	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly
101	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.
*102	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly
103	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly
104	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly
105	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.
106	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly
107	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.
108	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.
109	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.
110	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.
111	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.
112	„ Saurástră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly
113	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.
114	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.
115	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.
116	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.
*117	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly
118	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly
119	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly
120	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly
121	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.
122	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly
	Ka'narese.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly
124	„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do.
125	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.
126	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.
	Sanskrit.
127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly
	Urdu.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.
	Persian.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly
	English, Mara'thi and Urdu.
131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly
	Sindi.
132	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the News paper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of th Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Makes remarks on the estrangement existing between Europeans and Natives, and gives advice to both parties.

In an article headed "Read and think" the Din Bandhu (6) of the 28th September says:—So much has been said about the English rule in India and the disloyalty of the Natives that a few suggestions may not be out of place. From the Ilbert Bill agitation down to the Civil Service question, and later on to the Russian scare, both Englishmen and Natives must have appeared in the most odious lights to other nations of the civilized world. An impartial thinker would attribute blame to both the parties, and it is but fair that both the rulers and the ruled should see their rights and grievances in their proper shape and form and administer adequate remedies instead of taking the magnified view which they have done and of using the most indiscreet means which they have hitherto made use of to strengthen their cause. The invectives which both the races have showered upon each other do not beseem the relative position they occupy in the civilized world. They have only exposed their shortcomings and follies to other nations. Paper warfare has no doubt its merits, but when authorities do not find it necessary to check it even under special circumstances, it will certainly outstep the limit which discretion has allotted to it. The life of an individual has sometimes its political value and is judged accordingly. Is it therefore discreet on the part of our authorities to permit ribaldish and scurrilous talk, encouraging disaffection and tending towards sedition, to proceed when the lives of millions hang in the balance? If the rulers have suddenly become awakened to a sense of their national superiority and to the disloyalty of the Native, let them make dispassionate enquiries into their causes and motives, and it is very probable that the result will prove of immense good to both the parties. To call Natives to a sense of their degradation as a conquered race and of their unmindfulness to the many benefits which they have reaped from English rule will not make them a bit more loyal. To touch them thus at their vital parts is to encourage sedition. Natives have been repeatedly told that the English are a superior race, that the rulers do not require to be taught by the ruled the art of government, and that the latter would do well to leave the art of governing them to the rulers, while they (Natives) should devote their attention to internal and social improvement. Again, if the ruled have grievances against their rulers they should put them in proper shape and submit them to the controlling authorities in a manner which will leave no ground for complaint. But reviling the English rule with the most opprobrious epithets and reviling the nation without any regard or reverence to law or person will do little good. Every thoughtful Native should picture to himself the present state of things reversed, and then ask the question whether he would like to be treated similarly by the English. If there is any disaffection amongst the people, let Natives quietly show the causes that have given rise to it. If Englishmen have up to a very recent date proclaimed the Native to be the most law-abiding creature in the world, have repeatedly borne witness to his docile and submissive temper, then let Natives institute a dispassionate enquiry into the causes which have caused a change in the opinions of their rulers. If Natives think that the country is full of low-class Englishmen and Eurasians whose arrogance and presumption is undermining the English rule, then it behoves high English officials for the sake of the millions whose benefactors they have proclaimed themselves to be to extend their enquiry in this direction and check the wrongs these people may be doing among the Natives, and hence to the English rule.

Says that English statesmen trained in the free atmosphere of English politics should be appointed to provincial Governorships instead of Indian Civilians.

In an article headed "The duty which Bengalis owe to themselves" the Indian Spectator (1) of the 28th September says:—It has been a settled conviction with many for years past that the interests of the people are materially injured by the system which has allowed Civilians of high standing to be nominated Governors or Lieutenant-Governors of large provinces. In the first place the nominees are nothing if not bureaucrat, imbued with all the failings of bureaucracy. For the government of provinces as large as France or Austria, which for years together have been retrogressing in civilization and plunging deeper into poverty, men of an altogether different stamp are required. The so-called local "experience" is not at all an essential element of qualification for a Governor. He must be a ruler in the proper sense of the term, not an autocrat imbued with the prejudices of the class to which he belongs. We do not want men of narrow vision whose chief thought is centred in themselves and the equally narrow-minded coteries that surround them and to whose baneful influences they so often succumb. Again, as a rule they are devoid of statesmanship, which has for its object the greatest good of the greatest number. Governors and Lieutenant-Governors drawn from the Civil Service of India during the past 25 years have been more or less failures. Some of them have no doubt proved brilliant administrators; but able administration is one thing and real statesmanship another. Situated as India is, it is the latter qualification that is most wanted. In the earlier days, we mean prior to the events of 1858, India had the good fortune to possess in Elphinstone, Lawrence, Metcalfe, Malcolm and Munro real statesmen—administrators who understood the art of government and understood well the feelings, aspirations and wants of the people they ruled. These were exceptions. And however long we may search past records we will not be able to find during the last 25 years Governors or Lieutenant-Governors of the character, ability and influence of the statesmen just named. The future contentment and happiness of the Indians rest, in our opinion, on the choice of Governors who are statesmen. We require men of tested abilities and experience, who have made their mark in the free atmosphere of England, men of sympathy towards Natives, men of thorough disinterestedness, of broad liberal views, and men who are strong enough to resist the seductive influence of class. They must be persons who will rise above local bias and who will have the moral fibre of the true Briton to be swayed by his own natural instincts. That such men can be found we have not the least doubt. What is wanted is the voice of united India to get them. The Bengalis ought to make a beginning by condemning the system of nominating Indian Civilians for Lieutenant-Governorships, and ask for the system which shall give to India a succession of English gentlemen of ability and experience, well trained in public life, and above all who have shown in their public career the germs of that statesmanship which, when allowed fair scope, leads to the material and political advancement of a nation. Other provinces may then follow suit. We dare say the united efforts of all India to have none but English statesmen unconnected with the Indian services as their rulers will in the long run have the desired effect. Let our friends on the other side take the lead.

Takes exception to Mr. Blunt's remark that the natives of India are disaffected towards the British Government and expects many advantages to result from the travels of men like Mr. Blunt.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 29th September, in its Maráthi columns, gives the substance of an article of Mr. Blunt published in some periodical in England containing an account of his experience gathered during his tour in India, and observes that most of his statements are perfectly accurate and therefore he deserves the thanks of Natives for bringing the real condition of the country to the notice of the British Government. The Indu Prakásh however is obliged to differ from Mr. Blunt in one important particular. Mr. Blunt says that most of the inhabitants of India are discontented with British rule. This statement is not correct. Although the condition of the natives of India will not improve until the policy of Government is changed, yet it is not true that the people are disloyal or discontented. The masses are aware of the benefits which the British Government has conferred on them, and for this they feel really grateful. The present state of India must be allowed to be much superior to the state of things which existed when the Pendháris were rampant. It is not right to charge Natives with disloyalty because they occasionally express dissatisfaction with certain harassing regulations of Government. The idea which has taken possession of Mr. Blunt's mind that Natives are disaffected towards the British power is due to his inexperience. The Indu Prakásh anticipates many advantages to result to India from the travels of Mr. Blunt and gentlemen similarly situated. If the authorities here were to ponder over the opinions expressed by Mr. Blunt and shape their policy accordingly, the consequences will be beneficial to the governors and the governed.

Denies the charge of disloyalty brought by the London Times against the Native press of India and strongly advocates the continuance of the liberal policy of Lord Ripon in regard to this and other matters.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 28th September, in an article headed "The London Times on the Native Press," says:—Elsewhere we publish an article from the London Times savagely criticising the attitude of the Native press towards the Government of India and Englishmen in general. The article pours forth venom which a sober, sedate and sagacious journal like the London Times could scarcely be imagined even in our dreams to have ever thought of. But of late the Thunderer has unfortunately taken the Pioneer-cum-Englishman with its own Calcutta correspondent and people of that ilk into its confidence, and promises now, as their mouthpiece in England, to wage a deadly war in right earnest against the educated classes and through them the now retiring Viceroy. The sympathy expressed towards the present Government is entirely of a specious character, and purposely used, we suppose, to serve as a cloak to show up the weakness of the present Viceroyalty and the ingratitude of the people of India—a makeshift which bears condemnation on its very face. We would not care much if any other English journal were pleased to play into the hands of a reckless section of the Anglo-Indian press whose studied object has been to distort facts, often misrepresent them, and direct every effort to bring the regime of Lord Ripon into disrepute both in India and in England. We are particularly sorry for a journal like the London Times, which commands (and deservedly) such universal respect that it should forget its own position and responsibility and rush unwillingly into a trap cleverly laid for it by its own correspondent and people of his genus. The specific charges brought by the London Times against the Native press generally may thus be summed up:—Disloyalty of the educated Native, failure of a liberal policy in the country of giving liberal local institutions in the form of local self-government, and as a remedy against all these the advisability of re-introducing the vernacular press law to guard against any increase of consequent discontent. The charge of disloyalty to Government we emphatically deny, and as a means of better and substantial evidence we would ask the writer in the Times to satisfy his curiosity, if he has any, by referring to the files of the Native press and not trust too far his thoughtless informant. We admit that there has been stray scurrilous writing in the country, but will the Times dare aver that there is never such writing even in England? But such writing has never been against the Government and is mostly the outcome of the gross misconduct of officials in different parts of the country. Perhaps the writer in the Times is not unaware of the foul and entirely illegal prosecution of Krishnagar school-boys in Bengal, the violation of a coolie woman and the subsequent letting off of the European culprit with a small fine, the groundless condemnation of the alleged Salem rioters to penal servitude to keep up the false prestige of the official hierarchy, the recent prosecution of the Dacca school-boys, and such other matters too numerous to mention. Exposures of official misconduct in such matters as excite the feelings of a law-abiding people must necessarily be scurrilous; whether writing against officials is writing against Government is a question which we leave the writer in the Times to solve for himself. Would the Times in sober truth like, we ask, to see British justice sacrificed at the altar of official whim and caprice? If officials oppress, the only recourse the Natives of the country have is to expose through their organs their conduct, and we are at a loss to understand how this conduct of the Native press can be construed into a specific charge of disloyalty to the Government in India. But the main sting of the Times' article lies in its indirect attack upon the liberal policy of Lord Ripon of initiating liberal institutions in the country. The officials, with a few honourable exceptions, have never been favourable to the scheme of local self-government, and they can never be, since its successful introduction means the curtailment of the absolute powers they have hitherto enjoyed. We have already before us an instance of this unfavourable disposition of officials in the Calcutta Municipality, the Corporation where is now actually superseded on a charge of incompetency in the very teeth the fact that the town of Calcutta, which is under the jurisdiction of it Corporation, is better managed as regards its sanitation than the suburbs which are under the control of Government officials. And this fact of a bette administration is now made a handle to supersede them! On this side o India also there are signs on the surface in this direction, and the Collector president of the second city in the presidency is about to report, says rumour on the futility of local self-government amongst us. As to Bombay, the official cannot raise their finger against the local Corporation since it has establishe its prestige here. But are not the undisputed claims of Bombay on the scor an argument in favour of the capacity of our countrymen to undertake loca self-government everywhere? But with the heaven-born bureaucracy such arguments rarely prevail, and our last hope in respect of Lord Ripon's libera policy now rests with the arrival of the new Viceroy. We know that in respec to the London Times ours is a cry in the wilderness, but if it should ever reach its ears and the responsible persons be ever induced to look into the subjec with a judicial calmness, we have no doubt they will clearly see through th thin film of delusion in which that journal has now come to be unfortunatel shrouded. Of course as a countryman the Times' correspondent may carr great weight with it; but that ought not to blind its writers to facts an figures which are everyday being placed in England before the British publi We would earnestly pray them before they shower their envenomed arrow upon their helpless fellow-subjects to consult better men, and then deal wit Indian subjects. We may assure them that their correspondent and othe are a clique formed perhaps to bring back the days of Lord Lytton's regim and spread terror and dismay over the whole land. Let them weigh and tak proper measure of every thing before they write on any subject.

Expresses satisfaction with the speech made by Mr. Gladstone at Edinburgh on 1st September advocating the freedom of the Native press of India.

The Bombay Chronicle (73) of the 28th September says:—The veteran an venerable British Premier, the accomplished cham pion of the liberty of the press and all popular right in the course of his Midlothian speech on 1st Septem ber, gave voluntarily in the presence of thousands intelligent and independent Scotchmen the assuranc for the continuance of the liberty of the Native pres in a manner that leaves nothing to be desired. The people in this countr will rejoice to learn that, no matter how the Times and other leading Englis journals have been misled into advocating the revival of the Vernacular Pre Act, Her Majesty's Government have no respect for any demand for curtaili the freedom of the Native press in this country. Nay, not merely that—the have no such intention at present, but that, as hoped and trusted by the Premie no Liberal Government would ever hereafter think of reverting to the impoliti measure of the Government of Lord Lytton. Mr. Gladstone's words deserv to be read everywhere in India. [The Pársi Punch (107) and the Yajdá Parast (122) of the 28th and the Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 30th Septembe the Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 1st and the Suryá Prakásh (77) of the 4th Octo ber express their gratitude to Mr. Gladstone for advocating the freedom of th Native press in India. The Jáme Jamshed disapproves of the reply given b Mr. Roper Lethbridge to the statement made by Mr. Gladstone in his speec and advises the zamindárs of Bengal to have no connection with him. Th Gujaráti (94) and the Kaiser-i-Hind (101) of the 28th September express di approval of the tone of some of the Bengal Native papers.]

Praises Lord Ripon for his successful administration and advises Natives to prepare and present addresses to him before his retirement from India.

In an article headed "The retiring Viceroy and our duty towards him," th Subodh Patrika (15) of the 28th September says:- The noble Marquis of Ripon has proved himself th greatest Viceroy, great in every sense of the ter that England ever sent out to this country. Th earnest and honest ring of his truly noble heart wa first perceived when in his brief replies to the addres es of welcome presented to him on his arrival he said that he wished to b judged by his acts and not by any words which he might utter at the outset his career, and nobly and faithfully has he tried throughout that career, now so near its close, to act honestly, and earnestly, and wisely, in almost every department of the administration. It is true that he has not been able to achieve much, and what has been achieved is not all satisfactory. For instance, though the Vernacular Press Act has been repealed, the Arms Act is retained in its rigour to the unbearable injury of the rural population; the import duties have been abolished and the license tax has been retained, and no measures of retrenchment or judicial or administrative reform have been carried out. But we believe Lord Ripon could not help it. The salt tax however has been partially reduced and germs of sound progress have been sown in the department of land assessment, and in respect to encouragement of local industries, education, the spirit of legislation, and above all local self-government, which if duly nurtured by his successors will confer immense benefit on this country. True that His Lordship has exposed himself to the charge of having committed a grave blunder in assenting to modify the Ilbert Bill at the dictation of irresponsible adventurers who flocked to this country to make their fortunes in the shortest period and seek to convert its Government into an oligarchy of race, who are to lord it over its toiling millions and themselves to enjoy immunities and special privileges denied to the latter. But here again His Lordship had to contend against odds, and possibly incompetency or faithlessness to his principles and to the Queen's Proclamation in his own camp, and we have no doubt His Lordship perceived the blunder when too late, and we have every hope that he will do his best to repair it whenever he can. But the point to which we wish to direct attention is that, barring the blunder of the insidious and invidious concordat, His Lordship has brought to bear to the performance of his onerous task an instructive shrewdness in finding out the truth as regards every subject he took in hand, a conscientious desire to do his duty correctly and wisely, and a persevering industry to carry out his principles, which are in fact the principles of that glorious Proclamation of 1858, and thereby to strengthen the foundation of British Empire in India. He has in short shown himself to possess the humane liberalism and wise statesmanship of Bentinck, the energy and vigour of Dalhousie, the magnanimity and justice of Canning, and a conscientious piety and Christian honesty which were never witnessed in any ruler before. For basing his measures on these high principles his adventuring countrymen to whom equal laws in India are distasteful have abused and vilified him in no measured terms, and while themselves repudiating all laws, human and divine, have not felt ashamed to charge dishonesty and unscrupulousness at his door. To us it is a consolation to think that Lord Ripon will soon be able to forget the rank abuse of his infuriated and erring countrymen and always to enjoy the pure satisfaction of having honestly tried to do his duty in the highest office which any man, sovereign or subject, can fill, and that the same exalted ambition which induced him four years ago to accept that office will always move him away from the malign influences which have hampered his footsteps here—to utilize the intimate knowledge which he has now obtained of our conditions and feelings, material poverty and political depression, as also of the real obstacles that stand in the way of any solid progress and reform for the purpose of advancing the good government of this the brightest jewel in the British Crown and the welfare of the two hundred and fifty (250) millions who own Her Majesty's sway in the far east. But the question just now before us is what is our duty towards the retiring Viceroy? That duty is at once simple and agreeable and easy of execution: it is in brief to tell him that His Lordship has taken an accurate measure of our wants and grievances, and has tried to remedy them in a manner which meets with our approval and satisfaction; that in his endeavours, whether successful or unsuccessful, we fully recognize his greatness as a man and governor; and that his departure from our country makes us exceedingly sorry and long for many a Viceroy like him. Let every one of us who feels as above—and there is no one educated or uneducated who does not so feel more or less according to the extent of his information—tell His Lordship accordingly, and the best and only practicable way of doing this is for people in all parts of the country, town or village to embody their sentiments in a brief address and append their names or marks thereto and forward them to His Lordship before he takes his departure. This is simply due to Lord Ripon, but it is equally due to overselves,—in fact it is even more necessary in our o interests, for His Lordship has by his wise policy made many enemies in ranks of Anglo-Indians, especially the non-officials, who would feign regard a treat the natives of this country as an inferior race of beings and who e since the Ilbert Bill controversy began have been most industrious in trying discredit that policy and to mislead public opinion here and in England every misrepresentation and exaggeration or distortion of the truth—witn the perverse arguments of Sir James Stephen or the outrageous fictions a perversions of facts circulated by the Railway Atkins,—and these active and n over-scrupulous enemies will not fail to take the fullest advantage of any om sion on our part and to tell the English public that the natives of India the selves do not care for Lord Ripon's policy. In India and indeed in Asia t people bless and pray for their benefactors, as they curse their oppressors, silence, and honest Europeans ignorant of this national habit are misled by t absence of open or loud demonstrations on either side. It is thus of the utmo importance that at this critical moment no ground should be given or opport nity offered for any mistake or misrepresentation as to Native opinion on t merits of Lord Ripon's rule or policy as a whole, and we would therefore humb suggest to our Native brethren that this view of the matter should occupy the early attention and all concerned should arrange for a suitable expression that opinion being transmitted to the retiring Viceroy or personally presente to him by representatives from every district of the country before His Exce lency leaves its shores. [Many of the Gujaráti papers of this week deplore t departure of Lord Ripon from India and advise the people to take measures f perpetuating his memory in the country.]

Controverts the opinion of the Indian Nation newspaper of Calcutta that Lord Ripon's administration has been a failure, observes that it has been eminently successful and considers Lord Ripon to be a statesman of a high order.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 29th September says:—The Indian Nati of Calcutta has in its last number an article on t administration of Lord Ripon, in the course of whi the writer pronounces it to be an utter failure. I charges Lord Ripon with having left this undone a that incomplete and accuses him of timidity. Th is not the opinion entertained by the public at larg
of the career of the noble Viceroy, and we think t writer in the Indian Nation has tried to judge Lo Ripon without taking into consideration the immense difficulties with which had to contend. It is said by the writer that Lord Ripon ought not to have car for his opponents, but should have carried out certain measures without any rega for adverse criticism. We beg to differ from a political doctrine so utterly variance with true statesmanship. On the other hand, had Lord Ripon prov obdurate, regardless of the views of his opponents and inclined like an autocr to carry out his views merely because they were his, he would have, in spite his friendship for the people of India, proved a veritable despot, entitl perhaps to our affection but certainly not entitled to the honour due to a r statesman or the respect of sensible men. India does not want a sentimen autocrat even if he be one desiring to do everything that we, Natives, wis Rather give us for our Viceroy a man who is sincere and honest and frienc to us, but who at the same time stands calm in times of difficulty and nev wishes to do a thing without consulting even his advisers. Lord Ripon com up entirely to this ideal. Writers who do not know how to judge a Vicer by the light of his position and the several contrary forces amidst which has to work may pronounce Lord Ripon's administration a failure. But t voice of truth is clear. The people of India love and respect His Lordsh
The present generation knows it, but the value of Lord Ripon's services to th country will be even more fully recognised by the generations to come.

Complains of the exclusion of Natives from several public departments and particularly from the railway department.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (101) of the 28th September complains that India is n governed in her own interests, but in those of t
people of England, and observes that the exclusion Natives from the more highly paid appointments
the uncovenanted service is a proof in support of t complaint. The Native public remember full well the scheme proposed by Evelyn Baring in the Indian Budget for 1882-83 for the free employment

Natives in the uncovenanted service. European officers of G not, however, cared to carry out the promise given in the bu nanted appointments in the High Courts have been bestowed instead of on Native lawyers. The same is the case with appo Customs, Salt, and A'bkári Departments. The refusal of the Se for India to sanction the nomination of certain Europeans to c
the Engineering and Survey Departments in Madras to which men had superior claims shows that the Home authorities are out to some extent the resolutions issued and promises made b
But those provincial authorities with whom the work of car promises rests or their advisers discard them and act accordi whim and fancy. The Kaiser has learnt from a reliable source cial and secret instructions have been issued to several departme removing as far as possible Natives from their service and for e peans in their stead. The authorities of the G. I. P. Railway are their partiality towards Europeans. These secret instructions injustice to the claims of Natives for employment in the State R ment. It is not honest to give promises to Natives and to prete them when secret endeavours are made to keep them down and t peans. Such conduct is disgraceful.

Does not approve of the opinions expressed by Sir Richard Garth in his minute on the Tenancy Bill against Government.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 28th September says:—We sorry to find the learned Chief Justic
dulge in some very uncharitable re
Ripon's Government in his last minute
Tenancy Bill apropos of the treatm opinion and that of his colleagues h
the hands of Government. Sir Rich apparently not yet recovered from the effects of that ill wi Ripon which he seems to have imbibed in large quantities du Bill controversy. His present remarks make that pretty clear.
here takes the Government to task for what one of the Secretaries thought fit to write against him in an unofficial way, as well as fo able remarks which Lord Hartington made in Parliament after to be Secretary of State on the opinions of the Calcutta J Ilbert Bill. As to the first, the learned Chief Justice himself a took no notice of it at the time for the reason among others he might place Lord Ripon in an awkward position by so doi think Lord Ripon could hardly have felt himself justified in into that position uninvited and of his own accord. And as to t fail to see what Lord Ripon could do in the matter except p minute of condolence with the Judges if that could satisfy the ings. As in the case of the first cause of complaint, we th would have acted wisely in not noticing the second as well, see in office could in any way take Lord Hartington to task for the in Parliament. We are too deeply conscious of the services Courts of Justice in India have at all times rendered to the N standing bulwarks against the high-handed proceedings of t be insensible to what is due to their position and to the wei opinion and their advice ought always to carry with Governmen
the history of the Ilbert Bill controversy has somewhat shaken in the ability of the Judges to retain a cool head when a storm them, yet we still wish that Government should always treat the High Court Judges in the country on any new piece of legislati respect which their high position and their knowledge of the country entitle them to. And it is because we think that Lord been guilty of estimating them lightly that we say that Sir Ri remarks were uncalled for and undeserved. We hope that Si during his short furlough to England, ponder over the matt mistake. We wish him to continue to give his advice as fre as ever. Government cannot do without it in legislating for large.

Strongly disapproves of the condemnation of Lord Ripon's Government pronounced by Sir Richard Garth in his minute on the Tenancy Bill.

With reference to Sir Richard Garth's minute on the Bengal Tenancy Bill," the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 29th September says:—We do not think this latest minute of Sir Richard Garth which, in dealing with his view of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, pronounces curses on the Government of Lord Ripon will enhance his reputation as a calm and judicious thinker. For one thing it was extremely indiscreet on the part of Sir Richard to have returned to his attack against the Ilbert Bill after the unfortunate agitation which it caused had subsided. Lord Ripon has borne many a calumny from revilers, and Sir Richard might have wisely abstained from figuring as one of them at this stage. Sir Richard complains in his minute that Lord Ripon has treated the opinions of the Calcutta High Court with disregard after having deliberately invited those opinions. But who ever heard of the Government of India or any Government being bound to act upon the opinion of High Court Judges? The Judges are consulted as a rule, but the Legislature is not compelled for that reason to take their opinions for gospel. The minute of Sir Richard is so full of unreasoning prejudice on this point that it strikes one as singularly wanting in that judicial sagacity with which the Chief Justice of Bengal is usually accredited. Lord Ripon, far from treating the Judges of the Calcutta High Court with discourtesy, has, we think, shown them more indulgence than a Viceroy like Lord Lytton would have shown. One glorious feature of the present Government of India, for which even its enemies must give it credit if they have any respect for truth and candour, has been that before taking any step it has striven hard to consult all classes and all manner of opinions and never taken action either hastily or impulsively. Lord Lytton passed the Gagging Act of discreditable memory in the twinkling of the eye and without the knowledge of the people of India. But in the case of the Ilbert Bill and the Tenancy Bill, how slow and cautious has been Lord Ripon's procedure? You may accuse Lord Ripon of having introduced the Ilbert Bill into the Legislature impulsively, but to say that he passed it into law hastily and without showing any courtesy to all manner of opinions is to pronounce what appears to us to be a libel on the spotless character of Lord Ripon's administration. The bad taste of Sir Richard Garth's minute which countenances such a libel is extremely to be regretted.

Criticises unfavourably the strictures passed by Sir Richard Garth on Government in his minute on the Bengal Tenancy Bill.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 28th September, in an article headed "Chief Justice Garth on the privileges of High Courts," says:—We fully sympathise with what Sir Richard Garth has so feelingly expressed. The High Courts in India are the bulwarks of the liberty and the rights of people, and it is very necessary that the confidence which the public has in those high tribunals must be maintained, and if any person in authority treats those high tribunals with wanton insult he deserves blame. But we should at the same time respectfully submit to his Lordship that as other persons are in duty bound to treat the High Courts with all possible respect the Judges themselves are much more bound to respect themselves. Be the crisis what it may, they must sustain their august position and never descend from the high pedestal which they usually occupy in the mental vision of the millions to whom it is permitted to them to dispense justice. A little narrowness of view, a little of race prejudice, is enough to dash them down from their high position. When people see their Judges abandoning the position of umpires and descending into the arena of race controversy, as the Calcutta European Judges did during the memorable tempest of the Ilbert Bill, they begin to lose respect for them and forget to look upon them as their oracles. The conduct of the Calcutta English Judges themselves at the time of the Ilbert Bill was sufficient to hurl any god from heaven to earth. Such instances as the conduct of Mr. Justice Norris during the trial of the Piggot-Hastie case, the action of some of the Calcutta Judges in the affront recently put upon the Calcutta Municipality by the Government of Mr. Rivers Thompson, and the conduct of a Divisional Bench of the Bombay High Court in the trial of Mr. Hewett, are not calculated to impress the public with a high sense of the dignity of the High Court Judges. "Respect thyself, and others will respect thee" is a rule as much applicable to the vulgar denizens of this earth as to their Lordships the High Court Judges, and any departure from that golden rule is sure to be visited with punishment. We all know that our High Courts are yet adorned with some Judges the equals of whom it would be difficult to find, and what respect the public yet have for our High Courts is due only to the presence of such noble beings on the bench. We are proud to be able to assert that on the whole our High Courts have generally been what they ought to be, but what we mean to say is that some ugly instances suffice not only to counterbalance but outweigh the influence produced by years of uprightness and steady work. Another blame which in the opinion of Sir Richard Garth attaches to Government in the matter of the Rent Bill is their comparative inattention to the memorials that pour upon them from the subject classes. No doubt this is a grievance, and we are indebted to Sir Richard for calling attention to it. But we would ask his Lordship what effect he gave to the sense of the people in respect to the Ilbert Bill controversy. Notwithstanding the general consensus, the Calcutta Judges adhered to their race prejudices and came out in a minute the like of which we would only hope they will never frame again. If the Calcutta Judges had at that time taken account of the wishes of the country, had they held an equal balance in their hands, and had they not been influenced, unconsciously though it may be, by race prejudice, they would never have drawn upon themselves the ridicule from the effects of which they still suffer. Once they gave way to race prejudice and their magic was lost, and they cannot now produce that effect which they would otherwise have produced by their able strictures on the Rent Bill. [The Gujaráti (94) of the same date expresses approval of the boldness displayed by Sir Richard Garth in his minute on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, and hopes that he will continue to give his opinion with independence and honesty.]

Recommends the Bombay Government to introduce the scheme of cultivating and colonizing waste lands into the Bombay Presidency.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 29th September expresses approval of the endeavours made by the authorities of the North-West Provinces for the cultivation and colonization of waste lands in the province, and says that the scheme will prove beneficial to the people as well as to Government. It is a profitable and unobjectionable way of increasing Government revenue from agriculture. It is very much to be wished that the Local Government would follow in the footsteps of the authorities of the North-West Provinces and introduce the scheme into this presidency. Waste lands abound in the Bombay Presidency and a large number of persons can be found to till them. The introduction of the scheme will prove very advantageous.

A suggestion to the Bombay Government for giving help and encouragement to students who have passed out of agricultural colleges and schools.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 3rd October points out the necessity and advantages of Government helping those who have successfully passed out of agricultural colleges and classes opened in the country, and says :—Government have given encouragement to every branch of learning when newly started. Why not then should a similar course be followed in the case of the passed agricultural students? Government ought to give a certain extent of land in villages to these men for cultivation, furnish them with agricultural implements, and give them other assistance. Government can then recover their money by instalments. They will not incur any risk in so doing. On the contrary they will encourage active young men to become agriculturists, and their working on improved principles will tempt the old-fashioned ryots to follow in their footsteps. Government spend a large amount of money for the establishment of model farms. The object of Government in so doing will be greatly supported by the establishment of small model farms in different places. We very much wish that the Bombay Government should take up this suggestion. They have been praised throughout the country for their anxiety for the welfare of the ryots by their resolution on the granting of discount on land revenue paid in advance. We humbly request Sir James Fergusson to speedily issue a resolution offering pieces of waste lands and the necessary amount of money for cultivation to those who have studied at agricultural colleges and wish to work as agriculturists. The land revenue from these waste lands should be charged only after the lapse of a certain number of years. Government may exercise supervision over the farms of these men and may order any improvement and changes they may think fit.

Says that a separate committee should be appointed by the Bombay Government for the Antwerp and London Exhibitions.

The same newspaper of the 4th October, in writing on the recent resolution of the Bombay Government on the Antwerp, London and Bombay Exhibitions, says:—The Local Government have expressed their readiness to contribute one lákh of rupees for representing this city in the London Exhibition. This is a very liberal amount and it is to be hoped that Sir James Fergusson will also be liberal in contributing towards the erection of an art gallery as a memento of the Bombay Exhibition. But the most objectionable part of the resolution is that which entrusts the management of the three exhibitions to the new Executive Committee of the Bombay Exhibition. The work of the local exhibition will be very onerous, and we shall be content if the committee is able to give all its attention to it. We think that the work of all the three exhibitions will suffer by this burden on the committee. We therefore request the Government of Sir James Fergusson to appoint a separate but small committee for the Antwerp and London Exhibitions. The desire of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales for the presence of Indian artisans at the London Exhibition is very creditable to him, and we shall be glad if a few artisans are sent from this presidency. But His Royal Highness and the Bombay Government ought to give some encouragement for carrying out that proposal. The London Committee and the Local Government ought to defray a portion of the expenses, the rest being paid by the public and the artisans themselves. The plan of sending them to England will prove advantageous to the country and the Government.

Requests Sir James Fergusson to nominate a Mahomedan gentleman to the office of Sheriff for the ensuing year.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 29th September says:—Some of our contemporaries have been recommending several names for the next year's shrievalty. The Times of India suggests that of Mr. K. N. Kábráji, editor of the Rást Goftár, who has distinguished himself by his literary works in the Gujaráti language and for some of the social reforms which he has been instrumental in introducing into the Pársi community. There could be no objection to the selection of Mr. Kábráji. On the other hand it would be a fitting acknowledgment by Government of his services in the journalistic line. But we think that it is time Government selected some Mahomedan gentleman for the shrievalty. Sir James Fergusson will be exercising his patronage in this matter for the last time, and it is but fair that the Mahomedans should have a recognition of their claims at his hands. This suggestion has been made by more than one organ in the press, and it is to be hoped it will commend itself to the favourable notice of His Excellency.

Some suggestions about the selection of a Native gentleman for the shrievalty of Bombay for next year.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 4th October says:—The Anglo-Indian and the Native papers have been dwelling for some days past on the subject of the appointment of the Sheriff of Bombay for the next year. The consensus of opinion is that the entire public wish for the bestowal of the honour on a member of the Mahomedan community. But if Government are going to confer the shrievalty on a Pársi gentleman, the public would point in the first place to Mr. Dádábhái Navroji and then to Mr. Navroji Fardunji as worthy persons for the honour. We however beg to remind Sir James Fergusson of the promise given by him last year of the expediency of appointing a Mahomedan gentleman to the shrievalty on a future occasion. The Jáme here quotes a letter signed by Mr. G. H. R. Hart, Private Secretary, and dated Government House, Parel, 29th November 1883, and addressed to a gentleman intimating that the expediency of appointing a Mahomedan gentleman to the shrievalty will be duly considered on a future occasion, and says:—It is not necessary to inform Sir James that the occasion has arrived. As this is the last opportunity which he will have for conferring the honour, it is to be hoped that the choice will fall on a Mahomedan gentleman.

Sir James can pride himself after retiring from Bombay that he did a great service to the cause of learning among a community which is sadly wanting in it. [The Yajdán Parast (122) of the 28th September approves of the suggestion for the appointment of Mr. Cumrudin Tyebji to the shrievalty, and says that if the honour is to be conferred on a Pársi gentleman, Mr. Dádábhái Navroji is the fittest person. The Kaiser-i-Hind (101) of the same date will be very glad to see either Mr. Cumrudin Tyebji or his brother, the Honourable Budrudin Tyebji, appointed to it. If no Mahomedan gentleman is selected, then Mr. K. N. Kábráji has the next best claim. The Gujaráti (94) of the same date does not wish to make the question of nominating the Sheriff a sectional one. It strongly advocates the claims of Mr. Dádábhái Navroji, disapproves of the suggestion made in the Times of India for the nomination of Mr. K. N. Kábráji to it, and says that the comparison of the latter with the late Honourable Kristodás Pál is like comparing the editor of the London Times with some Eurasian editor. Moreover, Mr. Kábráji has himself said in his paper, the Rást Goftár, that Mr. Dádábhái Navroji is more deserving of the honour. The Satyă Mitră (111) of the same date styles the suggestion made by the Times of India for Mr. Kábráji's appointment as unworthy and full of flattery. It does not believe that the suggestion has emanated from the European editor of that paper. The article in the Times appears to have been contributed by some hired Native writer.]

Complains against the great increase in the tax on toddy and liquor.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 30th September complains of the constant increase in the tax on toddy and liquor, points out the disadvantages of such a policy and the advisability of reducing the tax, and says:—The British authorities, not content with increasing the tax on toddy and liquor in their dominions, are now endeavouring to have it enhanced in Native States and foreign territories also. The tax on toddy in the British districts near Daman has been recently increased, and the Portuguese Government have also been recommended to follow a similar course in the adjacent territories belonging to them. Native princes have also been prevailed upon to increase the tax on toddy and liquor. Though the latter were unwilling to do so, the necessity of the measure was pointed out to them and they had to yield. But why should the British Government impose such a heavy tax on toddy and liquor, and why should they force other States to do the same? All the sources for deriving revenue have been fully developed by the British and there is not one single source now left for increasing their income. The burden of taxation on the people has increased and a cry has been raised for some time for lessening that burden. The income from ábkári has been developed to its fullest extent and the endeavours to increase it have exceeded due bounds. The recent enhancement of the tax is unjust; it will crush down the dealers in toddy and liquor and will prove injurious to public interests. The authorities ought to abandon this policy and should act justly and mercifully. The number of dealers in toddy and liquor is gradually decreasing and the breaking down of their business will entail loss on Government.

Concession of the privilege of trial by jury in criminal cases.

The Kalpataru (36) of the 28th September is glad that the right of trial by jury in certain criminal cases has been extended to the inhabitants of the districts of Ahmedabad, Surat, Belgaum and Karáchi, but is surprised that this privilege should be withheld from the people of the Sholápur District. There are plenty of qualified persons to sit on jury trials in Sholápur, and it would be well if their services were availed of for the discharge of this important public duty. It is to be hoped that Government will extend to the inhabitants of the Sholápur District the benefit of jury trials in criminal cases. [The Suryodayă (65) of the 29th September and the Arunodayă (18) of the 28th September in referring to the same matter strongly urge Government to extend to the people of Thána the right of jury trials in criminal cases.]

Requests Government to take over the administration of the affairs of the Mullánji, the high-priest of the Boráhs, into their hands.

The Gujarát Mitra (74) of the 28th September points out the extravagance and indebtedness of the Mullánji (high-priest of the Boráhs) and the disorderly management of his affairs, and says :—The Mullánji is a first class chief. When a Rája is found unable to protect his subjects or is vicious and unworthy of the throne, or when he cannot govern his State and the latter becomes involved in debt, Government take the management of the State into their own hands and appoint fit persons to conduct it. Government should in the case of the Mullánji do the same. They should nominate good and competent Boráhs as trustees for the management of his estate. The latter should allow the Mullánji a certain sum befitting his position for the maintenance of himself and family, and the remaining portion of his large income should be used for the liquidation of his debts. An audited account of the income and expenditure of the Mullánji should be published every six months for the information of his castemen. Such an arrangement will prove very beneficial to the Mullánji. It is the wish of every Boráh that the Mullanji's estate should be well managed and that all his debts should be paid off. Government would earn the blessings of the Boráh community if they were to interfere. The Mullánji himself is in favour of Government supervision, but his adherents are too strong for him and hence the evil continues unchecked.

Disapproves of the prosecution for libel of the Poona Observer newspaper in Bombay.

The Gujaráti (94) of the 28th September, in commenting on the summons granted by Mr. Cooper, Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, on the proprietor and publisher of the Poona Observer newspaper at the instance of Major Hogg for libel, says :—The Magistrate has not shown any additional reasons for granting the summons at the second request made by the complainant. The paper ought to be prosecuted in the place where it is published. Poona is in all respects fitted for the trial. It is a dangerous practice that the case should be conducted here simply with a view to procure competent legal assistance. Hereafter there will be no objection to the prosecution of the Bombay Gazette and the Times of India before the Magistrate at Simla. The reason of the prosecution of the Mahrátta (2), the Kesári (38) and the Dnyán Prakásh (9) newspapers for libel in Bombay was that they were distributed and sold in this city through their agent. But such is not the case with the Poona Observer, and it is not right to treat it as if it was published in Bombay. The proprietors of newspapers ought to get a solution of this question, otherwise it will go hard with them in future. [A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (109) of the same date, writing from Poona, expresses surprise at the issuing of the summons by Mr. Cooper against the Poona Observer, and says that as the London Times is sold and read in the Fiji Islands, it might be prosecuted in those islands as well. The Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date expresses similar sentiments and wishes for an alteration in the present law regarding the publication of newspapers with a view to save their proprietors from being harassed. The Pársi Punch (107) of the same date thinks it very hard that the proprietor and publisher of the Poona Observer should have to take his trial in Bombay.]

Requests the Chief Justice and the Judges of the Bombay High Court to close the Court on Pársi holidays.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 3rd October, in referring to the list of holidays published in the Government Gazette on which the High Court at Bombay is to be closed, regrets the omission of Pársi holidays from that list, and says :—It is not necessary to inform the Judges of the High Court that many Pársis are employed in it and that the Pársi community has much business with it. We recommend the Chief Justice and his brethren to close the Court on six chief Pársi holidays. By this concession the Judges will lay the Pársi community under a deep obligation. It is time that this oft-repeated request should be granted.

Necessity of removing the Arsenal in the Fort to some distant and lonely place in Bombay.

The Rást Goftár (109) of the 28th September, in referring to the recent fire in the Arsenal in the Fort, points out the danger to the residents of that quarter by allowing gunpowder to be stored in this thickly-populated part of the town, and says that when the dyers have been compelled to remove from the Rangári Moholla to Dádar and the dealers in hides to Dhárávi for the preservation of public health, why should such a source of danger as the Arsenal be allowed to remain in the mercantile part of the town inhabited by peace-loving men? A committee of enquiry is to be appointed to find out the cause of the fire. It should also be entrusted with the work of considering its removal to some far and lonely place in the city. [The Satyă Mitră (111) and the Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Says that police peons are observed frequenting gambling houses in Vengurla.

The Vengurla Vritt (69) of the 25th September, in its local news, states that police peons are seen frequenting gambling houses in Vengurla, and they do so perhaps with the object of extorting money. The District Police Superintendent should make minute enquiries and punish the guilty parties.

A suggestion for spreading information regarding post office savings banks among the poor and illiterate classes.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 3rd October expresses satisfaction with the success of the post office savings banks and says that the poor and illiterate classes have not come to know of their existence. If they know that there are such institutions, their business will increase and the poor people will be benefited. The Samáchár recommends Government to take measures for spreading information regarding post office savings banks on a larger scale amongst the poorer classes.

Education.

Does not approve of the abolition of the Professorship of Mathematics in the Science College.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 28th September, in a paragraph headed "Mathematical chair in the Science College," says:—If there be any truth in what a correspondent of ours complains, we may unhesitatingly say "Et tu Brute" of Principal Cooke, whose professed sympathies in the cause of Native progress are so well known. A mathematical chair in an engineering college is of great importance on account of the part which mathematics plays in the entire course of that college, and consequently a separate chair of that branch is admittedly a necessity. This being so, we are surprised to hear of a proposal having been made for the breaking up of that chair and dividing the work amongst College subordinates. Pecuniarily the arrangement may profit some individuals, but will it strengthen the College or make the study of mathematics much more liked by the students? We hope Dr. Cooke's proposal does not partake of the nature of an inspiration from some quarter as an ultimate hit against the admission of Natives into our graded educational service. We hope if the proposal has at all come before Government, His Excellency the Governor will not give his assent without duly considering the importance of that chair in a Science College. The chair has hitherto been held by a Native gentleman of position, and a fit successor to him can easily be found from the Native community. As a mathematical tutor, the abilities of Mr. Dalvi are well known; there is also Mr. Rávji Shástri Devkule, the mathematical teacher in the Poona Training College. Both will do full credit to the post. Under the circumstances we trust Sir James will do justice to the claims of the Native community and not be carried away by a zeal for economy which, to say the least, is not necessary in our Educational Department.

Native States.

Strongly disapproves of the abolition of the armies of Native princes, and observes that such a measure will alienate their affection from the British Government.

In an article headed "Native States" the Sind Times (5) of the 26th September says:—It is a great pity that just at this time the London Times should open its columns to a proposal to reduce the armies of Native States, and thus produce a tension of feeling among them, if not positive aversion to British supremacy. Surely the writer knows full well that this discussion is distasteful to Native princes. Surely he knows that every

Native prince with any amount of self-respect will resent any undue c interference in his affairs on the part of the English Government, when h remains unquestioned and when he adheres strictly to the terms of th concluded with him or his predecessor. The author of the articles in states that the subjects of Native princes are dissatisfied with the portions of the troops employed, and that the money saved by redu army should be turned to better use. But in the first place how has t found out that the subjects of Native States feel any discontent on t Why, even in British India it has been questioned whether the great m any discontent at all on any subject, although every English or vernacu might have said they did. But suppose that the Times is right. Su every soul in every feudatory or tributary State feels it an intolerabl to be saddled with the expenses of a large army, and that he will be g relieved of his share of it at any cost. Does it necessarily follow tha pedient to lower the prestige of such States and to set their rulers aga suzerain, especially at a time when Russians are approaching nearer and the confines of British India? The Times talks of the discontent of t in Native States, but are the army expenses in British India less intole likely to produce discontent? Your home charges, your effective non-effective charges, your military budgets and your exchange acc they not a source of discontent? If they are not, will the Times inform how it lighted on the discovery that the subjects of Native prin discontented with the disbursements now made by their rulers o of their armies? If it stands to reason that an unnecessarily large ex must produce discontent, then we say that discontent prevails as British India as in the Native States,—nay, more in British India, fo people know much more of the doings of their governors than in th States. The argument of discontent, the Times ought to know, is edged one. It has as much application to British India as to no India. But as a matter of fact the subjects of Native princes are n least discontented. Most of them have an affection for their heredit which the Queen-Empress herself may well envy. That affection c great deal of strain, much more than has ever yet been put upon Native princes have already many grievances, thanks to our politica The Calcutta Statesman has been doing yeoman's service in bringi opinion to bear upon them, and even other papers have been adv court of appeal for princes. It is surely suicidal to add to these g by such a sweeping interference as that contemplated by the Time can be no more than two lines of policy in the matter. Either trust princes, or distrust them. Either trust the people of India, or distr If you trust them, then do not talk of gagging either the people or t by your restrictions, legislative or executive. If you do not trust them can hardly be safe until and unless you establish a despotism, abs defiant,—a despotism like that of the Czar of Russia, tempered like h by Dynamitism and Nihilism. The Native princes and the people of at heart perfectly loyal. If you treat them as if they were disloyal, y perhaps make them so. Turn your attention, we say, to all that conc welfare. Spend your revenues not in useless subsidies and delimita missions, but in winning their hearts by the benignity and equal your sway. And rest assured the armies of Native States and the your people will be rather a shield and a buckler than a source of disquiet.

Strongly disapproves of the abolition of the armies of Native States.

In an article headed "The Armies of Native States" the Indu Pr of the 29th September says;—It happens States which have thus drawn forth the correspondent of the Times are the very Sta have been most uniformly and steadily lo British Government. Ever since its establishment in India, notal hour of trial, the occasion of the sepoy war, and the particular point the writer proposes to disable them is the very one by virtue of v British Government found them most helpful at that time. Whateve may be entertained as to the causes of the sepoy war, there is one which most writers are agreed, namely, that the best security of the British Government was then found to lie in the loyalty and co-operation of the Native Chiefs, and that the issue might have been doubtful, or at least the struggle might have been considerably prolonged, if the Chiefs had been hostile. Many memorable words may be recalled showing what value was set upon the faithful attachment of the Chiefs by distinguished officers of the period. It has always been said to the credit of our Chiefs, particularly the Nizám, the Gáikawád, Sindia and Holkar, that they were thoroughly devoted to the British Government and that they rendered valuable assistance in relieving British officers in distress. If such was the temper of the Chiefs at a time when there were great temptations to go astray, what has occurred now to justify any suspicion of their attachment? On the contrary the mutual relations of the British Government have been eminently satisfactory, the authority of the paramount power has been all the more strengthened, and the States have been gradually improving in their administration so as to deserve increasing trust and confidence. In foreign wars they have offered, and Government have accepted, military assistance. In all matters of administration they are guided by the advice of British political officers. When they are enjoying such calm security and prosperity, is their confidence in British honesty to be rudely shaken by breaking plighted word and depriving them of their most cherished privileges? It is idle to contend that the armies are a danger to British peace, for they have always been pronounced to be no better than a rabble. Their discipline and their arms have never been such as to excite the jealousy or fear of any persons except such writers as the critic in the Times. The argument that they necessitate the keeping up of a large British force is equally silly and disingenuous. The Native armies are too feeble to require any counterpoise, and even if they were abolished the British Indian army would be all the same maintained at its present strength, if not increased. The compassion for the subjects of the Native States is too far-fetched and counterfeit to need any remark. Their sufferings need not disturb the equanimity of such mischievous busy-bodies as the correspondent of the Times, for we can assure them that the subjects of Native States are quite contented and happy, and do not stand in need of any compassion from them. If the subjects were themselves polled, we venture to think they would all vote for the maintenance of the armies. The fact is the armies give food and raiment to many people who would otherwise starve. To people who advocate the abolition of Native armies it never occurs that the armies serve any useful purpose to the States themselves. The armies of Native States are quite as useful and necessary for the preservation of peace and order in their territory as the British army is to the British Government. For purposes of guard, patrol and recovery of revenue from half-savage people the military establishments of Native States are highly useful and even necessary, and if abolished will require to be replaced by an equally strong police force. Another circumstance to be considered is that the disbandment of the armies will throw out of employment a lot of people quite unused to any other occupation, who will swell the ranks of lawless men and will greatly increase crime and violence. These writers on Native armies possess little local knowledge of the conditions and requirements of Native States. In making their proposals they are blind to all other considerations except their own supposed interests. But whether in the interests of the British Government or in those of Native States, the abolition of the armies will be highly impolitic and injudicious. Instead of abolition the better course seems to be to improve them and make them more efficient. As the Times of India suggests, a commission may be appointed to consider what steps should be taken to put the armies of Native States on a footing of equality with the British army, and to make the former in a manner part and parcel of the latter. The maintenance of efficient armies by Native princes will be a source of strength to the British Government. In ordinary times the armies will relieve the Government of part of its burden of military expenditure, and in times of war they will act as a reserve force for the protection of the country. Trust creates trust, while distrust creates distrust. It is needless to say that the best security of our Government lies in an attitude of watchful trust, and it cannot be better achieved than by assuring the Native princes of all their rights and privileges and taking them into confidence.

Says that the British Government should behave towards their own subjects and Natives with justice, and strongly disapproves of the abolition of the armies of Native States.

The Késari (38) of the 30th September says that Native States and vernacular newspapers are eyesores to thoughtless Europeans. These mad Europeans imagine that if the British power ever receives a shock it will be from the Native States, or if any internal commotion takes place it will be caused by the inflammatory writings in the newspapers. They consider that the armies of Native States are a source of danger to British rule and Native newspapers are a standing menace to it. For these reasons they are suggesting that the armies of Native States should be abolished and the Native press gagged. These foolish suggestions have been made by the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times and they have received the support of that powerful journal. Those Europeans who think that it is no longer necessary to observe faithfully the treaties which have been from time to time made with Native States by the British Government, and that they might now safely be broken, should reflect on the consequences of their subjects following their example. The Europeans who imagine that their hold over India is kept by the sword alone are labouring under a delusion. The peace which at present reigns in India is entirely owing to the just policy of the British Government and not to its military strength. To subjugate a foreign people requires the aid of an army, but justice and impartiality are the only means by which the hold over it can be continued. If the English people in India began to kill Natives, ravish their women and plunder them under the belief that their empire was kept up entirely by force, then it would be seen at once how long tranquillity continues in India. It may be safely affirmed that the days of the English Government will be numbered when the English authorities begin to act unjustly towards the subject population. The Natives are loyal to the paramount power on account of its justice. If the British Government were to forcibly abolish the armies of Native States and annex their territories, then Natives would come to think that no reliance could be placed on the promises of that Government. By abolishing the armies of Native States the British Government will be cutting off one source of aid in case of commotion. By extending the area of the British Empire in India the work of administering the Government will become vastly more difficult than it is now, and it will be no easy task to keep the people contented. If the English people wish their sway over India to remain perpetual, they should never behave towards their own subjects or the Native States in a faithless manner.

Complains of the conduct of a Jáin religious mendicant in Pálitána.

The Nyáyá Darshak (106) of the 29th September says:—Owing to the perpetration of frauds on the firm of Anandji of Pálitána by some of its servants new employés have been sent to Pálitána, and some Shráwak gentlemen have also gone to examine and set right the state of affairs there. But the old servants harass them. A Jain religious mendicant named Virvaji alias Virka comes at their instigation to the firm, creates disturbance, extorts money from the new comers, and threatens destruction in case of refusal to comply with his demand. A few days ago he rushed sword in hand on a man who was at the time in the premises of the firm, and would have killed him had not some men interfered. If the Pálitána Darbár and the local police remain indifferent, the lives of the pilgrims and the people will be endangered. It is to be regretted that the police have not brought the Jain to justice. A plot was set up against one Talakchand Mánekchand residing in the Motishá's dharmashála, who was known to favour the new servants of the firm. The widow of his deceased brother was charged with being pregnant. Though truth triumphed at last, no notice was taken by the Pálitána authorities of the intriguers. On the contrary the widow had to furnish securities for preventing her from committing suicide owing to this false charge being brought against her. Is this justice? We request the Assistant Political Agent and the Thákor of Pálitána to drive away Virka from the State, otherwise he will some day or other commit murder. The Pálitána authorities ought also to make arrangements for saving the new servants of the firm from being harassed by its old servants. [The Ahmedabad Samáchár (78) of the 1st October supports the above prayer of the Nyáyá Darshak newspaper.]

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
7th October 1884.

INDEX.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Ábkári: Complaint against the great increase in the tax on toddy and liquor ... ...
Administration of India:
  Expression of opinion that English statesmen trained in the free atmosphere of English politics should be appointed to provincial Governorships instead of Indian Civilians ... ...
  Objection to Mr. Blunt's remark that the natives of India are disaffected towards the British Government and expression of opinion that many advantages will result from the travels of men like Mr. Blunt... ... ...
  Remarks on the estrangement existing between Europeans and Natives and advice to both parties ... ...
Administration of the affairs of Mullánji, the high-priest of the Boráhs:
  Request to Government to take over the — into their hands ...
Agriculture:
  Recommendation to the Bombay Government to introduce the scheme of cultivating and colonizing waste lands into the Bombay Presidency ... ...
  Suggestion to the Bombay Government for giving help and encouragement to students who have passed out of agricultural colleges and schools ... ...
Appointments: Complaint regarding the exclusion of Natives from several public departments and particularly from the railway department ... ...
Bombay Arsenal: Necessity of removing the — in the Fort to some distant and lonely place in the city ... ...
Exhibitions: Expression of opinion that a separate committee should be appointed by the Bombay Government for the Antwerp and London —
Judicial matters:
  Concession of the privilege of trial by jury in criminal cases ...
  Disapproval of the prosecution for libel of the Poona Observer newspaper in Bombay ... ...
  Request to the Chief Justice and the Judges of the Bombay High Court to close the Court on Pársi holidays ... ...
Minute on the Bengal Tenancy Bill:
  Criticism on the strictures passed by Sir Richard Garth on Government in his— ... ...
  Disapproval of the condemnation of Lord Ripon's Government pronounced by Sir Richard Garth in his— ... ...
  Disapproval of the opinions expressed by Sir Richard Garth in his — against Government ... ...
Police: Statement that — peons are observed frequenting gambling houses in Vengurla ... ...
Postal matters: Suggestion for spreading information regarding Post Office Savings Banks amongst the poor and illiterate classes ...
Shrievalty of Bombay:
  Request to Sir James Fergusson to nominate a Mahomedan gentleman to the — for the ensuing year ... ...
  Suggestion about the selection of a Native gentleman for the — for next year ... ...
Vernacular Press:
  Denial of the charge of disloyalty brought by the London Times against the — of India and advocacy of the continuance of the liberal policy of Lord Ripon in regard to this and other matters.
  Expression of satisfaction with the speech made by Mr. Gladstone at Edinburgh on 1st September advocating the freedom of the — of India ... ...
Viceroyalty of India:
  Comments on the opinion of the Indian Nation newspaper of Calcutta that Lord Ripon's administration has been a failure, and remarks that it has been eminently successful and that Lord Ripon is a statesman of a high order ... ...

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
67	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
68	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	300
69	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	250
*70	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
71	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
72	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	500
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
73	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
74	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	475
75	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	485
76	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
77	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	200
	GUJARA'TI.
78	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
79	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	850
80	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	394
81	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
82	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	415
83	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,175
84	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	500
85	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	50
86	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	700
*87	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.	200
88	„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly	585
89	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,025
90	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	300
91	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
92	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
93	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	984
94	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
95	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	300
96	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*97	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
98	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	800
99	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,350
100	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	125
101	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	810
*102	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	925
104	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	250
105	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.	350
106	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
107	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
108	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
109	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,750
110	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
111	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
112	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	327
113	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
114	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	620
115	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	1,700
116	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	423
*117	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
118	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
119	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	85
120	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	778
121	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
122	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	180
124	„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do.	300
125	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	915
126	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	115
	SANSKRIT.
127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	150
	URDU.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	500
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	327
	SINDI.
132	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different head which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the New paper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issue In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in th Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusio never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is print with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of th Government of Bombay the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Takes exception to certain statements made by Sir Richard Temple before the British Association at Montreal with reference to the taxation of the British Empire and pronounces him to be a parrot.

In an article headed "A Statistical Parrot" the Indian Spectator (1) of the 5th October says:—The 29th of August last must have been a red letter day in the annals of the enlightened citizens of Montreal. On that eventful day they woke for the first time to find themselves famous all of a sudden. For this marvellous incident, unique in the local history, they were indebted to their guests, the British Association. That learned body of social philanthropists were so much overpowered by the gushing hospitality of the city where they temporarily sojourned that, not to be outdone in reciprocal civilities, they afforded ample amusement to their hosts by exhibiting on the public platform the greatest curiosity to be found in the world of natural history, which they had carried along with them from the shores of Albion. It was no other than a parrot of English breed, of the "bluest blood" but acclimatised and trained for upwards of thirty years on the soil of India. It was a bird of wonderful energy, and still more wonderful gift of gab, and one which in its flighty movements had starred it over east and west, north and south, "from Thibet to Ceylon, from the Khyber Pass to the frontier of Ava, from the valley of Assam to the city of Kandahar." How all Montreal that went to hear this talkative biped must have been overwhelmed by its chirping can only be imagined. The oracle of Printing House square has omitted to inform the world of the effect produced on the Montrealites by our rara avis. Sir Richard Temple's performance was undeserving of a scientific body that has outlived half a century of progressive science. It fell far short of the long-winded harangue on social reform delivered last year at Huddersfield. Even the one or two criticisms and inferences he attempted to draw in the present address are so obviously fallacious that it passes comprehension that they have not yet been challenged. For a member of a great scientific association to handle figures so unscientifically is indeed lamentable. For instance, he groups together the total military and naval forces of the British Empire and gives their cost. He then observes that the defensive armaments of the empire by sea and land cost 41 millions sterling annually, or 20 per cent. of the total revenue and receipts, which proportion is less than that shown by any great state in the world, except the United States. If the expenditure be compared with the whole population of the empire, then it amounts to less than 4 shillings a head, which (always with the exception of the United States) is the cheapest rate to be found in any great state of the world. We beg to draw the attention of the reader to the portion italicised. It is well known that the total cost of the army and navy of Great Britain, which guard not only the United Kingdom proper, but all the colonial possessions, is 27½ millions sterling. Indian troops, British and Native, cost 15 millions more. These make up 42 millions. This cost, he says, is only 20 per cent. of the revenue and receipts of the whole British Empire. Now we protest against Sir Richard reckoning in his own arithmetic. The 27½ millions which are spent by the people of the United Kingdom are contributed by them alone, save some insignificant portion. Similarly the 15 millions expended by the Government of India are contributed by the tax-payers of British India alone. The gross revenue of the former country is 83 millions. So that the expenses of army and navy there come to more than one-third, or a little over 33 per cent. and not 20 per cent., as Sir Richard would have us believe. Similarly the percentage for British India comes to 46 per cent., the gross revenue being 70 millions sterling. Is it at all scientific to include in the calculation of the proportion the revenue of those British colonies and possessions which have absolutely nothing or very little to pay for military purposes? The people of the United Kingdom would as much resent the misleading conclusion which Sir Richard has attempted to draw from his statistics, namely, that they only contribute 20 per cent. instead of 33·6 per cent. to the maintenance of their army and navy, as the people of India who are made to pay 46 per cent. On the other hand it would be absurd for Canada, Australia, Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Hongkong and other British possessions in the East and West to take credit by asserting that they contribute 20 per cent. towards the military and naval strength of the entire British Empire. The assertion in the address that the proportion of 20 per cent.

"is less than that shown by any great state in the world" save the Unit States, is misleading. India is mercilessly taxed for military expenditure the ratio of its gross annual revenue. And the army and navy of England the most expensive, save that of Denmark. Similarly delusive is the proportic of cost per population as given by Sir Richard Temple. In Great Britai according to the true principles we have shown above, it comes to 16 shilling and not 4 shillings as the optimist at Montreal would have the world to believ On a similarly unscientific basis Sir Richard has calculated the incidence taxation in the whole of the British Empire, and has held up the ratio of £1 sterling per head of the population as the smallest in the world! It is supe fluous to say that this is equally fallacious. To say that in Great Britain, wit a revenue of 83 millions, the expenditure per head is only 25 shillings, when reality it is 47 shillings, is absurd. The Canadians would poohpooh the statemer if they knew that they pay 27 shillings. So also the Australians, who pay 141 shi lings per head. The fallacy of Sir Richard's principle of calculation is so tran parent that we need not further analyse it. Does he mean to infer that the severa races and nations subject to British sway bear very little taxation and that they a quite happy and contented? If so, the vocation of Finance Ministers will be soo gone. The various Governments need not try to raise the wind for increase cost of administration. In fact, the people everywhere should resent an attempt at increase. Only they must try if they cannot make Governments carr on their respective work without any revenue at all. And then Sir Richar will be able to announce to the world at some future meeting of the Britis Association, say in Siberia or Tierradel Feugo, that the rate of taxation p head is zero! A reference to the columns of the Times shows that there wa not a single speaker, and the number of speakers was legion, who had somethin new to impart in reference to some one branch of human knowledge. But th Thunderer has done an act of kindness by omitting to make mention of S Richard in the two reviews he has given of the proceedings of the Associatio All the more important speakers save "our own Sir Richard" have bee noticed. Such has been the fate of the blue-book administrator who onc dazzled the nebulous world of India. But a parrot, be he social, political statistical, is a parrot after all. There is an anecdote of a Persian parrot which not quite inapplicable to the subject of this notice. There was a parrot who its owner had taught one particular phrase, knowing that in many a conferenc with the bird it would hold good. The phrase was darin che shak, meanin "what doubt about it?"—a delightfully vague expression. For some time, b a series of happy coincidences it happened that the reply of the bird to certai questions put to it by visitors proved quite appropriate. The unsophisticate and uncritical marvelled at this prodigy of a parrot. What wisdom! How ap its answers! But the day of reckoning came, and under a rigid cross examina tion one day the wisdom of the bird proved to be the essence of folly, an its fame as a feathered-sage collapsed. Sir Richard Temple passed in Ind for a brilliant administrator and otherwise a man of profound knowledge. he not also a good Persian scholar?

Says that the labours of the Delimitation Commission will prove fruitless.

In an article headed "The Delimitation Commission and what it will do the same newspaper says:—All things considered, w fear that the Commission will prove quite negative i its results. It will prove a commission without an en and so a failure with regard to the object for whic it has been appointed. All the expense incurre on it may prove a waste, and England may once more find herself outwitted i diplomacy by the conjoint action of a semi-civilized European power and crafty oriental. That Afghanistan is outside the pale of Russian influence i as much of an exploded myth as the other one which the Beaconsfieldian polit cians of 1876-77 carried on their banner of foreign policy, namely, "the inte grity and independence of the Ottoman Empire." Under these circumstance may it not be better to stop all subsidies and presents of ammunition to th Amir and inform him that he may stew himself in his own justice; that Englan will look with indifference to his being a pensioner on the bounty of the Cza and his dominion falling in the hands of the same potentate; that the soone Russian territory was conterminous with the Indo-Afghan frontier the better that England has strength and resources enough to withstand the encr ment of Russia should she at any time make so rash an attempt; that in she will watch and wait how the glorious British Empire she has built u be wrested from her hands?

Advocates the increase of the age limit for the entrance examination of the Indian Civil Service and suggests the holding of the competitive examination simultaneously in India and England.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 5th October says:—The question Civil Service age limit is steadily making its
to the very inner consciousness of every edu Englishman, and evidence is not wanting to lead entertain hopes of some success. Even the Cal correspondent of the London Times, whose tende
are declaredly anti-Native, condescends to emph
the assertion of the whole Native press by s that the lowering of the age limit which was carried into effect some year practically excludes Natives from competing at the examinations in Eng
We are glad to observe even muscular Anglo-Indians of the above type ta the right view of the Salisbury regulations. But we Natives ought not to matters here. Mere raising the age limit either to twenty-three or to tw one, to say the least, cannot answer our present needs. What we oug strive after is the holding of a branch competitive examination in India si to the one now held in England. It is this concession alone that can mit to some extent the sacrifices, both social, physical and pecuniary, which our y men have to make for a chance success at the examinations. Let us im upon our hearts the good old saying, "Knock and it shall be given unto and we have no doubt our endeavours will be crowned with success.
British, though slow to attend, are a just people, and if we place before their genuine interests in our connection, we have no doubt of ultimate su

Makes certain charges against the store department of the India Office and condemns the system of indenting for articles made in England.

The same newspaper, in an article headed "The Store Depart of the India Office," says:—The value o innumerable articles purchased by this depart for despatch to India amounts now to two and twenty lakhs, the increase during the las years having been progressive in spite of the det nation of the Government of India to effect a con able saving by the purchase of articles which c manufactured cheaper here and of as good a quality as in England.
the hope and reasonable expectation that some of the capital annually sp England for the purchase of stores might be retained in India was frust
It is true enough that in the beginning of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty, aft resolution to stimulate Native manufactures had been promulgated, me were adopted for curtailing the extent of the indents to be made upon the department of the India Office. Cotton and woolen cloths, of which v qualities and large quantities had been manufactured, paper which co produced here in boundless quantities and is used extensively, as well as c articles of wood and iron, had been indicated as likely to be largely purc by the State here in lieu of being indented for from England at an enh cost. It is very well known that when war breaks out and an expedit undertaken in which many kinds of stores are required, the numerous co tors who furnish them make enormous profits. On such occasions much b and jobbery also occur, but how much more is that the case when these a are permanently organized on a regular plan so as to foil all attem abolish them? This was and is still actually done by the store departm combination with the manufacturers, both of which would have suffered derably by the threatened diminution of their gains. Their influence wit Council of India was exerted so successfully that they altogether thwarte Ripon's benevolent and wise intentions. As krors of rupees were at st is no wonder that great exertions were made not to allow them to sli those into whose pockets they were annually flowing; those exertion successful and the savings to the treasury of India as well as the encourag to the manufactures of India which would have resulted in the contrar vanished. The means to be adopted in order to make the resolution

e all stores procurable in India rather on the spot than ngland) effective must be stronger and more energetic it will remain a dead letter for ever, and the bright entertained concerning it will never be realized.

icle (73) of the 5th October says :—Whether the Marquis of Ripon will receive in the end from his own countrymen
the acknowledgments that are his due in consequence of the services rendered by his Lordship to his no means easy period of his office remains to be seen;
ndia are unanimously of opinion that the retiring himself remarkably well. While strictly careful to date the British supremacy over this country, he has omote the happiness and contentment of its people.
n true to the reasonable claims of the ruling race, he has
be a party to any measures tending to withhold from
due. Lord Ripon's policy of governing India has been e most approved principles of British statesmanship, and those of justice mingled with generosity towards Her ll denominations. If he has erred at any time he has onviction and ever ready to make amends at the first le desire has been to prove scrupulously faithful to the
the British Parliament without being unmindful of the of the twenty-five millions of the eastern subjects living of England. When thus giving practical effect to that raightforward proceedings have at times exposed him to hatred of a portion of his own countrymen. But he has praiseworthy patience and forbearance of a wise and he result is the remarkable success achieved by the evident from the material prosperity of the country and nt of the people to which all dispassionate judges will
. The Natives appreciate the obligations conferred on Viceroy as the chief administrator of their public affairs, ational welfare, the promoter of their social and political iend and supporter of their natural aspirations. They n Lord Ripon arrived in this country to assume charge dia was distracted by war, famine and disorders of finances of the Government were in a muddle, the y drooping, and the minds of the people sorely disontent with the then state of affairs and anxiety for the he order of the day. But now, when Lord Ripon is he reins of his office to his successor, the condition of the rent. The public exchequer is flourishing, the burden ively light, public works are progressing, and agricul-anufactures are prospering. Education is advancing, the free again, the people are given a greater share in the nunicipal affairs and raised higher in political status.
e, wrought between the time when Lord Ripon assumed rnment of India and when he is about to transfer it to roperly attributed in a great measure to his wisdom,
p. At least, such is the opinion of intelligent Natives.
dship's approaching departure from these shores with regret. [The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 7th October
f the people of Ahmedabad to Lord Ripon to honour their s way to Bombay is rare and unique in itself. The nsidered as emanating from the people of Gujarát, Cutch medabad is the ancient capital of Gujarát. It is to be will comply with this request. The Hitechchhu (75) of October also supports the prayer of the people of Ahmeord Ripon will, by complying with the request, fulfil the bay to the Gáikwád of Baroda to visit his capital before

tion

ded "The New Viceroy" the Sind Sudhár (132) of the 27th September says:—Although Lord Ripon will be away from our midst shortly, his memory will remain with us for centuries to come, and his name will ever untry. It was Lord Ripon who laid the foundation of ment scheme, it was he to whom we owe the enquiries of mission. No one ever fought so hard as Lord Ripon did es to equalise the rights and privileges of Europeans and e the commerce of the country and to encourage agriculin his position could do. The predecessor of Lord Ripon acular Press Act, which compelled Native journals to keep the background; and it was Lord Ripon who repealed it. has been to respect the feelings and opinions of those he never introduced any reform or improvement in haste; he nd consult those who were concerned in the measure under years back the natives of many of the large cities and memorials to Her Majesty the Queen requesting her to in the case of Lord Ripon and to allow him to remain in eriod of five years after he had once completed his term of wish him to remain for ever, but they must know that it culty that he has passed even four years and a half in our ate of India has not been agreeable to him. However, e of India, to introduce reforms in this country and to f the English on a firmer basis he has remained for four us. Although Lord Ripon has undoubtedly done much to ition of India, he has not done enough. There are many veniences under which the country is still labouring. The ry are subject to much injustice and oppression. There aled many Acts and laws which are greatly injurious to the ple and which require to be done away with. Under the n we expected the repeal of the Arms Act, but a great part e was spent in his efforts to remove the judicial disabilities in ameliorating the condition of the Bengal ryot. He nothing in this direction. Lord Ripon tried his best to ips due to the Settlement Department and his efforts have ful. The Salt and the Forest Acts are a great source of ople, especially to the poor, who cannot assert their rights
The fees levied in the civil courts continue exorbitant will however be going back to England soon, and it will ufferin to decide in this as well as in other matters of public ow in the footsteps of Lord Ripon and may he rule over us e to justice and public good!

tateews-
will tirey of ord-nder
e of

shed (98) of the 8th October, in referring to the statement made by the Truth newspaper that Lord Ripon will be made a Duke on his retirement from the Viceroyalty of India, says:—The people of this country will be exceedingly glad to see Lord Ripon, who has done so much for India, raised to a Dukedom. It is to be hoped that he will accept the title under the name of the Duke of India, in commemoration of his services in connection with this country. When a small village like Magdalla is associated with the name of Lord any villages and cities of Great Britain are associated with nown peers, why should not India be honoured in the same tly please the people of this country by assuming the title
when he is created a Duke. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (79) Hitechchhu (75) of Ahmedabad of the 9th October say that will be very glad to see Lord Ripon raised to a Dukedom.]

for ting ative

h headed "Death-knell of the proposed Press law" the Native Opinion (11) of the 5th October says:—The country cannot feel too grateful to Mr. Gladstone for the death-blow he has given to the proposal for resus-citating the now extinct Gagging Act in this country.
To some people like Mr. Lethbridge the character given to it by the Prime Minister of England may appear partly overdrawn, but Mr. Lethbridge himself, who has much practical Indian experience, ough not to forget merely for party purposes that in India it is the will of the magistracy and not the spirit of the law that mostly governs the people. However mild the character of the enactment, a small loophole is enough for one of the ruling race to snuff a Native writer out for the most trifling incidental fault. Mr. Lethbridge's mild description of Lord Lytton's enactment seems to have a sort of inner persuasive eloquence in it to fascinate the British public with the idea that an enactment of the character he describes may not prove harmful in a subject country like India. But since the Prime Minister has put his foot upon such lucubrations, the idea of another legislation of the kind may be set at rest, at least during the time Mr. Gladstone rules the destinies of England.

Strongly disapproves of the proposal of the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times to revive the Vernacular Press Act and recommends the Native newspapers to expose every unfair attempt to misrepresent the Native press.

In an article headed "The Native Press and its Enemies" the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 6th October says:—The article which appeared in a recent number of the London Times on the scurrility of the Bengal Native press deserves more than passing notice, both for the misrepresentations contained in it and the warning it serves to convey to that limited section of the Native press which is apt at times to be galvanized into irritability and discontent by such actions of Government as do not commend themselves to its approval. The writer in the London Times evidently wrote his attack against the Native press under inspiration, and, seeing that that paper has a correspondent in Calcutta who sends weekly telegrams to it, containing observations decidedly hostile to the natives of this country, it would not be altogether wrong to suppose that the London Times is being worked upon by a regularly planned conspiracy got up at Calcutta, the chief mission of which is to damage by all means possible the cause of the people of India in the eyes of the great English public. It may perhaps not be strictly accurate to say that this anti-Native movement derive its life and much of its support from the strong sympathy which Mr. River Thompson, the present Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, is said to entertain fo it. The belief has grown nearly universal that much of the virulence and spit which has been of late shown by certain Anglo-Indians in Bengal is due to th manner in which Mr. Thompson has tried to back it up. To whatever thi exhibition of race-feeling in the columns of the Times be due, it is extremel to be regretted that endeavours are being made to diffuse among the Englis public erroneous impressions about the Native press, and that an advantage i being taken of that limited section of that press which is prone to deliver itsel on the topics of the day in language more or less objectionable in tone an sentiment. In the article in the Times to which we have referred at th beginning the writer observes:—"The violence of language, of which there wa an epidemic in the Native press and among the Babus of the presidency town during the controversy over the ill-starred Ilbert Bill, has broken out onc more and with extraordinary rancour." He then cites a few passages from on or two Native papers in illustration of his views and then goes on to suggest th revival of the Gagging Act which was introduced in 1878 by Lord Lytto "At the same time it is the duty of the Government," says the writer, "t pay attention to these attempts, if regarded only as bazár rumours, in anothe form. If they are disdainfully neglected, the advantage we purchase by refusing to establish a censorship is deliberately thrown away." The scurrilou tone in which a few Bengal papers, which occupy a subordinate place in th Native press, are in the habit of indulging is by no means defensible, but a the same time we think that its critics are very unfair in condemning thos papers without bestowing a single thought on certain recent events which hav helped to produce the scurrility in question. The writer of the article in th London Times, in calling upon the Government to gag these papers, seems t labour under the impression that the objectionable sentiments which the Nativ papers he had in view had of late expressed were uttered while nothing had occurred to inspire such sentiments. The manner in which certain officials have carrie out certain measures in a high-handed manner of late in Bengal accounts a goo

f a small section of the Native press in Bengal. We pass rous hatred which was shown towards Natives during the rt Bill. But since the fate of that measure was decided, which were certainly calculated to offend and dissatisfy rations, we might cite the manner in which the High posed of what is now universally known as Webb's case, tudents at Krishnagar by Major Ramsay, and the Dacca was it to be expected that in the face of events such as without exception would write in a calm and moderate ndia have, like other people, human feelings, and looking in Bengal, it is a matter for compliment to the Native
ection of them is carried away by vehemence of feelings place. It is unreasonable to expect that all Native papers
d dispassionately when their betters in the Anglo-Indian t they cannot do so when their interests are affected.
extracts taken now and then from the Native papers to edition and disloyalty against them fairly taken? The ractised in this connection and the manner in which the pers are being copied in a mutilated form deserve severe lay the Englishman, and after him the Times of India, mns certain remarks made by the Amrit Bazar Patrika
cle in which that paper (the Patrika) professed to show orant masses in this country entertained about their the Patrika wrote on the subject was far different from en from its article in the columns of the Englishman and de it out to be. We need hardly characterise the attempt man to misrepresent the Amrit Bazar Patrika's article.
remains, what should be done to counteract this unfair
he interests of the Natives by trying to spread erroneous
m and the Native press among Englishmen? The remedy and is not difficult of accomplishment. The Native press nsible position, and the majority of the papers which, we in a tone of moderation ought to make it their duty to cumspection the doings of the hostile organization set up every unfair attempt to misrepresent the Native press.
trong disapproval ought to be expressed by the same ings of such papers as may be betraying a tendency to and disloyal language. We have to deal with a party crupulous in its manœuvres, and the best mode of dealing ts attempts is to keep a strict watch over it on the one by every means possible silly writing in the Native press

he ta
on ays
n-st

(5) of the 7th October, in an article headed "The Anglo-Indian Journals and the Vernacular Press," says:—
On the eve of the departure of Lord Ripon and the arrival of Lord Dufferin the Anglo-Indian press has taken up a new cry. From the recent writings of the Anglo-Indian fraternity in India and the Anglo-Indian correspondent of the London Times, it would appear that they are desirous of seeing another Gagging Act passed as the opening memorable event of the new Viceroy's term of office. Lord Lytton ous (or infamous) by his Vernacular Press Act, and our poraries would be delighted to see Lord Dufferin distinmanner. We can very well understand what prompts the in their clamorous demand for such an Act. It is not be-such a step will be of any public good, but because it will asters the indignity of any unfavourable or severe criticism rnacular press. The Anglo-Indian press make nothing of cially Natives, any number of names they choose. But he vernacular press retort in the same spirit and the same nce, could the Englishman or the Pioneer put up with the n a certain vernacular newspaper intended to represent urnals of such importance as those above named amounts to sedition and treason. It is easy to gag the vernacular press, but is it as easy to gag public opinion? Such writing as the Englishman has been so diligently translating would have done more harm if it had remained unwritten. The sound and fury signifying nothing would end as it begins in smoke. But our Anglo-Indian contemporaries do not love to comtemplate the sight. They do not like to be twitted by the Native press. And therefore the new Viceroy can do nothing better than shut up the mouth of the vernacular press and put a halter round its neck. Extreme Anglo-Indianism loves to look forward to an endless vista of Civilian absolutism and mute India. India should never have any such thing as public opinion. Whenever there is an appearance of its coming to life, it should be strangled with a stroke of the pen. India is for the Anglo-Indians. Only recently the Pioneer, commenting upon Native feelings of indignation on some failures of justice, said with cruel exultation that the Indians should be thankful that the British rule in India is not a purely military one, instancing Germany as an example. We have no hesitation when we say that the Pioneer and the Englishman have succeeded in arousing Native feelings more with their cruel and needless taunts than any number of brutal Europeans or unjust officials. It is because British rule in India is looked upon as a civil and beneficent one that it is so popular and so cheerfully submitted to by the various Indian people. Could any government, with any number of troops and vast military organisation, hope to govern India for any length of time under a system of terrorism and despotism? The English Government rests on a rock so long as it is based on the affections of the people and the country's peace. No purely military government can hold out in India for any length of time.

Disapproves of British interference in Mandalay and advises the Supreme Government to send a few experienced ambassadors to King Theebaw to explain to him his responsibilities and to hear his defence.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 11th October says:—Great indignation has been excited against King Theebaw in Rangoon owing to the recent massacre. Though he is wild and merciless, he does not seem to be as black as he is portrayed. The merchants of Rangoon are so much annoyed by the obstacles he has thrown in their way and by the losses caused to them that they would readily believe anything against him or give exaggerated accounts to represent him as very cruel. They are assisted in their criticisms by some of the local newspapers. We mus therefore receive with caution the news sent from Rangoon regarding the affair at Mandalay. There is no gain in incurring enmity with him at the presen juncture. The British Government must abstain as far as possible from giving him any cause to seek the help of the French, who are waiting for an opportunity to take his side. We do not advocate the cause of this brutal king. H has committed many shocking outrages, but it would be advantageous to sen some British representatives to him to explain to him his responsibilities and t hear his defence before carrying out the suggestion made by the infuriate people of Rangoon for taking strong measures against him. We hope tha before taking an hostile attitude the Government of India will send an experienced ambassador to Mandalay to remonstrate with King Theebaw.

Approves of the recent resolution of the Government of India for the admission of Natives into the Opium Department.

The Gujaráti (94) of the 5th October says:—The recent resolution fo the admission of Natives into the Opium Departmen will prove very beneficial. This new opening wil not exercise any effect on this presidency, for th local Government have only one place of Rs. 300 a Málwa in their gift. But the Opium Department i the Bengal Presidency and the N.-W. Provinces is ver large, and the posts of Opium Agent, Deputy Agent, and Sub-deputy Agen carry large salaries. The Bengal Presidency will be benefited by the ne arrangement.

Disapproves of the appointment of Mr. Durand as Foreign Secretary to the Government of India.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 6th October says:—It is given out, on wha appears to be reliable authority, that Mr. Durand wil most probably be appointed Foreign Secretary to th Government of India. This is not very hopeful new for the Native States. Mr. Durand has made a nam for himself as one of the most bitter opponents of th

Native States and he is not likely to improve the tone which has prevailed for years past in the Foreign Department. That department requires to clear it of the prejudices and fallacies which have clustered around it a more high-minded and unbiassed mind than Mr. Durand is known to possess. But the spirit of bureaucracy is so strong that we may entertain little hope of any better hand being found to guide the counsels of the Foreign Department of the Government of India.

Requests Government to accede to the request contained in the memorial of the inhabitants of Salem to the Government of Madras to release the men innocently convicted in connection with the Salem riots.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 5th October says:—We are behind several contemporaries in noticing that very able memorial of the inhabitants of Salem recently submitted to the Governor of Madras on behalf of the victims of wrongful conviction arising from the Salem riots. We say wrongful, because the late trials at Coimbatore have clearly proved that the evidence on which those innocent men were convicted was false. The conduct of that unhappy case reflects the greatest discredit on the authorities. The tale of oppression, perjury and general intrigue, in which officials, both high and low, have had no small share, is given in this memorial in language that will agonise every generous heart. Never was a law-abiding community so unjustly and so cruelly treated, and some fifty of its most respectable citizens made to suffer the indignity of a wrongful confinement apart from the misery inflicted on their families. And all that under the ægis of the British flag—the flag of liberty and equal justice. The officials concerned in this disgraceful business must be made by the Madras Government to expiate for their sins. And the underlings who misled these officials ought to be made to exchange places with those whom, to use the language of the memorialists, "the voice of thousands has been declaring these two years that they are innocent." Judicial decisions have now established that the voice has been uttering but the language of truth. Speedy justice at the hands of Mr. Grant Duff is therefore necessary. Any further delay, even for an hour, would be tantamount to a denial of justice. We feel deeply for our innocent countrymen, and we feel for the Government too, but in another sense.

Approves of the suggestion made by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales for sending Indian artizans to England at the time of the London Exhibition.

The Rást Goftár (109) of the 5th October says:—The suggestion made by the Prince of Wales for sending Indian artizans to England is very noble. Government ought at once to make up their mind to send a set of skilled artizans from all parts of the country. As the advantages resulting from such a step will be numerous, the expense should not deter Government from carrying out the suggestion. It is natural that the provincial Governments will hesitate to incur the expense of sending skilled artizans to England, but the Supreme Government ought to defray a portion of it. Nothing would be more beneficial to India as the sending of about fifty artizans to London from different parts of India representing different indigenous industries. [The Gujaráti (94) of the same date says:—We hope that the noble suggestion made by the Prince of Wales will be carried out by the Bombay Government. Mr. Griffiths ought to be sent to England in charge of the exhibits from this presidency, so that he might also take measures for the proper representation of articles of European manufacture in the Bombay Exhibition which will be held six months after the London Exhibition. The idea of asking a retired Indian officer to take charge of the Bombay exhibits on their arrival in London is very objectionable.]

Strongly disapproves of the enhancement of the land tax in certain villages of the Athni and Bágalkot tálukas on revision of land settlement operations.

In an article headed "Revision of Assessment in the Kaládgi District," the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 6th October says:—We have recently had occasion to comment on a resolution of the Local Government on the new settlements in Parner Táluka in the district of Ahmednagar. A fresh resolution has appeared treating of the revised settlements in 79 villages, 67 of which are in Athni Táluka and 14 in Bágalkot Táluka. In respect of the proposed rates for Párner Táluka we had some reasons to be satisfied. We are sorry we cannot say the same thing about the rates proposed to be levied under the present resolu tion. We are constrained to entirely disagree with the conclusions ar by Government on the facts stated in the resolution itself. It is pai think that in matters of land revenue settlements Government show a p mination to enhance assessments on revision all round, without regard actual circumstances of the people and the capabilities of the land. The resolution shows evident sings of such a disposition. There is through attempt at suiting facts to a foregone conclusion. The resolution i measure argues against certain facts and ignores others, and supports commendations of the survey officers through thick and thin against thos revenue officers, whereas the latter may be expected to know the la people far better than their brethren in the Survey Department. The officers with characteristic liberality have pitched the assessments as hig amount to an increase of 85 per cent., and the Government with charac blindness have sanctioned the rates against the advice and warnings of th revenue officers. Such a temper is, we apprehend, highly prejudicial interests of good government, and we cannot help expressing our deep that it should have found favour under the enlightened rule of Sir Jame gusson. Here, as in the case of the last resolution, we have to rema great injustice is done to the public by Government not publishing alo the resolution all the papers on which the resolution is based. In the of the papers it is difficult to say how far Government are right in rejecti suggestions of the revenue officers and in forming their own conclusio the case of the present resolution the publication of all the papers is more necessary as, unlike the last resolution, it is greatly deficient in th ment of detail. Some resolutions of Government contain a summary of correspondence which precedes the resolution. The same practice mi think, have been followed with great advantage in framing these res about survey and settlement. But if it is thought unnecessary to inco such a summary in the body of a resolution, the correspondence ma published separately. It cannot be denied that for a proper understan the resolution the previous correspondence is quite as necessary as the tion itself. Government are never tired of twitting public writers with information, but they never think the fault lies at their own door. If ment really desire to see intelligent criticism of their acts, they should available information within the reach of the public. The settlements n posed to be revised were first made in 1851-52 and have now all expired.

the new settlement no fresh measurement or classification of lands h made. But the rate of assessment has been increased 31·2 per cent average, the minimum of increase being 9·1 and the maximum 85·8.
cumstances relied on as justifying such an immense increase are stated t increase of land under cultivation, the growth of agricultural wealth, a improvement in the means and habits of living of agriculturists, the abs indebtedness, the high value of land, and the rise in prices. The cultiva has increased during the currency of the last settlement from 1,613 a 3,196 acres. The increase in the area under cultivation is, we think, uncertain index of the lightness or otherwise of the revenue demand.
the establishment of the British Government there were troublous tim the cultivation of land, like all other pursuits of peace, was probably at still. It is no wonder if with settled government and peace the cultiv land got a sudden start and increased rapidly. Along with this hav remembered the admitted facts of the increase of population and the abs any other industry. In our former article we insisted upon the import not overlooking these two facts as elements in the growth of cultivation an acknowledged economic principle that as population increases the of cultivation descends. There must be a greater amount of produce the greater number of mouths. If to this is added the other fact that agr is about the only means of living among our mofussil people, it follo agriculture must increase by sheer necessity. All available labour and will be thrown on land, and the result must needs be increased cult How far the margin of cultivation has decreased in the parts we are s of may be gathered from one circumstance which the resolution notes.
the famine year (1876-77) about 12,000 acres of land of the poorest assessed at an average of As. 2-7 per acre, have fallen out of occupation "

the cause of the increase and decrease of cultivation is at once explai principles we have been insisting on. The famine removed a port population, and the worst land in the country fell out of cultivation.
increase of cultivation is not, we think, a sure indication that the incid land tax is light, and can hardly be a safe basis for an argument to i tax. The second circumstance relied on as justifying the increase ment is the growth of agricultural wealth. It is said that populati creased 25·1 per cent., tiled and flat-roofed houses 29 per cent. a cattle 30·5, and carts from 133 to 1,763. Cows, buffaloes and their increased 47·3, and sheep and goats 19·3. 732 wells have been con a cost of three lákhs of rupees. Admitting these figures to be correct doubt if they will justify an increase of assessment. They are most necessary concomitants of the growth of cultivation. But it is scarc able to argue that because under the past settlement these increases place, that therefore the same lands will in the future be capable more assessment. The improvements in the houses and wells wer effected during the abnormal prosperity consequent on the American such exceptional seasons are rare. The increase of cattle and car wise little bearing on the incidence of the land tax. There is an statistics, as Mr. Jervoise points out, showing the proportion o cultivated area at the beginning of the last settlement and at its increase of carts perhaps shows that some people find the carrying profitable than agriculture and accounts for part of the increase Besides increased cultivation must require a corresponding i cattle. The growth of cattle does not, we think, necessarily indica profits earned by the cultivator under the last settlement were so Government may now seek a share of the unearned increment. If and comforts of the cultivators have slightly improved that is scarce for Government to at once come down upon them with increased de their means have improved the last settlement was perhaps not se what is there to show that it was so low that it left an unreaso amount of profit to the cultivator which under the new settlemen landlord might appropriate to himself? If it is meant that the ryots perpetually in poverty and should not rise higher than the level mouth living, Government might fitly increase their demand of every apparent sign of prosperity. But if any regard is to be paid dition of the people it seems such circumstances as the above are in support a plea for enhancement. As to the absence of indebtedness ment is based on the enquiries of the survey officers alone, but thei cannot be considered conclusive on the point. On the other hand it that the proportion of cultivators who themselves own land is small.
voise very properly suggests that detailed enquiry should be made o
but Government have shirked it. We do not think that the condi ryots of Kaládgi is quite as happy as the survey officers would have Though not perhaps as much steeped in debt as those in the Decca they are not, we believe, very far removed from the latter. Supp indebtedness is not as prevalent in Kaládgi as in Sátára or Ahme surest way to make it so prevalent is to increase the assessments.
posed improvement in the value of land is equally illusory. The e which it is based, viz., the statements in sale deeds, mortgage deeds is not credited by the revenue officers, and we agree with them i that it is neither trustworthy nor conclusive. We admit it is a piec evidence, but we greatly doubt if it is enough to support the conclu is sought to be based upon it. There is hardly sufficient competition these contracts, and the figures in mortgage deeds particularly are intentionally put high. The only ground enough to justify enhanc rise in prices, if true. But here the resolution itself contradicts th placent conclusion of Government. It is admitted that the rise is produce which finds foreign markets, such as cotton, betel-nut, jagr
the price of food-grains, such as jowári and bájri, has actually gone do prevailing crops sown are these food-grains and if their prices have than formerly, is it reasonable to enhance the assessment on lands prices of a few exceptional products have risen? It is said the reas prices of food-grains are low is that there are no suitable means of comm tion to other districts, and this defect will be cured by the Southern M Railway which is approaching completion. If there are no good roads, the export of other produce effected? On the other hand it is undisput the means of communication have improved since the beginning of settlement, and yet the prices of a majority of products are lower. Government could have waited to see if the Southern Marátha Railway h effect in raising prices which it is credited to have by anticipation, and would have been time enough to increase the assessments. A railway effect of increasing prices in those parts it traverses, but a general rise in is not beneficial to the cultivator as it increases the cost of living. Gover might have done better, we think, to wait to see the actual results of the r and then frame its demands rather than saddle the poor ryots with c charges for some supposed benefits. Thus the grounds on which enhanc are proposed are, we think, very unsatisfactory. A calm perusal of the tion will, we believe, satisfy any one that it is more a piece of special pl than a judicial decision. The enhancements are in our opinion out of a portion to the alleged capabilities of land. The circumstances noted resolution about settlements in Párner were a trifle better than those present, and yet in the former the enhancements were 19·8 per cent average, while the average in the present instance is 31·2. We have no to examine more minutely the details of the enhancements. Suffice it that they are entirely unsuited and ought not to have been made at all. ernment seem intent upon killing the goose that lays the golden egg. we conclude we cannot help suggesting that it would lead to a better standing between Government and the people, and would ensure the for of more correct opinions, if Government, instead of publishing a resoluti after a lot of secret correspondence, took the public into confidence fr first and invited discussion at each stage of the proceeding. Now the know only the result when all cure is past. In the other case the resolu Government will in a manner embody the voice of the people. In the of a representative system of government such previous publication a cussion of Government views is the best approach to right government.

Condemns the increase in the land tax on the revision of the settlement operations in the Athni and Bágalkot tálukás.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 5th October, in its Maráthi columns, g substance of the resolution of Government on t sion of the land revenue settlements made w cultivators in the Athni and Bágalkot táluk observes that even if all the arguments urged Government resolution be true, still the inc the land revenue will amount to at least 31 p over the collections made under the previous settlement. It is true t construction of the Southern Marátha Railway will afford facilities for the of produce of all kinds, but then it must be remembered that the e produce to foreign countries causes an increase in its price, which in i causes an enhancement in the expenses of cultivation. Again the cul are great sufferers by being obliged to cultivate every year lands whic to be allowed to lie fallow for some interval. It is absolutely necessary a certain quantity of land uncultivated for the growth of pasture which is for the grazing of cattle. Government ought not to have allowed the ab to escape its notice. The cultivators in the Belgaum and Dhárwár Colle are better off than their fellows in the Poona, Sátára and Sholápur Colle because the burden of the land tax has hitherto fallen less heavily on th on the latter. It is to be hoped that the Survey Commissioner wil allowed to increase the land assessments without duly considering the the adverse circumstances under which the cultivators labour.

Strongly condemns the enhancement of the land tax in certain villages of the Belgaum Collectorate on the revision of land revenue settlements.

In an article headed "Revenue Settlement in Belgaum" the Subodh (15) of the 5th October says:—The Bombay ment has recently sanctioned the revised settlements of a group of 79 villages in the o Táluka of the Belgaum Collectorate. The r these survey operations has been to enhance th ment by 31·2 generally throughout the villag connection with this increase it is a matte little regret that Government should have sanctioned it in spite of the p of the Collectors of the districts concerned. The survey officers base conclusions on general principles and old records, but the Collectors of th tricts, who pass a number of years among the people and are responsib the collection of revenue, have far better opportunities of judging of th position of the occupants of lands than any amount of study of general ciples and of old records can afford. The resolution of Government present case justifies the enhanced assessment on some very questi grounds. In the first place it is stated that the means of the occupant increased since the date of the original settlement and that lands now ger yield rent which is twice or three times the assessment. But the inc means of the ryots alone, apart from other considerations, do not always j enhancements. For they may happen to be due to improvements ma the holders on their lands, in which case enhancements are neither ju expedient. We are told that in the villages in question as many as 732 have been dug during the currency of the original settlements. It is also that while the advantage of easy communication with local markets has given to individual villages, the whole tract of country has hitherto been the disadvantage of having no outlet for surplus produce. Consequentl increased prosperity cannot have been due to improved communications at the expense of Government; nor, on the other hand, can it have be result of a rise in prices. For we are told that the principal prices of the grains which are cultivated over more than two-thirds of the total area cultivation have remained almost stationary. These circumstances would to justify no increase of assessment. But in the second place it is stated the opening of railways in the vicinity in a few years' time hence will stir the growth of exportable produce and diminish that of the food-grains. result of this the prices of the latter may go up. This is no doubt a pret conclusion to draw. But at the same time it must be remembered that at least take 7 or 8 years from now, and perhaps more, till trade settles in the way here contemplated and the labour of the place adjusts itself a ingly. Then again it appears from the resolution itself that the proport the agricultural to the commercial population of these villages is as 50 This shows pretty plainly that the present carrying trade represented existence of 1,767 carts is in the hands of the cultivators themselves. Th railway, if it enhances prices, will destroy this carrying trade and redu number of the sources of income of the ryots. Thus here also there is no reason shown for enhancement. The rate of enhancement too is very For though the rate is 31·2 per cent. in some individual cases it is as h 80 per cent. in others. So far as this is due to special causes, such a assessment of pot-kharáb lands, it may not be objectionable. But it is cer liable to exception where it proceeds from the reasons above specified.

Says that in making sanitary improvements it is better to make the village people pay in labour instead of money, and makes other suggestions in connection with the Government resolution on Dr. Hewlett's report.

In an article headed "The Twentieth Annual Report of the Sanitary Co sioner for the Government of Bombay," the Ma (2) of the 5th October says:—Dr. Hewlett opinion that if by some means the masses can be to understand the real value of sanitary improve they would not object to pay a small fee fo comfort and healthiness they will enjoy. W exactly at one with the learned doctor, but we suggest that until people receive education enou appreciate sanitary improvements Government would do well to require v people to render service, and we think the people would very willingly p labour though they may be unwilling or unable to pay in money. Thi of making the people work not being new, the people of villages, who gen find time very heavily hanging upon them, would at once consent to the pro As to the organization of the executive branch of the department, we opinion that the suggestion is good, provided that the district health o ships are given exclusively to Natives. This is a larger subject and we treat of it separately and give reasons why we think it essentially nece that the officers should as a rule be Natives. The third suggestion is effect that as regards their sanitary duties the Civil Surgeons should be sidered members of the Sanitary Department so that more work will be g with no additional cost. This idea of getting sanitary work better supervis is excellent. The sister presidency of Madras, the Government of the Panj and other administrations of the empire follow the rule, and we see no reas why Bombay alone should be an exception. Government has already made commencement in this direction, but we are sorry to find that the matter do not progress well. From the resolution of Government published with th report it appears that Civil Surgeons in this Presidency have not been as mindf of their new duties as was expected of them. It is worth the while of Government to spend some time upon getting the Civil Medical Department to cooperate with the Sanitary Department. Besides the three suggestions allude to above, there is a fourth which is no less important. This relates to th securing of a uniformity in the working of the sanitation departments under th different local bodies. This defect is glaring enough and it is really a matte for surprise that the defect should have remained unnoticed so long. In Englan where the administrative capacity of the different boards has sufficientl developed, this defect has not been removed yet, and it may therefore be urge that in this country, where local boards have only just come into existence, a attempt at securing uniformity of action in the working of the sanitary depar ments would be useless if not mischievous. But it can very easily be seen tha to give weight to this argument is to admit that as a rule we should neve profit ourselves by the experience of others. England did not know that th diversity of systems had done immense mischief to the cause of improvemen and the leaders of public movement are therefore trying to secure that uniformity. Let us therefore benefit by that experience and do at once what Englan is trying to do after having once dearly paid for it.

Says that the suggestions contained in the local Sanitary Commissioner's report for 1883 regarding the adoption of measures for the prevention of cholera in villages should be translated into the vernacular languages and distributed amongst villagers.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 6th October, in noticing the report Dr. Hewlett for the year 1883, says:—The suggestion embodied in the report for taking measures at th time of the outbreak of cholera in villages are ver good, and it is to be hoped that they will be translate into the different vernaculars and sent to the distric officials for distribution amongst the poor villager It is also to be hoped that officers will be sent t explain these suggestions to the illiterate villager The ignorant villagers speedily fall a prey to the choler epidemic owing to the want of information and to their superstitious habit They do not know what measures ought to be taken for the removal of the clothe stools, &c., of the persons attacked by cholera. The great mortality from choler in Khándesh can be traced to this ignorance. We feel confident that if th remedies suggested in the report were brought to the notice of villagers, and suitable Native officers were deputed to places where the epidemic might brea out, thousands of lives that are now lost would be saved. It is to be hoped tha due attention will be paid to this subject. [The Surat Akhbár (76) of the sam date says that the Government and the municipalities ought to have thes suggestions translated into the vernacular languages and should distribute the gratis to every household.]

Says that a Mahomedan gentleman should be nominated to the shrievalty of Bombay for the next year and failing that Mr. Dadabhai Navroji should be appointed to it.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 5th October says:—The question as to wh is most eligible to the shrievalty of Bombay has bee engaging the mind of the general public for som days and proposals have not been wanting advoca ing the interests of various individuals. The Mahomedan community has stronger claims to the honou as none of them has within our knowledge bee appointed to the sheriffship. But should Governme feel persuaded to keep their claims in abeyance for the present, we would the suggest the name of either Mr. Dadabhai Navroji or Mr. Navroji Fardunj gentlemen whose services both to Government and the public, we must confe it to our shame, yet remain unacknowledged. In the case of Mr. Navro something may be said to have been done in that direction by the Bomba public, if not by Government, but in that of Mr. Dadabhai n has been done. We hope Sir James Fergusson, when the comes, will not fail to do full justice to the claims of Mr. Dada him to those of the Pársi community. [The Yajdán Parast

date expresses similar sentiments. The Samsher Báhádur October strongly advocates the claims of Mr. Dadabhai Navro of Bombay for the next year and says that he is the fit honour. The Natives suspect that Government look with dis who speak against them, though they may be speaking hon hoped that Sir James Fergusson will remove this impression b honour on Mr. Dadabhai Navroji. The entire Native com
some sensible Europeans will be very glad at his appointmen approves of the suggestion for the nomination of Mr. K.
shrievalty in case Mr. Dadabhai Navroji is not appointed to it

Some suggestions in connection with the appointment of sheriff for the next year.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 5th October says:—We heartily gestion of some of our contemporari bhai Navroji should be the next Sh
We shall not dilate on the valuabl veteran Pársi leader who does not himself too old to take upon himself any arduous duties for public. The Governor of Bombay in whose gift the place is ca thing than by nominating Mr. Dadabhai to the place. The that a Mahomedan gentleman should now have the chance ha ments to recommend it. [The Kesari (37) of the 7th October sentiments. The Rást Goftár (109) of the 5th October is Mr. Kamrudin Tyebji can be appointed to the shrievalty as the High Court, and expresses approval of the appointment of able Ráo Sáheb V. N. Mandlik, Mr. Dadabhai Navroji or Mr.
as sheriff for the next year.]

Makes suggestions on the appointment of sheriff for the ensuing year.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 5th October says:—We adequate sense of the labours of Mr editor of the Rást Goftár (109) in th
and we hope that both Governme will show their appreciation of them time. But when absurd attempts are made to hold them up to and call upon Government to reward them with the shrievalt is forced to institute comparisons. It is certain however that t of Mr. Kabraji, quite undeservedly no doubt, will suffer co portance if placed side by side with those of gentlemen like Navroji, Navroji Fardunji and the Honourable Ráo Sáheb
Whilst if Government took only these into consideration, we f saying that their choice could not fall on a worthier recipient o
Mr. Dadabhai Navroji. But there is also another considerati matter, viz., that of community. The European, Pársi and ties of Bombay have each had the office conferred on on members by turn. The Mahomedan community, however, h never enjoyed the honour. We think this is an omission that Government should make up without delay. The shrie few offices in the gift of Government by which it can mark the disinterested efforts of our citizens in the public cause.
loses its stimulating influence unless it is unmistakably sho to men of all communities. This can only be done by mak of all communities. For this reason we think that Governn what is but due to the Mahomedan community if they mak
time out of their ranks.

Flooding of lands in Tappa Kadhan, Táluka Badin, by breaches in the canal and consequent damage and loss.

A correspondent of the Sind Sudhár (132) of the 27th Se
You will be good enough to inform the columns of your paper of the
the people of Tappa Kadhan, Tálu ject. The overflow of the Nára h vastated this tappa. However it i that we raised embankments at our own expense and made the land fertile. I now yields the Government a revenue of Rs. 34,000. This year too we paid great deal of money in advance to the farmers for canal clearances, and we hav thus been able to make our land cultivable. The mismanagement of the cana has however overflooded the country. Houses and farms have suffered to th amount of about a lakh of rupees. In all about fifteen villages have been damage by the overflow. If there is any breach in the canal and we zamindárs tak our men to assist in setting it right our men do not get their wages properly

This leads us to conclude that the Government do not care for our tappa. T them it is of no consequence if the tappa is totally destroyed, but we zamindár have been ruined and all our houses and all our property have been lost. W borrowed money of the sáwkárs on interest, and now that we shall not be abl
to pay them the money back all our lands will be put to auction by them t realise what we owe them. They know that for four years more we shall no be able to sow anything in our farms. If the officials were even now to min their business better and were to shut up the source of the Sanhri Guni Wáh which is the cause of so much destruction, all the breaches would be stopped a once. Government would in that case be saved much loss of revenue. Appli cations made by zamindárs for remission are due to the fact that all their rip corn would be scattered round by birds and they would not be able to gathe any. But if before the harvest season arrives the breaches are stopped, th flood would subside and the mischief would cease.

Complains of the want of repairs to old tanks and other water reservoirs in the country.

The Bombay Chronicle (73) of the 5th October says:—The Ahmedaba correspondent of the Bombay Gazette, in his letter o
the 28th ultimo, requests the attention of Governmen
to the advisability of repairing the numerous larg tanks in the Ahmedabad and Kaira districts and turn ing them into excellent reservoirs. The authoritie will do well to pay some attention to this suggestion. It is not to the old wate works in the Ahmedabad district alone but to many in other districts that hi sensible observations would apply with equal force. It is passing strange tha while Government plead want of funds to give irrigation works to the country they thus prove so very careless in the matter of looking after the works o former dynasties. The works might with the most ordinary care and attentio and some trifling outlay by the officers of Government be kept in a state capabl of rendering invaluable service to the people in saving them from the effect of drought, and helping them in their rural occupations to the general advantag of the community.

Suggestions about abolishing the distinctive functions of barristers and solicitors.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 5th October, in a paragraph headed "Ou Barristers and Solicitors," says:—Some discussion i respect to this profession and their fees is now goin on in the dailies, and one of the correspondents seem to advocate the French method of taxing the cumula tive amounts of fees by the presiding judges. However we are afraid he ha not hit at the real evil which gnaws at the very vitals of suitors. It is not s much the fees of barristers as the cost of attorneys and their underlings tha makes up the cup of a suitor's pecuniary grievance. Almost the whole roun of English law may now be said to have been banished from our High Cour precincts and Indian law is enforced in its stead. Under the circumstance the now antiquated, old, uncouth English institution of solicitors require relegation to the limbo of oblivion. It is peculiarly of English origin an should have no place in our Indian judicial machinery. Like all other servic contracts the relations between a barrister and his client should not b allowed to be hampered by this uncouth link of a solicitor. In the case o pleaders the relations are direct and so must be those between barristers an their clients. As to the difficulty of language, that ought to be settled by the con tracting parties, particularly the barristers. And if Government judicial office are compelled to learn and study the vernaculars, there is no reason why ther should be a special provision in the shape of solicitors for our barristers. W think in the interests of the general public this question of judicial refor demands the particular attention of Government and we hope they will give seriously.

Disapproves of the practice of postponing cases for the convenience of barristers engaged in them by the High Court at Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 6th October, in referri Meghji Mathurándás v. Nathu Valji
barristers for the plaintiff did not pu
when it was called on for hearing b Pinhey, points out the evils resulti
tice of postponing cases for the conv engaged in them, and says:—How local High Court to suffer inconvenience for the sake of bar large incomes, and how long ought poor clients to be allowed evil practice has gone to such a length that it is high time speedily checked. The rule for engaging two barristers inste the case formerly, has not improved the state of things. T compel the barrister who wishes to have the case postponed fo to pay the costs of the day. We do not see any reason why extensive practice should not be made to do so. Such a step Judges will prevent barristers from accepting more briefs than attend to, will save the valuable time of the Court and expens will afford an opportunity to junior barristers to acquire expe fidence. The Chief Justice and his brethren ought now to in stop to this evil practice.

Praises Government for granting the right of trial by jury in certain cases in the districts of Surat, Ahmedabad, Belgaum and Karáchi.

In a paragraph headed "Trial by Jury" the Subodh Pat 5th October says:—We are glad to le ment have decided to extend the jury to Surat, Ahmedabad, Belgaum Karáchi. This privilege, which is ex in Bengal and Madras, was with us c time to Poona alone. It is, no strange that Government should have required 17 years' e working of the system in that city to induce them to extend in the mofussil. But strange or not, that has been the case.
that this reserve is broken, we hope that many other zilla tow
the privilege at an early date. Jury trials indeed are not gen an unmixed good, as they replace a specially trained min perienced ones. But in a country where the judge is usually substitution of an intelligent Native jury cannot mean a los the administration of justice. There are also the educating system which should not be lost sight of. It is in fact a legi complete scheme of local self-government. It is therefore people who are considered fit to tax themselves and manage t should be allowed to take part in adjucating on the lives and neighbours.

Complains of the arbitrary conduct of Mr. Sheppard, Revenue Commissioner, N.D.

The Hitechchhu (75) of Ahmedabad of the 9th October s of Gujarát know full well the arb
Mr. Sheppard, Revenue Commissi appears to be very anxious to see by the people and to think that he sh with both hands and in a bent posture. If any Government so he takes measures to compensate himself for the supposed
Mr. Sheppard took some years ago a ridiculous measure to pu man for failing to salam him with both hands. A short time Deputy Educational Inspector of the Kaira District was tra back and was chewing betelnut and leaves. He did not sala whom he happened to meet on the public road. Upon th became very angry. Mr. Rewáshankar Tripuráshankar Dave Educational Inspector, soon after paid a visit to Mr. Sheppa did not salam the latter in a bent posture. Mr. Sheppard aft the Director of Public Instruction asking him to take notice o one Dave, a Deputy in the Educational Department, who was and leaves on the public road and who did not salam him appears to have forgotten to mention the name of the Deputy as Mr. Rewáshankar Tripuráshankar Dave. How could the Director of Public Instruction keep quiet when he was written to by his friend? He began an enquiry in the matter, but forgetting that the defaulting party Mr. Dave was a Deputy Inspector he ordered the transfer of Mr. Dave of the Surat High School to Ahmedabad. But owing to the interference of Mr. Best, Head Master, Ahmedabad High School, it is said that the transfer has been countermanded. We shall be glad to learn that this story or any portion of it is false. How can the Deputy Inspector be said to have committed a fault when he was merely chewing betelnut and leaves on the way and during his leisure hours? Do not Europeans smoke cheroots on the public road? We think that Mr. Sheppard himself must have offended in this way. Moreover it is not laid down by law or resolution that a Government servant should salam every European officer whom he may meet. We are surprised that Mr. Chatfield should have paid attention to the complaint. Would he have done so if a Native officer had preferred a similar complaint? It is surprising that European officers should listen to the trifling complaints proceeding from their countrymen and should threaten the officers subordinate to them. It is satisfactory that Ráo Báhádur Gopálji found out the real defaulter in this matter. If European officers wish that Natives should salam them with both hands and in a bent posture, they should have some special marks on their face or should wear the dress of the Moguls in order to distinguish them from others.

Appointment of a European as Assistant Collector in the A'bkári Department disapproved.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 5th October says:—The other day we expressed apprehension with regard to the revised A'bkári Department. We now understand that the Bombay Government has succumbed to the recommendation of Mr. Pritchard to have a European as Assistant Collector, and that despite the suggestion of the Collector of Bombay for a Native official of great experience and long standing in the A'bkári Department. The plea alleged for the appointment of a European Assistant Collector is that as the revenue now reaches about 20 lákhs a European should be preferred! If this be true it amounts to something like a libel on Native officials employed by the Government. Are the Government going to provide for another Dowb? And that too on such questionable ground? The Native official recommended by the Collector of Bombay ought to have the appointment, and it is to be hoped that the Government of India before whom the matter has now gone for sanction, may do justice by ordering the post to be reserved for qualified Natives. With the lesson taught to the Madras Government by Mr. Ranga Naidu we thought the Local Government would act more carefully in the matter. Should the Government of India unfortunately sanction the appointment we would advise both the local East India Association and the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha to memorialise the Secretary of State.

Sale of toddy at Surat.

The Surat Akhbár (76) of the 6th October says:—The public of Surat suffer three disadvantages from the new changes introduced for the sale of toddy. The boards notifying the price at which toddy is to be sold give the price for drams, which nobody understands. The toddy-sellers, taking advantage of this circumstance, deceive their customers, mix water with toddy and charge double and treble the fixed price. It is necessary therefore that the corresponding Surati weight should be mentioned along with drams and the price of a ser of toddy should also be determined, as was the case formerly.

Removal of the Arsenal from the Fort.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 5th October says:—We are quite at one with our contemporary of the Indian Spectator that the Arsenal, the occurrence at which spread such terror throughout the Fort, should at once be removed from the vicinity of a thickly populated quarter. Had it not been for the courage of, and timely precautions by, the responsible parties, the probable result would have been the burning down of the whole Fort. We yet hope Government will take immediate action in the matter, and remove the Arsenal to some distant place.

Employment of graduates in the Revenue and other State departments.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 6th October in its Maráthi columns observes that during Sir Richard Temple's administration the graduates of the Bombay University received much encouragement. Orders were given for their employment in the Revenue Department which were liberally carried out so long as Sir Richard Temple was here. But on his departure from India the orders regarding the employment of graduates have not been faithfully observed. The Dnyán Prakásh does not wish that the claims of old and deserving servants of Government in the Revenue Department should be set aside and graduates should be solely employed, but it is not right to discourage University graduates from accepting service. The Dnyán Prakásh thinks that perhaps old uneducated men are preferred for the posts of Mámlatdárs because they are obsequious and subservient, while the University graduates are notoriously not so and they cannot be expected to demean themselves in the same way. It is to the advantage of the public service that Government should employ in it as large a number of educated men as possible. Sir James Fergusson and Mr. Peile should do all in their power to afford encouragement for the employment of University graduates in the Revenue and other State departments. They should be given more rapid promotion than men not so well educated.

Pársi holidays in Government offices and banks.

The Yajdán Parast (122) of the 6th October says:—When Government offices and banks are closed on many Hindu holidays, the complaint against their being kept open on almost all Pársi holidays is quite just. The Pársis have to attend offices and banks on all their holidays save Pateti and new year's day, and in some offices they have even to work on their new year's day. We join in the complaint and pray for a change in the present objectionable way of granting Pársi holidays.

Complains of the indifference manifested by the Police and Municipal Commissioners, Bombay, in the matter of improving the present wretched condition of bullock hackeries in the city.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 9th October expresses approval of the endeavours made by the Police and Municipal Commissioners, Bombay, for improving horse conveyances plying for hire in the city, refers to the inconvenience caused to passengers by victoria carriages in the rainy season, and says:—What have the Police and Municipal Commissioners done for effecting improvements in the bullock hackeries in the city? They have done nothing in the matter. The bullock hackeries are in the same condition now as they were fifteen years ago. They are very wretched and inconvenient and worse than the old buggies. Frequent complaints have been made on this score and reforms have been suggested, but no attention has been paid to them. If this indifference be owing to the fact that Natives only use bullock hackeries, the conduct of the authorities is deserving of censure. If there be any other reason for their sluggishness, they must inform the Native public of it. The increase in the number of victorias plying for hire will not mend matters. The indifference manifested is an abuse of the patience of the Native community. It is to be hoped that the Police and Municipal Commissioners will speedily remedy the complaint.

Complains of the retail sellers of kerosine oil in Bombay mixing water with it.

A correspondent of the same newspaper of the 11th October complains of the retail sellers of kerosine oil in Bombay mixing water and other liquids with it, which is largely used by the people, and requests the police to bring these fraudulent sellers to justice and to save the citizens from accidents. Sometimes a thick substance is left at the bottom of the oil which ignites of itself under certain circumstances. Moreover kerosine oil takes fire if water is poured on it. It is advisable that the police authorities should pay attention to this complaint.

Says that the weights and measures of wholesale dealers should be stamped as well as those of petty tradesmen.

The Satyá Shodhak (58) of the 5th October says that the work of sta
the weights and measures of petty traders b
police in the town of Ratnágiri is going on satisfac
It would however be well if the weights and mea
of wholesale dealers are stamped likewise; othe
they would sell commodities with short weigh petty traders, and the latter would be sufferer charge of half an anna is made for stamping the weights and measu petty tradesmen, but it is alleged that some extra payment is extorted.
police authorities should enquire into the matter.

Education.

Expresses agreement with the remarks of Miss Morris on the education of Native ladies.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 5th October says:—There is not the least that Miss Morris, the Lady Superintendent of th male Training College at Ahmedabad, hit the nail on the head when she said that Natives wh pose female education oppose it because they afraid that the girls will be less dutiful as wive daughters. They have been hitherto in the supposition that so long a superiority of the male sex is apparent, the female sex would obey them; i are educated, that superiority, they believe, ceases, and hence they conclude wives and daughters will not obey them. This belief is grounded on preju which has become sacred on account of its antiquity, and it will take some before it is dislodged from the place where it at present commands supreme

Female unchastity in Europe compared with female unchastity in India.

The Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 5th October, in writing on female educ in connection with the establishment of a high s
for Native ladies in Poona, observes that femal chastity is not held in the same abhorrence in E as in India. In India a woman who is divorced her husband is not received in society, nor would anybody contract legal ma with her. In Europe the case would seem to be otherwise. There divorc numerous and divorced women are freely allowed to contract marriages. B illegitimate offsprings form about ten to twenty per cent. of the population Again while illegitimate children are treated as outcastes in India, in E they do not appear to be so considered. Institutions for the suppor education of foundlings are plenty in Europe. The Poona Vaibhav doe mean to assert that all the women in Europe are of bad repute or that m Europe like women of easy virtue. On the contrary there have been in E women of such pre-eminent virtue and excellence that their fame has resou through the world. The virtuous women of the English rulers of India c be too highly praised. But the existence of divorce, the large number of timate offsprings, the remarriage of divorced women in Europe—all these point to a state of society in which chastity is not held in the same reverence a in India. If the education imparted to European women has not improved morals, it is absurd to expect better results from a similar education in the of Native women. The Poona Vaibhav would advise all educated Nativ consider well before sending their daughters to be educated to the recently s high school in Poona.

Railways.

Comments in connection with the recent fatal accident on the East India Railway near the Arranghatta station.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 6th October, in commenting o recent fatal accident on the East India Rai says:—From the published accounts of the ac
it appears that the European driver of the pass train was guilty of great negligence. The Eur driver of the goods train was also blamable to a extent than that of the passenger train. Europeans always look upon countrymen as superior to Natives in courage, in cleverness and in the disc of duty. It is surprising that notwithstanding this arrogance and the fac the drivers were old and experienced men, this fearful accident should happened. The man who appears to have discharged his duty satisfacto

the time of the accident is the Native station master of Arranghat to have taken all measures to prevent the collision. With al the Natives in general have been accused of incompetency by Eu Rev. Mr. Bell has complained of the timidity of the Native of Arranghatta after his arrival in Calcutta, and has pointed out employing Natives on such posts. He says that the station ma Native employés on the station were trembling with fear in a r helping the passengers. Without waiting for the proofs of this must consider the state of the station master and other Native e station at this juncture. The latter had responsibility resting on a few minutes had passed away after the accident had happe Rev. Mr. Bell saw them trembling with fear. What coul station master have done within these few minutes? Moreove be had to the fact that in cases of accidents and others in w charges are preferred against Natives, they do not enjoy the sam those enjoyed by Europeans. In those cases in which Europ required to give their names Natives are kept under police su that sometimes even for several days. The station master must thought that he would be immediately taken up by the police. long criminal trial and other fears must have confounded him. E no such fears and therefore it is probable that they can gather st occasions. It cannot however be inferred from the conduct master that Natives are naturally timid. It is well that the stati measures to stop the train from rushing into the station, otherwi would have been raised by Europeans against him and the Native want of care. When it is thought advisable to employ Eu important posts, what is to become of the Natives and how are th themselves?

Complains against the arbitrary conduct of a European officer stationed at one end of the recent break on the G. I. P. Railway line near Barhanpur.

A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (109) of the 5th October, M. B. Moonshi, says:—I was a passeng train that left Jabalpur on the morni September for Bombay. There was a line at a small distance from the Barh A European officer stationed, near bridge which had given way was very Native passengers. He had a stick in his hand, with which he those passengers who wanted to cross the river in a boat. H them. But he was exceedingly polite towards European ladies whom he respectfully conducted to the boat and allowed the luggage with them in it. When the boat returned empty, some P prepared to go in it, when the European officer abused and str his stick. They however succeeded in getting into the boat, but luggage. A Pársi and his two friends, who were passengers fro tin box containing clothes and Rs. 25. A Borah passenger als containing some articles and about Rs. 75. This was owing to m If the railway authorities had allowed passengers to quietly tr luggage without abusing and beating them, no confusion woul and they would not have been put to so much annoyance. M Superintendent, and Mr. Pilcherbi, the carting agent of the G were near the other end of the bridge. If the latter gentleman, the passengers in removing their luggage, had been stationed at that haughty European officer was, the poor travellers would no hardship.

Municipalities.

Municipal affairs at Ahmedabad.

The Hitechchhu (75) of Ahmedabad of the 9th October say to the notice of Government and another act of high-handedness of Mr. F Collector and president of the Ahme pality. He has summoned the municipal commissioners to mee his office at noon, notwithstanding the repeated requests on form seven of the elected commissioners to change the time of meetin being Friday it is also inconvenient to the Mahomedan commissioners. Friday is to Mussalmans what Sunday is to Christians. We are of opinion that the place, day, and hour of meeting have been inaptly chosen. It is not a wise plan to show an invidious distinction between Europeans and Natives at the municipal board. There is a raised platform at the Collector's office over which are arranged chairs for European commissioners, and chairs for the Native commissioners are placed on a lower level. It is desirable that these meetings should be held in a room where there is no platform and where all commissioners can have their seats on the same level. Some of the Native commissioners feel this to be a degradation, and it cannot be otherwise. We shall be glad to know that the seats are not designedly so arranged and that any commissioner is allowed to take his seat on the platform if he likes. If the Collector has a regard for justice and fair play, he ought to declare that the seats may be taken irrespective of race. As to the change of hour of meeting we think that the request of the seven commissioners is very just. Three of them are pleaders and the other four are Government servants in the Educational Department. They cannot attend municipal meetings held during noon without neglecting their respective duties. We learn that they have shown good reasons for holding these meetings in the evening, as is done at Surat, Poona and other places. Should Mr. Reid persist in his obstinacy, we advise the rate-payers to complain to Government.

Native States.

Affairs at Porbandar.

A correspondent of the Gujaráti (94) of the 5th October gives some instances of the oppression exercised on the people by the Porbandar State. A tax is levied from washermen and stone masons. The tailors and other artizans are going away to Bombay owing to the oppression exercised on them. The zamindárs and ryots have new hardships to suffer. The cultivators are forced to agree to new leases on harder terms. The land tax is very heavy. The subjects of the Rána are dissatisfied. Complaints regarding oppression of every kind are numerous, but the Rána does not pay attention to them on account of his avaricious disposition.

A suggestion to the Rádhanpur Darbár.

The Akhbáre Sodágar (78) of the 9th October says:—The late vakil of Rádhanpur and his son who had been sentenced to suffer punishment by the Rádhanpur Darbár had preferred an appeal to the Political Agent, Pálanpur, against the sentence passed upon them. The Political Agent, after due enquiry, ordered the Darbár to release them. Though a month and a half has passed away since that order was issued, they have not yet been set free. Does not the Darbár know of this order? It ought to enquire into the matter and release them. Otherwise it will incur the displeasure of the Bombay Government for disregard of their orders.

Disapproves of the attack made on Mr. Náthábhái, the Diwán of the I'dar State, by the Hitechchhu newspaper.

The Samsher Báhádur (110) of the 3rd October says:—The Hitechchhu (75) of Ahmedabad now states that the attack it made on Mr. Náthábhái, the Diwán of the I'dar State, was founded on information which was not trustworthy (vide p. 22 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 20th September 1884). Mr. Náthábhái ought to demand from the editor of the Hitechchhu the name of his informant. Mr. Náthábhái is the Diwán of a first-class State. He wields great authority and the subjects of the State are much concerned in his reputation and honesty. It is therefore the duty of Government to remove the suspicion arising in the public mind from the attack made on him. The Political Agent ought to enquire into the truth or otherwise of the allegations made by the Hitechchhu and to issue a resolution on the subject.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
14th October 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári:
  - Disapproval of the appointment of a European as Assistant Collector in the — Department, Bombay 20
  - Sale of toddy at Surat 20

Advance of Russia in Central Asia: Expression of opinion that the labours of the Delimitation Commission will prove fruitless ... 4

Appointments: Disapproval of the appointment of Mr. Durand as Foreign Secretary to the Government of India 10

Bombay Arsenal: Necessity of removing the — from the Fort ... 20

British interference in Mandalay: Disapproval of — and advice to the Supreme Government to send a few experienced ambassadors to King Theebaw to explain to him his responsibilities and to hear his defence... 10

Civil Service of India: Advocacy of the increase of the age limit for the entrance examination of the — and suggestion for the holding of the competitive examination simultaneously in India and England ... 5

Employment of graduates in the Revenue and other State Departments: Comments on the — 21

Floods: Flooding of lands in Tappa Kadhan, Táluka Badin, by breaches in the canal and consequent damage and loss 17

Holidays: Pársi — in Government offices and banks 21

Judicial matters:
  - Disapproval of the practice of postponing cases for the convenience of barristers engaged in them by the High Court of Bombay ... 19
  - Praises of Government for granting the right of trial by jury in certain cases in the districts of Surat, Ahmedabad, Belgaum and Karáchi 19
  - Suggestions about abolishing the distinctive functions of barristers and solicitors 18

Land Revenue Assessment:
  - Condemnation of the enhancement of the — in certain villages of the Belgaum Collectorate on the revision of land revenue settlements 14
  - Condemnation of the increase in the — on the revision of the settlement operations in the Athni and Bágalkot tálukás ... 14
  - Disapproval of the enhancement of the — in certain villages of the Athni and Bágalkot tálukás on revision of land settlement operations 11

London Exhibition: Approval of the suggestion made by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales for sending Indian artizans to England at the time of the — 11

Opium Department: Approval of the recent resolution of the Government of India for the admission of Natives into the — 10

Police: Complaint regarding the retail sellers of kerosine oil in Bombay mixing water with it 21

Public conveyances: Complaint against the indifference manifested by the Police and Municipal Commissioners, Bombay, in the matter of improving the present wretched condition of bullock hackeries in the city 21

Public Service: Complaint regarding the arbitrary conduct of Mr. Sheppard, Revenue Commissioner, N. D. 19

Report of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of Bombay for 1883:
  - Expression of opinion that in making sanitary improvements it is better to make the village people pay in labour instead of in money and suggestions in connection with the Government resolution on Dr. Hewlett's report 15
  - Expression of opinion that the suggestions contained in the — regarding the adoption of measures for the prevention of cholera in villages should be translated into the vernacular languages and distributed amongst villagers 16

Salem Riots: Request to Government to accede to the request contained in the memorial of the inhabitants of Salem to the Government of Madras to release the men innocently convicted in connection with the — 11

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—continued.

Shrievalty of Bombay:
- Expression of opinion that a Mahomedan gentleman should be nominated to the — for the next year, and failing that Mr. Dádábhái Navroji should be appointed to it ... ...
- Suggestions in connection with the appointment of sheriff for the next year:
  - The Mahrátta ... ...
  - The Subodh Patrika ... ...

Stores: Charges against the store department of the India Office and condemnation of the system of indenting for articles made in England...

Taxation in the British Empire: Objection to certain statements made by Sir Richard Temple before the British Association at Montreal with reference to the — and expression of opinion that he is a parrot ...

Vernacular Press:
- Condemnation of the suggestion of the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times to revive the — Act and expression of opinion that purely military government in India will not last for any length of time ... ...
- Disapproval of the proposal of the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times to revive the — Act and recommendation to the Native newspapers to expose every unfair attempt to misrepresent them ... ...
- Praises of Mr. Gladstone for advocating and supporting the freedom of the — ... ...

Viceroyalty of India:
- Expression of joy at the statement made by the Truth newspaper that Lord Ripon will be made a Duke on his retirement from the — and request to His Lordship to accept the title under the name of the Duke of India ... ...
- Praises of the career of Lord Ripon as Viceroy of India:
  - The Bombay Chronicle ... ...
  - The Sind Sudhár ... ...

Want of repairs to old tanks and other water reservoirs: Complaint regarding the — in the country ... ...

Weights and measures: Expression of opinion that the — of wholesale dealers should be stamped as well as those of petty tradesmen ...

PART II.—Education—

Female education:
- Expression of agreement with the remarks of Miss Morris on — ...
- Female unchastity in Europe compared with female unchastity in India ... ...

PART III.—Railways—

East India Railway: Comments in connection with the recent fatal accident on the — near the Arranghatta station ... ...

G. I. P. Railway: Complaint against the arbitrary conduct of a European officer stationed at one end of the recent break on the — line near Barhánpur ... ...

PART IV.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad: Municipal affairs at — ... ...

PART V.—Native States—

I'dar: Disapproval of the attack made on Mr. Náthábhái, the Diwán of the — State, by the Hitechchhu newspaper ... ...

Porbandar: Affairs at — ... ...

Rádhanpur: Suggestion to the — Darbár ... ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 18th October 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	750
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	281
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	275
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	160
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
37	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	4,350
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
39	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
40	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*41	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	400
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	450
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*54	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	160
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*66	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
67	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
68	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	300
69	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	250
*70	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
71	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
72	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	500
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
73	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
74	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	475
75	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	485
76	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
77	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	200
	GUJARA'TI.
78	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
79	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	850
80	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	394
81	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
82	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	415
83	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,175
84	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	500
85	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	50
86	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	700
*87	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.	200
88	„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly	585
89	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,025
90	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	300
91	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
92	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
93	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	984
94	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
95	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	300
96	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*97	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
98	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	800
99	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,350
100	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	125
101	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	810
*102	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	925
104	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	250
105	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.	350
106	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
107	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
108	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
109	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,750
110	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
111	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
112	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	327
113	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
114	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	620
115	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	1,700
116	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	423
*117	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
118	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
119	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	85
120	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	778
121	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
122	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	180
124	„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do.	300
125	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	915
126	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	115
	SANSKRIT.
127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	150
	URDU.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	500
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	327
	SINDI.
132	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of th Government of Bombay in he General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Difference in the treatment of Europeans and Natives.

The Arunodayă (18) of the 12th October, in an article headed "The present English method of doing justice," observes that the Natives of India have now had considerable experience of the English people, and therefore their opinion of the character of the latter is not likely to be erroneous. From the recently published instances of the misbehaviour of English people, it is pretty clear that vice has a stronghold on them. The English are perhaps more prone to do evil, low and mean deeds than the Natives of India. The revelations which were made in the Pigot-Hastie case regarding the conduct of people whose profession it was to propagate the Christian religion proves the truth of the above observation. The English people may boast that they conquered this country by the might of their arms and intend to keep it in their grasp by the sword, but in reality their probity and honesty had much to do in bringing this immense country into their subjection. But the manner in which Englishmen misbehave now-a-days has entirely dissipated the good impression made on the Native mind in the early days of British rule. In administering justice, it is not right to observe distinction between white and dark men. Every effort made to secure justice to a wrongly convicted Native receives no support in the Government, but a European who is rightly punished is treated differently. In the case of Dr. Banks, a resolution deliberately passed was withdrawn on the agitation raised by English newspapers and other interested parties; while the petitions sent on behalf of the Mahárája of the Gujarátis and the editors of the Kesari and Mahrátta newspapers were contemptuously rejected. The leniency observed towards Dr. Banks is never shown to Natives. Among professional highway-men in bygone times an oath used to be taken not to accuse each other, and this was done to prevent their crimes being divulged. The Arunodayă would not be surprised if Europeans have taken a similar oath to protect each other in this country since they are far away from their homes. The bare-faced partiality shown to European accused is lowering the British Government in the estimation of Natives.

Eulogium of Lord Ripon and his administration.

In an article headed "Lord Ripon, the beloved Viceroy of India—what has he done for us?" the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 13th October says:—Amid the general chorus of admiration and esteem for our great Viceroy there are a few discordant voices. There are some people who seem to take a malignant pleasure in decrying Lord Ripon. In the whole wide expanse of the country there are not more than five papers which have, since the date of the Ilbert Bill controversy, declared themselves the most unpromising antagonists of His Excellency, taking distorted views of the plainest facts, misrepresenting others, and frequently making statements in direct contravention of truth. Of such maligners the only representative in this Presidency is the Times of India. We have on various occasions shown the inconsistency and the utter hollowness of the opposition of our contemporary, and trying to correct it now is, we think, very much like flogging a dead horse. Vilification is the only object of our contemporary and falsehood and misrepresentation are its weapons. In spite of the most crushing contradictions and exposures, our contemporary has not desisted from its course of abuse and unscrupulous charges. It is quite needless, we think, to defend Lord Riponagainst such attacks. His Lordship's reputation as a statesman and administrator will not depend upon the testimony of a handful of Anglo-Indians and their mouth-pieces. Posterity will judge Lord Ripon by his words and acts and by his relations with the people he has ruled. History will ask the question, "which Viceroy was the most beloved by the people of India, the most sincere, and the most just?" and the answer will unquestionably be—Lord Ripon. In thus placing Lord Ripon at the head of all Viceroys who have preceded him, we do not forget the honoured names of Lord Cornwallis, of Lord Bentinck, of Sir Charles Metcalfe and others. These distinguished statesmen and rulers were very noble, and did great services to India, but it is no disparag them to say that none of them inspired such devoted personal loy admiration for sincerity, such unchanged good-will, and, what is m high confidence as have been inspired by the present Viceroy. It ma those Viceroys ruled in the infancy of the British Indian Government character of the Government was a sealed book to the people of Indi were perhaps as generously good natured as Lord Ripon, but their go was probably not as severely tested by the crucible of Anglo-Indian o and was not brought so thoroughly home to the hearts of the masses as that of Lord Ripon. The future historian in recording his verdict wi sanguine, take into account these circumstances, and his unbiassed m not fail to be impressed with the unanimity of Native sentiment as the character of Lord Ripon and his rule, and he will, we doubt not, rabid ravings of our contemporary and his confreres with the co deserves. But though there is thus no necessity of giving the li contemporary, one feels not a little indignant at the audacious m of such writers as these Anglo-Indian opponents of Lord Ripon.

been asked, what has Lord Ripon done to deserve the title "
We answer, the abolition of the Vernacular Press Act, the reductio salt duty, the stimulus to indigenous industries, the inauguration of and local self-government, the assertion of the equality of rights of Na Anglo-Indians, and numerous fiscal reforms such as stock-notes, p savings banks and so forth, are acts enough to make an administra
Besides these there are numerous works which Lord Ripon has left u
—a vigorous railway policy according to the recommendations of th Commission, an Education Act, the reform of the land law, the publicit lative measures and so forth. These and other works, if time had p would probably have been as satisfactorily accomplished as those first to, but the time of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty has been so short, the ta he undertook were so many, and the opposition to His Lordship's p been so hot and protracted, that it is surprising he has done so muc what he has left unfinished bears an unmistakable impress of his pov tellect and large mind. But what we prize in Lord Ripon's Governm is not so much the individual acts as the general tone of sincerity, of ness and of justice pervading the whole administration. He has not fessed but acted upon that noble text—"righteousness exalteth a nation the rampant Anglo-Indian, as represented by the Englishman and the India, would fain treat with shameful disdain. The personal charact Ripon was impressed upon all he came in contact with, and in strikin to the Government of his predecessor Lord Ripon's Government was pure, sincere, honest and liberal. There was no lip-loyalty to prin juggling with accounts. There was action from the purest motive was throughout an attempt at constitutional government, a studied r and deference to public opinion as expressed by the press, Anglo-In Native. His Lordship's attitude towards the Native press was p encouraging. The appointment of a Native to the Chief Justiceship and the invitation to the British India Association and the Bombay ment to nominate Native members to the Supreme Legislative Cou acts of the highest liberalism. It is this sincerity and liberalism w invoked the universal gratitude and esteem of Natives. If His Lor continued as Viceroy, India would have been blessed with many o and noble deeds. The reform of the land law, not only in Bengal b as well as other Presidencies, to which His Excellency had latterly d attention, is a subject which would greatly need the wide grasp and of views of His Lordship. It is too much to expect, however, that ship should be our Viceroy for ever. But all that he has done and th left unfinished mark him out as a just and noble Viceroy, and emi serving of our esteem, thankfulness, attachment, and above all, our c
The time has not yet arrived for taking a comprehensive review Ripon's administration. What we are now concerned to point out is withstanding all that may be said by scoffers and maligners, it is th all true friends of India to unite together on this occasion, and ta steps to do fit honour to the retiring Viceroy, and to perpetuate our midst. Let us exalt the righteous Viceroy, as his righteousne the honour of England and the happiness of India.

Praises the career of Lord Ripon as Viceroy and Governor General of India.

The Gujarát Mitrá (74) of the 12th October, in an article Ripon's Indian Career," says:—The torian of the future will say of the pres India that he tried to do his duty, an enough. No Indian Viceroy is expecte fruits of his actions while ruling the country. At best he can lay the seeds of good measures, which take a long time to present exigencies of the empire will not permit any Viceroy policy and to personally carry it out. Before he is able to s his measures have taken root he has to bid adieu to the count our contemporaries express either too much of hate or too much the going ruler. According to the time and opportunities at hi Marquis of Ripon has gone through the course of business as adr energetically as he could. Outsiders are not expected to know of dreary routine work a Viceroy, above all others, has perp through. His Excellency has displayed a broad and sympath cause he ever felt that it was the Queen's desire that he should for any particular party, but for the good of its teeming millions disagreeable duty to tell an exalted personage that the Queen's was based on righteousness. It is painful that one responsib should have to say this to another. He showed a statesmanlike soon as he perceived that in conceding a just measure to a Indians he would cause a lasting heart-burning to the Angloreproach that the non-official Europeans have hurled against respect of the Ilbert Bill will, we are certain, be disallowed by torian. The Viceroy will be unmistakably pronounced as ha charitably dealt with, while he was timely and honestly prepare measure to suit the feelings of both Natives and Europeans.
storm so well as to have proved his capacity to pilot the S through greater storms. In no past periods were educational m as has been under the able direction of Lord Ripon. The found a highly progressive educational policy has been laid, and we
that the edifice on that foundation will be started during the ne
An entirely new shape has been given to the administrative poli nancing the purchase of indigenous stores, by the reduction salt, by the wise policy of railway extension, and by resuming tions beyond Quetta with reference to the strengthening of the against the insidious encroachments of Russia. He has shown repairing the mistake unavoidably committed during the change
The most complex question between the Bengal Zamindárs and has been firmly handled. The information that its discussion ha be invaluable in the interests of a careful and improved adm proper basis has been laid down for strengthening and p municipal and local funds' government throughout India. The have been invited to take their fair share of the work of local s
We need not enumerate Lord Ripon's measures of reform an further, as it is not our object here to describe his full career incumbency has been too short to allow him to set himself right of the immense Indian population. We may feel sure that had but remained a few more years in India, he would have concili Indians, while remaining a friend of the Natives greater than eve in India ought to be backward in honouring this great, high-m and benevolent statesman, and perpetuating his name in Ind example to be followed by his successors. [The Bombay Sa Hitechchhu (75) of Ahmedabad, the Kaiser-i-Hind (101) and a f of this week exhort Natives to give a fitting reception to the time of his return to England and to perpetuate his memory in

Says that Lord Ripon is unpopular among Anglo-Indians because he has tried to rule India honestly while the creed of Anglo-Indians is that honesty need not be practised in ruling a subject race.

In a paragraph headed "Lord Ripon's Detractors," the Indu Prakásh (16) of the 13th October says:—Every Native, educated as well as uneducated, is convinced now of the reason why Lord Ripon has become unpopular with the majority of Anglo-Indians. It is because he has conscientiously tried to govern the Empire with rare honesty of purpose, and the creed with the advocates of rampant Anglo-Indianism is that honesty and sympathy for the people of India are qualities which it is a positive sin in a Viceroy to possess. The Natives admire Lord Ripon and look upon him as one of their greatest benefactors for possessing those qualities and for ruling the Empire so as to make his rule a source of glory to England and happiness to India's people. The Natives feel that he has been actuated throughout by the best of intentions for them, and what nation can surpass the Natives of this country in that peculiarly Indian virtue—readiness to thank one who means well and honestly? But Lord Ripon has not only meant well—he has, to the best of his ability, amidst good and evil report, tried to carry out his intentions, and he has succeeded so far that he has breathed into the Indian administration principles wholesome in their character. And what more could a Viceroy accomplish in the comparatively short period of four years and with the wildness of unruly opposition trying to check him at every step? The Natives know this, and they not only love this high-minded and truthful English statesman, but are proud to show that they are grateful to him. And yet how childishly some of the Anglo-Indian papers are endeavouring to induce Natives to join them in the abuse of Lord Ripon, as if Natives do not know what they are about and can be dealt with as so many children, incapable of feeling for and admiring a Viceroy who has suffered so much for their sake? As aptly observed by our brother of the Indian Spectator (1), papers like the Times of India which are indulging in this useless pastime are helping in a way the movement to do honour to the retiring Viceroy, of whose services it is a pleasure to speak.

Answers the taunt of the Times of India that Lord Ripon attempted to do a great deal but in reality did nothing.

In a paragraph headed "The retiring Viceroy," the Subodh Patrika (15) of the 12th October says:—An Anglo-Indian journalist, who gives expression to his views about Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty in the columns of the Pall Mall Gazette, very pertinently observes that the chief offence of which Lord Ripon has been guilty is that he has disappointed those who prophesied that ill would come of his appointment and that these are not likely to forgive him for it. Our contemporary of the Times of India, which represents the views of this class of people, has never lost an opportunity of saying what it could in disparagement of Lord Ripon's Government. In its issue of Tuesday last it tries to prove that Lord Ripon has attempted a great deal but has really done nothing. It is hardly worth while to answer the arguments of our contemporary. Such a broad assertion as this, is, in the case of Lord Ripon's administration, its own refutation. Besides, we cannot suppose that the article in question will succeed in making any converts of the Natives to whom it is addressed. Their high sense of Lord Ripon's services to the country has been too long forming itself, and withal is too deeply and soundly based, to be shaken by such summary method of dealing with it as the Times of India treats it to. But apart from the positive merits of Lord Ripon's rule, if it had simply stopped short with showing an utter absence of those mischiefs and those blunders which characterized the administration of his predecessor, it should still, we think, have stood in very high estimation among the Natives. To enumerate only a few of these, Lord Ripon's administration has been singularly free from acts like these:—a bungling of the Imperial accounts; a most cruel diversion of the Famine Insurance Fund to defray the expenses of an unjustifiable Afghan war; a tame submission to calls from Home, whether to enter on a war or saddle India with the costs of England's wars, or to do away with import duties to satisfy Manchester; an enhancement of the duty on salt and an imposition of an unequal license-tax; legislating with a view to exclude the acts of the executive from the cognizance of the judiciary; shutting up the voice of the people as expressed in their organs, and last but not least, sho contempt for the opinions and feelings of the people and a Native public bodies for giving expression to views unpalatable

Necessity of abolishing the salt-tax levied in India.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (101) of the 12th October in referring t a recent number of the Fortnightl advisability of abolishing the sa says:—The continuance of the tax i the paternal British Government and to the patriotic Natives. people of England would not put up with a tax on this article as many days as the people in this country have been doing fo so much opposed to the maxims of taxation that it is a wonder Government should continue it. It is not only an oppression o starving people to allow it to continue but it is a sinful policy t of God's bounty. The levy of a tax on salt is as ridiculous and imposition of a tax on the air that we breathe. The dearness of helped the spread of black leprosy in places situated near shores of Bombay. No far-sighted and paternal Government justifiable to derive the present revenue from salt at the expens and lives of their subjects. It is the duty of far-sighted and ge devise means for meeting the loss that would be caused by the salt-tax and to prevent poor people from dying untimel Márwáris and the Jews are laughed at for charging exorbitant in can be thought of the benevolence and mercy of the Governmen very large profit by a monopoly of this necessary of life?

Comments on the change introduced into the system of making nominations to the Statutory Civil Service of India.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 14th October says:—A cha been introduced into the prevalen system of making nominations to the Service. The candidates for appoint subjected to an examination, and th is to be given the place. The Go select certain candidates for exam arrangement will not give satisfaction. If the principle of didates to examination is after all acquiesced in, why should no tion be competitive and open to all comers. If the Statutory Ci be continued, the examination should be held on certain days i of the country and the same papers should be set to all the however, Government is not prepared to act so liberally, then should be restricted to the graduates of the university only an who comes first in the list in every Presidency should be appointe A competitive examination like the one suggested by us will satisfaction.

Disapproves of the practice of allowing soldiers to keep gunpowder with them.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 15th October says:—The p ing soldiers to keep gunpowder wit objectionable. A soldier mortally w soldier at Bangalore on Sunday the 12 is not an unusual occurrence. If a occurrences were made out from the beginning of the admini Ripon up to this day, it would show a very large number of suc the measures taken by the military authorities for the preventi arising from soldiers going on shooting excursions, the number has largely decreased. The Government of India are very matter and had asked the opinion of all the chief military auth regarding the advisability of not allowing soldiers to keep gunpo Many of the officers consulted were against the measure. We opinions given by them should be made public. It is said that soldiers are only supplied with gunpowder when they go out, bu to the barracks it is taken away from them and deposited in a s should not this practice be followed here? Such an arrangeme essential in India with its hot climate and where soldiers soon It is the duty of the Supreme Government to take speedy meas to the safety of the lives of the people and for the good of the Matters have gone so far that any more indifference will do mu Requests the Bombay Government to appoint a reporter on arts and manufactures for this presidency.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 15th October expresses joy at t pointment of a reporter on arts and manufactur the Madras Government for the Madras Presid and says that great benefit will undoubtedly to that Presidency by this new appointment. necessary that a similar appointment shou created for all the Presidencies with a view that may also reap the benefit of such a measure. If the Bombay Governmen to follow in the footsteps of the Madras Government, and were to set an ex to other provincial Governments, their action will deserve great commend

Comments on the suggestion made by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales for sending Indian artisans to England at the time of the London Exhibition.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (101) of the 12th October says :—The suggestion by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales for ing Native artists to England at the time of the L Exhibition is excellent. But it is doubtful w they will be benefitted by such a measure. No standing some drawbacks, the carrying out suggestion made by the Prince of Wales will up whole prove beneficial to India. Those Native should only be selected who are masters of their art. Their work shoul be examined here. After their arrival in England they should be sent manufactories which turn out the same sort of work as they do, or they be sent to some technical school to acquire further knowledge in the This will necessitate a large amount of expenditure. Government ou defray this expense, but arrangements can be made with the men to recoup G ment after their return to India from the proceeds of the sale of their The Government of Japan have been wise enough to send several clever Ja artisans to the Continent to acquire proficiency in articles of European facture. The Gáikwád of Baroda has also adopted a similar course. then the powerful and prosperous Indian Government, which are forem undertaking works of civilization, hesitate to spend a small amount of mo this important subject ?

Complains of the severity of the A'bkári Act in Surat.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 17th October, in a communicated says :—The reply sent by Government to the p made to them by the landholders of the Táluka, Zilla Surat, regarding the levy of duties on date trees and the toddy drawn from them and other ábkári is very disappointing. The landholders have been exempted from ta for a long time. Government have issued sanads to them by makin system of summary settlement applicable to them in accordance with B Act VII. of 1863, and had promised not to levy any additional tax on l the trees growing on them. Notwithstanding this, a heavy duty is impo date trees under the A'bkári Act. Government do not appear to have th of the hardships the landholders are put to thereby. The blood of the holders is as if sucked up by it. The levy of a fee of Re. 1 for ever tree and 3¾ annas for every maund of toddy was in itself very heavy. T has been doubled this year under the pretext that the income will owing to the current year being a sinhast year. This conduct is unbec in a high officer like the A'bkári Commissioner. The landholders will be The only object appears to be to increase the Government revenue. impartial officer or a commission were appointed to enquire into the caused to landholders by this heavy tax, the truth of the above statement be found out. The landholders have spent money and labour on the r of date trees on their estates, but they have not been able to realize one- of their outlay ; on the contrary, they have become involved in debt. I no remedy for the severity of the A'bkári Act and the losses resulting fr working ?

A complaint against the A'bkári Department at Surat.

A correspondent of the same newspaper writing from Surat, says dealers in toddy are strongly complaining severity of the A'bkári Department which ha this year taken over the direct supervision of t of this article. The dealers in toddy are placed before the magistra slight mistake in their accounts or on the inspectors suspecting of measures for selling toddy. If a commission were appoi into the strong complaint made this year regarding toddy, the G

the poor public would both be benefitted.

Use of the Kennedy Sea Face in Bombay for riding purposes and a suggestion for turning Rotten Row opposite the High Court into a fashionable garden to be styled after Lord Ripon.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 17th October says :—Th papers have again taken up the comp
the use of the Kennedy Sea Face for It is true that a spacious maidán i riding, but why do not gentlemen r back make use of the race-course on latter must also take into consideratio pedestrians, who cannot go to a lon their walks. We do not wish to deprive riders of their plea opposed to the Kennedy Sea Face being made over to them in dition. If, however, a portion of the sea-face is to be utilized Native public will not complain against such a measure. What is that the foot-path and a small portion of the road should b pedestrians. Seats should be provided along the sea-face, wh kept green with verdure. The Rotten Row opposite to the Hig is not much used by riders, should be turned into a fashionable styled after Lord Ripon. This Ripon garden will attract a people at the time of the coming Bombay International Exhib zoological collection is located in one part, a bandstand erected and the other part reserved for concerts and open air plays.
be glad to pay a small entrance fee, which will go towards the
the garden. The Bombay Municipality ought to come forward
The Esplanade Fee Fund Committee can be prevailed upon to of the Rotten Row to the municipality. The latter may appoin to carry out the work.

Delay in the declaration of the result of the Native Subordinate Magistrates' Examination held in Bombay.

The Yajdán Parast (122) of the 12th October complains th
the Native Subordinate Magistrates' E not yet been declared, though it
six months ago in Bombay, and says :
of candidates is really very pitiful.
anxiety for a long time. The result o mination is declared so late after the date on which it is held.
scandal which ought to be put a stop to. If the examiners are out the result within a reasonable date after the examination, th be re-appointed in future.

Non-disposal of a certain application regarding partition of property.

A correspondent of the Jagan Mitrá (34) of the 13th Octo
he made an application for the partitio property in 1879 to the First Class Sub at Ratnágiri, and that officer issued a Collector of Ratnágiri to carry out the correspondent wrote two petitions to the District Collector partitioning of the property to which he received a reply tha would be made in 1882; but nothing of the kind has yet bee petitions of a similar nature of subsequent dates have been alrea but it is strange that no notice has yet been taken of the corres cation. It would be well if applications for the partitions of disposed of in the order in which they are made.

Disapproves of the revival of the Vernacular Press Act.

The Sind Sudhár (132) of the 4th October in an article heade
cular Press Act," says :—Lord Lytton, of our present Viceroy, had passed an Vernacular Press Act. This Act w
Lord Ripon immediately on his arrival. It is again called for Indian papers of the present day. They advise the Government the mouth of the Vernacular press that has disturbed the equ Government and its official. The ignorant fellows forget that ey can repress the flow of opinion, if would, if not ee natural course, one day burst forth and shake the om its very foundation. We therefore advise our Gov-ly led away by hasty and short-sighted statesmen and ake short of the whole matter by gagging the Native to know that stopping the mouth is of no good, for the

to be the same even if not expressed. The proper course else. If the ruler is kind and benevolent the same d forth heaps of curses and cries will then raise their nd thanksgiving. If the British Government deal justly emedy the evils they are labouring under, there would be sh and unjust Act. If our advice is acted up to, the sub-ever sing the praises of the British Government. They e a great regard for the English whose advent shall have
, and whose reign shall have laid the foundation of peace

ct
s-nt
rist (122) of the 12th October says :—Some of the Anglo-Indian newspapers which are given to vilify the Vernacular papers have once more begun to misrepresent their writings. After the recommendation made by the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times for the revival of the Vernacular Press Act, these Anglo-Indian papers have begun to publish and sentences from the articles appearing in the Native

w to show that they are disloyal and seditious, and that e be placed under the operation of the defunct Act. But agraphs and sentences are read along with the entire ey have been extracted, they will show that they are elings for the welfare and benefit of Government. If the were to give the entire text of the articles they quote from s, they would be foiled in their object and the latter would porters of Government. Such shameful procedure on the glo-Indian newspapers has exposed them to the ridicule of sensible Europeans. They do no service to the rulers and ct, but, on the contrary, widen the gulf at present existing nd Natives. They are no well-wishers of the country and e their enemies.

he ce
he n-
i-

to the Police Commissioner's order about the Diváli
festival, the Native Opinion (11) of the 12th October says :—The protection of public roads and thoroughfares against firing crackers and other works is all right and we would give our active support to keeping the roads clear of such firing. But the prohibition is not confined to the above limits. The order is so s near and strictly in it act as a deterrent to all enjoyment lly break through the great principle of Law, "Every n castle." Add to this the spirit in which the order is realise to himself the amount of disappointment and asure causes to a considerable number of people. We ect for our worthy Commissioner of Police and do appre-care for the preservation of peace and order throughout ust freely say we are not so sure of his myrmidons; we out his orders rather too freely. The peculiarity of the at if he finds a Native attacked by a European loafer, he ck or say he is cautioned not to seize Europeans. But Diváli his buoyant spirit, encouraged by such an order
r cares to see whether he respects the law in entering permission a private oart; and he is seen taking up rs even at the distance of a hundred or two hundred feet
It is this strictness or rather stiffness in execution to which we draw Sir Frank's attention. We have already said that it is necessary to keep the roads clear of all firing, but it is ungenerous to disturb children in their enjoyment when they exercise it at a distance from the road side. We hope Sir Frank will so order his people as to lessen so far as he can the amount of the consequent mischief.

Complains of the disorderly behaviour of some Pársis in Bázár Gate Street, Fort.

A correspondent of the Kaiser-i-Hind (101) of the 12th October says that several roguish Pársis either stand on the foot-path opposite the Máneckji Seth's Agiary in Bázár Gate Street, Fort, or sit on the front parts of the shops in that quarter after they are closed and loudly use abusive language towards one another. Remarks are passed upon women who happen to pass by that place, and sometimes they (Pársis) even dare to openly joke with them. They commit such mischief generally between 6 and 10 P.M. It is to be hoped that the police will prevent them from either standing on the foot-path or sitting on the shops and thus put a stop to this nuisance.

Complains of the bad condition of the road between Násik and Trimbak and requests the authorities to repair it without delay.

The Násik Vritt (45) of the 11th October complains that the road between Násik and Trimbak is in a state of utter desrepair. There is not perhaps such a bad road in all India. Owing to the Sinhastha, pilgrims in large numbers resort to Trimbak and they have to endure no end o misery on account of want of repairs to this road. A short time ago the Násik Vritt learnt from the Mámlatdár of Násik that orders had been received from the Collector to commenc repairs at once, but strange to say that a beginning has not yet been made. A a place called Mahirávni a toll is levied upon all pilgrims, but no attention i paid to the repair of the road which is in as bad a condition as it can be.

Comments in connection with the fair recently held at Dákor.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (75) of Ahmedabad of the 16th Octobe says that a very large number of people had collecte this year in Dákor at the time of the Dákor Fair The condition of females was very pitiful. Thei modesty could not be preserved in the great crowd o pilgrims. The police could not do much in this large concourse of people They used the whip but that did not avail them much. A boy was crushed t death and it is rumoured that another boy has met with the same fate. Government ought to take stringent measures to prevent accidents.

Education.

Withdraws unconditionally the statements made in the columns of the Poona Vaibhav newspaper in connection with the subject of female education during the last two months.

The Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 12th October says that the articles whic appeared in the columns of this journal on the subject of female education during the last two month were written recklessly, and on unsubstantial ground and the remarks contained therein were inappropriat The Vaibhav expresses its deep regret for havin published such unbecoming matter and unreservedl retracts the statements made in the articles to whic exception was justly taken by several newspapers and respectable Nativ gentlemen. The Vaibhav apologises to the European and Native ladies an gentlemen for the publication of defamatory writings in its columns and promises to take care in future not to offend in the same way.

Railways.

A defence of Native engine-drivers.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 16th October points out the hollownes of the argument advanced in some quarters tha Native engine-drivers use more coal than their European brethren, and thus the saving made by thei employment instead of Europeans is consumed in the use of coal, and says :- The Scinde, Panjab and Delhi Railway is the only railway that has made th complaint. Then the question is why do not other railway companies prefer similar complaint? If the complaint were well-founded, it would be raised b other railway companies and the system of employing Natives as drivers be abandoned. Such has not been the case hitherto and therefore the co receives its own quietus. As long as Native drivers, guards and s masters continue discharging their respective duties satisfactorily a railway companies profit financially by their employment, the prac engaging their services will not be given up and those who expect a c result must fail in their object.

Municipalities

Complains of the indifference of the Health Department of the Bombay Municipality in the matter of cleaning thickly-populated Native quarters of the town and the prevention of cholera.

The Rást Goftár (109) of the 12th October says:—Though it is imp for the local Health Department to achieve success until the Native public abandon certai habits, we have no hesitation in saying th present spread of cholera in Bombay is owing to the great accumulation of filth than to t valence of these dirty habits among the people. T the number of deaths from cholera this week is while it was 21 last week, we cannot place implicit confidence in these Even if they be true, 5 deaths from cholera is not a small number. Mo it is thought that cholera has increased since then. Unfortunately appeared more this year in Pársi quarters than formerly. In previous it generally disappeared about the Diváli, but it is to be regretted should now continue much longer. This is the case since the last tw only. Much filth accumulates in the thickly-populated Native quarters town, and the expensive Health Department is quite careless in the
When it is impossible to cross some of these quarters without closing th owing to the dreadful stench prevailing in them, how must the thous poor people residing in them be passing their time? The citizens o raise a strong cry against the filthy condition of the streets and should the Health Department do the needful in the matter. [A correspon the same paper complains of the breaking out of cholera in Máhim and and asks the reason of the Municipality not taking measures to pu air by fumigation as was done last year when the epidemic broke out at Why should it think of cleanliness after persons die of cholera ins attending to the cleanliness of thickly-populated quarters and lanes b breaks out.]

Comments on the construction of cholera hospitals in Bombay by the local municipality.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 16th October expresses approval resolution adopted by the Bombay Municipal ration for the construction of cholera hosp different parts of the city, and says:—The ere special cholera hospitals is a good remedy for with the epidemic, but what is really wanted it should entirely disappear from here and the city should be free from it long time as was the case in previous years. It is necessary that measures be taken for improving the sanitary condition of Bombay. The fear-s inhabitants will not be satisfied with the building of these hospitals, wh but small solace to them. The Municipality ought first to expel cholera f city and then adopt permanent measures for affording relief to the poor time when it may periodically visit this place. [The Jáme Jamshed (98) same date does not approve of the erection of cholera hospitals in Bomb they will spread false terror and subject the city to quarrantine regulat nothing. The first thing that is necessary for preventing the outb cholera is a copious and pure supply of water to the people. Cholera in here in that week in which there is a deficient supply of water. The pality ought to begin with the Tansa Lake.]

Questions the fitness of Mr. Jagjivan Vamal Kanki to sit on the Rándar Municipal Board.

A correspondent of the Praja Mitrá (108) of the 15th October says of the new Commissioners of the Rándar Tow cipality is Mr. Jagjivan Vamal Kanki, an inh of Rándar. He is said to have been sentence term of imprisonment and fine in a criminal tion. The sentence of imprisonment was aft remitted but he had to pay the fine imposed on him. Is it not absurd that su a man should be permitted to be a member of the Municipal Board? T editor, in a note, expresses a hope that due attention will be paid to the mat brought to light by his correspondent.

Does not approve of the Ahmedabad Municipality incurring fresh debt for the construction of public works.

The Samsher Báhádur (110) of the 10th October says:—The Ahmedab Municipality has recently adopted a resolution at general meeting to construct a tramway for the moval of the night-soil from the city at a cost of o lákh of rupees. It is now thinking of building wate works at a cost of five or seven lákhs. The peop are displeased with the action of the Municipality, which has no funds to me the expenses. It has not been able to pay off the debt it had contracted for t construction of the new road in the city. Who can, under these circumstance approve of its undertaking fresh works with borrowed capital? The Comm sioners will allege that as the Municipality of Bombay, Calcutta and other plac have contracted debts, why should not that of Ahmedabad do the same? Th is blind imitation. The evil of borrowing money is now very much on t increase among the different municipalities of this country. The scheme local self-government is not likely to prove a boon. The Commissioners do n realise the condition of the people. It is to be regretted that they should thi of increasing the municipal taxation instead of reducing it.

Native States.

Complains of the prevalence of mismanagement in the Porbandar State.

A correspondent of the Gujaráti (94) of the 12th October says:—So mu mismanagement prevails in Porbandar, and the Rá is so very obstinate, that the new Kárbhári, Mr. Mo lál, has at last thrown up his appointment out of she disgust. For the present he has taken one month leave but he will not after the expiry of that period return to duty. The K bhári asked the Rána to supply chairs, tables and other furniture for his offi but the latter refused to comply with the request and only supplied him w one chair. Moreover, the Rána began to impose many new taxes on his subjec He not only imposed taxes on tailors, stone-masons, shoemakers and other wor men, but he has ordered the collection of taxes from them for the last twen years. The Rána had deprived the Mehrs of their land but he has restor them on their petitioning the Political Agent. He has taken back from t merchants the land they had bought, on the plea that they themselves shou till their own ground and not allow others to do so. Can anything be m oppressive than this?

Berár Affairs.

Miscellaneous complaints about the authorities in the village of Risod.

A correspondent of the Varhád Samáchár (17) of the 13th October writi from Risod says that the Head Master of the lo Vernacular school does not regularly come to scho Last year the result of the annual examination w bad and this year it will not be better. The He Master is inattentive to his duties and is not on good terms with his subor nates. Some of the Assistant Masters beat their pupils, and consequently ma boys have been forced to leave the school. One Assistant Master, who enjo the favour of the District Deputy Educational Inspector, leaves his legitima work and takes other remunerative business to increase his income. The c respondent suggests that the Master and his assistants should be removed fr Risod. The Chief Constable of Risod is a wealthy Pátil. He is innocent reading and writing, and consequently the Head Constable does what he lik These men do not take any notice of complaints. The Head Constable keep horse which he allows to graze in the fields to the injury of their owners. forcibly takes grass without paying for it. The correspondent also mal various complaints against the post office authorities of Risod.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Pre

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
22nd October 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Ábkári:
- Complaint against the — Department at Surat 8
- Complaint regarding the severity of the — Act in Surat ... 8

Administration of India: Difference in the treatment of Europeans and Natives... 3
Civil Service of India: Comments on the change introduced into the system of making nominations to the statutory 7
Dákor Fair: Comments in connection with the recent— 11
Gunpowder: Disapproval of the practice of allowing soldiers to keep — with them 7
Judicial matters:
- Delay in the declaration of the result of the Native Subordinate Magistrates' Examination held in Bombay 9
- Non-disposal of a certain application regarding partition of property. 9

Kennedy Sea Face in Bombay: Use of the — for riding purposes and a suggestion for turning the Rotten Row opposite the High Court into a fashionable garden to be styled after Lord Ripon ... 9
London Exhibition: Comments on the suggestion made by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales for sending Indian artisans to England at the time of the— 8
Police:
- Complaint against the disorderly behaviour of some Pársis in Bázár Gate Street, Fort, Bombay 11
- Complaint regarding the manner in which the — carry out the orders of the Police Commissioner, Bombay, during the Diváli festival 10

Reporter on arts and manufactures: Request to the Bombay Government to appoint a — for this Presidency 8
Roads: Complaint regarding the bad condition of the road between Násik and Trimbak and request to the authorities to repair it without delay 11
Salt: Necessity of abolishing the — tax levied in India 7
Viceroyalty of India:
- Answer to the taunt of the Times of India that Lord Ripon attempted to do a great deal but in reality did nothing 6
- Eulogium of Lord Ripon and his administration 3
- Expression of opinion that Lord Ripon is unpopular among Anglo-Indians because he has tried to rule India honestly while the creed of Anglo-Indians is that honesty need not be practised in ruling a subject race 6
- Praises of the career of Lord Ripon as Viceroy and Governor General of India 5

Vernacular Press:
- Disapproval of the conduct of some Anglo-Indian newspapers which misrepresent the views expressed by the— 10
- Disapproval of the revival of the — Act 9

PART II.—Education—

Female education: Withdrawal of the statements made in the columns of the Poona Vaibhav newspaper in connection with the subject of — during the last two months 11

PART III.—Railways—

Native engine-drivers: A defence of— 11

INDEX.

Page.

V.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad: Disapproval of the — municipality incurring fresh debt for the construction of public works 13
Bombay:
  Comments on the construction of cholera hospitals in — by the local municipality 12
  Complaint regarding the indifference of the Health Department of the — municipality in the matter of cleaning thickly-populated Native quarters of the town and the prevention of cholera ... 12
Ránder: Objection to the fitness of Mr. Jagjivan Vamal Kanki to sit on the — Municipal Board 12

V.—Native States—

Porbandar: Complaint against the prevalence of mismanagement in the — State 13

VI.—Berár Affairs—

Complaints: Miscellaneous — about the authorities in the village of Risod. 13

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIA

R.
67
FICE
84

N

PUBLIS

For t

No.	Nam
	I
1	The Indian Spect
2	„ Mahrátta ...
3	„ Morning Sta
4	„ Quarterly Jo janik Sab
5	„ Sind Times
	ANGL
6	The Din Bandhu
7	„ Dnyán Chaks
8	„ Dnyánodayă
9	„ Dnyán Praká
10	„ Indu Prakás
11	„ Native Opini
12	„ Prabhákar
13	„ Pramod Sind
14	„ Shetakaryánc
15	„ Subodh Patri
16	„ Vaidarbh ..
17	„ Varhád (Berá
	M
18	The Arunodayă
19	„ A'ryávart ...
20	„ Bakul ...
21	„ Belgaum Sam
22	„ Bodh Sudháks
*23	„ Chháva ...
24	„ Daivadnyă Sa
25	„ Dakshin Vritt
26	„ Dhárwár Vrit
27	„ Dnyán Bodha
28	„ Dnyán Ságar
29	„ Ganga Lahari
30	„ Hindu Punch
31	„ Hitechchhu
32	„ Israel[1] ...
33	„ Jagadádarsh
34	„ Jagan Mitră
35	„ Kalpataru...
36	„ Karnátak Mit
37	„ Kesari ...
38	„ Khándesh Vai
39	„ Lamp of Juda
40	„ Lokahitavádi
*41	„ Mádhavi ...
42	„ Maháráshtră
43	„ Maháráshtră M
44	„ Nagar Samách
45	„ Násik Vritt
46	„ Nibandh Chan
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu
48	„ Panchánan
49	„ Pandhari Vaib
50	„ Poona Vaibhav
*51	„ Prabodh Chand
*52	„ Pratod ...
*53	„ Pune Sárvaja Pustak ...
*54	„ Rámdás ...
55	„ Saddharm Dip
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipi
57	„ Satyă Sadan
58	„ Satyă Shodhak
*59	„ Sharabh ...
60	„ Shetakari ...
*61	„ Shiváji[1] ...
62	„ Sholápur Vritt
63	„ Shubh Suchak
64	„ Suryakánt...
65	„ Suryodayă...
*66	„ Svadesh Hitech

---

[1] Frequently

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 25th October 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	750
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	281
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	275
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	160
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
37	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	4,350
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
39	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
40	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*41	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	400
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	450
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*54	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*66	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 734

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
67	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
68	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	300
69	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	250
*70	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
71	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
72	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	500
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
73	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
74	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	475
75	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	485
76	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
77	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	200
	GUJARA'TI.
78	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
79	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	850
80	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	394
81	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
82	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	415
83	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,175
84	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	500
85	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	50
86	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	700
*87	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.	200
88	„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly	585
89	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,025
90	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	300
91	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
92	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
93	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	984
94	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
95	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	300
96	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*97	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
98	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	800
99	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,350
100	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	125
101	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	810
*102	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	925
*104	„ Mangal Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
105	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	250
106	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.	350
107	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
108	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
109	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
110	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,750
111	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
112	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
113	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	327
114	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
115	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	620
116	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	1,700
117	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	423
*118	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
119	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
120	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	85
121	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	778
122	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
123	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
124	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	180
125	„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do.	300
126	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	915
127	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	115
	SANSKRIT.
128	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	150
	URDU.
*129	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
130	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
131	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	500
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
132	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	327
	SINDI.
133	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the News paper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in th Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (अ or ă) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusio never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to b absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printe with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of th Government of Bombay the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Praises Lord Ripon's administrative acts and answers the taunts of the Times of India directed against His Lordship's administration and policy.

In an article headed "The retiring Viceroy" the Sind Times (5) of the 21st October says:—We are about to lose a ruler who has infused new life into us, who has sympathized with our legitimate aspirations, and who has never turned a deaf ear to our cries. The press, Native as well as Anglo-Indian, has increased in importance, and the weight of representative associations has been duly recognized. The Bombay press and the Bombay associations joined in an unanimous condemnation of the Mhowra Bill and the Game Preservation Bill. The Bills passed through the local Council nevertheless, but the Viceroy refused his assent to them, and gave a shock to bureaucratic power, from which it is not likely to recover soon, and a momentum to the influence of the press, which has made it in truth a power in the land. The press again took up the question of reform in the Statutory Civil Service, and Lord Ripon at once addressed the Secretary of State, and now we find him sanctioning an educational test for the selection of probationers in Bengal. The Ilbert Bill, which brought this question to the surface, is again an instance of his sincere desire to do justice to the people of India. It has no doubt given a valuable right to the European British subject, but it has made it possible for us, on the strength of this very concession, to claim the same right, and as a matter of fact our Local Government has itself recognized the expediency of granting it in part unasked. We shall shortly have trials by jury in Karáchi, and at no distant date in Sukkur and Hyderabad. Moreover the Ilbert Bill made an important amendment in section 191 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which allows a district magistrate, a sub-divisional magistrate, or a magistrate of the first class duly empowered to initiate criminal proceedings against any one on suspicion of his having committed an offence. Act III. of 1884, the Ilbert Bill as enacted into law, however, lays down that in all such cases the accused can as a matter of right demand a change of venue, as well as a committal to the court of sessions. This is no unimportant right. Had Lord Ripon stayed a little longer with us, the iniquitous provision which has been thus partly made innocuous would have been in all likelihood effaced from the statute book. The Krishnagar students' case directed public attention to it lately, and Lord Ripon at once sent for the statistics of cases instituted by magistrates of their own motion on suspicion. In the Salem riots' case his influence has been exerted in favour of the innocent prisoners, and the Madras papers are now pretty sure that it has not been exerted in vain. The landed gentry of the whole of India owe to him a debt of gratitude for his wise resolution, issued some time ago, enjoining fixity of assessment and prohibiting constant revisions of settlement. The Bengal tenantry would have cause to bless his name as soon as the Tenancy Bill passes into law, and that it will pass into law, with several modifications of course, is pretty certain. The landholders in the North-West Provinces cannot but be thankful to him for his liberal policy regarding remissions of revenue. His resolutions, about local self-government have resulted in a series of legislative measures conferring extended powers on local bodies and introducing a representative element in their constitution. For this boon alone his name deserves to be perpetuated. But this is not all. He has carried out many reforms unobtrusively and unostentatiously which have escaped the notice of most of our public writers. A collection of exemptions and immunities granted by him under the Arms Act, the Court Fees Act, and the Stamp Act will bear out our assertion. It was only recently that Lord Ripon invited the opinions of local Governments on the minute of Sir Richard Garth as to the heavy cost of litigation, and expressed his opinion that unless the ad valorem scale of fees was either supplemented by a system of refunds or spread over the different stages of a suit, it could not but be unjust. And yet, notwithstanding these acts, we are asked to believe by the Times of India that Lord Ripon will not occupy more than "a page or two of Indian history," and that the achievements ascribed to him are "an odd medley of ordinary routine works, or works that are purely mythical, of works that fell, as a matter of course, to the different local Governments"! Yes, indeed! It was an ordinary routine work to launch the local self-government scheme, an ordinary routine work to take measures for giving wider publicity to legisl proceedings and enactments, an ordinary routine work no doubt to place nanted Native Civilians on the same footing as their English brethren, to re the Statutory Civil Service, to amend our Criminal Code, to give us so many ex tions from stamp duties, to relax the provisions of the Arms Act, and to r the Vernacular Press Act. The Tenancy Bill, we suppose, is a myth accor to our contemporary, and the Education Commission was, we suppose, a farc cording to him. The Times of India has not had "the good fortune," it says, to of a single instance in which "public measures were translated into the ve culars and scattered broadcast through India." Well, we have had this good fort and we can only wonder that the Times of India should display such ignora Public measures are translated into the vernaculars, and the translations even now placed within easy reach of the people. Was it not again only a months ago that Mr. Peile's speeches on the Local Self-government Bills published in pamphlet form by the Government and circulated gratis thro out the length and breadth of the Presidency? "Encouragement to educa of the children of Europeans domiciled in India," says our contemporary, " one of Lord Lytton's measures, and was necessarily carried through by successor." Granted; but if Lord Lytton is to be given the credit of a mea which he did not carry out, why is Lord Ripon to be denied any credit for couraging agricultural banks or for his Tenancy Bill? This shows the won ful freaks of logic our contemporary is capable of committing. The local government resolutions again, he tells us, have "evaporated into thin Have they really? Are the Bills introduced by Mr. Peile, and now ena into law, after all so flimsy and unsubstantial? Are the numerous other on the same subject composed of the same vapoury materials? Surely contemporary knows better than this. We never saw even him in a hypercritical mood than in that issue of his paper in which he depreciates Ripon's achievements. We need not remind our contemporary that he is ting no fair example to Native journalists, and that henceforward he at any should never lay the charge of "hypercriticism" at the door of the Na press.

Says that the selection of Natives for the covenanted Civil Service should be made by a competitive examination.

In a paragraph headed "The Statutory Civil Service," the Subodh Pa
(15) of the 19th October says:—It has long been understood that the rules for the selection of didates for the Statutory Civil Service are under consideration of the Government of India. No de conclusions appear to have been arrived at as
But in the meanwhile permission has been granted to the local Governmen select their candidates this year in any way they choose. Accordingly Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has announced that such of the applicant appointment as he should approve will be submitted to the test of an exan tion in English, history, philosophy, mathematics, physical science, criminal law. The names of the candidates who, in order of merit, oc the first six places on the examination list will be submitted to the Govern of India, who will make their choice out of those six names. This is no a plausible way of making the best of a bad principle of selection. It mus noted, however, that no such half-measures will ever serve to put the schen a sound and satisfactory basis. To do so it is absolutely necessary to give widest scope to competition. And unless that is done there can be no guar that the fittest men will be selected. The Statutory Civil Service, if pro remodelled, would not fetter competition by a previous selection of the dates, but leaving it entirely free would enforce the same tests of efficien those required of candidates selected in England. Such selection, followe
a couple of years' finish at an English University, and an acquisition of br and polish from contact with English society, will not only satisfy the jus mands of the Natives, but will leave no scope for the Anglo-Indian sneer Statutory Civil Servants as an inferior class of people, not worthy of the and privileges of the covenanted Civil Servants.

Expresses generally a doubt regarding the utility of establishing scholarships to enable Natives to study at the Universities in England, and says that Statutory Civilians should take advantage of them.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 19th October, in a paragraph ernment of India Scholarships," says:
instance of this same device of patching
tially defective system of nomination
tioned the recent foundation of six s £200 a year for Natives studying a University. The idea, no doubt, did with the Government. It was put into indefatigable Professor Monier Williams. But the Governmen casting about for some way of improving the quality of the Civil nations, properly saw the opportunity which the scheme afforded been tempted to comply with Professor Monier Williams' pro reason. This accounts for the condition annexed to the scholar selecting men for them preference shall be given to Statutory Civi of passing a probationary period in England. But it has yet to far they will avail themselves of them, though if they were wise t to fail to do so. By way of another patch, we think Governmen reserve these scholarships for the Civilians, at the same time maki at one of the English Universities a condition precedent to their pointments in India. But with the present rules for holding the there is hardly any justification for establishing them, apart from the Statutory Civilians may make of them. An English degree is n by the generality of the Natives in and for itself, nor does it impr sition. Much less can it be said that an encouragement to study Universities is a crying necessity of the times. There are many mechanical and industrial lines a knowledge of which is to be acq land. If encouragement is required anywhere, it is in the acqui knowledge and skill. The humane arts can be studied in India sufficient for all practical purposes and for all our wants.

Abolition of the Vernacular Press Act by Lord Ripon and remarks in connection therewith.

The same newspaper, in a paragraph headed "The Nat
the Viceroy," says:—But independ recognition of his services from the glad to be able to announce that Lo
also receive an address from the Na Bombay. The sense of security and f
the whole Native press has enjoyed during Lord Ripon's regi
his repeal of the ill-advised Gagging Act, is well worthy of some ful acknowledgment. It has been said in certain quarters th Viceroy in Lord Ripon's place would have removed the gag from the same, and that it is no special merit of Lord Ripon if he did s for a moment the truth of this statement, our thanks are none the liberator, and it would be an act of ingratitude not to acknowle which has been extended to us by Lord Ripon, not as one isolated part of a noble and generous policy.

Approves of the action of Mr. Rivers Thompson, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, in the matter of the Krishnagar students' case.

The Gujaráti (94) of the 19th October, in referring to Mr. Rivers Thompson, Lieutenant-Gover
in the matter of the Krishnagar students'
Mr. Rivers Thompson deserves great independence manifested by him in dea case. The tyrannical conduct of the hau police in the above case has tarnishe character of British justice. The course adopted by the Lieuten of Bengal is most just and was urgently needed for the vindicatio
The conduct of the police appears to have been dictated from the excited by the Ilbert Bill controversy. Mr. Thompson has show sight in preventing the perpetration of an unjust act. He has rem public mind apprehensions regarding injustice and oppression.
acted with an unbiassed mind, he would become immensely p Yajdán Parast (123) of the 19th, the Bombay Samáchár (83) of the Akhbáre Sodágar (79) and the Káside Mumbai (103) of the 22nd O approval of the action of Mr. Rivers Thompson in the Krishna case, and say that it will not fail to be productive of good results.

Approves of the suggestion made to Government by Sir William Wedderburn in connection with the oppression exercised by the police in extorting confessions from prisoners.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 24th October says:—Sir Wi burn has taken up the important su pression exercised by the police for fessions from prisoners, and if all th magistrates in this Presidency were to measures for its extinction the evil rooted out. It is true that the police to zulum in every case and that they m difficulties in tracing out the real culprits. But the complaints shocking oppression practised by the mofussil police for extorti have now gone to such a length that it is necessary that measures s for its suppression. The remedies are simple, and it is surpri Bombay Government have not adopted them. They should iss requesting all Police Superintendents and Commissioners to info ordinates that Government look with displeasure on this pra any police officer found resorting to it will be severely puni resolution will prove very beneficial. Moreover if all judges a were to resolve to duly punish police officers found guilty of th evil would soon be checked. Damaged characters should not, as be employed in the police force. These persons prove useful in s to take their help for securing justice is equivalent to degrading of the service itself. [The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the same Sir William Wedderburn's suggestion is very valuable and shoul acted upon. What Sir W. Wedderburn and the public want is ment should issue a strict order to heads of police not to allow nates to take undue liberty in extorting confessions, and to s them when conviction is brought home to them with a view Such a measure will greatly improve the police force, and will be mercy and justice to the people. The Akhbáre Sodágar (79) of th expresses disapproval of the evasive reply given by Government sentation made by Sir William Wedderburn in the matter, an behoves Government to enquire into it and to take remedial reason why the police resort to beating and other cruel treatme is because the men employed in the police force are illiterate an
The European superiors do not know of the oppression exercised b nates, place great confidence in them, and remain ignorant of th enquiry into the matter will show the necessity of employin clever men into the police force. When Government have evad public ought to petition them and support the prayer of Sir W
The Poona Sárvajanik Sabha should also take up the matter.]

Complains that the higher judicial appointments in Sind are given to Military Civilians and the claims of Natives are ignored.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 19th October says:—The have very reasonable grounds of co
the provincial Government for their ference to the claims of Natives, di their knowledge of law and for abilit
it, to the higher judicial appointments
Our contemporary, the Sind Times, w cates the rights of qualified Sindis, complains that there is not on Native judicial officer in Sind of higher position than a Subordi with better emoluments than Rs. 300 per month. All the higher ments seem to be reserved for what are called "Military Civi lucky mortals could not in the nature of things boast of legal att fresh from the Revenue Survey Department are said to be pitch judicial offices for which they have had no previous training or cl are the children of the soil to be shut out from those higher off are every way qualified to fill? It would be absurd that in the of Sind there is not a single qualified Native well up in legal ma post of Judge of the Small Causes Court. Let the energetic Sind rialise the provincial authorities on the subject. In Mr. Melvi Judicial Commissioner in Sind, they will find a member of the Lo on whose impartiality and sense of justice they may fairly depend ful that the remonstrance will not fail to have effect. The Sin

Sind Sabha between them must try every means in their power, u to the Secretary of State, to have this anomaly removed. They m Excellency the Governor, who is going to Sind shortly.

Lunatic Asylum at Colába.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 22nd October says:—The re
Bombay Government to build a luna
Ratnágiri and one at Poona is very wise
Asylum at Colába however is a disgrace to the proud city of Bo sort of prison, and is quite deficient in suitable amusements for t persons located in it. Moreover many lunatics have to be refused ad owing to want of room. A few patients are provided free of asylum, but others have to pay a certain monthly fee. Those w to pay it are cruelly refused admission. If the Colába Lunatic extended, and if certain comforts were provided for the inma spent for the purpose would not be spent in vain. The two new a certain extent remove the complaint regarding the want of acco lunatics. Sir James Fergusson ought however to lose no time in small committee of engineers and doctors to draw up plans and fu for extending the Colába Lunatic Asylum. He should not hesit the sanction of the Supreme Government for spending even two on the work. It is not only a shame and cruelty to refuse adm lunatics into the asylum, but it is a disgrace to the liberality of th to the solicitude of Government that such want should long rema

Says that the Bombay Government ought to pay the expenses incurred by Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth, an interpreter in the Small Causes Court, in defending himself from the charge of bribery brought against him by the police, and that they should order the prosecution of the sweetmeat-seller and other principal witnesses for perjury.

The same newspaper of the 18th October says:—The ap
by the unfortunate Mr. Bápuji Dinán preter in the local Small Cause Court, Government for the payment of Rs. 2,7 of the expenses incurred by him in the brought against him by the police, is pe
it is to be hoped that Sir James Fe deference to public opinion, comply wi now made. It is surprising that the withdraw from the case when it was o
and the evidence very weak. We are r
Mr. Brewin or any police officer in his bring dishonest Government servants to justice, but in this showed excessive zeal and took action in reliance upon the roguish sweetmeat-seller. The police are not much to blame in they wished to do good to the public. But after the result of t Sir Frank Souter's duty to request Government to repay the un preter all his expenses. As nothing of the kind has been done, made an application. Sir James ought to issue a resolution orderi of the expenses incurred by Mr. Bápuji and the prosecution of seller and other principal witnesses for giving false information and for perjury. As long as this is not done, the public wi satisfaction that their homes are safe and that they will not be the false testimony of some insignificant men. [The Yajdán P
the 19th October expresses a hope that Government will, for the comply with the request made by Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth for the expenses incurred by him in defending himself against the cha brought against him.]

Says that it is not right to levy a water-rate on lands if those lands are not supplied with water provided by Government.

A correspondent of the Sind Sudhár (133) of the 18th Oc entirely agree with the opinion expres Sabha in its report to the Commissio
visability of making alterations in sect Bombay Land Revenue Code, but I h
more to say which, I believe, dese
There are several tálukas in Sind, am Rohri Táluka may be especially mentioned, which depend upon cultivation. The whole of the Rohri Division, so to say, often and there remains nothing to distinguish the bed of a canal fro Revenue officers have urged that the water of the flood is mixed

water, and therefore the lands under inundation may be sai supplied by Government with water. On this ground Hakab such lands. It is now four or five years since there have b although canal clearance has been performed as usual. This f proves that the argument of revenue officers can hold no wate lands as are situated on or near the banks of canals or water-c upon canal water for their cultivation. This being so, it is co provisions of the Irrigation Act that lands not depending on c their cultivation should have been, and should hereafter be, subj rates. It is therefore proper, now that the new settlement has c and the jamábandi has not been fixed, that Hakaba should not b land assessment. The rates fixed under the settlement will con unchanged for about thirty years, but Hakaba should in justice b for those years during which water has been supplied at the cost o
It is unfair to charge water-rates on lands which have not been water by Government. A. has a piece of land near the bed of a canal, which depends for the supply of water on a well belonging ment cannot, rightly speaking, charge water-rates on this piece.
the part of Government to fix and levy water-rates on lands, lands derive advantage from the water provided by Government

Requests Government to assign lands for building houses and shops to the inhabitants of Sangameshvar.

The Bakul (20) of the 19th October complains that althou season is over, yet nothing has been d
new places to the people of Sangameshv houses and shops. The inhabitants of in great distress. Owing to the con year, they do not venture to build shop locality. They are thinking of migrating to another town. Su from Sangameshvar will cause them much unnecessary distre will result in serious harm to the internal trade, which has its ce meshvar. The agriculturists who wish to sell their corn cann because trade at Sangameshvar is at a stand-still. The Bakul tr ernment will without delay assign lands for building houses an inhabitants of Sangameshvar.

Complains of the harsh treatment of liquor-sellers in Bombay by the A'bkári Department.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 25th October says:—T made by the dealers in liquor against t
are daily increasing in number. T Native States have also been put to in the new ábkári arrangements made Government with them. The complai year by dealers in liquor have been very numerous, but no hee paid to them. Some officers have become so very anxious t revenue that they do not think it their duty to attend to the int vileges of dealers in liquor and of consumers. Even after licen for the sale of liquor, new hard conditions continue to be impose sellers in Bombay. It is very painful that such severity shoul in Bombay before the very eyes of Government. Such indif part of the latter is not becoming. It is the duty of Governme the actions of their officers and to give justice to the people by a any wrong they may be doing. The present is a fitting time fo of this duty.

Complains of delay in the declaration of the result of the Subordinate Magistrates' Examination held six months ago in Bombay.

A correspondent of the Indian Spectator (1) of the 19th O
It is a scandal and a shame that th
Native Magistrates' Examination, months ago, should have yet remain
The University, as some people thin to do with the examination. It i Department that is greatly to blame of things. If the examiners had their hands full of other wo could have declined the office. But when they once accepted have a shadow of excuse for the delay, which is without a p Dátardun (88) of the 23rd October remarks ironically that th

last Subordinate Magistrates' Examination should be declared of the one to be held six months hence, now that six month elapsed since it was held.]

Complains of the practice of asking for presents on Pársi and Hindu new year holidays.

The Gujarát Mitrá (74) of the 19th October complains t others employed in courts of justice a at Surat ask for Diváli presents from abuse them if their request is not comp heads of offices should prevent thei from behaving in this disgraceful mann spondent of the Jáme Jamshed (83) of the 24th October also co shameful practice of asking for presents on the Pateti and Diváli says that heads of Government offices ought to put a stop to it. the custom of asking for presents greatly prevailed in the Panjá years, but the action of the local authorities has put an end to th

Complains of the dismissal of certain employés in the post office at Dhárwár on insufficient grounds.

The Dhárwár Vritt (26) of the 16th October complains that bhái, parcel clerk in the post office at Gavsu Mia have been dismissed from s insufficient grounds. The reasons stat ing them are most absurd and rid punishment of these men is utterly di to their alleged shortcomings, and their cases have not been at a vestigated. The Dhárwár Vritt trusts that justice may yet be men, who have been removed from their posts by the Post Mas Bombay. [The Mádhavi (41) of the 17th October states that th ordinates at the post office at Dhárwár who were prosecuted befo trate for theft have been declared innocent, and yet they have no to their posts. One or two have been wrongly dismissed, and are suffering great distress from being allowed to remain under s

Misappropriation of property of the temple of Vithoba at Pandharpur by the Bráhmans employed at the temple for the service of the idol.

A correspondent of the Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 23rd Oct that although the income of the temple Pandharpur is large, and the allowance sources considerable, yet the Bráhm entertained at the temple for the servic there do not perform their duties pr misappropriate to their own use or sell belonging to the idol, of which they are only the trustees. The co Dewasthán has no real power to set matters right. The corres that the District Collector will direct his attention to this matter

Complains of the misappropriation of charity funds.

The Surat Akhbár (76) of the 20th October complains of the tion of several charity funds by the tru to administer them, and says that it is Government should without delay fra their proper administration. It should set forth in detail the me use and appropriation of charity funds. Those responsible per appropriate charity funds or favour others out of them should b punishment. A trust-deed ought to be made when the funds amount. There ought to be a certain number of well-to-do trus and an account of the administration of the funds ought to be p year.

A complaint against a police sepoy employed at Ahmedabad.

The Nyáyá Darshak (107) of the 20th October says:—A po by force forty earthen cups for lighti female potters who were selling th Mánekchauk and the Victoria Press When a young man spoke to the Ja he haughtily replied that it mattered not and that they were at the police station. It is surprising that a policeman shoul oppression in broad daylight. We hope that the authorities speedily enquire into the matter. The number of the police se

Railways.

Remarks in connection with the employment of Natives on the different lines of railway.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 19th October says:—It is now m
two years since we first referred to the injust
to Native interests in the matter of employ the different lines of railway. We called th tion of several members of the Supreme Gov
to the fact that in certain departments Native was being studiously neglected. It was gratifying, therefore, to fi time after Government desiring a steady extension of Native agency Locomotive Department. And much more gratifying is it now to see recommendation of the Government was adopted and that it has alr sulted in the employment of a large number of Native drivers and s
The Pioneer is in sulks at a recent resolution of the Government of I this subject. The resolution is really business-like, and we fail to s there is in it to carp at. Why should not the Government have the co express its "satisfaction" at the employment of 64 additional Native and of 21 additional Native shunters? Surely when the Governme that its policy in particular directions is bearing fruit, it may publicly its satisfaction at the results. Does the Pioneer mean that satisfactio be reserved for only European and Eurasian employés of railways? T ways, from the time of their construction in 1848 till 1870, have done of mischief to agriculturists and weavers. The economic effects on the c of these classes in the earlier stages of progress have been far from sati
And some reparation is due for the injury. And this can be done onl employment to a large extent of the children of the soil as railway ser that the money earned may remain in India. The greater therefore crease in the number of Native employés on railways in various depa the better will it be for the country. Although the Director-General ways reports year after year the percentage of increase of Native empl somehow refrains from stating the amount of wages and salaries Neither is any account given of the salaries earned by Europeans in low offices. A fair comparison could then alone be made as to the ea the two classes. We have more than once urged the expediency of s the statistics now omitted. It is to be hoped we may not have to re suggestion again. Meanwhile we cannot help sharing the satisfactio Government at the progress of employment recorded for Native dri shunters. Would it not be better for the authorities to publish a simil return for other Native servants employed on railways—say, how man how many station-masters, how many goods-agents, how many signallers, and so on? Again it may be as well to give statistics fo separate from Eurasians; for now-a-days many of the latter regist selves as Natives with the view to obtain employment which they wou wise be disqualified under official regulations from getting. We have say on this subject.

Comments on the advantages of employing Natives as engine-drivers on railways in India.

The Bombay Chronicle (73) of the 19th October, in referring to th
ment to the Gazette of India containing re Native drivers and shunters employed on th
railways in this country for the year 1883,
There is no reason why Natives should not before long to learn the art of saving fue &c., when in charge of trains. It is only the knowledge of the the subject and the experience in applying them which are needed of course could not be acquired without sufficient application and a and the Natives, aspiring to the situations of drivers and shun their friends wishing to back up their aspirations, ought to see necessary application and attention are used to ensure the realizat same. Government would be consulting the benefit of the State by additional encouragement to deserving Natives to acquire the neces and proficiency as drivers, approaching generally speaking to those peans. We refer of course to the positive pecuniary benefit accrui State, as well as to the indirect gain to Government arising from the of the people for the benefit they would reap owing to the action o ment. In almost all the reports of the different railway authorities it stated that the substitution of Native in place of European d shunters has been a great gain to the respective concerns. The figures embodied in the reports speak for themselves. They are c cative of the policy that Government ought to pursue as being at once popular, and financially sound. Nor should it be forgotten that extension in the country is to depend upon the financial return that may be likely to yield, it is the more incumbent on the responsible G in the land to take vigorous measures in good time for securing al visions calculated to minimise the cost of the construction and railways, as the knowledge and experience gained on the subject gest. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (101) of the same date points out the of the plea advanced by some parties that Native engine-drivers con coal than their European brethren, and says that the Sind, Panjáb Railway, which is the only railway company that has made this comp its Native drivers Rs. 50 only per mensem. From this it is eviden drivers must be inexperienced simpletons, and it is probable that th consuming more coal. But it is not just to run down the whole clas engine-drivers from this single instance. If other railway compan similiar complaint to make, the leading members of some of these who are always ready to favour Europeans, would not have failed to to thereby oust Natives from service. Moreover the fact that Nat have frequently secured the reward for saving coal shows that the does not exist in all companies. If the complaint, however, be tr drivers ought to be taught the way of saving coal.]

Remarks about the employment of Natives as engine-drivers on Indian railway lines.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 19th October says:—A strange is now for the first time sought to be made the employment of Native drivers on ou Whatever else was said against him before along conceded that he was a cheaper bar rally than his European confrere. The Tim however, cites the authority of the Locomotive Superintendent of Panjáb and Delhi Railway, and of some others, to show that the Na is even more costly than the European, because he consumes Without questioning the correctness of the facts and figures adduc maintain that they only bear out the truth of the well-established that unskilled labour is always more costly than skilled labour—not But no one ever advocates the employment of unskilled Native labo ference to skilled European labour. Nor has it been alleged that th skill required in a driver is beyond the reach of Natives. What relevancy of figures showing the expensiveness of unskilled labour to question of the employment of Natives as drivers on our Indian In point of soberness and steadiness we are informed that the Nativ the G. I. P. line compare very favourably with the European emplo same class. If so, this is a great point in favour of their appointmen Grievances of Native engine-drivers on the B. B. & C. I. Railway.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 24th October complains of th done to Native engine-drivers on the B.
Railway by their being chiefly made to trains and by their daily wages being o
those given to European drivers, and say comfort and pay were offered by the B. B. & C. I. Railway Comp Native drivers, a large number of Natives would come forward to en work. From the report published in the Gazette of India of the 1 it appears that there were 23 Native drivers on this railway in 188 there was an addition of only one to this number. This fact shows drivers do not receive sufficient encouragement. Moreover there tion as to the ability of the Native drivers on this line. A major po Eurasian drivers who find employment on it receive instruction fro to the performance of their duties, and consequently earn larger inc drivers of local trains had until recently to work continuously for hours. The Native drivers quietly submitted to this rule, but th drivers did not do so. The latter informed their Superintendent that health would be endangered by continually working for 15 hours. It is that during the last two days the rule has been altered and the drivers now required to work for 8 hours only. From the fact that Native dri can work 15 hours continuously, their power of endurance and stren must be greater than that of the European drivers. Why then should t daily wages be half those of their European brethren? The object of giv lower wages to Native drivers may perhaps be that Natives should not o their services for this kind of work. It cannot be that better pay is given European drivers as an inducement to them to come out from Engla The B. B. & C. I. Railway Company now scarcely obtains drivers fr Great Britain. They are mostly taken from the class of Europeans a Eurasians residing in Bombay.

Native States.

Disapproves of the suggestion of the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times on the subject of the reduction of the armies of Native States.

The Arunodayă (18) of the 19th October, in referring to the suggestion the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times on subject of the reduction of the armies of Native Sta observes that Native princes have a perfect righ tax their subjects to any extent they like, but if s a policy proves oppressive, then the British Gove ment as the paramount power is bound to interf The paramount power however will only be justified in interfering when compla have been made to it by the subjects of Native princes themselves. It would do for the British Government to presume that the subjects of Native States over-taxed for the maintenance of their armies unless they themselves c forward with complaints about the oppressiveness of their taxation. Have of the subjects of Scindia, Holkar or Gáikawád made any complaint about t being over-taxed? Really speaking they prefer to live under their Native ru to becoming the subjects of the British Government. On account of British Government being the paramount power in India, it can at any mom find some pretext for desiring the Native princes to reduce their forces, such a proceeding will hurt theirs feelings and cause unnecessary dissatisfact The Arunodayă trusts that in deciding the fate of the armies of Native prin full caution and circumspection will be exercised.

Comments on the sanction given by the Supreme Government for the adoption of the son borne by Jánbái to the Jám of Navánagar as heir to the throne.

The Gujaráti (94) of the 19th October says:—The Jám of Navánagar at last succeeded in getting the son borne to him Jánbái acknowledged by the Supreme Governm as heir to the throne. We cannot help express our surprise and disappointment that the son o concubine should be allowed to succeed to a thro that sensible Diwáns should help to bring about su result; and that a Viceroy like Lord Ripon should acquiesce in such a step. Supreme Government have not published the reasons which have induced th to arrive at this decision. But we and the Navánagar public are very anx to know them. It is to be hoped that the Government will publish them the satisfaction of the people. [The Rást Goftár (110) of the 19th Octo expresses pity for the prince whose claims have now been set aside, and ho that the Jám would make ample compensation to him in his disappointm The Yajdán Parast (123) of the same date says that the reasons which Government to arrive at the present decision would be worth knowing. Navánagar public may like to have as their future ruler the son of a Mahome mistress, but the principle of allowing such persons to succeed to the thron very unsound and may prove injurious.]

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native P

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
28th October 1884.

INDEX.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Complaint regarding the harsh treatment of liquor-s Bombay by the — Department ... ...
Appointments: Complaint that the higher judicial — in Sind are Military Civilians and the claims of Natives are ignored Building sites at Sangameshvar: Request to Government to assig
    for building houses and shops to the inhabitants of Sangames Charity funds: Complaint regarding the misappropriation of—Civil Service of India: Expression of opinion that the selection of
    for the covenanted — should be made by a competitive examin Government of India Scholarships: Expression of a doubt regard utility of establishing scholarships to enable Natives to stu
    University in England and expression of opinion that St
    Civilians should take advantage of them ... ...
Judicial matters: Expression of opinion that the Bombay Gove ought to pay the expenses incurred by Mr. Bápuji Dinár interpreter in the Small Causes Court, in defending himself f charge of bribery brought against him by the police and th should order the prosecution of the sweetmeat-seller an principal witnesses for perjury ... ...
Krishnagar students' case: Approval of the action of Mr.
    Thompson, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, in the matter of th Land Revenue: Objection to the levy of a water-rate on land
    those lands are not supplied with water provided by Governn Lunatic Asylum at Colába, Bombay: Request to Sir James Fergu speedily extend the— ... ...
Police:
    Approval of the suggestion made to Government by Sir Wedderburn in connection with the oppression exerci
        the — in extorting confessions from prisoners ...
    Complaint against a — sepoy employed at Ahmedabad...
Postal matters: Complaint against the dismissal of certain emp
    the post office at Dhárwár on insufficient grounds ...
Presents: Complaint regarding the practice of asking for — on P
    Hindu new year holidays ... ...
Property of the temple of Vithoba at Pandharpur: Misappropri
    — by the Bráhmans employed at the temple for the service idol ... ...
Subordinate Magistrates' Examination: Complaint regarding th in the declaration of the result of the — held six months
    Bombay ... ...
Vernacular Press: Abolition of the — Act by Lord Ripon and r
    in connection therewith ... ...
Viceroyalty of India: Praises of Lord Ripon's administrative a answer to the taunts of the Times of India directed aga Lordship's administration and policy ... ...

PART II.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I Railway: Grievances of Native engine-drivers on the Employment of Natives on the different lines of railway: R in connection with the— ... ...
Engine-drivers on railways in India: Comments on the advant employing Natives as —
        The Bombay Chronicle ... ...
        The Subodh Patrika ... ...

PART III.—Native States—

Armies of Native States: Disapproval of the suggestion of the correspondent of the London Times on the subject of the re in the— ... ...
Navánagar: Comments on the sanction given by the Supreme ment for the adoption of the son borne by Jánbái to the Já as heir to the throne ... ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

11
FICE
884

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 1st November 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly
25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.
37	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.
39	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly
40	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly
*41	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly
*54	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly
62	„ Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.
*66	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

R.
611
OFFICE
884

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 1st November 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	750
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	281
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	275
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	160
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
37	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	4,350
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
39	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
40	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*41	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	400
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	450
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*54	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*66	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	E
	MARA'THI—continued.
67	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly
68	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.
69	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.
*70	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.
71	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.
72	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthl
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
73	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly
74	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.
75	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.
76	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.
77	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.
	GUJARA'TI.
78	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly
79	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily
80	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthl
81	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.
82	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.
83	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily
84	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly
85	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.
86	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthl
*87	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.
88	„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly
89	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.
90	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthl
91	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.
92	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.
93	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.
94	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly
95	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthl
96	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.
*97	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarter
98	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily
99	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthl
100	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly
101	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.
*102	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthl
103	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-wee
*104	„ Mangal Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly
105	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthl
106	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.
107	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekl
108	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.
109	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.
110	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.
111	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.
112	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.
113	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Month
114	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.
115	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.
116	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.
117	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.
*118	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarte
119	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Month
120	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekl
121	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Month
122	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.
123	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekl
	KA'NARESE.
124	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekl
125	„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do.
126	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.
127	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.
	SANSKRIT.
128	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortni
	URDU.
*129	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekl
130	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.
	PERSIAN.
131	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekl
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
132	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekl
	SINDI.
133	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekl

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Re
which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and paper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to th
In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the sa Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is th or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of th G
the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

An estimate of the merits and demerits of Lord Ripon's career as Governor General looked at from the point of view of Anglo-Indians and Natives.

In an article headed "The out-going Viceroy," the Native Opinion (11) of the 26th October says:—It is the creed of Anglo-Indians—and it is no wonder that it should be so—to believe that any elevation of the social and political status of the Native is equivalent to a diminution of their own rights and privileges. This section of the Indian community from the very first has done its best to hamper Lord Ripon, vilifying his rule, and has at last succeeded in nullifying most of the measures adopted by him which have for their object the good of the Natives. The Anglo-Indian community, it must be confessed, has proved too strong for His Lordship, and he now leaves the country amidst the jeers, contemptuous criticisms, and pitying condescensions of that community. As has been frankly put forward by one of their number, the community thinks that the only motive of action with Lord Ripon was his desire to insult the Europeans in India. Indignities and insults without number were being heaped on their heads, and it was thought that they were in danger of extermination unless they took some very strong action in self-defence. There was, as it were, a war between the Anglo-Indian community on the one hand and Lord Ripon on the other—a war not for glory or conquest, but a war for the very life. Such has been the attitude of Englishmen in India towards His Lordship, and as every thing is fair in war and in love they have not scrupled to injure and abuse His Lordship in all possible manner of ways. The whole armoury of abuse and invective was brought into use, and what by false and coloured telegrams, by uprorious and seditious meetings, newspaper articles and letters, private circulars and public minutes, by defence associations and over-zealous delegates,—in short by every thing fair or foul,—they have done their utmost to bring the name of Lord Ripon into disgrace. To this class of people Lord Ripon's name has become an abomination. In their opinion his administration was more mischievous than barren; and in his departure they see an end to misrule and folly. These opinions of a section are also shared in by a very small class of the Native community. There is no doubt that that class is a very small one, though their opinions have been put forward in a public journal called the United India. That journal has made it a policy to abuse Lord Ripon. It calls him dishonest and insincere. We have our own doubts as to whether the opinions which appear in that paper are genuine Native opinions. Yet the fact cannot be concealed and it must be admitted that there is one paper on its face conducted by Natives which censures in strong terms the administration of Lord Ripon. On the other hand the admiration felt by the whole Native community for Lord Ripon knows no bounds. They have deified him, have called him their saviour, and have magnified him into the ideal of a Governor General. From the time he came into this country Natives have identified him with their interests, and in their applause for his good acts have passed over in silence certain measures of his, which if not absolutely ruinous are at least of doubtful advantage. The whole breadth and length of the land has resounded over and over again with praise; and if the parting feelings of a people for their ruler are any standard of their estimation for him, then it may safely be asserted that Lord Ripon goes away the most successful Viceroy ever sent by England's Queen to rule over this land. Towns and cities, associations and individuals, have vied with one another in extolling him; meetings and memorials, speeches and writings, have come out by hundreds and thousands in his praise; and Natives have gone the length of petitioning Her Most Gracious Majesty for allowing them the benefit of his rule for another term of five years. They never speak of him but with feelings of over-flowing admiration; in short their admiration and love for him is as intense as the hatred of the Anglo-Indian community, and they have extolled him in proportion to the abuse that has been heaped upon him by the Anglo-Indians. In both these sentiments we think there is some exaggeration. It is certainly very hard to arrive at the exact estimate of the worth of Lord Ripon, so great is the likelihood of any judge being swayed by conscious or unconscious partiality in his favour or against him. Lord Ripon is neither the tyrant of the Anglo-Indians nor the god of the Native community; yet it is true that on the whole he is the best, the most honest and the most observant of our

Politics and the Public Administration.

An estimate of the merits and demerits of Lord Ripon's career as Governor General looked at from the point of view of Anglo-Indians and Natives.

In an article headed "The out-going Viceroy," the Native Opinion (11) of the 26th October says:—It is the creed of Anglo-Indians—and it is no wonder that it should be so—to believe that any elevation of the social and political status of the Native is equivalent to a diminution of their own rights and privileges. This section of the Indian community from the very first has done its best to hamper Lord Ripon, vilifying his rule, and has at last succeeded in nullifying most of the measures adopted by him which have for their object the good of the Natives. The Anglo-Indian community, it must be confessed, has proved too strong for His Lordship, and he now leaves the country amidst the jeers, contemptuous criticisms, and pitying condescensions of that community. As has been frankly put forward by one of their number, the community thinks that the only motive of action with Lord Ripon was his desire to insult the Europeans in India. Indignities and insults without number were being heaped on their heads, and it was thought that they were in danger of extermination unless they took some very strong action in self-defence. There was, as it were, a war between the Anglo-Indian community on the one hand and Lord Ripon on the other—a war not for glory or conquest, but a war for the very life. Such has been the attitude of Englishmen in India towards His Lordship, and as every thing is fair in war and in love they have not scrupled to injure and abuse His Lordship in all possible manner of ways. The whole armoury of abuse and invective was brought into use, and what by false and coloured telegrams, by uproarious and seditious meetings, newspaper articles and letters, private circulars and public minutes, by defence associations and over-zealous delegates,—in short by every thing fair or foul,—they have done their utmost to bring the name of Lord Ripon into disgrace. To this class of people Lord Ripon's name has become an abomination. In their opinion his administration was more mischievous than barren; and in his departure they see an end to misrule and folly. These opinions of a section are also shared in by a very small class of the Native community. There is no doubt that that class is a very small one, though their opinions have been put forward in a public journal called the United India. That journal has made it a policy to abuse Lord Ripon. It calls him dishonest and insincere. We have our own doubts as to whether the opinions which appear in that paper are genuine Native opinions. Yet the fact cannot be concealed and it must be admitted that there is one paper on its face conducted by Natives which censures in strong terms the administration of Lord Ripon. On the other hand the admiration felt by the whole Native community for Lord Ripon knows no bounds. They have deified him, have called him their saviour, and have magnified him into the ideal of a Governor General. From the time he came into this country Natives have identified him with their interests, and in their applause for his good acts have passed over in silence certain measures of his, which if not absolutely ruinous are at least of doubtful advantage. The whole breadth and length of the land has resounded over and over again with praise; and if the parting feelings of a people for their ruler are any standard of their estimation for him, then it may safely be asserted that Lord Ripon goes away the most successful Viceroy ever sent by England's Queen to rule over this land. Towns and cities, associations and individuals, have vied with one another in extolling him; meetings and memorials, speeches and writings, have come out by hundreds and thousands in his praise; and Natives have gone the length of petitioning Her Most Gracious Majesty for allowing them the benefit of his rule for another term of five years. They never speak of him but with feelings of over-flowing admiration; in short their admiration and love for him is as intense as the hatred of the Anglo-Indian community, and they have extolled him in proportion to the abuse that has been heaped upon him by the Anglo-Indians. In both these sentiments we think there is some exaggeration. It is certainly very hard to arrive at the exact estimate of the worth of Lord Ripon, so great is the likelihood of any judge being swayed by conscious or unconscious partiality in his favour or against him. Lord Ripon is neither the tyrant of the Anglo-Indians nor the god of the Native community; yet it is true that on the whole he is the best, the most honest and the most observant of our Viceroys. The anger engendered in the breasts of the Anglo-Indian is itself a sort of certificate for his good intentions for the masses

The whole history of that anger is so well-known that it is quite n repeat it, but it may be asserted that Lord Ripon does not suffer in but gains much in the estimation of the world on account of those which have secured for him the hatred of the people of his own colou country.

Disapproves of India being made to pay the expenses of strengthening the fortifications of Aden, Singapore, Hongkong, &c., and points out the necessity of strengthening the defences of Bombay.

In referring to Reuter's telegram on the subject of the improv colonial defences, the Bombay Chronicle (73 26th October says:—The sum of money to out on the work to be done appears rid small. There is nothing said about putting more important of the Indian ports in an ad defensive condition. While India's defence hostile naval attacks has been thus ap neglected by the Ministry, they have not missed the opportunity saddling this country with a considerable portion of the cost of the fort of Aden, Singapore, and Hongkong. The most remote and incon foreign places have received in the matter of their defences the car sideration of Her Majesty's Government. They are all treated mor liberally by the English Treasury. But India, while made to pay defences of some of these places for reasons of dubious propriety as r part of them, she is not even told why Bombay and other important p her own coasts are left in their present exposed and undefended c While contributing from their pockets to a share of the cost of the tions of Aden, Singapore, and Hongkong, it would have been some co to the people of Bombay and other places to know that the Ministr least manifested some earnest concern for them in their present and undefended situation. But the English Ministry in the
of these foreign fortifications would appear to have been only to provide for the requirements thereof with the least possible burd English Treasury and the English tax-payer. Hence their solicitud member India only in order to make her a sharer in the Imperial bur then to dismiss her from their minds, no matter what her own cond want may be, and how urgent the need to pay some attention to them to that given to the other foreign stations. India must now do fo what the British Ministry will not even think of getting done for her time. Her Government should take the initiative to do what is so needful to be done for the protection of her coasts. Bombay ought no carelessly over her danger in the same manner as hitherto. Our lead and representative associations ought to impress on Government th of the danger to the commercial and manufacturing interests, to the on land and the shipping in the harbour of Bombay, owing to the n of the place. For the works that are called its defences are noth than such merely in name. They would not check the attack of man-of-war, or prevent a powerful privateer from laying the cit heavy contribution, if by any chance either should get near eno is marvellous that our merchants, manufacturers, and owners of valu perty and others should continue to tolerate the indifference of Gover the subject of the utterly undefended state of our city and harbour, vast valuable property therein contained exposed to the cupidity o adventurers. [The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 31st October and the Sodágar (79) of the 1st November express a wish that Governme speedily pay attention to strengthening the defences of Bombay. T supports the suggestion made by the Bombay Gazette for request Dufferin to attend to this matter.]

Does not approve of India being made to pay a portion of the expenses of fortifying Aden, Singapore and other naval stations.

In a paragraph headed "The new charge on the Indian Excheq Sind Times (5) of the 24th October says:— surprise has been sprung upon the India India is called upon to pay for the colonial of the Empire, not the defences of her own
of Aden, Singapore, Ceylon, Hongkong, Bay, Table Bay, Port Louis, St. Helena

stations. The Military Committee estimates the expenditure at £891,000 and this is to be borne by India, England, and the Colonies. It is not clear from the telegraphic message whether Australia would have to contribute her quota. It does however seem odd that the Home Government in their wisdom should saddle India with the expenses of the fortifications of the places we have mentioned. Surely it ought to be recognized by this time that India is too poor to be saddled with any more burdens. Are not the Home charges already too heavy? Is not the military expenditure of India already too large? Is it not a fact that a thousand most necessary reforms have had to be postponed indefinitely owing to the financial difficulties of India? Have we not such iniquitous taxes as the salt tax,—taxes which have been admitted to be iniquitous by our rulers themselves, and which can only be justified by the supreme expediency of saving British India from the stigma of bankruptcy? Surely the Liberal Government ought to know all this, and they know it. And yet this new drag on our finances has been sanctioned. The people of India had no voice in the matter. Perhaps the Viceroy and the Indian Government had as much voice in it as the Indian people. The Military Committee makes an estimate, and forthwith the fiat goes forth that one more drain on the resources of this country should be added to the numerous ones already in existence. Suck it dry, our masters, if you like, but remember that it is not the fabulous goose which can lay golden eggs for you every day.

Expresses approval of Mr. Wilfred Blunt's paper on "Race-hatred in India."

The Rást Goftár (110) of the 26th October says:—We quite approve of Mr. Wilfred Blunt's second paper on his "Ideas about India." His first paper contained some exaggerated statements, but his second paper is a true picture, though a very unpleasant one. He has not kept secret from his countrymen the conduct of Anglo-Indians towards Natives. Of course the complaint is not applicable to the entire class of Europeans in India. Several good-natured Europeans are very much attached to their Native friends, but such instances are very few. Generally speaking there is no doubt that Europeans keep aloof from Natives, think them their inferiors and treat them like inferior men. Cases of personal violence by haughty Europeans on Natives have decreased owing to the good policy pursued by the Government. But the friendly relations between Europeans and Natives are becoming more constrained; nay, the prejudice of Europeans has taken the form of hatred of Natives. This low-race-prejudice is increasing year by year. It has increased twofold since the complaint made in England by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales regarding the coolness displayed by Europeans towards Natives. Proofs in support of this statement are not wanting. European first-class passengers hate to travel with Native first-class passengers in a railway carriage. They object to accommodate respectable Native gentlemen in English hotels. They do not like to call in clever Native doctors for advice. In the clubs a Native gentleman, of whatever position, is required when on a visit to a European to enter from the back entrance or to keep standing on the road. In the mofussil a separate third-class carriage is reserved on railway trains for them. Several hotel-keepers cannot keep Native managers, for Europeans refuse to reside in such hotels. This increase of race-prejudice is painful and the task of exposing it is unpleasant. There is however some advantage in exposing it, and Mr. Wilfred Blunt has done a valuable service to India by exposing it before the English public. [The Yajdán Parast (123) of the 26th and the Akhbáre Sodágar (79) and the Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 31st October express approval of Mr. Wilfred Blunt's paper, and say that the account given by him of the want of good feeling between Europeans and Natives is true.]

Takes exception to several statements made by Mr. Ashburner in answering Mr. Seymour Keay's article on the spoliation of India.

In an article headed "Mr. Lionel Ashburner and the spoliation of India," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 26th October says:—Mr. Ashburner's criticisms are valueless. Of what use attempting to justify a procedure however correct in practice as alleged by him, but altogether unsound in principle and condemned by all the highest authorities? At the same time there are some observations made in the initial part of his article which need to be examined. He says that "official etiquette does not allow the officers of the Indian Government to expose the fallacies of these articles." This is a bold statemen Ashburner to make, when every student of politics is well a official classes manage the Anglo-Indian press and how many are tions which emanate from their pen. In this matter of land rev it not a fact that many an article that appears in the service org by anonymous officials? Not to go far, who, it may be asked, a who have been carrying on the controversy regarding some survey settlements and the question of assessment of subsoil columns of a local daily? Officials draw up with one hand e resolutions which find their way in the official Gazette, and they on the same, of course from their own point of view, in favourit is amusing to be told that officials are precluded by etiquette fro arena of public discussion. We fear Mr. Ashburner is making to gullible British public when he attempts to defend the action of by urging that their mouth is shut by etiquette. The other plea

Mr. Ashburner is that "the published records of the Indian Gover abundant material for refuting the whole of Mr. Keay's argument not available to the general reader who requires the very dry sub taxation to be made easy of comprehension." This statement wonderful for its child-like simplicity than the one regarding off Now if the public demand one thing more than another, it is this which the Government would not, though it could if it chose, mak out of mind have Indian publicists appealed to the Government t possession of materials, so that these might guide them to arriv judgment on important questions disposed of by the State.
absence of those materials often leads to much mistaken criticism. It exposes the Government to needless attacks. Bu for reasons best known to itself, has generally tried to secrete th the dark corners of the Secretariat, there to rot and crumble into d of letting thereon the light of public inquiry. The records of grave kept close secrets from the public so long as the controversy lasts men's minds. If the papers are unearthed at all, it is after a lap they have lost all interest and are only useful from the academic
It is the fear of adverse criticism alone that prompts the Gover away the materials in obscure corners, and not the dull comprehe readers. Mr. Ashburner, with 30 years' experience, must be in of understanding if he doubts the ability of the critical publi land revenue policy of the State. But that Mr. Lionel Ashburn such an astounding statement is nothing incomprehensible to u was such a "superior creature." His career as Collector, Com Member of Council will not be soon forgotten by the Bomba must decline to accept his excuse. It is too often the fear of he alone that leads the Government to hide its records. If truth is nated broadcast, no valid reason prevents Government from powerful Government that allows freedom of thought and speec need have no fear of public criticism. If truth is truth, writers school will receive their quietus soon enough. If all importa were opportunely published, as they are for Parliament, India w better governed. The task of Government would be infinitel annoyance at the hands of public writers would be reduced. The room for the Seymour Keays to air their knowledge in English no necessity for the India Office to put up John Indigo or Lion defend its policy. [The Gujaráti (94) and the Yajdán Parast ( October express disapproval of Mr. Ashburner's reply to Mr. S article on the spoliation of India, and say that he is no well-wishe

Criticises Mr. Ashburner's statements on the land revenue system obtaining in the Bombay Presidency and on the condition of the Indian people generally.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 26th October, in a par
"Mr. Ashburner on the Bombay Sy Assessment," says:—Mr. Ashburner, o of Council, writes in the current numb teenth Century in answer to Mr. Seymou on the spoliation of India in the so lious style of an Indian bureaucrat.
Keay painted the Bombay system of assessment a shade too dark, draws it in excessively bright colours and comes to the conclusion that the Government only recover about 5 per cent. of the gross produce in the shape of land revenue and local funds from the ryots. This is a little too wide of the mark. For if the facts were so, what sad fatality, we ask, is it that maintains the money-lender in a thriving business all over the country and which causes such distress and privation when our periodical famines come upon us? But even if the assessment were so light, still the unmistakable poverty of the people clearly shows that it is not sufficiently light under the circumstances of the people. Moreover a correct estimate of the lightness or heaviness of assessment can only be fairly based on the proportion it bears not to the gross but to the net produce of the land. Then it must be remembered that this proportion, whatever it is, is liable to vary with variations in prices. All these circumstances have to be considered in judging of the pressure of assessment upon the ryots. The increase in the extent of cultivation on which Mr. Ashburner relies can be accounted for in other ways than by supposing that it indicates the soundness of our system of assessment as at present worked out. Mr. Ashburner states as facts that land in the Presidency sells for forty years' purchase and at a price which varies from thirty to sixty times the assessment. We wish these statements were correct and not so wide of the mark as they really are. We presume Mr. Ashburner derives his information from the records of the Registration Department, but we have the authority of the officers of Government in the districts to surmise that these in many cases overstate the actual prices paid. And as to the proportion of the selling price to the assessment, the recent resolution of Government on the revision settlements make it sufficiently clear that it is only as 21 to 1. But Mr. Ashburner has still better things to say. He reaches his climax when he institutes a comparison between India and England. What a happy state of things have we here compared with that of England! What a triumph for the Bombay system of assessments! Mr. Ashburner's statements in effect come to this: because our wants are fewer and simpler, we are richer than the people of England; because we have no organised system of poor relief, we have no poor people among us in ordinary times, and that except in times of famine every soul in India is full-fed, well-clothed and well-housed. Crushing statements, no doubt, these are for poor Mr. Seymour Keay! After all this he had better hide his diminished head now in some obscure nook and take care how he again dares to write upon Indian affairs! For the retired Anglo-Indian has taken up the cudgels and Mr. Seymour Keay may rest assured that he will use them right freely and in good earnest.

Criticises Mr. Ashburner's arguments in refutation of those of Mr. Keay on the subject of the land-tax in the Bombay Presidency.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 30th October says that it is well-known to its readers that Mr. Seymour Keay a short time ago published some articles in some English periodical in which he exposed the weak points of the system of land revenue assessments obtaining in the Bombay Presidency. Mr. Ashburner, late Member of the Bombay Council, has come forward to answer the arguments brought forward by Mr. Keay in support of his allegations. Everybody in the Bombay Presidency knows very well Mr. Ashburner's career extending over 35 years as a member of the Bombay Civil Service. During that period he behaved in a most high-handed manner and his proceedings were characterised by an utter contempt of public opinion. He considered the Sárvajanik Sabha of Poona as the enemy of Government. He advised Sir James Fergusson to oppose the liberal policy of the Supreme Government on the subject of local self-government and thus brought down the censure of that high authority on the Bombay Government. In answering Mr. Seymour Keay's arguments on the heaviness of the land revenue assessments, Mr. Ashburner contends that the agriculturists in the Bombay Presidency do not feel the incidence of the land-tax and that they are better off than the agricultural population of England, and in support of his contention asserts that poor houses are a normal phenomenon in England, while in India the necessity for them arises only during the time of famine. To say that people are well off in countries where there are no regular poor houses is as good an assertion as saying that sickness does not prevail in localities where there are no medical dispensaries. The Dnyán Prakásh strongly recommends Parliament not to allow the affairs of India to be left to the management of Civili no permanent interest in the country, but to assume direct sway Empire.

Says that capital required for carrying on large undertakings in India should be borrowed by the Indian Government in the English market and let to the different bodies here at a slightly enhanced rate of interest.

In an article headed “ State Loans for Local Public Work Spectator (1) of the 26th October says be the conviction of the mercantile pub
that for purposes of large undertakings l
drainage, water-supply and so on mon had to the extent desired and at a chea country. A contemporary would th
the Supreme Government to avail itself of interest now ruling in England, to b
there and lend the same moneys here at half a per cent. higher rate as the Corporations of Bombay and Calcutta and also the Port instance, the Bombay Port Trustees will soon be in the market fo lákhs of rupees for the dock extension. Again the local municipa at no distant day, to borrow a million sterling, or even two, for ex supply. Then there are the new docks to be constructed at Calc three millions more at the least are needed, not to say a million sanitary purposes of the city. It must be remembered that al takings are for public purposes, and so far the Government of Inc assist the important public bodies by giving them every facility needed funds. The argument urged by the business corresponde temporary appears to be sound. “ Seeing that England makes Russia and other foreign nations, why should she be prevented fro her surplus capital to build docks and harbours in this country her own ships and steamers ? ” Let it be remembered that th England directly or indirectly advances to a country like Russ utilised for warlike purposes. In fact, as the interests of the lat flict with those of the former, it is fair to assume that Russia, in ca breaking out, would be fighting England on the Bosphorus or on the frontier with the sinews of war provided by her enemy ! Engl assists Russia with money to prepare for eventualities, and yet w her own great dependency for works of public utility of vital the material progress and health of the people ! How odd ! But j
the result which may happen if in the next busy season the loca appealed to for large loans. “ If any large dock or other loan the Indian markets under present circumstances they will either or, if taken up, will absorb what little available floating capit effect of which will be a crisis in the Indian money markets results.” We fear this is rather an over-drawn picture.
borrowing may end in failure is a bit of exaggeration.
our local experience tells us that were the Port Trustees a cipality to raise loans of a kror each simultaneously, say at 6 would be able to secure the whole amount in a very short time.
no doubt occur were the rate of interest to be (say) 4 to 5.
scarce in India, we mean comparatively with capital in Eur easily earn 9 to 12 per cent. on their investments, and those of a
For instance, large sums are advanced on the mortgage of sound shares, with a good round margin from 7½ to 9 and 12 per cen
the exigencies of the market. But such investors would prefe Port Trust debentures if issued at 6 per cent. For they know t safe as Government securities. Nothing will tempt them to in such debentures at lower rates. We presume similar condi Calcutta. To categorically predict failure, if large loans are to to us to be rash. But we are disposed to agree with the other that the large withdrawal of money for public purposes may not generally easy, very stringent. Such a state of matters crisis any day. No doubt, as the writer observes, “ the great imported capital.” And his suggestion is good that the Gove could indirectly assist the trade and industrial enterprises he large public bodies like the Port Trustees and Municipal C borrowing freely at a cheap rate, say 3½ to 4 per cent., in Englar lending the same to these here at half a per cent. higher rate. Th public institutions would have only one creditor, and that the Gove of India. The imported capital would again circulate in the country an help trade and relieve it of monetary pressure, while capitalists in E who might hesitate directly to advance loans to private or semi-private tions situated thousands of miles away, would be ready to deal with the ment of India through the Secretary of State. Were such a principle esta we think this country would make more rapid progress materially than been able to do. "A courageous policy is the only wise and economic and it is to be hoped the suggestion made by the Calcutta journal considered by the Imperial Government. Two years ago we suggested th thing in reference to the borrowing of State loans in gold in England, ta our text that excellent paper on the subject by Mr. Martin Wood. Th already veering round now to that view.

Recommends the Government of India to find out places containing kerosine oil.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 29th October, in referring to covery of kerosine oil in Arracan, points out th use made of it by the people of this countr says :—We recommend the Government of I engage the services of American experts and to places containing kerosine oil in this country. K oil must be lying in large quantities in different places in India.
springs of this oil have been met with in Arracan, they must also be near the eastern shore of the country. It is also found towards the n frontiers of India. Endeavours are made to prevent England from dep entirely upon the supply of useful articles on America. The Governm India should make similar endeavours in this matter. Their labours wi fit the country and will reflect credit on them.

Expresses satisfaction with the order of the Madras Government for the release of the prisoners concerned in the late riots at Salem.

The same newspaper of the 30th October says :—The Madras
ment have as if removed the stain on the administered in the Madras Presidency by o
the release from imprisonment of the Native p concerned in the late Salem riots. A doubt ha regarding the guilt of the persons charged wi
ing at Salem after their conviction and senten successful termination of the case of Mr. Rághavácharya, a municipal sioner of Salem, strengthened this doubt and a strong wish was expre the release of the prisoners. The Madras Government have been very complying with that wish. They state in their resolution that the ordered the release of the rioters as an act of mercy. This does not the aspect of the case, and there is no necessity now for controverting
Mr. Grant Duff has incurred for some time past the displeasure of the p the Madras Presidency. The chief cause of this was the punishment i upon the Salem rioters, whose release will greatly reduce the displeasur people. The hand of Lord Ripon is visible in bringing about the releas rioters. A short time ago it was given out that Lord Ripon an Kimberley had enquired into the matter and found that the rioters were u punished. This statement led the public to hope for their release, th ment of which has given great satisfaction to the entire Native public people will not fail to thank Lord Ripon and Mr. Grant Duff for their a this matter. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (79) of the same date says that th of the Madras Government for the release of the Salem rioters is and deserving of praise.]

Disapproves of the opinion expressed by Mr. Rivers Thompson, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, against the local vernacular press.

The same newspaper of the 27th October says :—The opinion
ed by Mr. Rivers Thompson, Lieutenant-G of Bengal, against the local vernacular p a resolution recently issued by him is foundation. During 1883-84 the Native new of Bengal had to strongly comment on the Ilb
the sentence of imprisonment passed upo Surendarnáth Bánnerji, the Bengal Tenancy Bill, the scheme of lo government and other matters. But they were justified in so doing. M the Anglo-Indian papers published in Bengal did their best to revile and the Native press and the Natives at that juncture and still they continue so at intervals. Notwithstanding this, they are only slightly censured resolution. Mr. Rivers Thompson's opinion is one-sided and appears to pr from the wrath excited by the adverse comments made by the Native pr his actions. He has not dared to give the same advice to the local E newspapers as he has done to the Native papers. He is mistaken in thi that the Bengali Native papers reflect the opinion of their writers and not public. This is shown by the feeling of the Native public of Bengal. G ing, however, that the Bengali Native papers write very strongly and trans due bounds, Mr. Rivers Thompson is more to blame than these writers.

one-sided action during the Ilbert Bill controversy has increased the un santness between Europeans and Natives and between the European an Native press, the bitter results of which have not yet ended. We regret
Mr. Rivers Thompson should have given a fresh cause for hurting the fe of the Native public and the vernacular press of Bengal by this one-opinion. [The Jáme Jámshed (98) of the 30th October says that the op expressed by Mr. Rivers Thompson against the vernacular press will gl the hearts of those writers who hate Natives. The arguments advanced b are weak. Only a small portion of the Native press of Bengal is deservi blame. As a rule the vernacular press of India is a very faithful friend British Government and does credit to the English education its cond have received. The best remedy for preventing rubbishy articles fro pearing in some low prints is to take no notice of them. Nobody can word against the Native press of the Bombay Presidency, which is a sup and a true friend of the British Government and which is a valuable of bringing Native public opinion to their notice. The official and non-European community ought to look with favour on the Native pres strengthen its position.]

Says that it is content with the justice meted out by way of punishment to the erring officials concerned in the Krishnagar students' case.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 26th October, in a paragraph headed Krishnagar Students' Case," says:—Perhaps th
tude of the present Government of India in thi has had a salutary effect upon an otherwise im derate disposition of the present Lieutenant-Go of Bengal. Whatever the truth in the statemen
the students' prosecution has had Mr. Thom countenance, his subsequent conduct in setting the matter right and p ing the aggressors must satisfy those concerned to some extent. B are afraid the punishment dealt out will hardly be enough to chec gross acts of injustice perpetrated by Government officials under th nose of the Lord of the Belvedere. The conduct of the prosecuti developed in the proceedings has been utterly gross, and none but Mr.
Thompson alone could digest the insults given to the otherwise fair na British justice. Under any other regime the offenders would have bee further degraded or even visited with summary dismissal in order to such rampant promptings in the officialdom. But as it is, we must conte selves for the small bit of justice by way of punishment of the erring o
Mr. Thompson has been pleased to give us.

Approves of the action of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in punishing certain high executive officers in the Nuddea district.

In a paragraph headed "Mr. Thompson on the Nuddea Students' Ca Subodh Patrika (15) of the 26th October says
are glad to find that the Lieutenant-Gover Bengal has taken a correct view of the scan conduct of Major Ramsay, the District Superint of Police of Nuddea, and of Mr. Taylor, the D Magistrate, in connection with the Nuddea st case. Mr. Thompson censures severely both the Magistrate and the S tendent of Police and reduces both the officers to a lower grade i respective departments, the former for a period of six months and the
for a year. Thus the good name of the British judicial administra Bengal is fairly vindicated. We hope the punishment dealt out will wholesome effect and prevent a repetition of such conduct in fu Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 27th October expresses similar sentiment

Says that executive officers should be relieved of their judicial functions.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 26th October says:—It is dissociate conduct like that of the officer in the Nuddea students' case from the sys nistration and fasten blame wholly on t individuals concerned. The concentration in the districts in our Collectors as heads of the departments of rev criminal justice, and what not, is greatly at fault. For it induce that they can do pretty much as they like. Consciousness of the p such extensive powers and its frequent exercise is a great demor absence of public opinion in the districts to control it. The checks which the existing system provides can only be exercised when the i are glaring. In the interests of good administration such conc power should be done away with by separating the several depa placing them under the control of different officers. At all events no doubt of the expediency of divorcing the judicial functions from t The nature of the work done in connection with the latter branch tors' duties and the summary method of investigation which is gene ed therein are not calculated to favour the growth of that judicial f which is so essential to a proper discharge of the former class of are glad to learn that the Indian Association of Bengal has addres ernment of India on the subject on the strength of the disclosures above case. But the question at issue is so important that it may in hand by other associations and supported by the whole press.

Says that the executive officers should be relieved of their judicial duties.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 27th October, anent the Nuddea s says:—We are glad to see that the India has taken occasion to memorialize the Go the importance of separating the execu judiciary offices. We have on various oc upon the evils of the same person uniting in him the headship of the magisterial, the police and other departments and have insist necessity of separating all these functions. How such a union of liable to abuse is well illustrated by the disclosures in the Krishna case. If in other cases there are not as disagreeable disclosures, th times complaints of a miscarriage of justice. However great and the officer, his official bias will not fail in many cases to influence and the result. The training of the executive officers and the w their mind are eminently unjudicial, and justice cannot fail to suffer of such men. In the executive officer there is too often a tendency conclusions on insufficient data, and that calm calculating turn of turbable by any outside agitation or feeling is invariably wanting. two functions are quite antagonistic and incompatible. We tru Government will see their way to relieve the executive officers of duties, and make some more suitable provision for the administratio

Advocates the separation of the judicial from the executive branch of the Civil Service.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 26th October says:—The separating executive from judicial functi becoming more obvious, and it is to Supreme Government may take up the q out further loss of time. There seems to agreement on the subject. The High condemned the present system as much as the public. Its co becoming a scandal. For the good name of British justice it is ve that the anomaly be removed. We wrote much on the subject las doubt the evil does not exist in this Presidency, and some say it is in operation even in Bengal and the North-West Provinces. But t are many that crop up now and again in Bengal and elsewhere, latest was the case of the Krishnagar students. We are therefore gl the Indian Association has once more addressed a letter to the Se Government of Bengal in the Home Department, taking the abov

“furnishes the strongest ground in support of the prayer wh already made, that it is desirable, in the interests of justice, to se and executive functions which are now united in the same officer relevant matter is quoted at length, after which the Association fu that “what has taken place at Krishnagar is typical of what not occurs in the remote mofussil, due to the system which unites in tionaries high judicial powers with extensive authority. The prin in theory and is mischievous in practice.” So it is. “The effic tration of justice is intimately connected with the happiness of th is the great bulwark of British power.” The Association very pr from commenting on the manner in which the Krishnagar pr commenced and conducted. It disclosed no offence whatever. B
we know the hardship suffered by the students, who would have s more but for defence by an able and fearless counsel. Under the the Association hopes, and we cordially join in that hope, that Hi Lieutenant-Governor will feel little hesitation in bringing abo reform of the system, which is a serious blot on the administration British India.

Approves of the resolution of the Bombay Government for the employment of counsel for undefended prisoners charged with murder, and suggests that a similar boon should be conferred on persons charged with serious offences.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 28th October says:—We cann
Sir James Fergusson for the importa issued by the Bombay Government counsel for prisoners charged with mur
sil courts and who are not represente
But Sir James would have pleased the pu
if he had in this resolution permitted Se to employ counsel for prisoners charged offences in such cases as they may think sake of justice and mercy it is necessary that prisoners who ca engage counsel should be provided with this help. The British derive such a large income from stamps and court-fees that a large every year after defraying the expenses of the law courts. Gover therefore be acting very wisely by using a portion of the surplus f of giving legal assistance to prisoners charged with serious offen this help some innocent persons must fall a prey to roguery
[The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 28th and the Káside Mumb
29th October say that the resolution for the employment o undefended prisoners charged with murder is beneficial to the publ credit on the Bombay Government.]

Condemns the way in which the police perform their duties.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 26th October says:—The G
Bombay's reply to the representation o
Judge of Poona for reform in the m suspected cases by the police appears to lent excuse. But an excuse, however ad a reason. The reply from Government is so far unreasonable. A could be expected from an administration which lives in constant gress? The police have no doubt very tough work to do at tim liberty of action is due to them. When dealing with such matter has to use a good deal of what honourable officials call ingenu vulgar outsiders variously describe as fraud, perjury and coercion of “tutoring” witnesses may be necessary in extreme cases, but could be drawn somewhere. In the case in which a rush was woman in the hour of her bitterest trial, it remains to be seen ho men are to be rewarded. To give some idea of the esteem in whi ment is held, it may be enough to say that in many a case of first impulse seems to be to ask if the police could be at the botto
we do not always share this feeling; our only object in referring t how distrustful the people have grown of the very agency employe to protect life and property. This comes of allowing undefin ignorant and greedy men, and of that vicious spirit of admini culminating in the phrase, "Government decline to interf Government live in happy dalliance with the executive, snapp at the judiciary and the public alike, these latter can have no judgment. But if the authorities are to blame in this matter, are much more to blame. The country is swarming with p educated men. And yet not a single association has taken question of reconstructing the Police Department. To think should be left to English officials! But it has been so always, clap-trap about reforms and progress.

Does not approve of the refusal of Government to institute an enquiry into the conduct of the police in extracting confessions as demanded by Sir William Wedderburn.

In a paragraph headed "Extracting confessions from t Native Opinion (11) of the 26th Oct does the old adge say "Honour be honour is due," and the District richly deserves the thanks of the N for having placed before Governme and opinions boldly on the subject the accused. The reply of the loca their stereotyped style, and their high sense of official or dep seems to have induced them to refuse what might perchance light the ugly side of our police administration. Granted that enquiry would bring out more prominently and even prove assertion that criminal confessions are invariably the result we fail to see how it would materially affect either the power the authority of a lawful Government. If the police are so lous in their dealings with the accused, it is to be regretted should lose such a splendid opportunity of exploding onc repeated assertions of police torture. Their zeal to protect a from the rude gaze of the public will only set a premium bot and practice of torture and encourage criminals to accuse same even when it has not been used. So much for the father rulers towards the police. However unfortunate the result recommendation, we may assure Sir William that as a friend the people and won his spurs.

Says that Government should take measures to prevent police officers from exceeding their duty in extracting confessions from accused parties.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 27th October, in a parag William Wedderburn on Confess William Wedderburn has done valu cause of justice by asking Governme it happens that a great number of co the police are of late withdrawn before the Magistrate or the Sessio well-known to all concerned in the criminal justice that a confession is regarded as the most re dence against an accused person. But a great deal depends is obtained and what it discloses. In numerous cases the ha getting up the evidence appears quite plain. It is surely police should confine themselves to their legitimate work of preventing crime. But their activity frequently goes beyond and they help to create crime where none existed, as was pai in certain late proceedings in Bombay. The fact observe Wedderburn unmistakably shows how police officers are carr zeal for securing convictions to connect evidence. Governme of the complaint made by Sir William, but decline to take an it for fear of weakening the hands of the police. We are full portance of the police administration being efficient, but the ject is a far more important consideration than administrativ a settled principle of criminal law that a hundred guilty men than one innocent man be punished. We wish Government matter earnestly and see that police officers act within the s duty.

om
ice
on

ika (15) of the 26th October, in a paragraph headed "Sir W. Wedderburn on Confessions," says:—We learn that Sir W. Wedderburn recently called the attention of the Government to the large number of confessions obtained from accused persons by the police which are forthwith withdrawn by them before the commit-e Court of Sessions. The subject is well worthy of the ent if only it admitted of some adequate remedy. That ons are obtained by questionable means hardly admits of ally clear that in a few cases the accused through ignor-ives make false confessions. On the other hand, it must a few of these confessions are sincerely made in the first f the law and the working of the conscience, which afterhoughts, are retracted. The difficulty lies in effectually ous confessions from coming before the court as evidence
And the difficulty is so great that the matter perhaps had he law at present leaves it. The law provides for various e to be observed before confessions can become admissible he signature of the accused to the confession and the ording Magistrate as to its being voluntary. These con-rictly enforced by the High Courts in India generally.
elaxes somewhat this strict rule. This is a move in the
, we think, may well be corrected. Then again, we believe dge is not bound to convict on the strength of the confes-
may exercise his judgment to find out how they were e able to give them their due weight. Moreover where is palpable our courts are not chary of administering ords of our criminal courts are not wanting in cases of been criminally punished for using illegal means to obtain hecks, joined perhaps to a strict departmental prohibition
s which every police officer on entering the department prove an adequate deterrent for all practicable purposes.
quiry suggested by Sir W. Wedderburn into the means are obtained was a most reasonable one, as being likely s that may be taken to guard against all ill-treatment by are not a little sorry to find that Government have not it proper to act upon that suggestion. [The Dnyán
th October expresses similar sentiments. The Bakul (20)
ing on the same subject suggests the employment of edu-ice force who can be attracted to the service as the salaries large.]

f a nce

(5) of the 28th October makes suggestions about the establishment of a Chief Court for Sind, and says:—
Now what we propose is to amalgamate the District and Sessions Court of Karáchi with the Sadar Court, and to employ the saving effected by the amalgamaabolition of the Small Cause Court in appointing a third of the Sadar Court might become the Chief Justice of the ge of the District Court, Karáchi, might for the present udge, the third alone would have to be selected from the or from uncovenanted Civilians in the judicial line, and it ne that a salary would be needed. The Sadar Judge now onth and the District Judge Rs. 1,700; the third Judge we inted on a salary of Rs. 1,500, but a beginning may be salary of Rs. 1,000. No money would be required for the new Subordinate Court or of the Chief Court, as on ent establishment a very fair apportionment can be made, n idea that some retrenchments can be effected. Thus it ary to provide 1,000 rupees a month for the new Judge
t, and of these 400 rupees, if not more, would be forthcoming ll Cause Court is abolished and the pay of the presiding urt is fixed at 600 rupees instead of at 1,000 rupees. The

at the outset not cost the Government more than Rs. 600
the pay of the third Judge is increased to Rs. 1,500 not month. But even this extra outlay would be more than receipts of court-fees consequent on the establishment of ere can hardly be a shadow of doubt that the number of e Court at Karáchi and the number of appeals in the ery high. The Subordinate Court would have the same as the other Subordinate Courts in Sind. The Chief ghest appellate and revisional court in criminal as well as hout Sind, and would have moreover the jurisdiction of ad Sessions Court in the Karáchi District. It would also Jurisdiction now vested in the Judicial Commissioner,
f time be entrusted with the whole jurisdiction now exerhief Court. The rules for the disposal of business may Panjáb Courts' Act, and we have no doubt they will work blic would have the benefit of the opinion of at least two y of all the three in civil appeals, and questions of life and age would be in perfectly safe hands. And all these more could be conferred on Sind by the sanction of an month to the Judicial Department in Sind. The suggesous attention, and we trust it will bear fruit at no distant

of the Yajdán Parast (123) of the 26th October, signing himself "A traveller," says:—I am neither a Christian ty nor a member of the Theosophical Society. Still I find that if there be any religion on the surface of the oundation, it is the Christian religion, which is interspersed Owing to this defect the Christian missionaries make false wn any writings or societies that tend to disclose the real an religion has not suffered a little at the hands of the . Christianity is based on a weak foundation and many hristian countries even do not believe in it. Some are ome Buddhists, while others act as they please. I strongly wish to know contradictory and incredible statements in eligious books pertaining to Christianity to read the Philo- eekly paper published in Madras. It rightly styles Chris-e and Christian churches theatres. Christianity exercises ven on its priests. It is true that there are black sheep oking to the Christian population and to the faults com-ts, it appears that immorality prevails among them.

ded "Lord Ripon and our Town Inspector," the Sind Times
(5) of the 24th October says:—Our readers will call ho- to mind a letter we published some time ago animad-
the verting in strong terms on the conduct of our City if Town Inspector in issuing blank warrants for the the arrest of some boatmen. Now that there is such a wn great hubbub about the illegal arrest of Mr. Walker have come to the surface, and but a few days ago, we eroy telegraphed to the Commissioner in Sind enquiring ts made in our paper were correct. It appears that Mr.
ting the boatmen, called upon the Town Inspector to ext that worthy sent no explanation, until about a month
vas sent to him on receipt of Lord Ripon's telegram, came to Mr. Gibbons for report. The Town Inspector of to deny that he ever issued any blank warrants. But testimony of witnesses before Mr. Gibbons, and there was Inspector's delay in sending his explanation. We trust will now at any rate see that they will be guilty of the ence in shutting their eyes any longer to the vagaries of own Inspector has been whispering to certain officials that enemy, and in this he tells the truth. We are his enemies.

And we will tell him why. We are his enemies because he i the public we serve. We are his enemies, because under him t the police is at a low ebb. We are his enemies, because we ha authentic instances of his high-handedness, instances publishe and never satisfactorily explained by him. These instances wer part verifiable from public records, and did not depend for their malicious invention. We never gave them publicity before copies of these records. It is a highly inconvenient thing to a officer,—nay it is positively dangerous. But disregarding all pers tions we have confronted the Town Inspector with damning f of which has attracted the attention of the Viceroy. The fact c easily enquired into by the authorities here,—indeed we invite But nothing evidently was done until the Viceroy's telegram from their lethargy. We can only hope they will be more wake Disapproves of the practice of European officials absenting themselves from their offices for several days.

The Shiváji (61) of the 24th October says that a party of Eu had recently assembled near the I station for the purpose of hunting the w encamped in that locality for five days remarks that during their absence it guess how their official work was carri left to be done by the head clerks. Will it be denied that the which has been disbursed to the officials in the shape of sal uselessly spent? Why should these European officials be allowe pay during the time they are absent from their duties? The who have to perform hard work on small allowances are denied on Sundays. What justification then is there that their Eur should be allowed to absent themselves from their offices? T ought to take strong measures to put down this practice.

Comments on the question regarding the authority of the Customs Collector to inflict fines on tradesmen and to deprive them of their licenses for the sale of intoxicating drugs.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 31st October says:—The one Mahádev Ratan by the Tobacco I Bombay Customs Department for s
without a license and his acquittal b Chief Presidency Magistrate, should passed over. The result of this case l inference that there are no proofs to Customs Collector has power to infli faulting parties and to deprive them of their licenses. The fine the licenses withdrawn by him during the last 27 years appea
It is surprising that such should have been the case for about Many poor tradesmen must have suffered by this practice. W Bombay Government will pay attention to the subject. Fo justice and for the protection of tradesmen it is the duty to take some measures and prevent the wielding of such powers of the Customs Department. No head of a department ought to ha trying and punishing tradesmen; it ought to be done by a c
When even the Police Department has no such power, why shou
the customs or any other department enjoy this privilege?

Complains of oppression of country liquor-sellers by the A'bkári Inspectors.

A correspondent of the Indian Spectator (1) of the 26th Oct
there a law prohibiting country liqu selling Eue de Cologne, Painkiller, found so very useful in every hous
articles are sold generally by Borás,
a farthing to the Government, whereas country liquor-sellers, w per annum from Rs. 900 to Rs. 2,400, are put to inconvenience a trouble by the A'bkári Inspector for having a single bottle of What does this show? Nothing but 'zulum.'

Complains against the harsh treatment of the liquor-sellers in Bombay by the A'bkári Department.

The Yajdán Parast (123) of the 26th October says:—D Commissioner wish to put a stop to Bombay? Oppression is exercised on t in this city. The severity exercised such as to lead them to give up their liquor-sellers are required to keep th

cording to the system prescribed by the A'bkári Department. Th spectors order the liquor-sellers to close their shops for one week c on finding that the accounts have not been properly kept. If th liquor required to be kept in the shop be less than the quantity all lar punishment is inflicted on them. This harsh treatment has ca cry amongst the dealers in liquor. They have made a petition, bu ful whether it will prove successful. The object of the A'bkári De pears to be to crush down liquor-sellers. The A'bkári Act has livelihood of many poor men.

A grievance of the Bhandáris or toddy-drawers in Bombay.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 29th Octo himself "A poor Bhandári," says tha Bhandáris, who earned about Rs. 9 per drawing toddy, have been suffering terri during the last three months from the se A'bkári Act. As the work of drawing toddy from cocoanut trees it into liquor has ceased, the Bhandáris have no occupation an starve. Before whom are these men to complain? They ar accustomed to one kind of work and cannot therefore take to o tions.

A case of groundless suspicion on the Boráh inhabitants of Gogha.

The Gujarát Mitră (74) of the 26th October complains that the houses and residences of the Boráh in Gogha were searched by the police of that female beggar who had arrived there on the from Bhávnagar complained to them t missed her boy of about 12 years of age, alleging at the instigat Memon that he was offered by the Boráhs as a sacrifice to their p murdered by them, and says:—The missing boy was afterwa Bhávnagar, where he had gone away. Some months ago a Memon the service of a Boráh was accidentally run over by the wheels of th was driving and was killed. On the Memons complaining that coachman was offered by the Boráhs as a sacrifice to their p murdered by them, the surgeon of the station held a post-mortem over the dead body and found that he had met with death throu dent that had happened. This state of things is owing to th arising from difference in religious opinions. There are about 3 habited by the Boráhs in Gogha, who are meek and respectable. and tyrannical to accuse the poor Boráhs of offering human sacri pir. The police ought to act with foresight and discretion an implicit confidence on such statements and rumours, for the B thereby suffer in reputation and credit.

Education.

Reflections on the resolution of Government on the report of the Education Commission.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 26th October says:—As far as long looked-for resolution of the Governm on the report of the Education Commis factory enough. It was quite evident, af mission had brought its labours to a anything very brilliant by way of future progress was not to be expected. The Commission had to obey def tions as to its work. A limitation was imposed upon it. The quest and technical education, as well as the education of European c without its sphere. Its attention was mainly confined to primary a education and to the extension of the indigenous system. But the has served one great purpose. It has once for all exhaustively s progress made by the different provinces of the empire since the 1854. A more comprehensive and elaborate report could not ha pared. It will stand out as the best landmark to guide advocates o education. And it will be a mine of information for the Governm itself. Meanwhile it is well that the Government has recognised t ency of a general education code. Local Governments are allowed their systems of State education in harmony with existing conditions eye to further progress. Great stress is laid on the encourag by private enterprise wherever practicable. The munificenc matter has been praised. But it must be observed that after tain limit even to the most ambitious private enterprise. Muc done by the State for the enlightenment of the masses. Dark 95 per cent. of the population of India. A liberal expenditure be one of the first objects of all provincial Governments. Fina apt to be quoted by Government, but we hope to show how t in other departments. Meanwhile we may congratulate Lor ment on this most important step it has taken in the progre

India since Sir Charles Wood laid the foundation thirty year

Expresses satisfaction with the resolution of the Government of India on the report of the Education Commission.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 27th October says :—
the Government of India on the re
tion Commission is on the whole s Ripon has acted wisely in dealing himself in accordance with the wish India. Perhaps dissatisfaction wi
some quarter at the Supreme Government having only issu place of a legislative enactment. But there will be no cau new resolution succeeds in effecting the necessary reforms i Department of this country. The chief points dealt with in resolution are likely to prove beneficial to the public. The with the Commission and state that education has made grea country since 1854. Still much remains to be done for the education in India, and it is a consolation to find that the Go Education Commission admit this fact. We do not appro pleading want of funds for the spread of education. We wis boldly and honestly do their best for the propagation of kno follow in the footsteps of the Governments of France, Germa tries and spend enormous sums of money for spreading ed people? A reduction in some of the useless and extravagant ture and the diversion of those funds for educational purpose cial. It is also satisfactory to find that Government have seen t viding education for the sons of Native Chiefs and for Mahon poor population of India. It remains to be seen how all t carried out by the provincial Governments and their officers.
issued for the benefit of the public are shelved by the latter i able to them. All the resolutions issued by Lord Ripon are me but a good deal of opposition is shown to them by some Euro country. It is possible that this resolution on the report of t mission will meet with opposition from them. This will not le of the resolution and the report of the Commission. They co will frequently attract the attention of the Home and the In and the public, and will reflect shame on the authorities if t upon the lines laid down in them. All this is sufficient a serves thanks for steadily carrying out the work. He has d during his short tenure of office, and the work of persevering it now rests with Lord Dufferin. The arrangements state for spreading elementary education and continuing the prese cation are unobjectionable. Government cannot also be bla from imparting instruction in morality to students in Gover is very nigh impossible to prepare a book on the subject whi able to all the professors of different religions in this coun resolution is worthy of approval and its carrying out will e in the education imparted in India and confer great ben [The same paper of the 1st November expresses approval of the Government of India in the suggestion made by the Ed for providing industrial education in ordinary schools, and s ly awaits its being carried out. It is to be hoped that no be caused to the public by the educational authorities throw way of its fulfilment. It is true that new standards and b made. But if the educational authorities were to be gui report of the Commission appointed in England to investigate i of imparting industrial education on the Continent, the work wil to a great extent. Such a change as this will greatly improve of India within a few years and the public will always bless carry out and help in the work.]

Comments on the resolution of the Government of India on the report of the Education Commission.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 27th October says:—The res Supreme Government on the report of Commission is satisfactory. No necessi legislative enactment for the purpose. T of Government in nominating the Comm extend elementary education, and it is find that that object will be attained. For the spread of elemen
dle class education the Government of India have wisely orde Governments to encourage private enterprise in the matter. But whether the Educational Department of the country will give the Bombay Presidency the local educational department is obstr enterprise instead of encouraging it. Favouritism prevails in t partment is obliged to give, and schools for the education of receive greater support than private schools for Native students hoped that this state of things will improve. We should have b
if the Supreme Government had recommended provincial Gover encouragement to schools established by private enterprise technical and commercial education. There is a great necessity such education to the people of this country. If the Governmen embodied the above suggestion in their resolution, several enter men would have been emboldened to undertake the work. Th this suggestion in the resolution is to be regretted. The Supren are quite justified in keeping aloof from imparting moral edu schools. The book of moral principles which the Education Co gested for preparation and use would not prove acceptable to the
of people inhabiting the country. [The Rást Goftár (110) of the Dátardun (88) of the 30th October express satisfaction with the
the Supreme Government on the report of the Education Con Rást Goftár says that the policy laid down in the resolution is resolution is a fresh charter for education in India.]

Railways.

Injustice done to Native engine-drivers and firemen on the B. B. & C. I. Railway.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 27th October, in continuatic
on the injustice done to Native engine
B. B. & C. I. Railway and reported at Report on Native Papers for the wee October 1884, says:—We have heard offered by the Company to those drivers who consume less coal part carried away by Native drivers. We request the Superin Locomotive Department of the B. B. & C. I. Railway to publish the names of those drivers who have earned this reward during
This will show that Native drivers are not inferior to their Eur
Why then should their wages be half those of the European drive while one month's privilege leave is granted annually to the lat drivers, who really work harder than their European brethren, d even for one day. There is a special school established at Pare fit of the children of European drivers, while no such convenie to Native drivers who are compelled to reside in Parel. Great prevails in the treatment of European and Native firemen on the Native youths have been obliged to give up service out of Native drivers on the G. I. P. Railway are paid Rs. 6 per day, the B. B. & C. I. Railway line are paid only Rs. 4. As Native
B. B. & C. I. Railway are anxious to get service on the G. I. P. a view to higher wages, it is said that the authorities of the advised those of the latter to reduce the wages of Native drivers to
But the G. I. P. Railway authorities have declined to act upon Any explanation from the Locomotive Superintendent of the B.

way regarding this matter will prove very useful. It i that this injustice should be brought to the notice of Lord taken great interest in the welfare of Native drivers, and who, will not leave these shores without redressing their grievar ought to be speedily forwarded to His Lordship by the N long as they do not vigorously fight for their cause, they w their object.

Municipalities.

Cholera in Bombay.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 1st November refers t the number of deaths from cholera i the last week, and says :—Cholera city for a long time past with more or less virulence. A few p to it in one week, while in another the number of deaths from special causes have enhanced the number of deaths from this last week. The weather is fine. Putrid fish and rotten vege in the markets. The epidemic does not prevail in any adjo city, so that it might be said to have been imported into it. then for this increase in the number of deaths from cholera ? cases continue to occur, no fresh and stringent measures appe preserving cleanliness in the city. As long as this is not don appear. Cholera has now become permanent here, which is prise. How long will the municipal authorities and the Mun allow this state of things to continue ? [A correspondent o (110) of the 26th October says that the cause of the outbreak o is owing to the tank belonging to Mr. Mahomed Aly Rogay for some years past and to the stench and poisonous gas emit to be hoped that the Health Department will attend to this m Scanty supply of water in Girgaum during the Diwáli.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 26th October in its local it is a matter for regret that the scarcity of water in Girgaum jus needed. During the last Diwáli almost a water famine in Girgaum. All Hindus bathe earl of the Diwáli, and on such an occasion an insufficient water treme inconvenience and hardship. It is to be hoped th authorities will take measures not to give cause for similar co

Native States.

A dispute between Hindus and Mahomedans of Mángrol regarding the slaughtering of cows.

The Rást Goftár (110) of the 26th October says :—A di between the Hindus and Mahomeda account of the latter having raise slaughtering cows. The Mahomed subscription for defending their Husen Miya's Court. It is said th been subscribed to the fund by the Mahomedans of Mángr Bombay, and that Mr. Cumroodin, Solicitor, is to be retain Hindus, on the other hand, threatened to leave Mángrol in Mahomedans be allowed to slaughter cows. About 33 yea left Mángrol on account of the same cause. But the Nawáb favour of the Hindus. He has given a reply to the Mahon that he will faithfully carry out the agreement made by his Hindus that they will not allow cows to be slaughtered in the

G. W.

Reporter o

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
4th November 1884.

INDEX.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Ábkári:
- A grievance of the Bhandáris or toddy-drawers in Bombay
- Comments on the question regarding the authority of the Custo Collector to inflict fines on tradesmen and to deprive them their licenses for the sale of intoxicating drugs ...
- Complaint against the harsh treatment of liquor-sellers in Bomb
  by the — Department ... ...
- Complaint regarding the oppression of country liquor-sellers by t — Inspectors ... ...

Christianity and Christian missionaries: An attack on — ...

Colonial defences:
- Disapproval of India being made to pay a portion of the expenses
  fortifying Aden, Singapore and other naval stations
- Disapproval of India being made to pay the expenses of strengthe
  ing the fortifications of Aden, Singapore, Hongkong, &c., a necessity of strengthening the defences of Bombay

Judicial matters:
- Approval of the resolution of the Bombay Government for t employment of counsel for undefended prisoners charged wi murder, and suggestion that a similar boon should be conferr on persons charged with serious offences ...
- Suggestions for the creation of a Chief Court for the Province Sind ... ...

Kerosine oil: Recommendation to the Government of India to find c places containing—... ... ...

Krishnagar students' case:
- Approval of the action of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal punishing certain high executive officers in the Nuddea distric
- Expression of satisfaction with the justice meted out by way punishment to the erring officials concerned in the —

Land Revenue:
- Criticism on Mr. Ashburner's arguments in refutation of those
  Mr. Keay on the subject of the land-tax in the Bombay Pre dency ... ...
- Criticism on Mr. Ashburner's statements on the — system obtaini in the Bombay Presidency and on the condition of the Indi people generally ... ...
- Objection to several statements made by Mr. Ashburner in answeri
  Mr. Seymour Keay's article on the spoliation of India

Loans for public works: Expression of opinion that capital required carrying on large undertakings in India should be borrowed by t Indian Government in the English market and let to the differ bodies here at a slightly enhanced rate of interest ...

Police:
- A case of groundless suspicion on the Boráh inhabitants of Gogha
- Condemnation of the way in which the — perform their duties
- Confessions obtained from accused persons by the — and remarks connection therewith ... ...
- Disapproval of the refusal of Government to institute an enquiry i the conduct of the — in extracting confessions as demanded Sir William Wedderburn ... ...
- Expression of opinion that Government should take measures prevent police officers from exceeding their duty in extract confessions from accused parties ... ...
- Expression of opinion that the local authorities will be guilty of most culpable negligence if they shut their eyes to the vaga of the City Town Inspector of Karáchi ... ...

Public Service: Disapproval of the practice of European officials absent themselves from their offices for several days ...

Race-hatred in India: Approval of Mr. Wilfred Blunt's paper on —

Salem Riots: Expression of satisfaction with the order of the Mad Government for the release of the prisoners concerned in the late—

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—continued.

Separation of the judicial from the executive branch of the Civil Se Advocacy of the— ... ...
  Expression of opinion that the executive officers should be re
    of their judicial duties—
      The Indu Prakásh ... ...
      The Subodh Patrika ... ...
Vernacular Press: Disapproval of the opinion expressed by Mr.
  Thompson, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, against the local — Viceroyalty of India: An estimate of the merits and demerits o Ripon's career as Governor General looked at from the point o
  of Anglo-Indians and Natives ... ...

Part II.—Education—

Resolution of the Government of India on the report of the Edu Commission;
  Expression of satisfaction with the— ... ...
  Reflections on the—
    The Indian Spectator ... ...
    The Jáme Jamshed ... ...

Part III.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway: Injustice done to Native engine-driver firemen on the— ... ...

Part IV.—Municipalities—

Bombay:
  Cholera in— ... ...
  Scanty supply of water in Girgaum during the Diwáli festival

Part V.—Native States—

Mángrol: Dispute between the Hindus and Mahomedans of — reg
  the slaughtering of cows ... ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

FFICE
884

REPORT

ON

NATIVE PAPERS

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 8th November 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	750
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	281
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	275
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	160
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
37	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	4,350
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
39	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
40	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*41	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	400
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	450
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*54	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*66	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.
	MARA'THI—continued.
67	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekl
68	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.
69	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.
*70	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.
71	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.
72	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Month
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
73	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekl
74	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.
75	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.
76	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.
77	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.
	GUJARA'TI.
78	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekl
79	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily
80	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Montl
81	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.
82	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.
83	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily
84	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Week
85	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.
86	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Montl
*87	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.
88	„ Dátardun	Do.	Week
89	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.
90	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Montl
91	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.
92	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.
93	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.
94	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Week
95	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Montl
96	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.
*97	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarte
98	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily
99	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Montl
100	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Week
101	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.
*102	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Montl
103	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-w
*104	„ Mangal Prakásh	Kaira	Week
105	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Montl
106	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.
107	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Week
108	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.
109	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do
110	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do
111	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do
112	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do
113	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Mont
114	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do
115	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do
116	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do
117	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do
*118	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quart
119	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Mont
120	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Week
121	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Mont
122	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do
123	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Week
	KA'NARESE.
124	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Wee
125	„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do
126	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do
127	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do
	URDU.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Wee
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	D
	PERSIAN.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Wee
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Wee
	SINDI.
132	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Wee

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the R
which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, an paper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to th
In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the sa Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is t or d) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that whe absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the wel with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of th G
the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Reflections on an increase in the numerical strength of the British army in India.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 3rd November, in an article headed "An increase in the numerical strength of the British Army in India," observes that the English newspapers consider that since the Russians are making an advance in the direction of India it will become necessary for the British Indian Government to increase its forces by about sixty thousand troops. Whether the Russians are really advancing upon India with hostile intentions, or whether they will be able ultimately to subjugate Afghanistan and invade India, one thing is quite clear that, in order to defray the expense, of keeping up an additional force of sixty thousand troops, some new tax will have to be imposed upon the inhabitants of India. But the condition of the people of this country is just now so utterly wretched and the present taxation so crushing that they will not be able to bear the burden of a new impost. The Indu Prakásh, however, considers that the British Government has a capital opportunity of increasing the numerical strength of the military forces in India without any extra cost. It should suggest to the Native princes of India the propriety of improving the condition of their soldiery and of supplying them with the best arms and ammunition. It should also keep up friendly relations with Native States, by which means their military resources will be at all times available for the service of the paramount power. Such a policy may be distasteful to some Englishmen and may be somewhat difficult of execution, but it is the only one by which the military resources of the British Government will be augmented without incurring any additional expenditure. If, however, the above suggestion is considered inappropriate, then one way of meeting the cost of additional troops will be found in the reduction of the salaries of the over-paid European officials. Some saving can also be made by abolishing the Christian ecclesiastical establishments and by doing away with the provincial Commanders-in-Chief. Those who talk of increasing the numerical strength of the forces say that the European portion of the army should be increased. This suggestion casts a reflection on the loyalty of the Natives. The Indu Prakásh considers this reflection undeserved.

A defence of the British Government from the charge of draining away the wealth of India to England.

The Surat Akhbár (76) of the 3rd November says:—The question whether wealth has increased or diminished in India is freely talked about by the old and the young. The alleged draining of the wealth of this country by the British Government has made the latter unpopular. But this false idea is harmful to the peace of the country. Solitary instances of a man or a city which has increased in wealth cannot be looked upon as indicative that the entire country has become rich. In the same way from the fact that a rich man or a rich city has been reduced to poverty it cannot be inferred that the whole country has become poor. In former times some classes were exceedingly wealthy, while others were altogether poor. But now a change has come over that state. The wealthy classes have lost some of their wealth, while others have become rich. Those who have lost it naturally raise a cry that the country is being ruined, while those who have prospered under British rule do not care to express their gratitude for the prosperity which they enjoy. For this reason the cry of the draining of wealth from India must continue for some time. Thieving and plundering have decreased, population and trade have increased, and peace prevails everywhere. It is no secret that the Home charges form a great drain on India. But such is the case with all the colonies of an empire. Perhaps the drain is larger than is necessary, but mankind is liable to err. The British are not angels; they must err. But looking to the extent of the country and the large number of officers employed in it, and to the necessity for the preservation of peace and prosperity, the error can safely be passed over. Trade has increased eightfold within the last ten years. The figure representing the amount of the import trade stood at 31 krors of rupees in 1874, but now it stands at 50 krors. The export trade in 1874 amounted to 55 krors, while last year it had increased to 83 krors. Moreover the imports of gold and silver into India during the last ten years alone amounted to 79 krors.

Says that the cost of the strengthening of the defences of India and the British colonies should be divided between England and the different countries composing the British Empire in certain proportions.

In an article headed " Defences of India and the British Native Opinion (11) of the 2nd Novemb present agitation about colonial defences for our finances. Precedents are not wa feel sure they will be used as authoriti
us once more pay a large share of th defences. The justice of our cause an of our liability will count for nothing of actual disbursement arrives. Right Liberals in office or out of it, we shall most certainly come in for a the expense. Past history has shaken our trust, at least in the Liberals to stand by us. They may have the best possible intentio but as for any tangible results we cannot expect anything more f from the Conservatives. We must use our own power of agitation est speck on our financial horizon must be watched and provided any scheme of the colonial defences in the East the best way wou
all the parts of the empire in proportion to their importance and v Bombay, Singapore, Ceylon, and all the colonies in the Chinese Seas and Australia require no doubt to be strengthened against f
Let an estimate be made of the cost that would be required, and le between all the colonies and dependencies according to the use a of such strengthening to each of them. England no doubt mus and that share should, we think, be more than one-half, since it i England who profit most from the security of her colonies. Let portion be divided among the rest. Take, for instance, the def
That the place should be secure from attack is of very great impor
to India but to Ceylon, Singapore, Hongkong, Australia, Vandeman's Land, and all the other small possessions. But, abov will suffer most from the loss of Aden than all the other countries t
Let her then bear three-fourths of the cost and let the remaining borne by the colonies and India in proportion. So also would b Bombay, though in that case England's share will have to be lo half or even less than that. Let a commission be appointed on Eastern possessions should be represented, and let it settle the ra to be borne by each possession. In this scheme should be includ
the operations now going on on the north-western frontier of this c be a railway or an expedition it is a part of the operations for the whole empire and should be set to the account of all the componen up that empire. Let the same principle be extended to wha undertaken for the empire. Then only will justice be done to t such matters and its position recognized in the imperial ec
a principle, if brought into operation, would be the best empire, and its adoption would be an act of true statesmanship.
doubt that if representation be made to the people of England manner the principle we have advocated will surely be recogniz
no doubt that England will have to accept something like this d in the long run ; but that may come on after several sacrifices.
be better then to establish it early enough ?

Says that the Amir of Kabul is trying by every means in his power to put a stop to the trade of India with his country, and suggests the withdrawal of the annuity paid to him by the British Government.

A correspondent of the Sind Sudhár (132) of the 1st Noven
The letters which have been received f at Kabul and Kandahar give us to u this year only a very small quantity of articles of export will be brought Afghanistan, and what little will be br very dear. The Amir has purchased produced in the country, and has on t certain duties granted leases to some the sale of those articles. Fruit and other articles brought t will be sold under such conditions as spirits, opium, &c., are sol territories. To one merchant the Amir has granted a lease grapes, to another for the sale of pistachios, to a third for the sa and so on. Leases have been granted on the payment of larg over these things have been made liable to thrice as much (ex before. Nay, (license) tax is to be imposed on dealers in these g servants. A toll is to be levied on all beasts of burden carryin mentioned above. These are the various ways in which the A put a stop to the trade of India with his country. It is a great English should pay a handsome annuity to the Amir fro treasury. The same sum of money, if employed in growing frui in establishing manufactories would wonderfully develope the res country.

Disapproves of the passing of a legislative enactment for checking adulteration in cotton.

In an article headed "The adulteration of Indian Cotton" Chronicle (73) of the 2nd November sa of this adulteration being on the incre question, as also that it is the cause of
to all who wish well to the prospe
But so far as the particulars are yet kn is one for the Native dealers and the European purchasers and manage to mend, and not for the Government to try to check measures. Mr. Bythell and others, fully conversant with the
of this presidency, firmly believe that if the exporters would decline to have anything to do with mixed cotton the practice o would soon die a natural death. Their opinion is right in the exporters do not act upon it. So long, therefore, as the cotton not exert themselves and make up their mind to put a stop to th they could very well materially check, if not extinguish, by their the Government may well be justified in refusing to listen to the
for legislative or other authoritative interference.

Comments on the articles published in the St. James' Gazette headed "Indian Dangers."

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 6th November, in referring published in the St. James' Gazette he Dangers," says:—We can attach no wei to the statement made by the St. Jame
a mutiny will break out in India in a Several excited Europeans now-a-days s mutiny in this country. This is the result of their excited brains. The present condition of India is more peaceful than major part of the population is devoted to business pursuits. Se at present requesting Government to confer more privileges on th are offering suggestions to the latter how to make use of those have. This state of things shows that the people are confident o being realized, and are therefore quite favourably inclined toward Government. It is wrong to say anything against the Mahom know the condition to which their co-religionists are being reduc Asia and other countries, and are therefore more willing to rema
the British Government. It is doing injustice to the Mahomedan say that some portion of it is disaffected towards Government.
none but the limited number of officials and tradesmen who ha with the St. James' Gazette entertain such an idea. As rega danger to India, viz. the attack of Russia, the St. James' Gazet in asking the British authorities to take stringent measures f Russian advance towards this country. [The Akhbáre Sodágar ( November blames the St. James' Gazette for creating false alarm b a mutiny will break out in India within a few years and advancing on India. The army in India is well-disciplined and British Government.]

Necessity of abolishing the duty levied on salt.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 4th November refers outbreak of cholera in Italy and to th
the use of salt for the prevention of c out by a correspondent of the Lanc
that journal from Rome, and says:—It h proved that cholera does not easily affect those who make s salt in their daily food. The epidemic rages constantly in India, when now it constantly makes its attack in Bombay it is nece authorities concerned should pay attention to the quantity of salt people in their daily food. Owing to the dearness of salt a large portion of the people are not able to buy this article in sufficient quantity, while some poor men cannot at all afford to purchase it. The duty on salt has made it dear, and the poorer classes cannot freely use it. It is therefore necessary that the salt duty should be entirely abolished within a short time. Lord Ripon has done his duty by reducing it, and Lord Dufferin should perform his part of the duty by abolishing it altogether in the beginning of his administration. Such a measure will make him very popular in India.

Necessity of amending the existing Indian Insolvency Act.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (101) of the 2nd November complains of the facility afforded to fraudulent persons to become insolvents by the existing Indian Insolvency Act, points out the necessity of amending it and says:—The creditors have to encounter so much trouble in opposing the discharge of their fraudulent debtors that they prefer to keep quiet. Moreover the creditors have to prove before the Insolvency Court in the same way as is done in criminal prosecutions before police magistrates that their debtors have acted fraudulently, if the former wish to have them punished. As long as no fraud is proved against the insolvents by their creditors, the court has to rely upon the statements of the former. An idea of the difficulty of bringing fraudulent insolvents to justice can be formed from the fact that only about half a dozen of them have been punished during the last 10 or 15 years. Several creditors do not like to incur additional loss by spending money in obtaining the conviction of their debtors. This unwillingness is enhanced by the uncertainty of the result of their opposition. Several debtors also transfer their property to the names of their relatives before applying for the benefit of the Insolvency Act. The extent of this practice can be judged from the ridiculously small dividends declared by the Official Assignee for payment out of the estates of insolvents. Will not Government put a stop to this scandal? A draft bill, on the lines of the English Bankruptcy Act of 1883, should be prepared by the Indian Government and the existing Act should be amended in accordance therewith.

Reflections on Mr. Rivers Thompson's remarks on the Native Press of Bengal.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 2nd November says:—There is nothing in the form or spirit of Mr. Rivers Thompson's remarks on the Native Press of Bengal to which we could take serious objection. His observations are generally fair, if not ever friendly, and in quoting approvingly part of Mr. Smith's report, which Native journalists in India will do well to study, the Lieutenant-Governor has shown himself true to his antecedents as a wise and careful administrator. It is only when His Honor comes to a comparison, always invidious, between the Anglo-Indian and the Native papers that we find him at fault. This may be because he is an Anglo-Indian and we are Natives. But, like himself, we are fairly entitled to express an opinion. And it is our honest opinion that the Native press suffers very little by the comparison. The Anglo-Indian is generally an experienced hand, and he uses his own language. The Bengali has scarcely yet gone out of his apprenticeship; he has to use a foreign speech and is decidedly less circumspect. He has not had the political training of his formidable rival. Hence whenever there is a conflict the Bengali strikes recklessly and at random, whilst the Anglo-Indian sets to work in a cool, deliberate manner, conscious of his own strength and his opponent's weakness. The Anglo-Indian often fights with his head, the Bengali with his heart. The two are seldom equally matched, and we think it unfair to judge them by the same standard. Still, considering the disadvantages under which they have to work, Native journalists show a very fair capacity for improvement. Of the vernacular papers of Bengal we cannot write with the same confidence. But to judge from extracts, we are not at all inclined to despair. The established papers are generally moderate and sensible in tone. There are some which exhaust themselves in the process of echoing the voice of their own special oracles; and others there are—not many—which have the knack of running about like wild colts, doing mischief all round. But on the whole we have been able to detect nothing "seditious" in their writings. Here we must keep out of sight much that has been said in connection with the Webb case, for instance. This was an outrage on the national sentiment, and though it would be obviously wrong to make of it an occasion for indiscriminate reprobation, still we maintain our previous opinion that no language could be too strong against the unmanly offence, and the no less unmanly way, in which it was condoned. Let us put it to Mr. Rivers Thompson himself—would he have written differently about the matter had he been in the place of one of the Bengali journalists? When Surendra Náth Banerji was sacrificed to the ill-will of some of the authorities—a most dangerous and foolish mistake in policy—did the High Court expect the Native press to bow to the inevitable with pious resignation? And when the Lieutenant-Governor forgot himself so far as to have a fling publicly and privately at the Ilbert Bill, did he expect the educated classes to fall at his feet in voluntary homage? And now when the Lord of Belvedere is at war with the local barons, trampling upon the self-respect of unpaid co-adjutors, spurning their advances and dictating his own terms without pity and without mercy, does he want the people to sing hallelujah to signalise his triumph? We believe Mr. Rivers Thompson would not do wrong knowingly; and we also believe that no self-respecting Native paper would misjudge His Honor if he now and then took it into confidence. This will have to be done more and more as time goes, and happy the heads of Government who avail themselves of natural interpreters between them and the governed. Whenever we hear an Anglo-Indian deploring the attitude of a section of the Native press, our reply to him is—it is mainly your own fault. As to the charge that Native papers do not represent the popular sentiment of the community, it applies only to avowed party organs, which are useful, and we suppose needful, in all countries, and to the small ephemerals which swell the ranks for a period, to die of want and neglect. But nothing could be more unjust than to say that the numerous public organs ventilate merely individual grievances. They represent the wishes of the educated classes, and they also define and articulate the unexpressed feelings of the people. For though the masses cannot address their rulers direct, it is not to be denied for a moment that they make their wants and grievances sufficiently known to their representatives on the press to secure a hearing from the powers that be. If these latter knew their duty, as Native journalists do, India would not have to groan under the infliction of the salt monopoly, the ábkári zulum, and other revenue and judicial enormities.

Says that adverse criticism of the conduct of public officers is not disloyalty to Government and strongly disapproves of the revival of the gagging of the Native press.

In an article headed "Mr. R. Thompson and the Native Press" the Native Opinion (11) of the 2nd November says:—If Mr. R. Thompson has begun seriously to realize the fact that he had put himself under the guidance of those who were not his real friends, we think repentance has come a little too late. The Lieutenant-Governor's past and present attitudes towards the natives of the country have convinced the Native Indian public that neither consistency nor steadiness of character is an invariable trait of character in a majority of the higher class of officials. Like Sir Richard Temple they are weather-cocks of an ever-changing administrative atmosphere and seem to have an aptitude to trim their sails to the ruling passion of the hour. Mr. Rivers Thompson himself, who was the idol of the whole people of Bengal, and whose accession to the Lieutenant-Governorship was hailed with delight, is the same Rivers Thompson who has been sheltering under his protecting wings some offenders, official and non-official. He was the central figure of an agitation that carried war against the Government of Lord Ripon at the time of the Ilbert Bill controversy, and has been of late misapplying his energies to a practical demolition of a scheme of liberal local self-government by appointing a Commission on the suggestion of a clique of Englishmen to whom every item of Native advancement is gall and wormwood. From a most devoted friend of the Natives Mr. Thompson, as it now seems of his own free will, has transformed himself into their bitterest enemy, and is now endeavouring to throw the whole responsibility of his unenviable position upon the Native press. In a letter to a Native gentleman of position he bitterly complains of the attitude of native papers towards him, and seems, perhaps unwittingly, to appeal to their better judgment. Elsewhere, however, he threatens the Bengal Native press with utter extinction unless they mend their manners. In his annual review of this press, he remarks that when it is seen that day after day the Anglo-Native and the vernacular press abuses its opportunities and the forbearance of the Government to propagate among the credulous people libel on individual officers, false imputations on the courts of justice, and disloya comments on the Government itself, then it becomes a serious question whether in the interests of the country and of the mass of readers and their circle o auditors who are thus being misled, toleration may not be pushed too far. This is threatening war with vengeance, but we should like to know the sins of the Bengal Native press that it should be so threatened. Mr. Thompson says that he has been anathematized, but construing disloyalty to himself as disloyalty to the Crown is a novel way of reasoning we have ever come across. Even Mr. Thompson himself must have observed that the Native press is one whole chorus in praise of the Crown and its representative in India. When this is the fact, by what process of reasoning can the hard knocks of the Bengal Native writers on Mr. Thompson or other officers be construed into disloyalty to Government? Possibly Mr. Thompson assumes that he being placed at the head of a provincial Government, disloyalty to him is either disloyalty to his Government or the Indian Government. But if Mr. Thompson's process of reasoning, or rather fishing out disloyalty, were extended a little further, criticism on the official conduct of a tahsildár of a táluka or of a police peon at a police thána may as well be construed into disloyalty to the British Government in India. We mean no disrespect to Mr. Thompson—we are only pointing out to him the absurdity of the suggestion that criticism of official conduct is disloyalty to a government. We are sorry that a gentleman of Mr. Thompson's aptitudes should have achieved such unenviable notoriety from a people who once almost worshipped him as a demi-god. And the under-current of mis-representing the whole Native press does not end with the utterances of Mr. Rivers Thompson. The Pioneer, the Englishman, and some other members of the Anglo-Indian press have been at some pains to stir up the smouldering fire; they have collected stray extracts and placed them before the British public, perhaps to induce them that the reintroduction of Lord Lytton's Gagging Act could not be an unmitigated evil as it was once supposed. And whom should we see coming forward in support of the contemplated renovation but Mr. Lethbridge, our ex-Press-Commissioner, who perhaps after having carved his competence out of the Indian tax-payers' money thus kicks him up in repayment in this fashion. But the main question with our rulers for decision before any decisive step in any direction is taken is whether it is the outspoken expression of public opinion or the smothered embers of a growing discontent that is to be guarded against. If Mr. Rivers Thompson is pleased to say that the Native press expresses the opinions of its writers and does not represent the Native public at large, we can only say that he has lived in vain all this time in India. If we are not representative, may it not be said that the press in England is equally unrepresentative? But it is mere waste of time to attempt to convince the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal that the Native press of India is representative in the same sense in which the Anglo-British press is; and it is for its representative character that the Native press cannot so summarily be dealt with as it is supposed by some. All latitude on the score of emergency or exceptional circumstances may be allowed, but the suppression of the Native press, because it ventures to speak out the truth and often brings home to officials their follies and misdemeanours, is the last thing a constitutional government in any country consistently with its traditions can undertake to do. We do not say that the British Government in India has no power to suppress the Native press. Far from it; but we would ask whether such a step could be in consonance with its traditions or in keeping with the promises as contained in the Proclamation of 1858. As we have already said, disloyalty to the Crown and disloyalty to officials are quite two distinct things, and consequently the former cannot be made to merge into the latter until subservience to officials comes to be considered as the one preponderating factor in the economy of the government of this country. We think the dark days of tyranny and despotism are past and gone; everything has to be judged and weighed by the force of surrouinding circumstances even by our rulers, foreigners as they are. The agitation is well timed, and the susceptibilities of the new Viceroy may be easily worked upon; but yet there is one thing in our favour, and that is the condemnation and abrogation of the Gagging Act by the present Cabinet. By itself this position is a tower of strength to us, and if usefully utilized and improved upon no lucubrations such as those of Mr. Rivers Thompson can assail it with safety.

Reflections on Mr. Rivers Thompson's remarks on the Native Press of Bengal and on the advisability of reviving the Gagging Act.

In an article headed "Mr. Rivers Thompson on the Bengal Press" the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 3rd November says:—For our part we do not believe that anything worse than strong language can be charged against any of the Anglo-Native papers of Bengal. But if that is a fault, it is in a great measure the result of the uncommonly violent tone of the Bengal Anglo-Indian press. Mr. Thompson no doubt acquits the Anglo-Indian press of any want of moderation, but with great diffidence we venture to think His Honor's judgment is affected by a bias as regards both the Anglo-Indian and the Native press. The violence of tone which was assumed by the Englishman and its confréres during the storms of the Ilbert Bill period is still unmitigated and is the cause of a deal of mischief. The violence of the Anglo-Indian press may not be offensive to Mr. Thompson as his sympathies are all with Anglo-Indians. The criticisms of the Native press on the other hand must be gall and wormwood to His Honor, as they involve the censure of his own acts and of those of his subordinates, or are levelled against the Anglo-Indian interest which is so dear to Mr. Thompson. But however justified Mr. Thompson may be in reproving the Native press of Bengal, his suggestion to restrain the press by the terrors of the criminal law is, we think, utterly narrow and retrograde. On the one hand Mr. Thompson would hold that the press does not represent the people, and on the other he thinks that its mouth should be gagged by law. Both these positions are, we think, entirely unsound. We think it is wrong to say that the press is not representative. It is quite as representative as any press in the world. It contains no doubt the opinions of the individual writers who conduct the press, as does the press in other countries, but these opinions are generally arrived at by a careful consideration of popular feeling. The press has usually two functions to perform: to form and direct public opinion, and to give expression to it. It is a teacher as well as an interpreter. To both these duties the press of India, including Bengal, is, we think, fully attentive. To regard it as not representative because written by individual writers argues, we think, entire misconception of the nature and functions of the press. So far as the press urges the redress of grievances and comments on public measures and the acts of public officers it truly reflects the opinion of the people. The language and the form of expression no doubt come from the individual writers, but the subject matter represents the wants and wishes of the people at large. That the Native press is representative is moreover fully borne out by the attitude of Lord Ripon's Government towards it. The proposal to gag the press is still more untenable. The importance of a free press is so acknowledged a fact that it is nedless to dwell upon it. It is sad to think that such high officials as Mr. Thompson should entertain a contrary opinion. Irresponsible writers, like the Calcutta correspondent of the Times or Mr. Lethbridge, may indulge their imagination in conjuring up false spectres and exorcising them. It ill becomes an administrator like Mr. Thompson to think that the occasional ebullitions of a small section of the press require repressive measures. For one thing it is incorrect to call the writings in the press disloyal when they are for the most part directed against individual officers. So far as the British Government is concerned, as represented by the Queen-Empress and the Viceroy, the people and the press of India are devotedly loyal. There never was such unanimous admiration and love for the British Government as under the rule of Lord Ripon. It is such officers as Mr. Thompson who alienate the minds of the people and cause discontent by their arbitrary acts. If, then, the people make no secret of their dissatisfaction for such acts, it can scarcely be said that the people are disloyal. But further assuming that a few obscure papers are so indiscreet as to use inflammatory language, it is not reasonable to think that they have any power for mischief. The British Government is too well settled to suffer by rant. People soon learn to rate a paper at its worth, and any evil in the shape of intemperance or excess works its own remedy. On the other hand the advantages of a free outlet to popular feeling are so undoubted and obvious that we cannot think the observations regarding the revival of the Gagging Act were meant to be serious.

Rmarks in connection with the strictures made by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal on the local vernacular press.

In an article headed "The Lieutenant-Governor on the Native Pre Bengal" the Bombay Chronicle (73) of the 2nd No ber says :—The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, reviewing the administration report of the preside
division for 1883-84, has passed some severe s tures on the Native press of Bengal, specially vernacular portion of it. All that could be gathe from the report of the Commissioner of the Presidency Division and the rev of the same by the Lieutenant-Governor, is that the commission of errors the part of journalists in Bengal of which His Honor complains has been no means peculiar to the Native portion of them. If the latter are found expeditious or more tardy in mending the errors and returning to the ways propriety than their English brethren, the same may be attributed as much their inferior training as to the bad example first set them by those of wh better things were expected. We have however no fear of the unpleas state of affairs, which the Lieutenant-Governor deplores, continuing much lon in spite of the earnest efforts of the Anglo-Native journalists, who, accordi to the statement of Mr. Rivers Thompson himself, are counselling moderati to their fellow-editors. And if any of them should be found incorrigible to t end, the best thing to do would be to put the ordinary machinery of the law force in order to compel them to behave better. We have strong faith in t good sense of the leading members of the intelligent Native community Bengal. They will not tolerate willingly the continuance amongst th of anything of the nature of rabid journalism, specially when they kn that the chief condition of the existence of a perfectly free press in this count is the appreciation on the part of the educated classes of its people of t necessity of using aright and not abusing the privileges which the Governme has generously conferred on its subjects with respect to it. We are therefo in hopes that the Lieutenant-Governor will not have to wait long to see vernacular press of Bengal, generally speaking, "acting with justice and in pendence in the interest of the ruled and the rulers." We take note of Honor's deliberate statement that "a free press can interpret the rulers
the people and the people to their rulers; and through the medium of the pre honestly conducted, the Government can discover the wants of the coun much more clearly and usefully than through the medium of official report
We need not say that we are much pleased to find that His Honor thinks th
We believe that all the conductors of the better class of journalists in Ben will be equally glad for the same, and strive to make it their business to indu their erring contemporaries to mend their ways in a manner tending establish the confidence of the Government in the honesty and value of criticisms of the Native press, as desired by Mr. Rivers Thompson.

Says that scurrilous writings frequently disfigure the columns of the Anglo-Indian press.

In an article headed "Scurrilous writings in the Anglo-Indian Press"
Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 3rd November says :—T scurrilous writing is not monopolized by the Ang Native or vernacular press in this country, but that s writings disfigure the columns of the Anglo-Ind press almost as often as in the former, is well-kno to every careful reader of newspapers. The Native press in this country is its infancy, and as in the case of every infant institution the national tende is to frequently indulge in excesses. After a reasonable time is however allow to elapse and the charm of novelty wears away, these excesses become less quent, unless again aggravated by any abnormal cause. In this respect th has been very little to complain of regarding the Native press in this presiden
In the eastern presidency, however, things are different, and there the nor condition not having been yet restored, one comes across such excesses in b the Anglo-Indian and Native journals. As a sample of the excesses on the of the Anglo-Indian journals in Bengal we reproduce below an extract from Bengal Times, which we have no doubt will be read with considerable inter
We must here observe that the same excuse which can be made on behalf the Native press cannot be pleaded for a single moment on behalf of the Ang Indian press, namely, the excuse based upon the infantine character of institution.

Approves of the release of the persons who were sentenced for complicity in the Salem riots.

In a paragraph headed "Remission of Sentences" the Subodh Patrika (15) of the 2nd November says:—In remitting the unexpired portions of the sentences passed on the persons convicted of complicity in the Salem riots Mr. Grant Duff has done an act, perhaps the only act in his administration so far, which will meet with universal approbation throughout the country. For a long time past the public were not a little uneasy on the subject of these convictions and sentences owing to some suspicions of a miscarriage of justice. Those suspicions only gained more and more ground as the disclosures of certain confidential documents, the result of Mr. Vijayarághav Charlu's suit against the Madras Government, and convictions of the principal witnesses in the Salem trials for perjury followed one upon another. As a consequence of this, the public had long made up their mind that the sentences passed on the convicts required to be revised. It will be no wonder, therefore, if the news of their release is received everywhere with satisfaction, as we expect it will be, and few persons will care to inquire whether it is an act of pure grace and favour, as Mr. Grant Duff will have it, or one of bare justice merely. [The Yajdán Parast (123) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Release of the Salem rioters and a prayer for the release of the Surat rioters.

The Gujaráti (94) of the 2nd November expresses approval of the action of the Madras Government in ordering the release of the prisoners concerned in the riots at Salem, and says that the people are fortunate that Mr. Grant Duff has done this good deed at the close of his career. Will not Sir James Fergusson do anything for the prisoners concerned in the riots at Surat?

Disapproves of the appointment of prince Kurbamji Rawáji to the Statutory Civil Service of the Bombay Presidency.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 6th November says:—We hear that the Government of India have, at the suggestion of the Bombay Government, this year appointed prince Kurbamji Rawáji to the Statutory Civil Service of this presidency. He is brother to the Thákor of Limbdi and is said to be at present studying at Cambridge. However fit this young prince may be for the appointment we object on behalf of the Native British subjects to his nomination. The Government of Sir James Fergusson disappointed educated Natives by nominating the young Thákor of Limbdi to the Bombay Legislative Council. He has now deprived them of a great privilege by this appointment. When it is necessary that candidates for the competitive examination for the Civil Service of India should be British subjects, why is not the same principle observed in the nominations to the Statutory Civil Service? Much can be said in favour of the new appointment, but if Native princes are to be thus pleased and if high posts and honours are to be conferred on them, what hopes have the Natives under British jurisdiction for getting them? If such an arrangement is to continue, it would be advisable to speedily do away with the objectionable Statutory Service. Prince Kurbamji is educated at the expense of the Morvi State, which should receive the benefit of his services and which stands in want of such educated young men. Really nominations to the Statutory Service should be reserved for Native British subjects. It was expected that a Pársi would be selected this year for the appointment, as the last two nominations were given to Hindu youths. It is to be regretted that the Local Government have disappointed us in the matter. We honour Sir James Fergusson for encouraging education among the Native princes in this way, but such encouragement ought not to be given at the cost of British subjects. It will not be surprising if an arbitrary Governor of Bombay were to take this as a precedent and to confer all high posts on native princes instead of on educated Natives. While other provincial Governments have ordered the selection of Statutory Civilians after subjecting them to an examination, the Bombay Government have given discouragement to Native youths by this appointment. It is surprising that the Supreme Government should have sanctioned the appointment.

Recommends the Bombay Government to select a Native instead of a junior civilian for receiving agricultural training in England.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 4th November says:— The resolution of the Bombay Government for sending a civilian to England to receive agricultural education is satisfactory. But the only defect in the resolution is that while a Native is sent to England every year from the Bengal presidency to study agriculture, the Bombay Government have restricted the appointment to the civil service. The object of the Government will be better served by deputing a Native instead of a civilian. Great benefit will result by a Native being sent to England for the purpose. A competent Native can easily be selected from this presidency for being sent to England to study agriculture. The Bombay Government will lay the public of this presidency under great obligation by acting upon this suggestion. The Editor supports the suggestion made by his correspondent and remarks: When three or four Natives can be given agricultural education within the amount that will be spent on the education of one civilian, the Government of Sir James Fergusson, which is well-known for its anxiety for the progress of education, should not be sc very conservative in the matter. Three or four Natives who will receive high agricultural education will be more useful than one civilian. Many Native students have passed out of the agricultural schools in the Bombay presidency and the Madras Agricultural College, but they have not proved useful to the country owing to want of Government encouragement. Is not the course pursued by Sir James in the selection of a civilian for studying agriculture ir England objectionable when compared to that of his educational policy? We still hope that he will rescind this resolution and think fit to send competent Native youths to receive agricultural training in England, selecting them either by a competitive examination or in any other way. We repeat, why are no those who have received agricultural training sufficiently encouraged by Government to take to agricultural work?

Approves of the resolution of Government on the subject of giving the aid of counsel to persons accused of capital offences for making their defence.

In a paragraph headed "Public defence of prisoners in murder cases" th Subodh Patrika (15) of the 2nd November says:—I is an act of praiseworthy humanity on the part o the Bombay Government, if at the same time one o bare justice to poor persons accused of capital offences to have resolved to set apart annually a sum o Rs. 5,000 to defray the expenses of their defence both before the courts of sessions and of appeal. Thi furnishes an instance, if one were wanted, to show that Sir James Fergusson's Government can feel for all classes of the community when their case is properly put before him. How necessary some such measure is for the ends of justice can be best judged by those who are at all conversant with court matters. The local High Court itself on its appellate side often requests members of the bar to argue cases for the accused. But this practice is not capable of indefinite extension, and is, so far as we know, never followed in the districts. A measure like the above was therefore urgently required. The only thing tha can be said against it is perhaps that it is not far-reaching enough. To mak it sufficiently comprehensive, the benefits provided by it should be extended t cases of some others of the more serious offences besides murder. [The Gujarát (94) and the Gujarát Mitră (74) of the 2nd and the Deshi Mitră (89) and th Hitechchhu (75) of Ahmedabad of the 6th November express approval of th resolution of the local Government for providing counsel for undefended pri soners charged with murder and thank Sir James Fergusson for the same.]

Approves of the resolution of Government to give at the public expense the aid of counsel to persons accused of the crime of murder who are too poor to pay for it.

In a paragraph headed "Counsel for the accused in murder cases" th Indu Prakásh (10) of the 3rd November says:—Th Government of Bombay have in a recent resolutio ordered that in all murder cases where the accuse is unable to employ legal assistance the presidin judge or other officer should ask some member of th local bar to defend the prisoner, such member receiv ing from Government not more than Rs. 25 in the sessions court and Rs. 3 in the High Court. It is calculated that about Rs. 5,000 will be required t meet these charges. It is surely not too great a sum for Government to spare in the cause of justice where human life is at stake, and we cannot too highly commend Sir James Fergusson's Government for this measure of justice and humanity. It has often struck us as anomalous that while on the original side of the High Court provision is made out of the fine fund for counsel to defend an accused in a murder case, no such provision should exist for the benefit of the accused in mofussil courts or on the appellate side of the High Court. In a proper case, we know, members of the bar at the suggestion of the court defend a prisoner. But a large number of cases are undefended, and it is difficult to say what injustice is unwittingly done in consequence of the absence of a professional man to conduct the defence. We are glad to think that the liberality of Sir James Fergusson's Government will in future greatly diminish the chances of a miscarriage of justice in capital offences.

Disapproves of the creation of a new appointment called the Inspector-Generalship of Police.

In a paragraph headed "A new fat berth" the Native Opinion (11) of the 2nd Novemher says:—It is under the contemplation of the local Government, it is said, to create a new post to be styled the Inspector-General of Police for this presidency. The alleged necessity for such a measure is said to be the growing inability of the three Divisional Commissioners to attend to police work owing to pressure of other work. But the public, we suppose, have not forgotten the history of how the third Commissionership was created. During the last famine we believe advantage was taken to create a central division as a temporary arrangement to enable the Commissioners to devote a greater part of their time to famine work. The famine is past and gone, but the Central Commissionership which was then sanctioned only as a temporary measure now stands as one of the permanent establishment. It may be that in 1877-78 there were some grounds to put forth to support the creation of a new appointment, but can as much be said for the new Inspector-Generalship of the Police? Before 1877-78 the whole work of supervising the police was performed, and that efficiently, by two Commissioners only, and the work of famine being over the third Commissionership ought to have been abolished long ago. But strange to say, that while this post is only an ornamental appendage and ought to be done away with, they contemplate the creation of a new post which will be equally ornamental. This is strange economy, and stranger still that the thing is about to be done at a time when the blood-wounds of the Indian tax-payer require healing and wholesome protection from exhaustion! Is this economical financing? Is this economy? The Native public have cried themselves hoarse in asking their rulers to grant them financial rest, but this of all other prayers has been the most persistently denied, and even when it is shown that some of the fat berths already in existence are not wanted, new ones are being created. We hope Sir James Fergusson, before giving his sanction, will duly consider this question.

Does not approve of the suggestion of the Sanitary Commissioner to levy a special tax for purposes of sanitation and criticises the report of the Sanitary Commissioner generally.

In an article headed "The sanitary condition of Bombay in 1883" the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 3rd November refers to Dr. Hewlett's report on the working of the Sanitary Department of the Government of Bombay in 1883, and says:—The report makes no attempt to explain the causes, nor does it mention any steps taken by the Sanitary Department to check the different diseases. The Sanitary Commissioner seems however to be fully conscious of the magnitude of the evil. He proposes that a special tax should be levied for purposes of sanitation. The Governor in Council, we are glad to say, disapproves of it. No special tax is, we think, necessary or desirable. The people are already sufficiently borne down by imperial and local taxes, and any increase in their burden is sure to be injurious. The best remedy lies, we think, in a diffusion of sanitary knowledge, whether by the gradual spread of education, or by direct means, e. g. of lectures, notifications, and so forth. The habits of living of our people are usually very clean. What is wanting is a keen appreciation of the benefits of free air and pure water as agents of public health. The report rightly points out that "the peopl are by instinct a cleanly race. They wish to be clean, but they hav of united action so as to carry out those structural works by which example, the subsoil can be dried, or water after domestic use be rem distance from habitations." Such structural works are however only in large towns. In villages they are not wanted. The sanitary arra there could be made without the levy of any additional impost. Even any structural works that may be needed could, we think, be gradually with existing means. But what is more urgently required than these s works is effective supervision. In connection with this may be not suggestion that the members of municipalities should apportion to th separate wards of the town and make it their special business to in ward and acquaint themselves with its wants. This suggestion is both as regards sanitation and municipal administration generally. no doubt render the work of a municipality more efficient if each of its interested himself in the concerns of some one special ward instead o the whole work to be done by the secretary or the president, as the be. Similarly the suggestion that the Civil Surgeon should inspect th in which he is located as though he was the health-officer of the distri worthy of consideration. Government have partly enforced this sugg asking Civil Surgeons to visit different places from time to time in tricts, but we think greater adherence to this principle will yield mo ficial results. Civil Surgeons ought to be asked, as the report sug acquaint themselves with every sanitary want of their districts and to c with the officers of the Sanitary Department. For the improvemen city of Bombay the report makes various proposals, among others a Act. The resolution of Government reviewing the report asks the Commissioner to draft the desired clauses in order that they may be in in the Bombay Municipal Act when it will be amended. It is yet too make any remark about the amendment, but we trust no coercive p will find favour. There are other points in the report which our limi us from noticing. Altogether the subject demands close study fro knowing person, and we heartily wish our readers to give their best to it. We cannot conclude, however, without noting the warm terms the Sanitary Commissioner recognizes the services of some of his subo particularly Mr. Trimbak Anant, First Class Inspector in the Poona D

Recommends that direct commissions in the Native army should be granted to the sons of the Native officers of the army.

In a letter addressed to the Military Instructor (131) of the 26th pensioned Subedar-Major Samáyalji Isháki Báhádur, observes that since paragraph Standing General Orders issued by the Comm Chief (of the Bombay Army) under date the 1884 directs that direct commissions may be the army to the sons of Native gentleme question whether Inámdárs and Jágirdárs alone will be considered ge or whether the officers in the Native army will also be included in tha clature? At a public Darbár Native officers of the army are made to s of Inámdárs and Jágirdárs, and hence there ought to be no objection der the former as gentlemen. Several Subedar-Majors and Subedars ar to obtain direct commissions for their sons, and it is to be hoped that Go will grant the favour. The Instructor remarks that in the commissi to Native officers they are called gentlemen and they are made to sit gentlemen at a public Darbár; and hence no objection ought to be the issue of direct commissions in the army to the sons of Native offic

Recommends that the non-commissioned officers of the Native army should be granted pensions in proportion to the pay they receive.

A correspondent of the same newspaper observes that since non sioned officers in the European regiments in pensions in proportion to their different ranks it is strange that non-commissioned office Native army, as Havaldárs and Náiks, should ge amount of pension when they draw differe while they are in service. For instance, a the Native army gets after 32 years' service Rs. 7 per month as pensio Haváldár or a Náik draws the same pension after performing service than 15 years. The Jamádár and the Subedár draw pensions of different amounts; and hence it may not be wrong to expect that the Haváldár and the Náik should also get pensions and batta of different amounts. When the private draws Rs. 7 as pension after 32 years' service, a Náik should be paid Rs. 8 as pension and the Haváldár Rs. 10 as pension after a service of more than 15 years, and a Náik should draw Rs. 12 and a Haváldár Rs. 14 on the completion of service of 32 years. The Instructor supports the above recommendations.

Complains of the prevalence of favouritism in making appointments in the Revenue Department in the Ahmedabad District.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitră (74) of the 2nd November complains of the favouritism shown in making appointments in the Revenue Department in the Ahmedabad District, and says :—There are about 110 men employed in the Gujaráti branch of the Revenue Department. The Chitnis (head vernacular clerk) is a Kshatri by caste. About 36 men of his caste are employed in the department. Many of them are his near relatives, and their number is larger in the Collector's office than in the táluka. Moreover those employed in the táluka are in such tálukas as are near each other and connected by railway. In far off tálukas like those of Gogha and Modása no member of the Kshatri caste is employed. The Kshatris receive speedy promotion, while the claims of other employés are disregarded. Mr. Reid, the Collector, does not know of this khatpat. The editor, in a note, remarks that he cannot say whether the complaint is true or false. He requests Mr. Reid, the Collector, to enquire into the matter.

Complains of the Bombay Tramway Company carrying passengers in excess of those allowed by the bye-laws sanctioned by Government.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 4th November complains that the Bombay Tramway Company carries more passengers in its cars than are allowed by the bye-laws sanctioned by Government, and says :—Not only are 5 passengers made to sit on one form instead of 4, but more than 25 are carried in the small cars, while 45 and sometimes even more passengers are allowed to travel in big cars. The bye-laws require that more than 25 passengers should not be carried in a small car and not more than 40 in a big car. What a cruelty is this on the poor horses? When the police do not allow hack conveyances to carry more passengers than the number denoted in their licenses, why should the rich Tramway Company escape scot-free? Is this difference in treatment to be accounted for because the Tramway Company is a European concern? Is it not high time that the Police Commissioner should draw the attention of Government to the above complaints about overcrowding?

Delays in the arrival and departure of tram cars in Bombay.

The Rást Goftár (110) of the 2nd November complains of the indifference of the Bombay Tramway Company to the comfort of persons travelling in their cars and the delays in their arrival and departure, and says :—A few weeks ago the Manager of the Company informed the public in reply to the petition made by several thousands of passengers that the cars would regularly leave and arrive at Kálbádevi and Girgaum every five and ten minutes respectively. Many cases have occurred within a short time since then which falsify this statement. The cars do not start at the appointed time and passengers are frequently kept waiting for several minutes. This does not arise from accidental causes, but from a disregard of public comfort. On the 31st October last a number of passengers had to wait for 20 minutes at Thákurdwár at about 8 A.M. The reason was that the cars did not start from Girgaum that day till 8 A.M. The public were not informed beforehand of this change and the passengers had to lose much valuable time. The Company change and fix the time of the arrival and departure of the cars without any regard for the convenience of passengers. The cars are so much used by the travelling public that it is necessary that the Company should be compelled to issue time tables, which should not be allowed to be altered without giving previous notice. We fear that the monopoly of carrying passengers now enjoyed by the Company has resulted in this state of things. We shall be happy to welcome a new Tramway Company to break this monopoly, if the arbitrary authorities of the Company continue to disregard public comfort.

Does not think that the employment of Honorary Assistant Surgeons in hospitals has proved a failure and requests Government to reconsider its resolution on the subject.

In a paragraph headed "Honorary Assistant Surgeons" the Patrika (15) of the 2nd November says:—W
help thinking that our Government was a lit
in coming to the conclusion that the exper appointing Honorary Assistant Surgeons t
kuldás Tejpál Hospital had proved a failure.
that happened subsequently to the first resol pointing the late Honorary Surgeons for ano would appear to justify that conclusion. The discussion that was latel on on the subject in the press only showed the necessity of clearly the duties of the Honorary Assistants and their relation to their
When this was done, all chance of a friction would have been practica out. But the decision to fall back upon the system of appointing pai ants appears, at this stage at least, to be unjustifiable as well as ine
With the growing wants of our growing city, the need for increased accommodation must ever arise. And we should find it easy to meet t only if we could depend upon honorary service to furnish the hospi
It is therefore highly important that the honorary system should t among us. And when there is no lack of medical gentlemen willing the system should not be given up as impracticable so easily. In the
of our young graduates also it is desirable that the system should ex is capable of giving a large number of them an opportunity of showi they can do. For these reasons, the resolution of our Municipal Co of last Monday commends itself to our understanding. And we h Government will, in view of the various interests involved, see its way
the recommendations made therein.

Says that the system of appointing Honorary Assistant Surgeons has not been given a sufficient trial.

In a paragraph headed "Honorary Assistant Surgeons at the Tejpál Hospital" the Indu Prakásh (10) o
November says:—The resolution of our Co asking Government to reconsider their de regards the Honorary Assistant Surgeonshi Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital is an act of cou prudence for which our Corporators deserve no small praise. We ha thought the resolution of Government to appoint paid Assistant as casting an unmerited slur on the Honorary Assistant Surgeons as well as on the system of appointing such Surgeons without a trial. Besides the injustice of the case, the resolution of Govern ported to throw upon the municipality a new burden of about Rs. 3 was all the more incumbent upon our Corporators to see if the e could never be successful. We trust the subject will receive more f consideration from Government this time.

Approves of the execution of criminals in public places.

The Shiváji (61) of 31st October approves of the present mode of in open places criminals who are sentenc hanged. Private executions are likely somewhat from the terrible nature of the p inflicted and may act as an incentive to crime. Public executions dered a tremendous disgrace and thus prove a deterrent to the perpe crimes which lead to capital punishment. Those criminals who are se rigorous imprisonment or to hard labour are made to work on public places. This being so, it seems rather extraordinary that considerati be shown to criminals who are condemned to the extreme punishme by law. [The Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 2nd November, in writing o subject, expresses somewhat similar sentiments. The Dnyán Prakásh 30th October disapproves of the mode of executing in open and pub criminals who are sentenced to be hanged.]

Recklessness of boys who are employed to drive horse tongas in Sholápur.

The Sholápur Vritt (62) of the 6th November in its local news s in the neighbourhood of Papnas on the pub horse tonga which was driven most reckle
into collision with a bullock cart and th resulted in the death of two men. The horse tongas are usually young boys, who behave very recklessly, and t reckless conduct frequently causes accidents. Government should take meas to prevent accidents like the above, which result from the inexperience recklessness of young boys who are frequently employed to drive horse ton

Municipalities.

Comments in connection with the re-election by the rate-payers of Calcutta of the municipal commissioners who had resigned their seats on the local Corporation.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 4th November expresses joy at the election by the rate-payers of the municipal comm sioners of Calcutta who had resigned their seats the Corporation, and says:—The rate-payers of C cutta have acted wisely in re-electing the comm sioners and have brought the Bengal Government trouble and shame by their action. It remains to seen how the Bengal Government will succeed in object, now that the old commissioners have been re-elected. The latter v not change their resolution and they will be doing nothing wrong in doing. The Bengal Government has acted arbitrarily in the matter and come into collision with the public in trying to please a few noisy Europea If the Bengal Government will take a lesson from this event and correct mistake, it will save its credit and regain to some extent the confidence the people. [The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the same date says that the re-elect by the rate-payers of the municipal commissioners of Calcutta who had recen resigned their seats shows that the public approves of the action of local Corporation. Mr. Rivers Thompson, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, oug now to yield to the public voice. He should issue a resolution ordering commission he has appointed to cease its enquiry and requesting the Munici Corporation to devote itself with increased zeal to the work of improving sanitary condition of the city. This is the best way for him to adopt a he will thereby somewhat regain the love of the people. But from wha known of the Lieutenant-Governor and from his prejudice against the Nati it seems that he will not take to this course.]

Scarcity in the supply of water to the residents of Khetwádi, Bombay.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 7th November, resid in Ardesir Dádi Street, Khetwádi, says:—Wh water is daily supplied to the residents in the F and other quarters of the city of Bombay who l in houses of four stories, the residents in Khetw do not get their supply of water even up to the second story for the las or 5 months. The water comes up to the first story and the occupants the other stories have to spend additional money to provide themselves w it. When the poor find it difficult to pay the rent of the places they occu how can they defray this additional expense? They are put to great trou in getting a sufficient supply of water. There would not be much cause complaint if the municipality were to supply water on the ground-floor houses at all hours of the day. The supply is turned off at 10 A.M. and turned on again in the evening. The inhabitants of Khetwádi do not pay l water-rate than that paid by residents of other quarters in the city. I necessary that this complaint regarding scarcity of water supply to the inha tants of Khetwádi should be speedily remedied.

Refusal of Mr. Winter, Acting Collector of Poona, to place on the list of business before the Poona municipal commissioners a proposition regarding the presentation of a farewell address to Lord Ripon.

In an article headed "Disgraceful Imbecility of the Poona Execut Municipal Commissioners" the Dnyán Prakásh (9 the 3rd November says:—Some time back there a proposal before the executive committee of Poona Municipality to the effect that the lead municipalities in this presidency should vote farev addresses to the Noble Marquis of Ripon on his proaching retirement from India. We understa that that proposal emanated from a Native gentlen of Sátára, who wrote letters on the subject to several of the leading municip ities. The executive committee fully approved of the proposal, and resol to place it before the general body for its consideration. It was then to the committee by one of its own members that a welcome addre also be voted to the Earl of Dufferin. This suggestion too was ac the committee, which accordingly placed on the list of business a dual p emanating from itself that a farewell address should be voted to Lo and a welcome address to Lord Dufferin. And it is this particula business, sanctioned by the executive committee, that Mr. Wi exception to, and refused to insert in the list of business as issued authority. So, practically, it comes to this that Mr. Winter could pr Poona Municipality from voting a farewell address to the Noble M Ripon and from evincing its sense of gratitude for the privilege of se ment,—a privilege which but for His Lordship's bold initiative and firm neither the people of Poona nor those of any other town in this p would have secured for years to come. It is an open secret that several among the Anglo-Indian officials in this country who would be pleased if Lord Ripon were permitted to leave this country unhono unregretted. And yet they are the very men who are never tired of que the loyalty of the people of India. By honouring Lord Ripon the peop country desire to show their loyalty to the Queen-Empress of India. A gentlemen would prevent this exhibition of loyalty because it is p distasteful to them. A great many of this class want to discredit Lo and the policy he pursued by making it appear, if possible, that his re did not call forth any enthusiasm even from the people he sought to On the other hand the people of the country sincerely desire to pro unmistakeable manner that the policy which Lord Ripon pursued m their unqualified approval, and that they would secure its uninterrupt nuance. Of the existence of such a sincere desire on the part of the one is more aware than this class of Anglo-Indian officials, who do even an ordinary care to conceal their feelings of aversion towards Lo and his policy. It would seem that Mr. Winter belongs to this clas grieves us exceedingly to find that the executive committee of municipality did not protest against Mr. Winter's attempt to cheat Lo out of his due. We presume that no member of the executive com prepared to defend Mr. Winter's action in this matter; and if so, we lik why they did not protest. We also presume that neither of our twi poraries is aware of the disgraceful instance which we have noticed ab

Berár Affairs.

Complains of the proceedings of a certain magistrate, who tried certain cases called the Akola Nuisance Cases.

In an article headed "The late Akola Nuisance Cases—Accused c unheard," the Vaidarbh (16) of the 1st says:—Mr. Ardesar convicted the accused was convinced that they were innocent. T the trials his procedure was most arbitrary a These cases were specially transferred to hi file of the Court of the Special Magistrate evidently because the Distr trate regarded them as typical cases and was anxious that a well-c decision by a tried English-knowing Magistrate would once for all question. It was anticipated from their very commencement that t would be defended with all the strength and ability which the w means of the accused and their landlord could command, and Col Gerald, the Magistrate of the district, invited the fullest confidence of by calling Mr. Ardesar, a Magistrate of the highest rank, to presid trial; a Magistrate, besides, who in a similar case in which the author Akola Municipality was called into question had by the uprightness duct given universal satisfaction. It could never have occurred FitzGerald that a Magistrate, to whose knowledge of law and sense he gave a compliment by transferring to his file such complicated ca murder law, frame maxims of his own, cross-examine accused p as if they were ordinary witnesses, refuse to listen to the evidence br ward by them, hang the sword of Damocles over the head of the plea accused, while employed in his sacred trust, by threatening to pros forsooth because there appeared an article on the subject-matter of t in a local paper (whose editor was never questioned at all), and then d mark, only after all the cases had been gone through) that there wa nothing in the conduct of the pleader that constituted contempt of cou rule that the accused parties should receive counsel from none but licen ers who had filed their powers of attorney in the cases, advise the plea accused directly and indirectly to give up the defence because the Magistr that it was not advisable for him to do so, and then finally condemn th for doing according to the Magistrate's own verdict what they consi ful,—surely such continuous disrespect of law from the beginning t demands notice from the highest tribunal, and we earnestly trust District Magistrate will move the High Court immediately to quash th ings. The cases may seem trifling, but the issues involved are too im be ignored. It is to be seen whether in a land that is under British adm accused persons are to be condemned unheard, and whether the first of criminal law may be trampled upon with impunity. We appe sense of British justice in the sure hope that our humble voice shal been raised in vain.

Complains that in selecting Mr. Pradhán for the post of Educational Inspector injustice has been done to deserving officers in the Educational Department.

A correspondent of the same newspaper says:—A great act o has been done. Mr. Jatár's place of E Inspector has been given not to Mr. Vishnu Máhájani, Officiating Head Master of the A School, the person who best deserved it, Bajába Rámchandra Pradhán, Deputy E Inspector of Akola, whose claims can hardly parison with those of Mr. Vishnu Moreshvar For some time past it has been known that by a strange piece of Mr. Pradhán's name had struck the fancy of the Resident and that he mended him for the Educational Inspectorship to the Government There were many who were sceptical about this unlooked for el Mr. Pradhán. It is difficult to conceive how the infinitely superior Mr. Máhájani were not duly weighed. His higher position in the d with his higher pay, his University status and honours, his ripe schol energy and zeal, his sense of duty and his unmatched success, pointe as the man for the place. His moral influence over his students is u He has been justly called the Dr. Arnold of Berár. His exceptional n been acknowledged by the Government of India. And it is such a man w have been set aside on the ground that Mr. Pradhán was his senior in t Another person has also been unfairly treated by this appointment. krishna Lakshman Bápat, the Deputy Educational Inspector of A senior to Mr. Pradhán. Why has he been superseded? Is he not officer as Mr. Pradhán? The merits of both are equal, but the scal in Mr. Bápat's favour by his seniority. Our objections to this appoin based on more grounds than one. Not only have individual claim regarded, but the appointment has proceeded on principles which endorse. A person of common attainments begins life as a mas Rs. 50 or 60, and gradually rises to the post of a Deputy Educational In Rs. 125, then on Rs. 150 and on Rs. 200. Such a man might in the time expect to be Educational Inspector and eventually perhaps Direc man who has acquired University honours, who is a scholar an induced to enter service because he was offered a pay of Rs. 175 to star not aspire to anything more than a place of Rs. 250. It was his misfo he became a learned man? Looking at this appointment from anoth view it appears eminently unsatisfactory to us. The Educational Ins to test the work done by the head masters of high schools. To be so he must himself be fit to fill the head mastership of a high Mr. Pradhán was fit to be head master of a high school, why was over on two occasions? It is not likely that either he or his official would have quietly allowed him to be laid aside on two occasions. we have the anomaly of a person appointed to test, examine and work the ability to perform which has been impliedly denied hi occasions.

Says that nominations to the posts of Attachés and Extra Assistant Commissioners should be made on the result of an examination.

The Varhád Samáchár (17) of the 3rd November complains t
Berárs nominations to the posts of Attachés
Assistant Commissioners are made on recomm and on the ancestry of candidates chosen a their qualifications or ability to perform the
the offices to which they are appointed. Th is reprehensible and calculated to lower the of the public service. Qualified men are to be had in abundance in t All candidates for the appointment of Attachés and Extra Assistant sioners should be subjected to a rigorous examination and on its resu tions should be made. Those also who are graduates of the Bombay U and have passed the examination of Bachelor of Laws should be c eligible for these appointments.

G. W. KURKA
Reporter on the Nat

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
11th November 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

- Agriculture : Recommendation to the Bombay Government to select a Native instead of a junior civilian for receiving agricultural training in England 12
- Amir of Afghanistan : Statement that the — is trying by every means in his power to put a stop to the trade of India with his country and suggestion for the withdrawal of the annuity paid to him by the British Government 4
- Anglo-Indian Press : Expression of opinion that scurrilous writings frequently disfigure the columns of the— 10
- Appointments :
  - Complaint regarding the prevalence of favouritism in making—in the Revenue Department in the Ahmedabad District ... 15
  - Disapproval of the appointment of prince Kurbamji Rawáji to the Statutory Civil Service of the Bombay Presidency ... 11
- Bombay Tramway Company :
  - Complaint against the — for carrying passengers in excess of those allowed by the bye-laws sanctioned by Government ... 15
  - Delay in the arrival and departure of tram cars in Bombay ... 15
- British army in India : Reflections on an increase in the numerical strength of the— 3
- Charge of draining away the wealth of India to England : Defence of the British Government from the— 3
- Colonial defences : Expression of opinion that the cost of the strengthening of the defences of India and the British colonies should be divided between England and the different countries composing the British Empire in certain proportions 4
- Commissions in the Native army : Recommendation that direct — should be granted to the sons of the Native officers of the army ... 14
- Executions : Approval of the execution of criminals in public places ... 16
- Frauds in Indian cotton : Disapproval of the passing of a legislative enactment for checking adulteration in cotton 5
- Honorary Assistant Surgeons :
  - Expression of opinion that the system of appointing — has not been given a sufficient trial 16
  - Expression of opinion that the employment of — in hospitals has not proved a failure and request to Government to reconsider its resolution on the subject 16
- "Indian Dangers": Comments on the articles published in the St. James' Gazette headed— 5
- Indian Insolvency Act : Necessity of amending the existing— ... 6
- Judicial matters :
  - Approval of the resolution of Government on the subject of giving the aid of counsel to persons accused of capital offences for making their defence 12
  - Approval of the resolution of Government to give at the public expense the aid of counsel to persons accused of the crime of murder who are too poor to pay for it 12
- Pensions : Recommendation that the non-commissioned officers of the Native army should be granted — in proportion to the pay they receive ... 14
- Police :
  - Disapproval of the creation of a new appointment called the Inspector-Generalship of— 13
  - Recklessness of boys who are employed to drive horse tongas in Sholápur 16
- Report of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of Bombay for 1883 : Disapproval of the suggestion of the Sanitary Commissioner to levy a special tax for purposes of sanitation and criticism on the— generally 13
- Salem riots : Approval of the release of the persons who were sentenced for complicity in the— 11
- Salt : Necessity of abolishing the duty levied on — 5
- Surat riots : Release of the Salem rioters and a prayer for the release of the Surat rioters 11

INDEX.

Page.

I.—Politics and the Public Administration—continued.

Vernacular Press :
Expression of opinion that adverse criticism of the conduct of public officers is not disloyalty to Government and strong disapproval of the revival of the gagging of the — 7
Reflections on Mr. Rivers Thompson's remarks on the — of Bengal... 6
Reflections on Mr. Rivers Thompson's remarks on the — of Bengal and on the advisability of reviving the Gagging Act ... 9
Remarks in connection with the strictures made by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal on the local— 10

II.—Municipalities—

Bombay : Scarcity in supply of water to the residents of Khetwádi ... 17
Calcutta : Comments in connection with the re-election by the rate-payers of — of the municipal commissioners who had resigned their seats on the local Corporation 17
Poona : Refusal of Mr. Winter, Acting Collector of —, to place on the list of business before the municipal commissioners of that city a proposition regarding the presentation of a farewell address to Lord Ripon 17

III.—Berár Affairs—

Akola Nuisance Cases : Complaint regarding the proceedings of a certain Magistrate who tried certain cases called — 18
Educational Inspectorship of Berár : Complaint that in selecting Mr. Pradhán for the — injustice has been done to deserving officers in the Educational Department 19
Posts of Attachés and Extra Assistant Commissioners : Expression of opinion that nominations to the — should be made on the result of an examination 20

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

CONFIDENTIAL

315 OFFICE
884

N

PUBLISH

For the

Li

No.	Names o
	Eng
1	The Indian Spectato
2	„ Mahrátta ...
3	„ Morning Star
4	„ Quarterly Journ janik Sabha
5	„ Sind Times
	Anglo-M
6	The Din Bandhu
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu
8	„ Dnyánodayá
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh
10	„ Indu Prakásh
11	„ Native Opinion
12	„ Prabhákar
13	„ Pramod Sindhu
14	„ Shetakaryáncha
15	„ Subodh Patrika
16	„ Vaidarbh ...
17	„ Varhád (Berár) S
	Mara
18	The Arunodayá ...
19	„ A'ryávart ...
20	„ Bakul
21	„ Belgaum Samáchá
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1] ...
*23	„ Chháva ...
24	„ Daivadnyá Samách
25	„ Dakshin Vritt ...
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt ...
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak ...
28	„ Dnyán Ságar ...
29	„ Ganga Lahari ...
30	„ Hindu Punch ...
31	„ Hitechchhu ...
32	„ Israel[1] ...
33	„ Jagadádarsh ...
34	„ Jagan Mitrá ...
35	„ Kalpataru... ...
36	„ Karnátak Mitrá[2]
37	„ Kesari ...
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav
39	„ Lamp of Judaism
40	„ Lokahitavádi ...
*41	„ Mádhavi ... ...
42	„ Maháráshtrá Hitech
43	„ Maháráshtrá Mitrá
44	„ Nagar Samáchár ...
45	„ Násik Vritt ...
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika
47	„ Nyáyá Sindhu ...
48	„ Panchánan ...
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav
50	„ Poona Vaibhav ...
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika
*52	„ Pratod ... ...
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Pustak ...
*54	„ Rándás ... ...
55	„ Saddharm Dip ...
56	„ Sanmárgá Dipika...
57	„ Satyá Sadan ...
58	„ Satyá Shodhak ...
*59	„ Sharabh ... ...
60	„ Shetakari ... ...
*61	„ Shiváji[1] ... ...
62	„ Sholápur Vritt ...
63	„ Shubh Suchak ...
64	„ Suryakánt... ...
65	„ Suryodayá... ...
*66	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu

---

[1] Frequently admits

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 15th November 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	750
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	281
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	275
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	160
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
37	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	4,350
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
39	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
40	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*41	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	400
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	450
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*54	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
55	„ Saddharm Díp	Alibág	Monthly	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240
*66	„ Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	150

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also

CON 894

Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
MARA'THI—continued.
The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	300
„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	250
„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
„ Vichárshil...	Málvan	Do.	300
„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	500
ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	475
„ Hitechchhu ... ... * ...	Ahmedabad	Do.	485
„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	200
GUJARA'TI.
The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	850
„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	394
„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	415
„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,175
„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	500
„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	50
„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	700
„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.	200
„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly	585
„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,025
„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	300
„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	450
„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	984
„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	300
„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	800
„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,350
„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	125
„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	810
„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	925
„ Mangal Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	250
„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.	350
„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,750
„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	327
„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	620
„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	1,700
„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	423
„ Trimásik Tikákár	Do.	Quarterly ...	500
„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	85
„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	778
„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
KA'NARESE.
The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	180
„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do.	300
„ Kannadă Suvarte...	Bombay	Do.	915
„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	115
URDU.
The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
PERSIAN.
The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	500
ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	327
SINDI.
The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	500

---

otes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, are printed in italics.

The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the News- n the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. e cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be ely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in neral Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politi

In an article headed

Takes exception to certain statements made in the St. James' Gazette about another mutiny in India, and observes that the dangers which the British Government will have to encounter are of a social and economical character and not political.

1857! And all these gloom who, whatever his official perhaps he is deluded by their own estimation find ed danger to pass from intense mistrust and alarm
"high authority" who,
himself in India, betook
without exercising the cr
informant's lucubrations.
opportune hour for the p
England embroiled in all Commission on the eve
Burmah frontier disturbed
the articles on the condit touch to the keys for explo its effect. At any rate her it may be worth while anal Gazette has given such w more sensational: "Indian of view what the dangers we are on the brink of disa going over the articles, we
of the troubles and the disa
are two species of danger t ence, but then these seem described as "one of the officials." That may be so.
ed, are we to give creden
two specific "dangers" whi able to evolve from the in because there are no proofs
"distinguished official" th infer one of these possibiliti
not allowed to have any kn
the shrewd official they a publicity may lead to a preci gloomily forecast in his sec estimate of the danger, for in official language, take and is making a profoun mitted to see it." Why are created "a profound sensati remarkable lucubration, wha
ship dictates this course.
public gaze, the greater the dangers which the "cool an supported by the "profou revealed, and of which the w a glimpse, fail to make any alarmist: "I believe there are indifferent and passiv

Politics and the Public Administration.

Takes exception to certain statements made in the St. James' Gazette about another mutiny in India, and observes that the dangers which the British Government will have to encounter are of a social and economical character and not political.

In an article headed "The latest scare about the tranquillity of India," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 9th November says:—Following quickly on the heels of the series of elaborate articles on the armies of Native States which appeared in the columns of the Times, the Jingoism of the St. James' Gazette has found vent in a more sensational scare as to the certainty of another mutiny in India within the next two years, and that of a character far surpassing in intensity the one of 1857! And all these gloomy vaticinations on the authority of a single individual, who, whatever his official position, seems to say he "knows all about it," when perhaps he is deluded by his own fancies. Now it is the fate of those who in their own estimation find themselves alive to the consciousness of an unsuspected danger to pass from the extreme of self-complacency to that of the most intense mistrust and alarm. And no doubt such seems to be the case with that "high authority" who, having been discounted by greater authorities than himself in India, betook himself to the sanction of the journal that has now, without exercising the critical faculty, supplied the British world with his informant's lucubrations. We freely admit that that journal has chosen a very opportune hour for the publication of the contents of the document. With England embroiled in all parts of the world, with an Anglo-Russian Boundary Commission on the eve of meeting on the sands of Central Asia, with the Burmah frontier disturbed, and above all with the ground ready prepared by the articles on the condition of the armies of Native States, it only required a touch to the keys for explosion. Fortunately for all concerned, it has failed in its effect. At any rate here, in India, nobody is deceived by the alarm. Still it may be worth while analysing some of the statements to which the St. James' Gazette has given such wide currency. The heading of the two articles is more sensational: "Indian Dangers—A Revelation." Let us see from his point of view what the dangers are and what the revelation is. "The truth is that we are on the brink of disastrously troublesome times in India." On carefully going over the articles, we have failed to discover any inkling as to the nature of the troubles and the disasters that may be expected therefrom. No doubt there are two species of danger to which the journalist's informant has made reference, but then these seem solely to exist in his imagination. This informant is described as "one of the coolest, shrewdest and most distinguished Indian officials." That may be so. But because he is cool, shrewd and distinguished, are we to give credence to his night-mares? For what, after all, are the two specific "dangers" which his coolness and shrewdness combined have been able to evolve from the inner consciousness? We say "inner consciousness" because there are no proofs or instances given beyond the bare assertion of the "distinguished official" that dangers exist or that they have a substratum to infer one of these possibilities. The proofs, if any, are hidden. The public is not allowed to have any knowledge of them. For according to the estimate of the shrewd official they are of such grave character that the mere fact of their publicity may lead to a precipitation of those disasters and troubles which he has so gloomily forecast in his secret memorandum as "on the brink." "For the mean estimate of the danger, for the more common view when it has to be expressed in official language, take these sentences from a memorandum which has made and is making a profound sensation in India amongst the few who are permitted to see it." Why are only a few permitted to see it? If it has really created "a profound sensation" among the privileged few who have read that remarkable lucubration, what harm is there in publishing it? True statesmanship dictates this course. The more the proofs of danger are revealed to the public gaze, the greater the safety of the state. Secrecy only aggravates the dangers which the "cool and shrewd and distinguished official" is so anxious, supported by the "profound" sensationalists, to avert! Even the sentences revealed, and of which the writer in the St. James' Gazette gives the British public a glimpse, fail to make any impression on us. Here is the hypothesis of the alarmist: "I believe there is much loyalty in India. I believe the majority are indifferent and passively loyal." We differ from this view. But to proceed, the writer says: "But I believe there is an influential majo (probably nearly all the Mahomedans) who are thoroughly disloyal; who wo take advantage of our hands being full in a Russian war to raise up rebell to the utmost of their power." Here the writer indulges in a belief. No fa are given. He speaks of almost all Mahomedans as disloyal and ready on first opportunity to raise the standard of rebellion. We refuse to pin fa in this mischievous and ill-founded statement. It may be that there discontented Mahomedans here and there as there are discontented other communities. But are they so large in number and otherwise strong for action as to overturn the empire the moment it is involved frontier wars or difficulties? The writer seems to be one of the class who constantly hankering after a big war. We know how wars were got up duri the days that preceded the Mutiny. We know how the Burmese wars we made, and we know how Sind and Panjáb were "acquired." The next dang is that of the paucity of the army in British India. It is considered as "lit better than a fraud!" That such being the case India cannot cope with R sian forces on the Indus frontier. India is just now 6,000 men below proper strength, while Russia is in a position even at this moment, after p viding a force for eventualities on the Continent, to concentrate within 80 100 days a force of 80,000 or 90,000 men, all told and equipped! Consequen the unpreparedness of India to fight the Russians, supposing they are on other side of the Indus to-morrow, is a great danger. These then are "dangers" and the "revelation." Now all this is unwarranted. There absolutely no proofs save the official's unsupported statements for their existen

Is the Government of India so somnolent as not to be able to take note of the
This is the open inference which ought to be drawn. Nay more it is all owing Lord Ripon, under whose government of "ideas" the dangers have come within ken of this shrewd official—as if all the district officers and all the subordin officials—as if the whole bureaucratic machinery—slept at ease, wholly unc scious of the huge volcano seething underneath ready to explode the mom Russia invades India! That so much "official" chaff should have found vent a responsible journal, and that it should have been treated in all seriousne distinctly indicate how wofully behind is the Englishman in gauging mental attitude of Natives and their real thoughts. The natives of India ha never been more loyal than at this hour. Throughout the empire there is one voice, and that voice in support of strengthening the British Emp against external foes. Leading men and publicists have during the last years persistently rung the key-note of their inmost thoughts. And if Government of the "Radical" Lord Ripon has done anything, it is to unite classes of Her Majesty's subjects in great devotion to the empire, knowing well that if the increased contentedness, greater political equality and high share in the administration of the country, at which they are aiming, are at all be attained hereafter, it will be entirely through Viceroys like Lord Ripo
And they have faith in the character of Englishmen that those aspirations be nearer realization as time advances and education progresses in the la and as more accurate "ideas" about the wants and wishes of India are p pagated in England, which unfortunately they are not at the present mome
And here we may observe that it appears to us strange that the "dist guished official," whose shrewdness has found out the latest dangers and mad revelation of them, has not cared to inquire into the causes of those dange
Has he probed to the bottom the reasons why Mahomedans are disaffecte
As Bacon has observed, it is the primary duty of states and high officials discover the causes of discontent and remove these in time so as to obvi their ultimate mischief. Had the writer attempted to find out the causes might have done a real service to the State. That there is some sullen d content in the land owing to the mistaken policy of the State in certain prov ces touching revenue assessments, ábkári and forest legislation, heavy sta duties and so on, there is not the least doubt. We tried to point out the t danger lurking under these mistaken acts of administration, and we have oft pointed out that the impoverished condition of the ryots generally may lead agrarian disturbances of a serious nature. The dangers are of a social a economical character, not political, though they are liable to assume a politi aspect if long unheeded and unremedied. Another matter which our shre official has failed to appreciate is this: the improvement and augr the Indian forces. If 60,000 men are required for garrison dut equal number is needed to guard the whole line from the base o then we must have a large army to withstand the enemy. The quest fighting force is necessary? Does the writer want that India shoul army? If so, how would he propose ways and means for another sterling? How is this additional taxation for the so-called safety o to be raised? Is it by fresh import duties on cotton goods, or by salt duty, or by land revenue enhancements, or how? Anyhow a la of taxation will have to be provided. But will not that rather ag present hardship and discontent? And may not that increase the

the distinguished official is so anxious to avert?

Says that the natives of India of all races and creeds were never more loyal to the paramount power than under the regime of Lord Ripon and that there is no reason for thinking that there will be another mutiny in India as stated by the St. James' Gazette.

In an article headed "Is India on the verge of a rebellion?
Prakásh (10) of the 10th November say question would sound most silly and prep
most Indian readers, but such seems to b
real or unreal, of some newspaper-writers
The St. James' Gazette has been recently readers with the most horrifying the state of India. It is reputedly a organ in the Conservative interest, and riously violent opponent of Mr. Glads ernment. In the frenzy of its opposition it is known to pervert present facts and indulge in the wildest hyperbole. In its present the Liberal Ministry it has selected India as the ground of atta used to the utmost all its weapons of falsehood, misrepresentation a ation. The articles are quite a model of journalistic virulence, and mend their perusal to Mr. Rivers Thompson to see if there is anyt rabid in any of the Bengal Native papers. The whole tone of the outrageously alarming and presumptuous, and the statements are false, that it is quite waste of words to contradict or discuss them.
are sure, the articles will have no power for mischief. They will be rated at their worth. We have no concern as to what effect the produce upon English readers as respects the position of the Libe ment in England, but in so far as it purports to throw discredit on Government in India and to alarm the minds of the people of E imaginary fears about the safety of the British rule in this country our duty to emphatically contradict every word in the said wri St. James' Gazette as quite untrue. Under the sensational headi Dangers—A Revelation," the St. James' Gazette tells its readers t on the brink of disastrously troublous times in India"; that "as e
it seems quite on the cards that in a year or two we may be in th storm to which that of 1857 was a joke"; that "the spirit of di become far more general, much more open and threatening, under reign than it ever was before"; and a great deal more in the same scarcely necessary to characterize these assertions as utterly fals cious. There is not only not a shadow of a foundation for them, b is exactly the reverse. There is not only not the faintest chance o but the masses of India are just at this moment most loyal to Crown. The unanimous testimony of the whole Native press of never before were the natives of India so contented and happy, s preciative of the blessings of the British Government and so ent devoted to Her Majesty's august representative in India, as u of Lord Ripon. All along the reign of the present Viceroy the has been ringing with praises of His Lordship's many beneficent m
the late meetings all over the country memorializing Her Majest
the term of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty gave no uncertain sound and attachment of the people. The feelings of loyalty to the ernment and personal devotion to the Viceroy is demonstrate time with all the more ardour on account of the approach of departure from India, and is expressing itself in various ways. I such universal contentment and joy among Natives, to talk of dis

rebellion argues the height of absurdity and ignorance. The chief burden of the song sung by the St. James' Gazette is however the advance of Russia on India. The writer fears the claws of the Russian wolf are about to be thrust in his sides, and writes in the most agonizing and despairing strain about the wicked blindness of the British Ministers and the Government of India in not putting themselves in a militant attitude and watching the approach of the foe. He imagines all sorts of dangers, makes light of all the advantages of the British Government, magnifies the means and opportunities of Russia, and comes to the inevitable conclusion that Russia must needs swallow up India unless some heavenly interference, such as probably a return of the Conservative Government, saves her from falling into Russia's teeth. The only warrant for these hysterics and terror is a certain memorandum by an Indian Russophobist, of whom the writer speaks as one of the "coolest, shrewdest and most distinguished of Indian officials." The memorandum, though long discredited in India, has been spoken of as making "a profound sensation," and as embodying the undoubting, anxious judgment of the most authoritative and most responsible servants of the Crown in India. Our contemporary, the Bombay Gazette, has very forcibly exposed the unfairness of the writer in the St. James' Gazette with which he magnifies the one writer of the memorandum into "the governing men in India," "the higher orders of Indian officials," "the highest and best man in India" and so forth. Partly on the strength of the memorandum and partly from his own imagination the writer declares the Indian army and navy as inadequate and mismanaged. As regards the intentions of Russia herself the writer says:—"Lord Dufferin probably understands by this time that the term of his Viceroyalty in India is likely to be a most anxious one and full of trouble. There is not a word of exaggeration in what we wrote on Monday on this subject. Indeed there are reasons, more than we specified then, for the belief—which we repeat is commonly held by the highest and most competent men in India—that Russia is preparing for a grand advance upon certain objective points, when an invasion of India could be made with comparative ease, and probably in the midst of a previously organized rebellion." Further on the writer says:—"The design is unquestionable, the means exist, and the opportunity has arrived,—an opportunity which, as the Russians must know, may never recur." Contrast with this the serene confidence of Lord Dufferin in the integrity of the Russian Foreign Minister, as conveyed in his speech at Belfast. Among the opportunities for Russian advance the writer in the St. James' Gazette mentions "the difficulties with the Native princes of India—difficulties of which the Russian Government knows much more than the people of England do; the stir of discontent in India; the feeling so discreetly nourished by our rulers that we know our star is paling before Russia; and the readiness of tens of thousand of warlike men in India to rise against us for the share of plunder which we may depend upon it will be promised." These assertions need no comment. It is sufficient to say they are the offspring of a frenzied imagination, of a spirit of habitual distortion and party-fury. We do not wish to follow the observations of the writer any further. So far as he suggests disaffection and rebelliousness in our country we give it an emphatic denial. His lucubrations about a Russian invasion are tinged with the same faults as on the head of the internal dangers of India. The memorandum he quotes from may be a work of study and reflection of a capable man, but the language of the memorandum itself scarcely warrants the inflammatory tone of the St. James' Gazette. The presence of Russia on the Afghan frontier is a real danger to the safety of India, and it would be a wise policy for our Government to be forearmed against any emergency. We have always maintained that while we should not distress ourselves with excessive alarm, we should not also be supinely indifferent of events in Central Asia. Our best policy will be to take up a position of watchful self-confidence. Our respected contemporary, the Bombay Gazette, has done a signal service in exposing the errors of the writer in the St. James' Gazette. On other hand we are heartily sorry for the manner in which the other daily cries ditto to its brother in England. Our contemporary's vision is so hopelessly distorted in all matters relating to Lord Ripon that it is ready to assent to the grossest calumnies and lies. It reflects little credit on the good sense and candour of our contemporary thus to be blindly hostile. The assertion that a mutiny is imminent in this country is so grossly false to the knowledge of our contemporary that we think it was its duty to contradict it.

Says that there is no fear of a Russian invasion during the next ten years and that during that interval the British Government should fortify its position within and without India by making peaceful progress in the country.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 9th November says:—There many "mutinies" in India since the mis of 1857, about which we have our own opi word has lost its charm even for the roma is no magic whatever in the idea of a hos the country. As a matter of fact w witnessed a single "mutiny" in India f years, except the Anglo-Indian demonst last year, with its clumsy beginning end—the shrieks and howls of a hired st knew not what they were about. There is no room for a rebellion need at all felt for it. A change of dynasty is the last thing our want, and to associate the Mahomedan population with such a desire is to betray ignorance of the very rudiments of Indian politi no fear at all on this score. But if the prophets of evil use the wo in the sense in which we have taken the liberty of using it in con the silly outburst at Calcutta, then we believe they are not fa calculation. There is trouble in store for a dishonest administrati The Natives are apt pupils, and they have learnt the value of agitation. They will have India governed for the Indians—w undoubtedly the safest for England as well as this country. entirely independent of the Russian scare. It must be treated quarrel, a difference between parent and children. The relations two will have to be sooner or later re-adjusted; the sooner this is d for both interests. As to the advance of Russia, we believe th people of India are as anxious as their foreign rulers to keep it off own interest. If the Boundary Commission results in nothing will at least give us time for preparation. The powers may bi under a fresh treaty suggested by the Commissioners. And th may tear up the treaty on any pretext, still we are safe from her for a decade. Ten years is enough for the British Governmen position within and without. Let there be a peaceful progress in and a hundred Russias will not alienate our people from the be possible foreign governments.

Condemns the lucubrations of the St. James' Gazette regarding fresh dangers to India.

In an article headed "The note of alarm sounded by th Gazette," the Bombay Chronicle (73) of th ber says:—The author of the laborious the St. James' Gazette to warn the E of the so-called new danger arising in In be surprised to learn that his efforts h no other effect out here than the ridicule with which intelligent A and educated Natives have treated them. The articles in the En have neither served to create a sensation among Europeans nor Natives. Both combine in wondering as to what induced the jour such importance to the puerile lucubrations that formed the gr his editorial theme for successive days. Nobody will be sorry, h the mountain in labour has not succeeded in bringing forth eve bantling, for the whole story of the English journalist has falle country. Nobody feels himself edified or at all the wiser for th therein given with so much solemnity. As for the deductions d warnings given by the grave-looking English journalist, all th aught about the true state of this country simply laugh at them, a no more of the same. That is the best way, we believe, of treati allow themselves to be led, it may be unwittingly, into indulg balderdash as that to which we have been referring, on pretext of matters of grave public questions of national importance. [The (89) of the 13th November considers the articles that recently ap St. James' Gazette on the subject of fresh dangers to India as no foolish. There is no fear whatever of any new troubles arising in Though the Russians look with envy on India, its people do not disaffected towards the British Government. The people of In so much bitter experience of the mutiny of 1857 that they will to do such a thing again. The Gujaráti (94) and the Yajdán Parast (12 the 9th November condemn the false alarm raised by the St. James' Ga

The Parast says that the people have perfect confidence in the British Gov
ment and do not wish for a change of rulers.]

Condemns the system by which high officials in India are permitted to appoint friends and relations to responsible posts in India who are not properly qualified to hold them.

In an article headed "The English 'Dowbs' in India" the Bom
Chronicle (73) of the 9th November says :—
Times of India has made some very pertinent rem
on the pernicious system of patronage by w certain high officials in India are enabled to co snug appointments on English "Dowbs." The system, besides being the cause of grievous inju
many worthy servants of the State, proves the so of a deal of permanent injury to important interests of India and its people Government. Some of the officials who are given to abusing the power trusted to them appear to be so unscrupulous as to fill up almost all impor places at their disposal by appointing to them their friends and relat without any regard to their qualifications, and to the prejudice of the pu service and the grievous disappointment of the old departmental emplo
The best way to minimise the mischief would be to limit the power of officials in the way suggested by our contemporary. There is much trut what he states as to the prevalence of the objectionable system of official pa nage, and a deal of practical good sense in the suggestion made for check it, which the authorities ought to pay due attention to. It is only due of the public that Government should devise deliberately some met of limiting the power of high officials to appoint their relations to p of responsibility within reasonable bounds. The best way to impose limit would be to adopt some such plan as is recommended by the Tim India or as Government may deem advisable after consulting the more consc tious amongst the servants of the State, able and qualified to give prac advice on the subject.

A suggestion in connection with the preservation of forests in India.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 13th November complains of the s gency of the Forest Act in India and says:— American Government is at present engage framing an Act whereby those who take possessi forest lands and agree to protect and rear new on them are exempted from the payment of the land assessment. Th being done in accordance with the wishes of the Commission appointe enquire into the matter of preserving forests. The plan adopted by American Government is wise and beneficial, and we hope that the attenti the Government of India will be directed to it. If they really wish fo preservation of forests, they should employ some such simple and unobjec able method for the purpose. It is necessary to protect forests, but the must be done in such a way as to cause no hardship to the poor people res in or near them. People bitterly complain against the present Forest which should no longer be allowed to exist.

Comments in connection with the report on the trade of India during 1883-84.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 15th November says :—The valuable of Mr. O'Connor on the trade of India during 18 shows many signs of increasing prosperity o country. But the thing to be most regretted i notwithstanding the anxiety of Lord Ripon to mote Native industries, certain articles which can easily be procured her tinue to be imported from England in large quantities. When the articl the use of Government imported into India during the previous year co than two krors of rupees, the import in the year under report reached than two krors and a half. In 1879-80 it was under one kror and a Lord Ripon cannot be blamed for this state of things; it is only the wh Government officers. It is true that railway materials have necessar be imported in larger quantities than hitherto owing to the extension o ways, but if the Secretary to Government in the Railway Department to try the experiment of using wooden sleepers instead of iron and were to make use of articles of local manufacture as much as po

the import of railway material would be much lessened. In report printing papers for the use of Government were i value of eight lákhs and a half, and writing papers and envelope seven lákhs and a half. There are several paper mills in India fine printing paper. Several Anglo-Indian newspapers publishe these papers, which are fit for the use of Government also. It is p that severe notice is not taken of the conduct of those officers
the orders of Government and import commodities from Englan easily procured in India. Boots costing six lákhs of rupees were for the use of Government. These must be for the use of the ask, cannot such boots be had here? In Calcutta, Bombay a industry has made good progress. The boots made here a as those imported from England. Were the authorities the ordering such a large importation of this article? But why sh Government when the people themselves do not encourage indi
by wearing Native boots, which are nearly as good as Englis Akhbáre Sodágar (79) of the 13th November says that India is in obliged to England for the prosperous condition of its trade, as report of the trade of India for the last official year. It is not Russia should ardently desire for the possession of such a pros as India. Looking to the strenuous efforts made by England fo wealth of India, the enjoyment of certain advantages by the for be grudged by the latter.]

Comments on the resolution of the Supreme Government on the subject of the Webb case.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 12th November, in noticin of the Supreme Government on the Webb case, says :—The resolution is no
tory. Though the Viceroy has expres of the way in which the case was tried trate of Jorhát, he has not deemed fit or to take notice of Mr. Macleod's carelessness When he ha the conduct of the Magistrate it was his duty to order a re-trial.
carefully read the account of the case have come to the conclusion
have been decided whether the coolie woman whose modesty outraged died of the cruelty exercised on her. If the Viceroy h trial of the case by the Calcutta High Court or the Sessions Ju tion under notice would have given satisfaction. The resolution one important fact. The Crown was not represented by counsel case was heard by Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris High Court. The Supreme Government express surprise at this surprised at this omission. Is this negligence to employ couns creditable to the local authorities? We do not know how to c conduct. When the resolution concludes by saying that it is h that the Crown should be properly represented in such cases, it regretted that the Viceroy did not order a re-trial of this case.
Bengal Government do their duty in this matter? Will not th Calcutta High Court attend to the wish expressed by Gover resolution and order a re-trial of this revolting case before the Se

Says that the practice of putting soldiers in possession of ammunition when there is no necessity for it should be stopped.

In a paragraph headed "Accidental Murders by Soldie Opinion (11) of the 9th November say of very great importance in respect of
of ball ammunition to troops is now be at Simla and necessarily the result wi awaited by the Native public at larg dental deaths from the free use of a become so frequent and so many that sensible people have whether such deaths should be looked upon as accidental or as ders. But whatever the cause of these deaths, whether they be or from some motive, the fact cannot be gainsaid that most of the result of the unrestrained privilege soldiers enjoy of using t tion whenever and wherever they may be pleased to do so.
ourselves hoarse in this respect, but always found that our cry w wilderness. But yet there is some ray of hope, and those who dering the question, we hope, will come to the unanimous conclusion tha practice of putting soldiers in possession of ammunition when there is necessity should at once be stopped. The argument of instantaneous da in favour of the prevalent practice is now too antiquated to command any h ing. The best arrangement would be to keep the necessary ammunition, if practice still finds favour with some, in charge of a responsible officer of a r ment, who under an emergency may distribute it on the spot. But then continue the prevailing practice of unrestrained use is simply to set a premi upon accidental deaths.

Says that the law requiring the printer and publisher of a vernacular newspaper to make a declaration before a magistrate should be modified and a provision introduced making it binding upon the magistrate to see that the person responsible for the conducting of the paper possesses sufficient education and ability to conduct a respectable paper.

In an article headed "The Native Press" the Mahrátta (2) of the November says:—When the Vernacular Press was passed a few extracts from the vernacular pap
were submitted in justification of the measure.
in speaking about these extracts Lord Lytton hims observed that "the articles that are actually and ob
ously seditious are of course much fewer in numbe
But this was not due, as Lord Lytton observed, to t lurking fear of the Penal Code, but to the quality
the persons in charge of the papers. The importa questions that came up for discussion during the la eventful period of four years have shown that t
lower class of Native papers are conducted with th narrowness of views, with that scurrility of language, with that rampancy thought, which are the characteristics of a man that cannot claim to be the lead of a community or even that of a section of it. That the promoters of t measure really intended to put a gag in the mouth of rabid papers is admitt
by all, and the strong opposition to the Act was not on account of its tendency restrict the liberty, often abused, of the lower class papers, but because w one stroke it dealt a deathblow to the good as well as the bad. If the scope the measure were only limited to the scurrilous papers, we have no doubt t measure would have been welcomed. While therefore the suggestion to revi the Vernacular Press Act is fresh, we would like to suggest a remedy whi keeping in fact the liberty of the press, may remove the evil which is so mu made of by the Anglo-Indian press. We are the strongest advocates of t liberty of the press, and we would not bear even the least encroachment restrictions placed upon it. We would not also like to see any interference the part of the executive with the liberty of action when once given. Holdi these views the remedy we suggest is that the law requiring the printer a publisher of a vernacular paper to make a declaration before a magistra before the paper is issued, should be modified a little and a provision made maki
it binding upon the magistrate to see that the person responsible for the paper a person of certain educational and social standing and that he possesses t means to conduct a respectable paper. Such a provision will, we think, sufficient guarantee against abuse of the position he gets as a newspaper edi or publisher; and then the occasions on which a necessity for exercising pow of check and control arises will be few.

Says that increased revenue from stamps is no indication of the prosperity of the agricultural classes, but the contrary, and gives reasons.

In an article headed "The Stamp Revenue in the Bombay Presiden and the condition of the people in the districts"
Indian Spectator (1) of the 9th November says
Under this head of revenue the report gives reas
for decrease or increase in various mofussil tow Under Belgaum we find the following remarks: " season in the Athni, Sampgaon and Gokák tálu was not favourable, in consequence of which several of the agriculturists others of those tálukas were obliged to borrow money for subsistence," &c.
reader will remember that Athni is one of the tálukas where land reve assessments have been recently "revised," that is to say, enhanced by 33 cent. We had the other day to question the wisdom of our provincial ru in reference to this enhancement, knowing well that Athni is one of poorest places in the Belgaum District with a deficient rainfall generally.
remarks quoted above clearly show that the people had to borrow from sávkárs for "means of subsistence," necessitating brisk sale of stamps

mortgages ! What a commentary this is on the work of revenue survey ! course the sharp officials will say that all these facts had been considered wh fixing the assessment. Thus the State gains in a double way by its la revenue policy. The indebted village is taxed higher to the extent of 33 cent. for the next thirty years, while the continued impecuniosity of the villag leading to frequent mortgages—and be it remembered, as the assessments pr heavily in practice from year to year the indebtedness grows proportionat greater—brings more revenue in the shape of sale of stamps to the St treasury. What an admirable way of improving the condition of the Dec ryot ? We should not wonder if there are fresh agrarian disturbances as so as another severe famine overtakes the wretched villagers. The remar against Násik are even more emphatic, though terse, as regards the conditi of the people—" More bonds having been passed by debtors." The writ of these words must have aimed a sly joke at Government when penni them. Perhaps he meant "to catch the eye" of Government. Thána te the same tale—" More bonds having been executed." The provincial autocr are to be congratulated on these precious results—" the growing revenue" court stamps. But what is the Athni or Násik or Thána Lazarus to the offic Dives sitting on the cover of the State treasury box ? Indebtedness is t normal condition of the ryot. Why should the State take heed of it so long the Accountant General can frame for it a budget showing a large surplu Court fees have in certain districts equally shown growth and for the sa reason. Indebtedness first leads to mortgages, necessitating registration, whi at every stage demands a liberal expenditure of stamps. That is the first a less acute stage. When suits are filed, the second and sharper stage of mise is reached. The sávkár and the sarkár between them are eager to recov under their decree their pound of flesh. But it is death or starvation to t wretched defendant. No wonder, increased litigation is synonymous wi increased court fees. And Belgaum seems to be ill-fated enough, for t principal cause of the increase there was " increase in the number of law su in the civil courts." Broach has the same tale to tell, though at a little grea length—" Constant recourse to litigation which the sávkárs under the pres condition of the people have been generally compelled to have recourse to." ask the reader to appreciate the significance of the part italicised in the abo sentence. We cannot blame the money-lender if he has recourse to the ci courts. But why is he driven there ? Is it not owing, as the report says, " the present condition of the people " ? And yet the other day they revis the assessment in the Panch Maháls District in Gujarát " at slightly better rate and laid great stress on the unsound economic doctrine of assessing " inherent water-bearing qualities of the soil" ! It is a striking fact revealed the table of collections under court-fee stamps that while the two commerc cities of the presidency show a decrease of Rs. 90,480 and Rs. 18,695 respe ively, almost all the other district towns show an increase more or less. T district of Ahmednagar shows an increase of 12·4. Khándesh shows an increas percentage of 21·9. They say more bonds had to be executed owing to failu of cotton crops. What does the fact show ? That the condition of the ry who cultivate cotton in Khándesh was such that failure of crops during a sin season necessitated large borrowings. It is clear they are living from hand mouth and have no surplus to meet a rainy day. And yet " the Hon'ble Lionel Ashburner, C.S.I.," assured the British public the other day that cott cultivation left enough to the ryot to make him happy and prosperous ! Sholáp again showed an increase in court-fee stamps to the extent of 15 per cent. It needless to tell what is the general condition of that town. Famine rag severely there in 1877-78. Then later on locusts and rats did mischief. A we read with pain that court-fees realised there 15 per cent. in excess of l year. But what is the use of pursuing the statistics further ? They tell mo eloquently than we can the generally depressed condition of the agricultur population in the various districts. For all that we may be told in the ne Administration Report that all is well, and the pessimists are merely raising scare. A province where more than 54 per cent. of the stamp revenue is deriv from court-fees cannot be considered very prosperous. For be it remember that out of the gross receipts of Rs. 42,45,650, exclusive of miscellaneo items, the aggregate amount of court-fees was Rs. 23,23,028, while the total recei from legitimate trade and business was only Rs. 19,22,622 !

the two largest trading cities, Bombay and Ahmedabad, th
the other districts amount to Rs. 16,44,817. When thes lákhs or even 8, we may safely assert that the condition of th decidedly undergone a change for the better. But have we ar a belief while the revision of assessments is going on at " sligh

Approval of the appointment of Prince Harbhamji to the Statutory Civil Service of the Bombay Presidency.

The Rást Goftár (110) of the 9th November, in referrin
ment of Prince Harbhamsinhji to Service of the Bombay Presidency, have been very glad if the appointn
ferred on a Pársi youth out of the ab candidates for it. But there is no oppose the appointment of Prince Harbhamsinhji. One Mángrol was nominated to the Statutory Civil Service of th years ago. No objection was taken to his appointment and t Fergusson has a precedent for making the new nomination.
not rulers themselves but are brothers of the ruling chiefs
enjoy any more privileges than those enjoyed by the subjects Rájás. It is ridiculous to allege that as these princes reside their right to the Civil Service as subjects of the British Go
It is very absurd that those who admit the claims of Euro Service should deny those of the natives of Káthiáwár. Prin is not only entitled to enter the Statutory Service, but also th Service itself. It is therefore very unjust to ask Governmen from the service. He is not only nominated as a Káthiáw Native gentleman educated at the Rájkumár College and know the prince, and from the propriety and cleverness of feel sure that he will prove an ornament to the Civil Service.
Pársi writers who disapprove of the appointment merely sh emanating from narrow-mindedness. [The Gujaráti (94)
says :—We do not know what motive the Supreme Governmen nating a Native prince to the Statutory Service. But we fee Harbamsinhji is worthy of the appointment in respect of edu
ence. Mr. Bendall, the celebrated Sanskrit scholar and Fel and Caius College, who is now on a visit to this country, ente opinion of this prince's ability and the progress he is making feel confident that this appointment will prove more satisfactor
Jehángir Miya of Mángrol, who was nominated to the Statut presidency two years ago. The Hitechchhu (75) of Ahm November expresses sentiments similar to those expressed by says that it does not consider the appointment of Prince Ha tionable. It is to be hoped that the excellent system of gi after subjecting candidates to an examination will be follow Government in making future nominations.]

Disapproves of the policy of the Bombay Government in levying the expenditure incurred for the maintenance of an additional police force from villages that harbour criminals.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 13th November poin
of the policy of levying the funds
maintenance of an additional polic villages for crimes that cannot b says :—We have frequently complai
this policy of the Bombay Governm
a quite different thing if the additi imposed for protecting villagers derers who may be terrifying the village. Justly speaking the burden ought not to fall on the people, for it is the duty protect the lives and property of their subjects. It is the du discover offenders. But by the policy at present adopted villa punished for the weakness and carelessness of the district po
We beg to make one suggestion in connection with this matte local police may be unable to discover offenders, the work sh to the police of some other district. A certain sum of mone given to the successful policemen from the pay of the poli

where the offence may have been committed. The present policy encour the police to become idle and careless. The police ought not only to trace the culprits, but also those who conspire to defeat the ends of justice by harb ing them and to prosecute them. This will spread awe into the people. I the duty of the Local Government to abolish the law that confers on them power of fining villagers, which is quite unsuited to our civilized times. so doing they will do a favour to the villagers and earn credit for th selves.

Says that the passing of the Matriculation should be made a condition precedent for admission of the employés of the Revenue Department to the Lower and Higher Standard examinations and through them to the posts of Mámlatdárs and Deputy Collectors.

In an article headed "Our Graduates and the Revenue Service" the Na Opinion (11) of the 9th November says:—If a su cient number of graduates is not forthcoming, i most wise to supplement that deficiency by calling others who were practically excluded by the form rules. It would be still better, we should think, if t temporary nature of this resolution (because, as understand, it purports to extend the privilege fo time only) be expunged and permanent arrangem made which would give a sufficient supply of recru to the department, and at the same time save it fr the inconvenience of being flooded by qualified candidates. Restriction of t privilege to graduates alone has by experience been found to be unworkable practice. An arbitrary restriction of the indulgence to those who have e tered the Revenue Department before a particular year, which has been up this time the mysterious year of grace 1879, is without sense, and an indisc minate admission to all would mean a block. There is no guarantee of hi attainments and efficiency in those who have been fortunate enough to get i the department before the year 1879. Such a rule has all the faults of a re lation ex post facto. It may be—nay, it is in most cases true—that an ea entry into Government service by a man implies his inability to continue studies, and it is most unjust that such men should be put on a higher le than their companions whose only fault lay in being more ambitious, and w prolonged their studies beyond the year 1879. A man who has not entered department before 1879 on the one hand, and who has not become a gradu on the other, seems to be nowhere before another, far his inferior in point education, whom his inability obliged to take up employment before that y in that line. In fact the distinction is without any principle whatsoever, a being made ex post facto is not only meaningless, but positively mischiev and unjust. The best remedy for the present inconvenience which wo satisfy all the requisites would be to make the Matriculation examinatio condition precedent for admission of the employés in the Revenue Departm to the Lower and Higher Standard examinations, and through them to high posts of Mámlatdárs and Deputy Collectors. Nor is such a restrict without a precedent. The examination which now qualifies a man for a S ordinate Judgeship makes the Matriculation examination a necessary qualif tion for a candidate, and we think that what is sufficient for a Subordin Judge would not be too low for a Mámlatdár. By making this restriction Revenue Department would be saved from the evils of dearth of qualified peo on the one hand and of superabundance of them on the other. We have means of knowing what the suggestions of the Commissioners are or will but we trust, if what we have suggested be adopted, all the difficulties of t vexed question would be satisfactorily solved without the slightest heart-burn or discontent in any quarter. As to exceptional and deserving cases, we derstand that there already exists a resolution which provides for them allowing departure from the rules in particular cases.

Complains of the way in which justice is administered in Káthiáwár.

The Gujaráti (94) of the 9th November says:—It is much to be regret that highway robbers in Káthiáwár should be abl harass the people for some time past and that police should be unable to apprehend them. If Native potentates are unable to arrest them, why not political officers take measures for their apprehension? A highway rob named Sidhwán of Mália and his accomplices are harassing the people of thiáwár for some months past, but they are still at large. Moreover, shock murders have been recently committed in Jhálávád. The police pat village of Sánkli was lately murdered. Before the conclusion of enq that case it is alleged that a Tálukdár murdered a Bráhman in the vi Bhal of the Jhálávád Táluka. The Thánádár of Bhoika sent the daugh son of the murderer to the first class Magistrate of Wadhwán to tak their deposition, which was very important. It is said that the Magistr fused to do so, alleging that he had no power to act in the desired w this be true, the Magistrate was in the wrong. If he had read section the Criminal Procedure Code he would not have thus erred. We thi the Magistrate, Mr. Kesavráo, is a clever man and not likely to commit t take. At any rate it will now be difficult to prove the charge. As the T is now freely spending money, he will be able to escape scot-free. It that no vakil is willing to accept brief from the friends of the Bráhman. very objectionable to clothe one officer with magisterial, police and civil There can be little hope of getting justice done when different authorit concentrated in one individual. If the Thánádár had not been subject Magistrate he would have got the deposition of the children of the m taken. Moreover Political Agents know very little of law. The pe Káthiáwár find it difficult to get justice according to the present arrang It is very dangerous to entrust an ignorant man with the powers of d cases relating to immoveable property. It is necessary that Government now in the public interest interfere in the matter of the administration of in Káthiáwár. Mr. Beaman is said to have recommended Government t nate Munsifs for deciding civil suits. Though the different Political Agen opposed the scheme, it is to be hoped that Government will act upon i mercy to the people of this province. It is also to be hoped that Gove will pay attention to the suggestion for having a separate police departm

Condemns the conduct of the officials of the Sátára District for failing to afford relief to the Waduth petitioners and trusts that the Governor-General in Council will give the needful relief.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 13th November, in an article heade Missionaries' meddlesomeness and the Wadut tion," alludes to the petition to the Governor- of India in Council from the residents of the of Waduth in the Sátára Táluka of the Sátára D and says:—This particular subject has been the public for the last two years nearly, and have not heard the last of it; whereas if th authorities had displayed greater discretion, nothing need have been h such a subject outside the local limits of the village concerned. Th authorities have certainly mismanaged the whole affair by affording ample ground to the petitioners to believe that they have encourag Mahár converts in their interference with the religious feelings or pre of the petitioners, simply because they themselves profess the same faith the aggressors have been converted to. There are several allegations m the petition by the Bráhman petitioners the truth of which ought to be ca inquired into. It is not at all advisable that such allegations as those co in the petition about the European magisterial officers in the Sátára having allowed any of their religious prejudices to sway their magist administrative action should be allowed to go unchallenged. They are and fearlessly made in a duly authenticated document; and they at a serve to show the nature of the widespread belief not only of the peti themselves but perhaps of a large majority of the Hindu community about the place. That any ground whatever for such a belief sho afforded is in no way creditable to the reputation of the district staff of in making appointments to which the Bombay Government, as Sir Fergusson told us only the other day, took special pains as to the qualifi of the officers selected. Such specially qualified officers ought to have better tact and greater discretion in disposing of this delicate questi ought to have afforded no ground for the wide prevalence of the f of the existence of which the best testimony is afforded by the under notice. The missionaries and the converts residing under the tection are generally speaking a very troublesome body, always desi annoying their non-Christian neighbours. We have not yet forgott

Ahmednagar case which occurred a few years ago, in which the Chr sionaries suffered a most crushing defeat at the hands of the then As lector of Ahmednagar, Mr. T. S. Hamilton, C. S., and the educational The contention in that case was that the cess schools in the Ráhur that district should be open to the children of the Mahár and other Christian converts in that táluka. And this claim was rejected by rities, as it deserved to be. We have not the slightest doubt that claim set up by the Ráhuri converts, nor that by the Waduth conve present instance, emanated bonâ fide from the parties from which i to emanate; we believe the parties in both the cases to have been set missionaries themselves, and that too with a view to cause needless to the Hindus. This aggressive and meddlesome policy must not nanced by the responsible officers of Government; on the contrary the put it down summarily whenever and wherever it manifests itself.
missionaries and those whom they succeeded in converting to Christ in peace without picking up quarrels with their peaceful non-Christi bours? The Christian gospel professes to preach peace and good-wil cannot resist the temptation of asking if these two instances be the illustration of that peace and good-will. Now in this particular W stance we cannot resist the temptation of asking whether these Mahár cannot be accommodated in any other way than by their resorting to cular place where the Bráhman inhabitants of the place resort for ba other purposes. Again these Mahár converts, before they dreamt the present claim, must surely have resorted to some other part of the and if so, why they cannot continue to resort to the same part but m pick up a quarrel with the Bráhman inhabitants is not explained.
hopes that the Bombay Government would set matters right and ce local officers for countenancing these quarrelsome tendencies of the missionaries; but we have been sorely disappointed. It is to be h the Government of India at any rate would give the needful relief t tioners.

Necessity of extending the present Factory Act to small factories now exempt from its operation.

In an article headed "The Factory Commission" the Bombay (73) of the 9th November says:—The e corded and personal inspection made by th Commissioners indubitably prove that ther room for action to be taken by the auth improving the condition of the factory Opinion may continue divided about the necessity of further legisla ference with respect to the larger factories; but as regards the small which the Factory Act does not now apply, the urgency for something would appear to be absolute and imperative. As regards the lengt that the operatives have to work and the paucity of relief during th
the number of holidays they get, both in the larger and the smalle there is not much to choose between the conditions of the two se respects the sanitary state of the smaller factories and the grinding-do to which the operatives have to submit form a state of affairs so horri strikes as very surprising how this state of things has been allowed t long in a place like Bombay. The public feeling against it is al strong, and it is to be hoped the report of the Commissioners will commendations that ought to form the natural outcome of the resu inquiry. At any rate it is to be trusted that those whose business mindful of the measures necessary for the protection of such clas population as are not quite able to help themselves in the matter wil waking up to a proper sense of their duty. The authorities ought time in determining what legislative action it may be necessary to ta to mend the sorry state of affairs disclosed by the labours of the Fac mission. In the meantime the municipal Health Department of the to look into that state and try to discover if the existing laws, such a will not help it to take steps for mitigating the hardship and sufferin the poor operatives in the smaller factories are now a dumb prey.

Prevalence of dust in the carding-room of spinning and weaving factories.

The Rást Goftár (110) of the 9th November says:—Particles of dust not only fly about the grinding-room in our cotton mills as stated by rich mill-owners before the Factory Commission, but they also fly about the carding-room. The machines known as cylinders and doffers give rise to these particles. A large number of these machines work in the carding-room and the particles flying about are not much less than those in the grinding-room. These particles remain scattered about the large carding-room and combine with the air. There are fans in the grinding-room to blow away the particles of dust, but these cannot be provided in the carding-room. When they cannot be blown away they must be inhaled by the poor operatives, and they are inhaled the more the longer they work in a close though spacious room. The mill-owners have hid this fact from the Factory Commission, and it is their interest to do so. But we are surprised to find that the Commission itself has not made due enquiries in the matter. [A correspondent of the same paper says that the witnesses that are most important in the enquiry which is now being conducted by the Factory Commission are able and experienced doctors. It is to be hoped that the Commission will not conclude its labours without taking this evidence.]

Approves of the policy of Government in setting aside a certain sum for engaging counsel in the Sessions Courts and in the High Court on behalf of poor persons accused of capital crimes.

The Shetakaryáncha Kaivári (14) of the 15th November says:—The Bombay Government has done a liberal act in having resolved to engage the services of counsel on behalf of poor persons accused of capital crimes. The annual expenditure on that account is estimated at Rs. 5,000, which the Government has resolved to set apart to defray the expenses of the criminal's defence both in the Courts of Sessions and of Appeal. This is a great boon conferred upon the poor criminals, who stand before the Court like dumb animals and are not able to offer a word in their own defence. The adoption of this liberal measure will fully serve the ends of justice in cases of murder, and Sir James Fergusson's Government will ever be remembered by the people for this act of generosity. [Many Maráthi newspapers of this week express gratitude to Sir James Fergusson for this measure.]

Says that Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth, an interpreter of the Small Causes Court at Bombay, ought to have been paid the entire amount of his legal expenses by the local Government.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 13th November, in noticing the Government resolution ordering the payment of Rs. 1,000 to Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth, an interpreter of the Small Causes Court at Bombay, for meeting the expense incurred by him in defending himself from the charge of bribery brought against him by the Bombay police, says:—What wrong is there in Mr. Bápuji having retained the services of an eminent counsel to defend himself from the serious charge brought against him, which would have involved him in ruin if proved? The honour of the acquittal of Mr. Bápuji is attributable to the searching cross-examination of his clever advocate. Why then should Government refuse to pay the fees of the counsel employed by a Government servant charged with serious offences when he has ultimately succeeded in proving his innocence? If Government thought this item of expenditure extravagant, they should have issued a short resolution warning police officers not to bring charges against Government servants without a searching scrutiny. The payment of Rs. 1,000 to Mr. Bápuji is creditable to the Bombay Government; but taking into account the entire circumstances of the case it would have been more satisfactory if he had been paid the whole amount of his bill. It is surprising that Government have not ordered the prosecution of the witnesses who have caused so much loss to them. Their prosecution is highly necessary for the safety of the honour of Government servants.

Some suggestions regarding the employés in post offices in the island of Bombay.

The Din Bandhu (6) of the 9th November says that in the post offices in Bombay the peons and clerks have to work much longer than persons in a similar capacity in other Government offices. The increase of work in post offices has not resulted in the strengthening of the postal establishments. For several years past the employés in the branch post offices in the island of Bombay used to get vacation until 2 o'clo afternoon on Sundays, but since the introduction of the telegraph mo system they do not get any relaxation whatever on those days. The is charged with the duty of opening letter-boxes and bringing their c the branch post offices has to commence work at 3½ in the morning relieved till 5 P.M. As a class the postal peons are not paid suffici in proportion to the responsible nature of their work and the n hours during which they have to labour daily. The Din Bandhu t the postal authorities will take measures to increase the numerical of the postal establishments in Bombay, and that the employés will not to work for a longer time daily than is done in other Government o would be well if the number of branch post offices in Bombay were in

Death of Professor Fawcett.

All the papers of this week express sorrow at the death of Fawcett, and say that the natives of India ha friend and benefactor in him.

Legislation.

Comments on the draft Railway Bill.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 11th November, in noticing Bill for consolidating and amending the law r Indian railways, says:—We wish success to in framing a new and effective Act for ra India in supersession of the existing defective and feebly-worked A good measures are frequently undertaken and even carried out, but a the public is not much benefited by them. If this be the result of Act, the labour bestowed and the hopes built on it will prove useles of the clauses of the draft Bill are very important and will prove if properly carried out. The imposition of a fine on railway com omitting to construct a closet in every carriage is worthy of appro attention should be paid to their construction and privacy. The closets in third-class carriages on the Bombay railways are very inconveni necessary that such defective arrangements made by the railway c either through indifference to the comfort of passengers or from a economy, should be checked by law. The construction of closets defined in the new Act. It is good that persons suffering from infectio should not be allowed to travel with other passengers. A separate should be attached at the end of the train for such passengers. It cruel and illegal to refuse to carry them. The new Act should als that passengers should not be made to get down in the middle of the on some differences arising as to their ticket. They should be allowe their destination and then the railway company should take what m might think fit. It is somewhat objectionable to extend the powers of the Government as regards the measurement of the rails, &c. The claus to this subject should be framed so that the power may not be abused [The Akhbáre Sodágar (79) of the 12th November says:—The closets so constructed in railway carriages as to prevent the stench emana them and injuring passengers. With a view to check overcrowding in railway companies should be made liable to pay a fine in case t more passengers than the number fixed to be carried. They shou required to run extra trains on occasions of pilgrimages, festivities, dogs should at any rate be allowed to travel with passengers. For so peans will not care to ask the permission of the passengers and statio to carry their dogs with them. It is good that persons suffering from diseases should not be allowed to travel along with other passengers. boon will be done to the travelling public by increasing the limit of a years for carrying children free of charge. It is good that children un years are to be charged half fare.]

Grievances of Native railway passengers and employés.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (101) of the 9th November, in commenting o Railway Bill, says:—The Natives principally of two things: firstly, the difference betwe tention paid to the comfort of European a passengers, especially third class passen secondly, the different treatment accorded to European and Native employés of railway companies. Something ought to be done for the comfort of Native third-class passengers, who are a source of great income to railway companies. The reserving of a third-class compartment on mail trains for Europeans is a case of great injustice to Natives arising out of race distinction. The Native employés of railway companies, who receive lesser wages than those given to their European brethren are subject to many acts of injustice. They have to suffer a good deal of trouble in procuring leave at the time of marriages, deaths, sickness in the family or on emergent business. The railway employés should not be compelled to produce a certificate from the surgeon of the company only in cases of sickness, as this practice causes great inconvenience to them. Great economy is also exercised in granting free passes to them. A native of Poona employed at Ahmedabad only receives a free pass to travel from Ahmedabad to Bombay. If he were also allowed to travel from Bombay to Poona with a free pass he would be much benefited. If an employé on one railway line were allowed to travel free of charge on another line, the railway companies would not be losers by this arrangement. The fines inflicted on railway employés are appropriated towards helping those of them who have met with an accident. The accounts of the fines and their administration are not published every year. If this were done the shortcomings of Europeans and Natives and the amount of help given to the two classes would be known. The railway employés ought to take steps to ventilate their grievances and to ask redress for them.

Local Self-government.

Comments in connection with the resolutions issued by the Bombay Government on the subject of the measures to be taken to explain to the rural population the manner of constituting local boards.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 12th November says:—The Bombay Government have laid the Native public of this presidency under obligation by issuing resolutions on the subject of the measures to be taken to explain to the rural population the manner of constituting local boards. The warning given by the Government that they will visit with the severest displeasure the conduct of any officer who will bring pressure of any kind to bear on an elector to vote for a candidate whom he does not wish to elect is very valuable and will be productive of good results. It is advisable to see that this order is carried out. But we cannot express approval of the permission given by Government to their servants to stand as candidates for election to local boards. The object of the scheme of local self-government is to transfer the management of municipal affairs from Government officials to the people and to allow them to act with perfect independence. In contravention of this object the proportion of nominated members of local boards is greater than that of elected ones. We have from the first objected to this arrangement and the permission now granted to Government servants to become candidates for election to the local boards will reduce still further the proportion of elected members. Government servants elected by the people will however not dare to act against the wishes of their superior officers, the Collector-presidents. Moreover the residents in the districts are afraid of them and try as much as possible to please them. Under these circumstances they would not be bold enough to refuse to vote for a Government servant, if asked to do so. They ought therefore to have been kept free from this pressure. The Government of Sir James Fergusson ought to have ruled that Government servants should not stand as candidates for election to local boards. If Government will wisely alter this part of their resolution their action will be very just and creditable; otherwise the other excellent arrangements notified in the resolution will very nigh become useless and Government will be more reproached as being not favourably inclined towards the scheme of local self-government. When the constitution itself of the boards is defective, the endeavours to provide facilities for the work cannot but end in failure.

Education.

Observes that the army school-masters deserve an increase to their salaries.

The Military Instructor (131) of the 9th November observes that the condition of the army school-masters is most unsatisfactory. They are made to work hard and are paid very small salaries. Colonel Jabob, the Superintendent of Army Schools, wrote to Government some time ago that the school-masters deserved an increase to their pay, but nothing resulted appeal. If the Colonel should again bring the matter to the notice of ment before his approaching resignation of the office of Superintend obtain justice for the unfortunate school-masters, he would place the deep obligations.

Railways.

Complains of injustice done to Native employés in the Locomotive Department of the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 10th November says:—We have complained of the injustice done to Native drivers and firemen employed on the B. B. Railway in our previous issues (vide pp. 11 of the Reports on Native Papers for the week 25th October and 1st November 1884). B complaint that has now reached us regarding instance of injustice be true, it is the duty of Mr. Wood, the Agent of t way Company, to interfere and to speedily check such cases which aris race-prejudice. This fresh case of injustice shows that the railway au disregard the express orders of the Supreme Government. It is said t Pársi firemen, who after long experience acted as engine-drivers last ye re-transferred to the class of firemen at the beginning of the last owing to the slack season. This was done with the hope that they wou be employed as drivers after the close of the monsoon. The busy sea already commenced, but they have been retained as firemen. On t hand three new Europeans have been employed as drivers from the co ment of this month on Rs. 6 per diem. This is not only an act of inju the Pársi firemen, but an increase in the expenditure of the Company. Pársis had been re-employed as drivers, the additional expenditure wo been saved and justice would have been done to them. But race-pre a great obstacle in the way. After such an insult, why should Native be blamed for leaving the service of the B. B. & C. I. Railway? It is su that the Native employés should be unjustly treated. Perhaps Mr the head of the Locomotive Department, does not know of these ac justice. The Native drivers ought to prefer petitions to Mr. Ca Mr. Wood. When the employment of Natives in the traffic and other ments has proved beneficial to the Company, the extended employmen Native agency in the Locomotive Department will also result in a larg saving.

Native States.

Says that Sultán Nawáj Jung of Hyderabad ought to be allowed to defend himself with the assistance of a counsel from the charge brought against him in connection with the recent disturbances in that city.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 15th November points out the nec allowing Sultán Nawáj Jung to engage the se a counsel to defend him before the Commiss sitting in Hyderabad to enquire into the caus recent disturbances in that city during the M festival, and says:—After reading the Sultán' and taking into consideration all other surr circumstances we come to but one conclusio that the Commission does not satisfy the p preventing the appearance of the Sultán's counsel before it. Injury is the Nizám's State by the prevalence of feuds between the nobles of Hy They should be allowed within due bounds to retain armed followers abuse of this privilege should be duly punished. But in so doing the party ought to be allowed every opportunity to defend himself. If special reasons for refusing Mr. Inverarity to appear for Sultán Naw they ought to be published. It is argued that in the well-known Hy case of the late Amiri Kabir and his nephews Motha Samshud Dow Busirud Dowláh counsel was not allowed to appear. But that case is from that of Sultán Nawáj Jung. But in that case even, Messr Badrudin and Lang, barristers, were afterwards allowed to appear. B were also heard in the dispute that arose after the death of Amir between Khurshedja and Busirud Dowláh, and in the case of Kh and his brother Ekbálud Dowláh. It is therefore objectionable to Sultán Nawáj Jung of the assistance of counsel in the serious charge against him. If it is alleged that the above cases had no concern political matters or breach of public peace, then the case of Malhár Ráo c be cited. The latter received the assistance of Sarjeant Ballantine. How influential and rich Sultán Nawáj Jung may be, he will not be able to plea case with the same ability as a barrister would do. With a view to prevent decision of the Commission being called into question, it is to be hoped tha Sultán will speedily be allowed the assistance of counsel. [The Akhbáre Sod (77) of the same date also says that Sultán Nawáj Jung should be allowe engage Mr. Inverarity as his counsel and that the proceedings of the Com sion ought to be conducted in public, as desired by the Sultán himself.]

Berár Affairs.

Mentions the bad and unjust treatment of the compounder employed in the Civil Hospital at Amráoti.

A gentleman from Amráoti, writing to the Vaidarbh (16) of the 8th Nov ber, says :—Some months ago Mr. Stacey, the Su intendent of the Commissioner's Office at Amr went to the Civil Hospital and enquired of the c pounder why he had not supplied a certain prescrip The man replied reasonably enough, to the effect quinine had been prescribed, and that because Mr. Stacey's private suppl this medicine had been exhausted and Government quinine could not be pensed without a special order of the Civil Surgeon, he was unable to compo the mixture which had been prescribed. On this it pleased Mr. Stacey to a the compounder in terms which would have justified the latter's having reco to the Penal Code. The compounder represented to his superior, the Civil Surg of Amráoti, that he, a Government servant, though a humble one, had l abused while at his work by a person who, whatever his status or his influe had certainly no sort of right to go to a Government institution for the pur of abusing those serving in it. Dr. Hume considered it necessary to report matter, and did so to Dr. Little. But in reply Dr. Hume was infor curtly that before he accepted the word of the compounder he should l enquired of Mr. Stacey as to whether the allegation against him was t Dr. Hume very properly pointed out to the Sanitary Commissioner tha was not for him to address the Superintendent, Commissioner's Office, ex through his master, the Commissioner, and that he could not do this s through the Sanitary Commissioner. On this Dr. Little's office, with a per disregard of what was officially proper and only with the apparent objec keeping from the Commissioner the knowledge of what his Superintendent been up to, asked Mr. Stacey direct to kindly favour it with an account of v had passed between him and the compounder. In his response, with remark coincidence, perfectly unaccountable in any other way than that he had l well posted as to the correspondence which had already passed between Hume and Little, Mr. Stacey pointed out that it would have been better Dr. Hume enquired of him as to the facts before accepting the compounder's st ment, which further, in the most contradictory manner conceivable, he admi to be true in its most important particular, viz. that he had actually abused man because forsooth he was impertinent! How the impertinence was offere what shape of gesture or language it took—Mr. Stacey did not condescend say, and curiously enough it was considered unnecessary that these impor particulars should be either elicited or proved. Summarily and with the r flagrant injustice Dr. Little fined the poor abused compounder for impertine to Mr. Stacey, and warned him practically to the effect that on the next o sion of his being abused for impertinence he would be then and there dismi the Government service! It is true that in the communication containing remarkable decision Dr. Little did write something expressing that even u provocation Mr. Stacey should not have abused the compounder, but he pa on thence to the opinion that this wrong doing was completely obliterated the fact that Mr. Stacey had most properly said he was sorry for it !!! Dr. H replied to this unfair and very provoking letter and pointed out with temperance and moderation that Mr. Stacey, a clerk, had no earthly r to say anything about what he, a Covenanted Civil Surgeon, should or sho not have done, because such comments could only appropriately come from Stacey's master, the Commissioner of Berár. Then as Dr. Little towards the stages of the correspondence had most unfairly brought in, in a ge way, fresh and foreign matter to bolster and prop up his treatment pounder, viz. that many complaints had been made to him of ina patients on the part of the Civil Hospital establishment, and that particularly had spoken to him on the subject, Dr. Hume with de courtesy demanded that the complaints should be specific and spe result of it was this: one of the two officers alluded to gave a run of a "gorávalla's" wife, who according to Dr. Little wanted a ston from her ear; the other said he could specify nothing! In the en válla's wife's case was found to actually consist of the following She brought a child for the extraction of a button which had got up nostrils, and after the operation had been performed, which was then she asked to have her ear syringed for an ache, which was also do Characteristically, Dr. Little, to his own view, made mince-meat of th opposed to him by writing back with illogical unfairness that "the f that complaints have been made."

G. W. KURK

Reporter on the N

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
18th November 1884.

INDEX.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Accidental murders by soldiers: Expression of opinion that the practice of putting soldiers in possession of ammunition when there is no necessity for it should be stopped ... ...

Appointments:
- Approval of the appointment of Prince Harbhamsinhji to the Statutory Civil Service of the Bombay Presidency ... ...
- Condemnation of the system by which high officials in India are permitted to appoint friends and relations to responsible posts in India who are not properly qualified to hold them ... ...

Complaints: Condemnation of the conduct of the officials of the Sátára District for failing to afford relief to the Waduth petitioners and a hope that the Governor-General in Council will give the needful relief ... ...

Death of Professor Fawcett: Expression of regret at the — ...

Employés of the Revenue Department: Expression of opinion that the passing of the Matriculation should be made a condition precedent for admission of the — to the Lower and Higher Standard examinations and through them to the posts of Mámlatdárs and Deputy Collectors.

Factory Commission:
- Necessity of extending the present Factory Act to small factories now exempt from its operation ... ...
- Prevalence of dust in the carding room of spinning and weaving factories ... ...

Forests: Suggestion in connection with the preservation of — in India ...

"Indian Dangers":
- Condemnation of the lucubrations of the St. James' Gazette regarding fresh — ... ...
- Expression of opinion that the natives of India of all races and creeds were never more loyal to the paramount power than under the regime of Lord Ripon, and that there is no reason for thinking that there will be another mutiny in India as stated by the St. James' Gazette ... ...
- Expression of opinion that there is no fear of a Russian invasion during the next ten years and that during that interval the British Government should fortify its position within and without India by making peaceful progress in the country ...
- Objection to certain statements made in the St. James' Gazette about another mutiny in India and observation that the dangers which the British Government will have to encounter are of a social and economical character and not political ... ...

Judicial matters:
- Approval of the policy of Government in setting aside a certain sum for engaging counsel in the Sessions Courts and in the High Court on behalf of poor persons accused of capital crimes ...
- Comments on the resolution of the Supreme Government on the subject of the Webb case ... ...
- Complaint regarding the way in which justice is administered in Káthiáwár ... ...
- Expression of opinion that Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth, an interpreter of the Small Causes Court at Bombay, ought to have been paid the entire amount of his legal expenses by the local Government ...

Police: Disapproval of the policy of the Bombay Government in levying the expenditure incurred for the maintenance of an additional—force from villages that harbour criminals ... ...

Postal matters: Suggestions regarding the employés in post offices in the island of Bombay ... ...

Report on the trade of India during 1883-84: Comments in connection with the — ... ...

Stamps: Expression of opinion that increased revenue from — is no indication of the prosperity of the agricultural classes but the contrary, and reasons for that statement ... ...

Vernacular Press: Expression of opinion that the law requiring the printer and publisher of a vernacular newspaper to make a declaration before a magistrate should be modified and a provision introduced making it binding upon the magistrate to see that the person responsible for the conducting of the paper possesses sufficient education and ability to conduct a respectable paper ... ...

INDEX.

Page.

I.—Legislation—

Railway Bill:

Comments on the draft— 17

Grievances of Native railway passengers and employés ... 17

II.—Local Self-government—

Local Boards: Comments in connection with the resolutions issued by the Bombay Government on the subject of the measures to be taken to explain to the rural population the manner of constituting— ... 18

V:—Education—

Army School-masters: Expression of opinion that the—deserve an increase to their salaries 18

.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway Company: Complaint against injustice done to Native employés in the Locomotive Department of the— ... 19

I.—Native States—

Disturbances in Hyderabad: Expression of opinion that Sultán Nawáj Jung of Hyderabad ought to be allowed to defend himself with the assistance of a counsel from the charge brought against him in connection with the recent— 19

VII.—Berár Affairs—

Compounder employed in the Civil Hospital at Amráoti: Bad and unjust treatment of the— 20

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

NA

PUBLISHED

For the We

List o

No.	Names of New
	ENGLIS
1	The Indian Spectator ...
2	„ Mahrátta ... ...
3	„ Morning Star ...
4	„ Quarterly Journal of janik Sabha ...
5	„ Sind Times ...
	ANGLO-MAR
6	The Din Bandhu ...
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu ...
8	„ Dnyánodayă ...
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh ...
10	„ Indu Prakásh ...
11	„ Native Opinion ...
12	„ Prabhákar ...
13	„ Pramod Sindhu ...
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kai
15	„ Subodh Patrika ...
16	„ Vaidarbh ... ...
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Sam
	MARA'T
18	The Arunodayă ...
19	„ A'ryávart ... ...
20	„ Bakul ...
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1] ...
*23	„ Chháva ... ...
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchá
25	„ Dakshin Vritt ...
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt ...
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak ...
28	„ Dnyán Ságar ...
29	„ Ganga Lahari ...
30	„ Hindu Punch ...
31	„ Hitechchhu ...
32	„ Israel[1] ... ...
33	„ Jagadádarsh ...
34	„ Jagan Mitră ...
35	„ Kalpataru... ...
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]
37	„ Kesari ... ...
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav
39	„ Lamp of Judaism
40	„ Lokahitavádi ...
*41	„ Mádhavi ... ...
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitech
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră
44	„ Nagar Samáchár...
45	„ Násik Vritt ...
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu ...
48	„ Panchánan ...
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav
50	„ Poona Vaibhav ...
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika
*52	„ Pratod ... ...
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Pustak ... ...
*54	„ Rámdás ... ...
55	„ Saddharm Dip
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika...
57	„ Satyă Sadan ...
58	„ Satyă Shodhak ...
*59	„ Sharabh ... ...
60	„ Shetakari ... ...
*61	„ Shiváji[1] ... ...
62	„ Sholápur Vritt ...
63	„ Shubh Suchak ...
64	„ Suryakánt... ...
65	„ Suryodayă... ...

---

[1] Frequently admits

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 22nd November 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	750
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	281
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	275
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	160
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
37	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	4,350
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
39	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
40	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*41	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	400
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	450
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*54	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also

CON 908

	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	300
	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	250
	„ Vichárshil...	Málvan	Do.	300
	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	500
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
3	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	475
3	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	485
4	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
5	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	200
	GUJARA'TI.
6	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
7	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	850
8	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	394
9	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
0	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	415
1	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,175
2	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	500
3	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	50
4	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	700
5	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár ...	Bombay	Do.	200
6	„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly	585
7	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,025
8	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	300
9	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
0	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	450
1	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	984
2	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
3	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	300
4	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
5	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
6	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	800
7	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,350
8	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	125
9	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	810
0	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
1	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	925
2	„ Mangal Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
3	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	250
4	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.	350
5	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
6	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
7	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
8	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,750
9	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
0	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
1	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	327
2	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
3	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	620
4	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	1,700
5	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	423
6	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Do.	Quarterly ...	500
7	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
8	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	85
9	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	778
0	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
1	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
2	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	180
3	„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do.	300
4	„ Kannadă Suvarte...	Bombay	Do.	915
5	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	115
	URDU.
26	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
27	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
28	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	500
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
29	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	327
	SINDI.
30	The Muin-ul-Islam	Karáchi	Weekly	200
31	The Sind Sudhár	Do.	Do.	500

Votes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, h are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the News-
r in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued.
nese cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the ial Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, r placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be utely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in eneral Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Polit

In an article heade

Comments on the views of the St. James's Gazette on the prospects of a mutiny in India.

he belongs or his own c
time it is "the extension
for the day and forthwith Lord Ripon's reign of "se watchful party leader.
sive views of policy are magazines rush to the as melée and do what they ensure the success of the p
with varying success to th
amount of interest mingle whole hubbub is over an other combatant. These commentary on the recent tive jingoes which have to their importance. So themselves to the task of the length and breadth of that India is in a state of over England, that a se means are provided a r very shortly! The leader Gazette. This journal has minds of the British public in India. Regarded as a p ingenuity displayed by the
at a moment of peace in th busily astir in hampering liberal leaders with their Muscovite advancing towar startling announcement of
of the English public ablaz
whether the prophetic "r courageous journal in the i cance or produce any more of attention on a point of that the effect, when pro in space. The domestic sounded by this prophet of as far as India is concer propagated in England, an effect here. But what, we called revelations are fou
the writer had access to in words intangible abstrac
by some questionable mean
as the Gazette says, by "o of Indian officials," and it line of the story. The res tion. Around the central statements indefinite in th instance "the difficulties w
Russian Government know

Politics and the Public Administration.

Comments on the views of the St. James's Gazette on the prospects of a mutiny in India.

In an article headed "The Mutiny Scare" the Native Opinion (11) of the 16th November says :—India is becoming now-a-days more and more plunged into the vortex of party politics. It has of late become a shuttlecock which any adventurous leader of either party may toss to and fro as may best suit the interests of the party to which he belongs or his own chances of political success and pre-eminence. At one time it is "the extension of the scientific frontier" which is chosen as the text for the day and forthwith a homily is preached thereupon. At another time it is Lord Ripon's reign of "sentimentalism" which engages the attention of the ever watchful party leader. In this constant struggle for ascendancy comprehensive views of policy are for a time conveniently laid aside. Journals and magazines rush to the assistance of their impatient patrons in this general melée and do what they can by dint of misrepresentation and perversion to ensure the success of the party in which they are interested. Appeals are made with varying success to the public at large, who watch the affair with a certain amount of interest mingled with amusement, until after a hopeful suspense the whole hubbub is over and the contest is decided in favour of the one or the other combatant. These preliminary observations are intended to serve as a commentary on the recent ominous lucubrations of some notoriously conservative jingoes which have of late created a sensation not at all proportioned to their importance. Some enterprising journals have sedulously applied themselves to the task of persistently sowing the seeds of terror throughout the length and breadth of England. These "inveterate pessimists" represent that India is in a state of revolution, that most disastrous days have come over England, that a serious catastrophe is impending, and that unless means are provided a repetition of the days of the mutiny will happen very shortly ! The leader of this gloomy band of alarmists is the St. James's Gazette. This journal has in a series of articles disclosed to the credulous minds of the British public the serious dangers that threaten English supremacy in India. Regarded as a party manœuvre we can hardly give any credit for the ingenuity displayed by the writer in seizing this point as the most vulnerable at a moment of peace in this country. While conservative demonstrations are busily astir in hampering the well-meant efforts of Mr. Gladstone and other liberal leaders with their hands full with Egyptian difficulties and with the Muscovite advancing towards the frontier of Afghanistan, it needed only the startling announcement of a second mutiny to set the already electrified mind of the English public ablaze. It is not worth our while to discuss the question whether the prophetic "revelations" "dragged out into the light" by this courageous journal in the interests of John Bull will have any ulterior significance or produce any more important effect than a temporary concentration of attention on a point of some importance. For we are decidedly of opinion that the effect, when produced, will be short-lived in time and circumscribed in space. The domestic interior will be scared a little by the note of alarm sounded by this prophet of evil. But we emphatically assure the writer that as far as India is concerned it is absurd for him to suppose that the mischief propagated in England, and perhaps intended only for England, will have any effect here. But what, we ask, are the facts, what the basis on which these so-called revelations are founded ? What is the source of this bugbear ? Has the writer had access to tangible facts, or has he on the other hand embodied in words intangible abstractions of his own mind ? The St. James's Gazette has by some questionable means got hold of a State document, a document written, as the Gazette says, by "one of the coolest, shrewdest and most distinguished of Indian officials," and it is this document from which is taken the main outline of the story. The rest is supplied from the writer's own prolific imagination. Around the central fact of Russia's advance he has grouped a number of statements indefinite in their nature and mischievous in their operation, as for instance "the difficulties with the Native princes of India, difficulties of which the Russian Government knows much more than the people of England do ; the stir of discontent in India; the feeling indiscreetly nourished by ou

we know our star is paling before Russia; the readiness of tens warlike men to rise against us for that share of plunder which, we upon it, will be well promised and in some cases has been." These assertions will, we are sure, be valued at their proper worth. We here because they covertly insinuate some base calumnies against Native princes and call in question our devoted loyalty to Her Queen-Empress of England. Take for instance the first indictmen culties with the Native States." Now what are we to say to thi ambiguous assertion? Who are the princes with whom the para ernment is in difficulties? So far as we know we are aware of no contrary the relations with the subject feudatories are at this tin always been, very cordial and peaceful and we have no hesitation in this is an assumption founded, if not on wilful misrepresentation, blindness. "The stir of discontent in India"—this has in become quite a commonplace observation in the mouths of some Anglo-Indians in England. We need not be surprised therefor been made use of at this time by the St. James's Gazette. Ou aware with what malignity and virulence Lord Ripon has been ass Anglo-Indian press and what gigantic endeavours have been mad the spotless reputation of His Lordship, and they may perhaps r comic incident of the gallant volunteers marching to the Governm scare His Lordship into obedience. The opposition of this interest been in proportion to the joy with which we have hailed every m
the noble Viceroy in the fulness of his kind heart has introduced f of India and the approbation which all right-minded persons have his noble efforts. While we look with no little feeling at the His Lordship's time of departure from amongst us; while we our gratitude in as marked a manner as it is in our power
the whole Indian population is singing a chorus of universal satisfaction; while every notable city in India is striving to do it the perpetuation of this benefactor's memory; while addresses and de being attracted from all associations,—these purblind partisans rejoicing at the termination of "this reign of ideas," and with ma ness chuckling over the prospect of a renewed domination of bureaucracy. For the purpose of proving that the soft-brained se of Lord Ripon has been unproductive of any good to the people of has entailed a positive evil on England's prestige in India they ha in the wildest hyperbole. They have distorted facts, manipulated liked, misrepresented them to their advantage. They will not plainest truths, and will persist in saying that India shows signs when at no time perhaps its loyalty was more conspicuous. This becoming, to say the least, on the part of these so-called leade opinion. Much of this mischievous talk is undoubtedly fomented b ing eyesore. A great portion of it would, we have reason to su pear if that eyesore could by any means be done away with. Th existence of armies in Native States has of late come to the front in serious dangers which have furnished capital to many an adventur sensational novelties. These gloomy representatives of public opin that in the hour of trial the military Native States will be a pow of danger. We have no faith in the historical knowledge of these records of the mutiny bristle with the praises of our Native prin soldiery, and their courage and loyalty have been warmly recogniz rous commanders and by equally generous Governments. No transpired to change the current of this uniform sentiment of cannot believe that our Native princes will ever damn themselve alliance with a cause in which as far as we can see they have not the
We repel with scorn these denunciations against their unalloy
"The share of plunder" and other calumnious assertions are the the writer's heated imagination, and therefore need no comment. T is to give them undeserved importance.

Comments on the decision of the Home Government in the matter of dividing the cost of the defences of the Eastern possessions of England between the several parts of the empire.

The same newspaper says:—The suggestion of dividing the co the defences of the Eastern possessions of Eng between the several parts of the English E seems to have agreed in principle with the sion of the Home Government on the subject, though there is a material differenc the details. The Home Government has decide divide the cost between England, India and colonies equally, which is rather an inequitable division. Why India sh form a factor by herself in the division we fail to see, especially when she not fill that position when some advantage is to be secured or some constituti concession is to be made. A better division would have been to include I among the colonies and to divide the cost between England on the one hand the colonies on the other. A native of India has not the same privileges native of the colonies. Even a Negro or a Hottentot is for that matte some respects better than the highest Native. Why then should the Na have a position of equality where only the purse is to be disgorged?

Comments on the Government policy of railway extension.

In an article headed "The economic results of Free Trade and Rai Extension," the Quarterly Journal of the P Sárvajanik Sabha (4) for October 1884, but rece on the 15th November, says:—We propose in place to analyse the effects of the forward p works policy which has of late found favour with Government in its bea upon the condition of the people. Next to the great agrarian problem bro to the front of practical politics in India by the discussions on the Bengal Bill, the Relief Act, and the results of the revenue settlement operations, question of the extension of public works, principally of railways, is by far most important in its bearings on the condition of the people, and inv more important issues in the future than are apparent at first sight. Last the Government of India, in its anxiety to develope and facilitate the in and export trade of the country in a way to enable it to compete with Am in the English market and furnish a larger demand for English manufac proposed to construct during the next few years through its own agenci through private companies more than five thousand miles of railway estimated expenditure of thirty millions, to be met chiefly by borrowing capital required for the purpose in the English market. These proposals been generally approved by the Committee appointed by Parliament. the Government of India and the Parliamentary Committee do not, how seem to have sufficiently realized the fact that in America free trade does exist and protection rules supreme; that the railways are not state u takings, but are built by private enterprise on its own responsibility; and the railway system in America is only one portion of its material develop other factors of agricultural, manufacturing and commercial prosperity developed at the same time all over the country. Our conditions her peculiarly un-American. Our railways are state undertakings. The resp bility to find the interest for foreign capital is a charge upon the Indian pe and the railway development is unaccompanied by a general increase i elements of national well-being. The co-ordination of industries which be organised to secure material progress, and the system of economic meas partly protective and partly stimulating, which have worked such wonde America, are conspicuous by their absence in this country. The American exa is therefore not to the point. In this country, which is economically in s primitive and backward condition, a too exclusive policy of pushing on railwa American speed beyond the resources of Indian finance will, unless accomp by other economic measures of far greater importance, only end in na impoverishment. We are not opposed to the growth of railways per se. are good in their own way as providing cheap means of transit, prom national solidarity and facilitating trade-movements, but when their exte is made the ultima thule of state action on its economic side, their tend to prevent in a country like India a healthy material advance on normal must be duly taken into account; for unless they are accompanied other and more important measures conducive to a better organizatio national industries, they do not add to the intensive strength of the country, which alone furnishes a firm foundation to its expansive greatness. We want undoubtedly a vigorous public works and railway policy, but it must be based on broader, safer and more national principles, and must be such as to help and not to starve the organic and co-ordinate development of our economical condition in all directions. Our opposition to the Government proposals in regard to the extension of railways is not based on the somewhat pedantic ground that the building of railways with a view to open up the country to trade does not appertain to the proper functions of Government but is in a peculiar sense the nation's own work and must be left to the unrestricted agency of private enterprise. We admit freely that Government is not simply the constituted agency of public protection, but is also the constituted representative of the collective strength of the community, and may undertake within certain limitations other duties which can better be performed by the collective guarantee of the nation than is possible to private enterprise independently of such help. In advanced countries where the people have the means, the energy, and the knowledge to push on in their career of economic progress without extraneous help, the scope of the action of the Government is necessarily circumscribed within narrow limits, and it may content itself with watching public safety, safeguarding the internal activities and facilitating them by the removal of artificial hindrances and obstacles. It might, for instance, accept free trade as the guiding principle of its commercial policy and, as was done in England forty years ago, secure the greatest freedom of international exchange. It might also, as has been done on the continent of Europe, in America and in the British colonies, resort temporarily to the cordon of protection to guard the growth of its infant industries from the blight of foreign competition. In countries not so happily situated, where the people are economically in a backward condition, and as in Japan, China and India cannot command sufficient private enterprise to work their way to higher order of life, Government has a task of greater difficulty and responsibility, for it has to help the nation to help itself by undertaking the entire organization and direction of national energies in a way to fit them to stand on their own independent footing. This it can only do by fostering every variety of occupation which the physical conditions of the country and a parallel co-ordination of industries may render possible and profitable in the present or in the immediate future, with a view to complete and perfect the system of national production, create the growth of capital and enterprise, and train the nation by practical and scientific education for a higher type of social and industrial life. This responsibility in the case of backward nations is made more burdensome when a foreign civilizing power has the control of the nation's destinies. The ruling authorities in this case have to keep jealous watch that their policy is regulated not by the interests of the foreign race that is permitted to rule over backward countries but by a due and scrupulous consideration of the interests of the people committed to their charge. In its commercial policy as well as in its action in carrying out material improvements the state in this case acts only as the representative of the united strength of the community, and is bound to see that its conduct is not dominated by influences adverse to the national welfare. If it adopts free trade principles to regulate its commercial relations with foreign countries, it must be from a conscientious regard to the good of the people whose trustee it is and never for the sake of the foreigner. So also with respect to industrial improvements it undertakes it is bound to see that such works shall not pass into adverse possession to the permanent injury of the nation's interest. It is bound to keep in its own hands both the management of, and the proprietary interest in, such works till it can hand over either or both to the nation itself. A foreign government stands in especial need of great firmnees and caution in this respect, lest the foreigner should seek to deflect or distort its action for his own selfish ends. In countries like India, so situated as to require vigorous State interference, the field of industrial improvement, unoccupied and available for enterprise, must be almost unlimited and varied; and when the State, commanding superior resources, steps in only because the nation is not prepared to take it up for itself, it must never forget that it steps in only as the nation's representative and is justified in holding it only as a sacred national trust. The field itself, whether occupied or not, belongs to the nation and to nobody else under sun. It is a national possession, or rather a national heritage, in which present generation has only a life-interest; and no government, whether Na or foreign, has a moral right, with or without the consent of the present gen tion, to alienate it or any part of it to the foreigner by mortgage, sale or

It cannot obviously do so without sacrificing the permanent interests of nation. Even if the present generation does not perceptibly suffer by su transfer of the industrial field to alien hands, posterity must suffer, and griev ly too. Coming generations will find the field occupied by alien enterp and will be virtually expatriated in their own home. Every considera therefore of prudence and justice alike dictates that the action of Governn in such circumstances shall be thoroughly national in its aims, purposes principles of execution. It might employ foreign talent for the prosecu of such works; it might borrow foreign capital for the purpose. But it i no grounds justified in bringing the foreigner with his talent and capital into country, in suffering him to appropriate permanently the national field improvement to the exclusion of the Native element, and in forming the nuc of a domineering foreign aristocracy in the land with purposes and inter adverse to those of the nation—a result which cannot but be regarded a once a serious political danger and a great economic evil. Further the w economic action of the state must in all circumstances be so shaped as gradually pave the way for an eventual transfer of the work of carry out material improvement to the people themselves for whose sake i undertaken only temporarily at a certain stage of their progress. For own relief if for no other purpose the state should seek to train the natio
the task by admitting it to a gradually increasing share in the managemen such works of public improvement. Such a preparation of the nation occupying the field for itself is in a sense a necessity. It is not possible any government, however strong and active, without serious inconvenienc keep its hands for ever burdened with so onerous a function, assumed in a tion to its own proper work and which must everyday grow more complicated difficult, or to continue discharging it for all time with any fair amount of ciency. Nor again is it just on higher grounds of political ethics to keep nation in a condition of perpetual pupilage by a permanent monopoly of work which is peculiarly its own and which it has a right to manage for it independently, or to disable and disqualify it by enforced inaction under exclusive system of foreign management. Such a course would not only inequitable but fatal and suicidal. Now if this conception of what ought t the aim, the objects and the principles of the economic action of the state be incorrect, it furnishes a standpoint from which to examine the whole econo policy of the Government of India and a criterion by which to judge of results of its public works administration, which is but a branch of it, incluc of course the effects of past railway extension on the material progress of country. The public works policy of the Government of India was formulated by Lord Dalhousie, under whose administration the proposal separate department for the promotion of public works undertaken on Gov ment account or with Government guarantee was carried out. Lord Dalhou scheme of railways embraced the whole of India, and the lines sketched by him fulfilled the rare condition of occupying not merely the great tr routes but, what was of more consequence in his eyes, the great military ro of India. Strategic, more than commercial, considerations predominated in mind, and with his usual extravagance when a new idea laid hold of him gave it effect with all the force of his masterful energy. It was Lord Dalhous dream to strengthen the domination not only of English rule but of Eng trade and commerce in India, and the permanent interests of this country v subordinated to this all-engrossing ambition. The contemporaneous rise of school of free trade in England and the great reputation which its apos enjoyed furnished the metaphysical groundwork for this essentially selfish grasping policy. The value of India to the British nation was measured the quantity of raw material which the resources of Indian agriculture ena it to export for the feeding and maintenance of the Lancashire manufactu India was to devote all its energies to raise the raw exports; and canals, roads and improved communications were to be pushed on at any cos facilitate the export of raw articles and the import of English manufactures. India's own industrial needs were of comparatively no consequence. The annexation of the resources of India was to be completed at all hazards and at any sacrifice. These were the predominant ideas of the time, and they have not lost their hold on the minds of the rulers to this day. A splendid opportunity for fruitful state activity was thus thrown away and abused by aggravating the naturally unfavourable conditions presented by the free contact of two countries. So far as this result was inevitably due to natural conditions we have no fault to find with Government. But surely it was not a legitimate exercise of the state's parental functions to help with Indian resources the one country which needed no such help at the cost of paralyzing its great unfortunate dependency, whose salvation from its depression of ages depends upon its industrial growth in all directions. The abuse of state functions in this connection has been carried to a dangerous extent already, but even now it is not too late for a change. Now that its consequences are so fully evident it behoves the Government to pause and retrace its steps and to check the further growth of this evil. The extent of the mischief that has been worked already is admitted by the more keen-sighted of English statesmen and is testified to by the ghastly spectacle so recently witnessed when six millions of people died during a single year of scanty rainfall notwithstanding an expenditure of sixteen krors of rupees on the part of Government, and when, as Dr. Hunter admits, one-third of the population lives from hand to mouth on a single meal a day. And yet Government professes itself to be powerless to raise its little finger to stop the drain or divert it into less exhaustive channels. It cannot undertake to subsidize Native industrial growth or stimulate local manufactures without exposing itself to the fire of free-trade fanatics and the opposition of the vested foreign interests which it has created. As everybody knows, the duties on imported goods had to be removed at a great loss to the public revenue to satisfy the demands of Manchester traders long after the duties had ceased to be protective. The Government of India's recent attempts to stimulate local manufactures have been paralyzed by the silent opposition of these same agencies. The chief object which the Government of India had in view in shaping its economic policy seems to have been not a normal co-ordination of industries, which is the very life-blood of a nation's material well-being, but the development of the one industry which was most conducive, not to the growth of India, but to the prosperity of the manufacturing interests of England. Government action has been chiefly directed to help the improvement and expansion of Indian agriculture by carrying out schemes such as irrigational canals calculated to promote increased production, by facilitating the distribution of agricultural produce by a net-work of roads and railways, but above all by securing perfect freedom of international exchanges through the development of a commercial policy based on free-trade principles. The authors of this economic scheme had apparently no conception of the ulterior tendencies of a line of action based on such grievous misapprehension of the real wants of the country. When Lord Dalhousie proposed to cover the country with a net-work of roads, railways and canals, and when his successors while pursuing the same policy adopted the free-trade principles in all their radical thoroughness, they seem to have had no idea that their one-sided action, directed with such remarkable vigour in favour of a single industry, which does not admit of varied and unlimited expansion so as to meet the growing wants of a growing population and which depends for its success less on human skill and the aid of scientific appliances and more on causes over which man has no control, would have indirectly at no distant date a disastrous effect on the other industries of the nation. They evidently did not see that this radical policy would have the effect of stamping out these latter industries in an astonishingly short space of time; nor again had they any idea that their railways, intended to accelerate the economic advance of the country, would have, being unaccompanied by other and more useful measures, the opposite effect of drawing the nation down a fatal inclined plane to the verge of bankruptcy and ruin and drawing millions to live up to the margin of scanty subsistence, so that the mere touch of famine could carry them off by thousands. The writer here traces the history of the fiscal reforms which have been undertaken by Government during the last 40 years and " which represent the negative side of the same policy of subordinating Indi interests to the necessities of English manufacturers and traders, of which t positive side is represented by the one-sided development of public work and proceeds to say :—In short the extension of the import trade in foreign finish manufactures, which has been the aim of successive Governments in India, h thrown out of profitable employ Native skilled labour and displaced Native organ ing talent from a variety of occupations in which 50 years ago there was no co petition, and the once thriving industrial classes have been reduced to a dead lev of precarious and subordinate existence dependent upon the resources of infer service or the least remunerative agriculture. In the face of these results it the duty of Indian statesmen to consider whether it is safe or just to allow su a state of things to continue to the permanent paralysis of Indian industry, a whether the state, which has taken upon itself the direction of national activit should not take precautionary measures to prevent such a lamentable collap by putting new life and vigour into the decaying system. Already the Fami Commissioners have estimated that more than 80 per cent. of the population agricultural. Such a result is the legitimate outcome of the disappearance diversity in employment caused by the pressure of unrestricted European co petition. If the abolition of foreign customs duties had really benefited the nati at large and created and enlarged the effective demand for foreign imports f domestic consumption, such a circumstance might have furnished an argument favour of the policy pursued by Government. As a matter of fact, however, t difference between imports and exports has gone on increasing from 7 kro to 23 krors in fifty years. Fifty years ago the imports were 7 krors a the exports 13 krors, while the corresponding figures for 1882 are 60 kr and 83 krors respectively. This excess of 23 krors of exports brings no co mercial return. The whole value of the annual production of India has be estimated by the Famine Commissioners at 350 krors of rupees. On the m favourable estimate the profits on this total production at 12 per cent. should about 40 krors; the rest of the capital can only replace itself from year to ye In other words, more than half the net profits of national production are th absorbed by the excess of exports, for which there is admittedly no commerc equivalent return. This increase in the exports is thus not a voluntary ope tion, but has been brought on by increased foreign expenditure, interest foreign loans and increased remittances. We have thus over and above t displacement of varied industry an increased drain on national resources broug on by direct state action in the financial and industrial management of the count We are prepared to admit that to a great extent these results were inevitable the circumstances in which this country has been placed. Even if the Gover ment had not helped this disintegrating process British merchants and Brit manufacturers would have asserted their predominance and eventually mor polized the field afforded by the consumption of 250 millions of the inhabitar of this country. But unassisted by Government the process of displaceme would have been more natural, if not slower, and the drain on our resourc more gradual so as to allow a much longer breathing-time to the nation collect its strength and stand up in the fight. Our complaint is that in ma pulating its customs tariffs Government has gone out of its way to strengthen t strong and burden the weak rival. By abolishing the import duties it has help foreign trade, and as this help could not be continued without a sacrifice of venue which it could ill afford to make the state has imposed direct taxation fill up the deficit. The salt duties were increased enormously when inla duties were first abolished, and latterly we have had the land assessment, t stamp revenue, the excise duties, the license tax, and other direct imposts creased or levied anew to make both ends meet. This substitution of dir for indirect burdens has only relieved foreign traders at the expense of t nation, and to this extent Government has given a bounty to the foreign m chant and sacrificed the interests of the domestic producer. As if this negat action was not enough Government has in its public works policy gone furt in the way of positively subsidizing the foreign carrier, producer and importi merchant by undertaking to facilitate the transport of goods by the constr tion of guaranteed or state railways. Lord Dalhousie's scheme of railways w as we have observed above, intended chiefly for strategic and military purpos but the lines sketched out by him were also good commercial lines running parallel to the great trade routes and trunk roads of the country. So far as these lines were dictated by political and military necessities they do not fall within the scope of our present observations. They had to be constructed at any cost, and constructed they were at a frightfully heavy cost. We have to consider the policy of railway extension in its commercial and industrial bearings, and viewed in this light the policy of the Government of India must be judged by severer standards than those which find favour with official apologists. The comparison with American enterprise in this connection is for obvious reasons not to the point. We can urge no objection to railway expansion if it is developed, as in America, by independent private effort. Even to this day all experiments to float railway projects on the American plan in India have, notwithstanding the liberal encouragement which Lord Ripon and Sir Evelyn Baring were prepared to offer, failed to induce private English capitalists to undertake railway extension unaided by material guarantees from Government. Only one line in the Lower Provinces of Bengal has been so taken up; all the other companies have stipulated for a fixed guarantee either for a short number of years or for long terms. The only advance we have made is that instead of this guarantee being as high as 5 per cent. allowed by Lord Dalhousie's Government the Government of India can at present secure the co-operation of private companies with a 3½ or 4 per cent. guarantee and a share in the profits. It is useless to recall past mistakes, but now that with the sanction of the Parliamentary Railway Committee the Government of India is being urged on by English capitalists and iron-masters to embark on the same lines in fresh enterprises without any limit to the annual expenditure, it behoves those who fully realize some of the mischiefs which have already resulted and which threaten to be greatly aggravated in the future to discuss calmly the principles on which this one-sided development is advocated and to take stock of the probable economical results of further persistence in this course. We do not hope that anything we can urge against the current doctrinaire views which find favour with Government can lead to any immediate result, but none the less do we feel it to be our duty to give expression to Native public opinion on this important question. Mr. Slagg has already raised his warning voice, and the Under Secretary of State has also in his place in Parliament given utterance to a feeling of responsibility which cannot but act as a brake on the forward policy. Independent thinkers like Mr. Connell have also anticipated the views of Native publicists, and it may well be hoped that if the people of this country will make their voice heard in Parliament a great deal of the mischief apprehended may yet be averted. The question before us is not whether more railways should be built or not. It is rather whether the State should more freely than before and at the risk of unduly burdening Indian resources undertake to subsidize foreign capitalists with a view to secure five thousand miles of new railway within the next five or six years. This question cannot be properly answered without giving a thought to the economical and financial results of past state action in this connection. The writer then quotes certain particulars in regard to the existing system of railways from Colonel Stanton's report on Indian railways for the year 1882-83 and observes:—Taking the guaranteed and State lines together we have thus an expenditure of 142 millions upon nearly 10,000 miles of railways, and during the last 30 years Government has, besides the land given free of charge and the loss by exchange, paid 38 millions for arrears of interest. These figures take no account of the lines constructed by Native States as also of the so-called protective lines constructed out of the famine insurance fund. It will be seen from these details that the railway policy of Government has not resulted in financial advantage to the Indian Government. This consideration should have great weight at the present time when Government proposes to spend 30 millions more in the next few years upon 5,000 miles of new railways. So far as the lines hitherto constructed were dictated by military or political considerations the question of their financial solvency or otherwise is one only of secondary importance. But now that this policy is about to be still further developed this question of commercial and financial success cannot be so lightly disposed of. The economical results of the railways undertaken by Government, when fairly considered, do not appear to us to justify any further indifference to the considerations which hitherto have been kept in the background by higher needs. Looking at t matter from the Indian tax-payer's point of view it is clear from the figu given above that the Government of India has during the past 30 years spe nearly 40 millions of rupees in paying excess interest upon the capital advance besides another 40 millions sunk by it in the State lines built out of mon borrowed or saved from the revenues. Looking only at the payment of arrea of interest it follows that Government has paid every year between one a two millions of pounds as subsidy to help the foreign trade of the countr Although this payment was not made directly to the British exporter manufacturer as a bounty to encourage the shipment of foreign manufactur goods to India it had the same effect as a direct bounty in the displaceme of indigenous trades and manufactures. Contemporaneously with the develo ment of railways at public expense the foreign trade of the country has increase by enormous strides. For instance Cheshire salt has penetrated far into th interior in competition with the indigenous article with every considerab advance in the system of railways. In the same manner as the railways hav penetrated into the heart of India in all directions Lancashire manufacture have been enabled to find increasing custom for their cotton goods wi the result of extinguishing Native manufacture. If the railways had been bui by private enterprise unassisted by public funds, or even if they could now b so built without any such charge on the revenues, no reasonable objectio could be urged against the effects of this foreign competition. As a matter fact, however, they have not been so built in the past, nor is there any ne prospect of their being built independently in the future. India is thus ask to make room for the foreign trader by paying him or his countrymen a boun to facilitate his competition with the Native producer, to give him land free cost and to arrange that the interest payments shall be punctually made in go from year to year at any sacrifice, and finally to see with patience the Nati manufacturer and trader pushed out of his sphere of domestic industrial act vity. This prospect is surely not very cheerful, and while admitting th higher considerations may have justified the incurring of these risks in th past we cannot reconcile ourselves to a further persistence in the same cours

It would have been far better if instead of paying this bounty to the foreig trader in the shape of arrears of payments on account of interest the Gover ment had diverted its surplus 40 millions to set up industrial organizations its own account, or encouraged Native effort in the same direction by temporar subventions, or allowed the money to remain in the pockets of its subjects multiply a hundredfold in useful works. Government has in fact now face all the risks of pioneering in railway enterprise. It has shown the wa and demonstrated that railways do pay moderately in this country.
must now look to private enterprise alone for further development and n use its enormous resources to handicap the Native producer in his unequ race with the foreigner. Notwithstanding this financially burdensome an economically ruinous policy of the Government in this connection the peop of India would have had good reason to welcome this diversion of publ funds by the State if the vast expenditure incurred for railway constructio had had the effect of training the nation by suitable arrangements for the technical education and liberal association in the management to take course of time in their own hands the new sphere of industrial activity repr sented by railway enterprise. Unfortunately for this country this education aim was not at all regarded either in the scheme of works and the mode procedure laid down by the Government of India or in the choice of purpos on which the money was spent. The real wants of the country were subord nated to the consideration of what was advantageous in the interests of forei trade. The people of India needed above all things a technical training mechanical arts and manufacturing processes and pecuniary aid in the shape State subsidies in starting new enterprises. Above all they had to be protect from the predominance of a foreign plutocracy with vested interests opposed those of the Native producer. None of these considerations have attracted t attention of Government as they deserved. The system of public educati such as has been set up is mainly intended to qualify Native youths for inferi service in the State departments. The scientific branches of the service a all but sealed to Natives by reason of their education not fitting them take their natural place in mechanical and engineering enterprises. The sub ventions were paid to the foreigner and in consequence of these State guarantee a powerful foreign aristocracy of stockholders has been created with interest adverse to those of the nation. It is not to the point to urge in justification o this last measure that many European countries and America also have borrowe

the help of English capital and English agency to execute their railway works.
In none of these countries, however, has the State pledged national resources, and though private companies have raised their capital in England it was only fo a temporary purpose; and already both Russia and America are buying in their own stock and restoring the disturbed balance of national exchanges. Such a relief is not open to a poor country like India, which finds not only its private but public credit mortgaged irrevocably to the foreigner. The result is that after 25 years of continuous State direction the natives of the country are as unfitted to take up this work of railway construction or management as eve they were when Lord Dalhousie first sanctioned the proposal of covering India with a net-work of railway lines. The railway establishments in all the highe grades are a close preserve for the foreigner, and even the lower duties o collecting or clipping tickets are entrusted to other hands than those of the natives of the country. A few Native guards and drivers and fitters are al that the companies can show in the way of training Natives for higher work and the position and status of these people are anything but comfortable. The companies can hardly be blamed when the lines owned by the State show n better example. Anglo-Indian writers like Mr. Justice Cunningham proudl boast that "the great enterprise in which 162 millions have been laid out i railways, canals and telegraphs has been due wholly to State, i.e. foreign intervention. It was conceived and elaborated by Government officials, an though the companies are entrusted with their management the whole motiv force throughout has been supplied by the State," which in other words agai means the foreigner. "Everything for the people and nothing by the people was the maxim of the great Napolean, and in no country in the world has i been more vigorously carried out than in India, where the foreigner does every thing for the people who look upon all that is done with rustic amazement.

Points out the necessity of revising the present scale of pay allowed to Native sepoys.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 16th November says:—Whilst there general talk about the growing unpopularity of th
army among Natives and the deterioration in physiqu
of Native sepoys, nobody seems seriously to notic
how much inadequacy of pay has to do with thes questions. With the growing demand for labour in civil employ and th general rise in prices the military authorities cannot escape the necessity c revising the present scale of pay in the army if they desire that with its innu merable restrictions, risks and annoyances it should still continue to attra men as of old. The scheme for the employment of discharged sepoys in civ employ is a substitute, but not an adequate one, for the increase of pay which highly necessary. The restriction on marriage and on the residence of famil and relations within regimental lines, which has been recently introduced i the Madras Army, will only annoy the people without lightening the pressur on their purse. Howsoever defensible the measure may be on other ground for purposes of enlistment it is a positive deterrent. It will only render th necessity for an increase of pay more urgent as a counterbalance. Whil therefore the subject of rendering the army as popular as it used to be is enga ging the attention of the Commanders-in-Chief of the presidency armies w think they will do well to take the question of pay into their serious consider tion. [The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 22nd November expresses somewha similar sentiments and remarks:—The members of the classes called "recru boys" and "pension boys" preparing for enlistment in the army should not b allowed to stay with their families. They should be made to reside for a certai period in a "mess" specially established for them. They should be fed b Government, compelled to take exercise for a certain number of hours and devote a certain number of hours every day to study. The books for the use should be such as may be calculated to develop martial spirit in them, a they should be encouraged in their studies by the offer of prizes. Such measure will induce Native youths to enlist in the army.]

Approves of the orders issued by the Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army placing certain restrictions on marriage among Native soldiers and on certain other matters connected with their private life.

The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 16th November says: —Sir Frede Roberts has ordered that "no recruit enlisted a the 1st of January 1885 will be permitted to ma or if already married when he enlists, to have wife to reside in the regimental lines for three y
after his enlistment." Further the old regulat allowing friends and relations of Native soldiers reside with them will be made subject to the condit that "after the 1st January 1885 no more than adults or one adult with his or her unmarried daughters and male child under sixteen years of age will be permitted to live with a soldier in the lin Relatives who may already be residing in the lines are not however to be turbed; the restriction will not apply in the case of Native officers, and co manding officers have discretion to make exceptions to the rule in any ca where the necessity for its relaxation is clearly established to their satisfactio Both Sir Frederick Roberts and General Hardinge belong to the class of th gallant and kind hearted British officers who have been known to evince abiding interest in the welfare of the Native soldiers under them. Comman ing officers of regiments will in all likelihood strive to work the new regulat in the matter of not allowing the relations and friends of Native soldiers to with them in the lines with the requisite tact and discretion so as to prev
any unnecessary hardship befalling individual soldiers or any general dissa faction spreading in their ranks. It must be remembered that the said re lation is by no means a novel introduction of Sir Frederick Roberts' into In
It is merely an imitation of something that has been extant in this presiden
An order has been in force in the Bombay Presidency limiting the reside of relations with soldiers in the lines to a certain number of persons of p scribed degree of relationship. That order serves to relieve the Governmen the necessity of incurring heavy expenditure for finding big quarters for Native soldiers. It is something similar to this wholesome Bombay regula that the Madras military authorities have introduced in their presidency.
the reform will doubtless prove of substantial advantage to all concern
We hope to see it supported by the sensible classes of the Native public. As the order of Sir Frederick Roberts prohibiting the new recruits from marry or, if already married previously to enlistment, preventing his wife from li with him in the lines before the expiration of three years after enlistmen will have, we believe, the happiest effect on the physical well-being and the p of mind of all the recruits as also on the efficiency of the regiments to which may belong. Indeed we should not be sorry if it could possibly be arran to take no new recruit in the army of any of the presidencies unless he unencumbered with matrimonial obligations at the time of enlistment engaged himself not to marry until three or even five years after enlistm Nay, more; we would even recommend that the rule limiting marriages the ranks of the European army should be introduced into the Native regime
But we see there are obvious obstacles in the way of such recommenda taking any effect for many years to come. We will therefore be con if the new order of Sir Frederick Roberts is given that consideration w its merit deserves throughout India for the sake of the soldier as well as State in whose service he is engaged. The adoption of the system initiated the Madras Chief in all the other presidencies would be a positive gain to country. And may we trust that our own excellent Commander-in-Chie well as the distinguished General at the head of the Indian Army wil pleased to give to the measure of Sir Frederick Roberts the earnest tho which its importance deserves with the view of adopting it in Bombay? T is nothing objectionable in the said measure while its advantages to the so and the State are quite obvious. Indeed the reform thus commenced in Madras Army will deserve to be followed in time in the other branches departments of the public service of the country in such ways as might to a general practical restriction being placed on that mischievous institu called early marriage which forms the occasion of numberless evils in the l

[The Akhbáre Sodágar (77) of the 21st November says that the order will ap novel and arbitrary to some at first thought, but a mature consideration

show that it is calculated to do good to the Native soldier by removing a burd on his resources and by improving his health.]

Advocates the policy of placing restrictions on the possession of ammunition by soldiers in the army.

The Sind Times (5) of the 18th November says:—The Indian Governm has under consideration the serious question of custody of ammunition in the army. At present it well known that the men are themselves the custodia of ammunition and are allowed to carry some roun of loaded cartridges in their pouches. But the lar number of homicides and suicides that are now so frequently heard of in t army clearly shows the serious risk of trusting soldiers with ammuniti at all hours. Cases of determined suicide and murder will always occur, b the temptation is greater when such murderous instruments are at hand. Th a case of simple assault in which the assaulting soldier is unarmed turns out case of culpable homicide if the man happens to carry ammunition wi him. A moment's impulse at once turns into a tragic deed, which might n have happened if the instrument of death were not so handy. We might me tion the instance of the late outrages at Multan, where a party of soldiers we out shooting at Natives merely for the fun of it. Now if these men had n ready access to ammunition they would not have in all probability hit up such an amusement as they did. The one serious objection that is rais against the men being deprived of ammunition is the occurrence of serio risings. Even this objection, the gravest of all put forward, can hardly ho water. The chances of any serious and sudden demonstration in India are slender and so remote that the British army need not continuously stand position with their rifles at the double-cock, for, as the fact turns out, th amuse themselves by shooting innocent people and often their own selv Conceding that for the sake of the stability of the British rule the army shou be always prepared against emergencies, we can imagine that the men of regiment may have ammunition distributed to them at the shortest noti The call to arms and the subsequent rapid distribution of ammunition may introduced as a new feature in the drilling of the Indian army. But it is unwi and harmful to place ammunition in the hands of the men themselves, wheth of the Native or the British army, when cases of its abuse are multiplying fast every year. In England the men are not the custodians of ammuniti In India, it might be said, the case is different since the country is held by show of force. But the show of force does not necessarily mean the carryi about of ammunition and the consequent danger to and loss of valuable li We are not aware that actual force is anywhere really needed in India, and t law that will deprive the Indian army of ammunition will be a law of humani and justice. [The Dnyán Prakásh (7) of the 20th November expresses som what similar sentiments.]

Comments on the views of Mr. L. Ashburner on the system of revenue survey and assessment in vogue in this presidency.

In an article headed "Mr. Lionel Ashburner and the spoliation of Indi the Indian Spectator (1) of the 16th November says: Mr. Ashburner is so enamoured of the system assessment pursued in the Bombay Presidency that declares with a light heart "that the best proof th the Bombay system is based on sound principles is be found in the immediate extension of cultivati that occurs wherever it is introduced." He then refers to "eight typical táluk of the Deccan" by way of corroboration. That there were thousands of ac of waste land when the ryotwári system was introduced into this presiden none will deny. That the fact of increased population encroaching on means of subsistence is also being daily perceived for the last 35 years may also admitted. Now when these two broad facts are considered together will be apparent that cultivation must increase. But how can the fact of tended cultivation be said to be the result of sound principles formulated the Revenue Survey Department? Cultivation has been extensively stimula in all parts of the presidency, and yet we have off and on been hearing of creased burdens of assessment. The same cry is heard from other parts of empire where there is no ryotwári system, though cultivation has increased e there. What did the agrarian riots in the Deccan point to? Was it or wa not a fact that at the date of those disturbances the area of land under culti tion was much larger than in 1847? If the principles were sound the peasantry so distressed? Have not the Deccan Riot Commissio the crushing revenue enhancements as the principal cause of their ho debtedness? How can then Mr. Ashburner trace extended cultiva sound principles of assessment? We hold that extended cultivation more or less of a necessity, the outcome of an annually increasing p Willingly or unwillingly food had to be grown for daily wants, and remedy in the absence of any industries or manufactures to eke out was to have more land, poor or rich, wherein to sow grain seed. In h able speech at the time of the second amendment of the Deccan Agri Relief Act in December 1882 Dr. Hunter analysed the causes whicl integrated the old Marátha society. How had the freebooters and p the military followers of the Peishwas and others to give up their habits after British supremacy had been established over the Deccar had in former days lived upon plunder. The new order of Governme led them to peaceful pursuits. Their only means of subsistence were n agriculture. If under the economical phenomena wrought out by th of the Deccan by the British thousands found themselves in the pr stated by Dr. Hunter, was it not natural that cultivation should

And if even at this moment this particular cause has ceased to ope not true that population is increasing? Mr. Ashburner himself has the fact that in the unnamed eight typical tálukas population has in per cent. We must therefore dismiss this theory of the "sound" pr revenue assessment as being the direct cause of extended cultivation not be admitted as "the best proof" of the beauty of the Bombay Mr. Ashburner would lead us to infer. Equally fallacious is the othe that the Deccan peasantry is not a rack-rented one. It is audacio Ashburner to assert it at this time of the day. An anonymous corr signing himself as "Cambridge" in the Economist of 11th Octobe taking exception to some of the statements on the subject of the revenue remissions that had appeared from the pen of a Bombay corr observes that "to understand correctly the condition of the four distr Deccan it is above all things necessary to bear continually in mind remissions do not lighten the ryot's burden but simply increase th gain." It will be perceived then that despite the efforts of legislatio modified policy of the State as regards revenue collection the condi peasantry remains unimproved. And why? Because it is rack-rented—r owing to the revenue assessment on "sound principles" as formulate Ashburner and further rack-rented by the sáwkár. "Cambridge" passage from Mr. Macpherson's report (1874-75), which shows the r tion of the Deccan ryot. "During the travelling season I visited a portion of the villages of Bhimthadi and Indápur, and found that ab cent. of the ryots were hopelessly in debt.......The real owners of the la money-lenders; they alone profit by remissions, and the whole prod ryot's field would not pay the interest on his debt, but the sáwkár..... difference between what it produces and what is absolutely require support of the cultivator." Though matters have somewhat impro 1874-75 can it be said that the general condition of the ryot, as d the above picture, has undergone material change for the better? H William Wedderburn complained of the heavy burden of revenue asses villages deep in the sáwkár's debts, and that so late as in 1882?
that we read in the annual administration reports statements as to state of matters. But though we have more than once challenged th cial Government to give publicity to the reports of the special officer to watch the Agriculturists' Relief Act they have never done so. O small extracts which suited their policy have been now and then smu the administration reports. Again Mr. Lee-Warner came forward two to give a sort of official rejoinder to Sir William's statements, but proved a failure. Certain facts detached from their gloomy surround placed before the public. They had very much the same colour a that we now see in Mr. Ashburner's statements under review. But t to convince the well informed. We framed certain questions for rep have nowhere been answered. "Cambridge" is quite right whe that "volumes of discussion on the pressure of the revised assessments mig have been saved" by drawing attention to the fact of the sáwkárs being t real holders of land and the way in which they obtain "remissions." Furth on the correspondent has a Parthian shot at the Relief Act, not undeserved our opinion, as we have expressed more than once the same view in the columns. "If the drastic interferences with freedom of contract," says "Ca bridge," "contained in the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act of 1879 do help the ryot, there can be no doubt that the Government of Bombay will ag be obliged to consider ab initio the economic position of the ryot." So thi we. And there is greater reason for our belief in the necessity of a char when we take into consideration the fact of revenue assessments having ag been increased 33 per cent. in Athni, which recently underwent revision. much for the "sound" principles coolly talked of by Mr. Lionel Ashburner a men of his tribe.

Approves of the appointment of Prince Harbhamsinhji to the Statutory Civil Service and advises Government to induce Native princes to take to agricultural studies.

The Samsher Báhádur (109) of the 15th November expresses approva the appointment of Prince Harbhamsinhji to Statutory Civil Service and says:—This nominatio a sign of progress of education among Native prin Government however will do well to encourage Nat princes to take to agricultural pursuits. Such a s will prove beneficial to Government, to Native prin and to the country generally. If the Bombay G ernment is not able to establish scholarships similar to those established the Bengal Government for enabling students to proceed to England with view of studying agriculture, they should induce Native princes to go England to receive instruction in that science. On their passing the necess examinations they should be given high posts. Government should try much as possible to persuade Native princes to take to the study of a culture.

Makes certain suggestions with the view of encouraging the destruction of wild animals in India.

The Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 21st November, in reviewing the rep on the destruction of wild animals and snakes India during 1883, says:—It is painful that the inj done by wild animals should increase instead of abati It is not easy to destroy wild animals. Great risk involved in the work and very few men like to in the risk when the reward is so very trifling. Not only should the reward made more attractive but suitable titles should also be bestowed on those kill a certain number of tigers or such other ferocious animals. A notificat to this effect will greatly encourage people to engage in this hazardous wo The operation of the Arms Act also has led to an increase in the injury d by wild animals and a relaxation of its provisions is necessary.

Comments on the stringency of the forest laws.

The Suryodayă (65) of the 17th November says:—An instance of sim remedies producing different effects is afforded b comparison of the forest administration prevailing India with that in the United States of Amer The occurrence of frequent famines in this country led the Government suspect that wholesale denudation of forests interfered with the action of clo and caused scarcity of rainfall. Immediately they issued orders for the conser tion of the forests and made the mere cutting of a leaf from a tree an offe punishable by law. The practical effect of these stringent orders has howe been that while the ryots have been debarred from access to forest produce the most ordinary kind, Government have been adding to their revenues making free use of the axe in all parts of the country. Hill tribes like k and wárlis who used to maintain themselves on fruits and roots have b reduced to starvation and the stringency of the forest laws has begun to be in the most ordinary domestic operations. Now mark how they in Amer have managed affairs under similar circumstances. The Government th appointed a commission with the view of devising measures for averting evils consequent on insufficient rainfall brought on by denudation of forests, the commission resolved that whoever shall take care to preserve the tr growing on his land shall be exempted from the assessment to which his l may be subject; and it is said that a proposal to enact a law in conformity wi this resolution is on the legislative anvil. What a far-seeing resolution this i Both in America and India forest conservation was the principal object. B while the remedies adopted in India have proved a source of interminab trouble, those adopted in the United States are calculated to encourage t people and to stimulate their industries. Who then is responsible for the mi take? Evidently England, who though cognisant of the truth is not a fr agent, inasmuch as her actions are all trammelled by cupidity. Wo to th unfortunate India! It is difficult to gauge the possible magnitude of the evi of the present forest administration. It is high time that Government shou awake to the advisability of following in the footsteps of America and shou take measures to reform the unfavourable public opinion regarding their polic There is yet time for the matters to reach the climax, and it is superfluous to s what the results will be when this stage is once passed.

Comments on the policy of publishing rules regarding forest matters in Thána in the Government Gazette.

The Arunodayă (18) of the 16th November says:—Certain rules have bee framed in connection with the administration forests in the several tálukas of the Thána Distri and are being published in the Government Gazet The rules provide that all persons having any obje tions to urge against them should do so by writing the Secretary to Government. We are as much surprised as grieved at this pr cedure. To maintain that cultivators and hill tribes, who are most concern with forest matters, should urge their objections against rules that are publish in a foreign language in a big Government Gazette published in Bombay is ta tamount to administering a sound beating after stopping the mouth. But wh is the remedy? Our rulers will it so.

Does not approve of the policy of exempting from duty liquors sold on club premises.

In a paragraph headed "Sale of Liquor by Clubs" the Native Opinion (of the 16th November says:—Perhaps the view n taken by the Commissioner of Customs in respect the sale of liquors on club premises is more correct th that embodied in the Government resolution just n issued. Granted that henceforth no liquor will sold by clubs to persons who are not members, wherein consists the validity legality of such sale free of duty even to members who cannot be regarded a better than the ordinary people who go to buy liquor at the ordinary sho But the fiction that institutions like clubs in England need exemption fr duties requires explanation, and we would make these remarks subject to corr tion. We therefore view the imposition of the liquor tax as savouring of t character of the license-tax, which is allowed to be sectional because it is in t power of officialdom to tax others, themselves excepted. Moreover the Co missioner's allegation that he did not know that liquor was sold to outsiders clubs is inexplicable and unsatisfactory. But be that as it may, we are so Government should have seen it fit to exclude from the operation of the ábk law a class from which large revenue could have been obtained, while its ope tion has been made doubly stringent in the case of the ordinary trader.

Comments on the resolution issued by the Bombay Government regarding sale of liquor on club premises.

The Rást Goftár (108) of the 16th November says:—The resolution of Bombay Government on the subject of the sale liquor at English clubs does not give substan justice to the liquor-sellers who had complained agai the practice. Though several clubs do not sell liqu to persons who are not members, the liquor finds way to that class as the members are allowed to buy it for their friends. resolution will therefore be of no avail in stopping the present practice. If clubs are required not to allow liquor to be taken outside the club premises, desired object will be gained. If the clubs are to be allowed to continue sell liquor as at present, the liquor-sellers ought also to be freed from the restr tions imposed on them. [The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 17th November s that the resolution is defective. Members who bring their friends to the c and treat them to a glass or two should not be prevented from so doing. I necessary to check the practice of members of clubs taking liquor for th household use. Those clubs that sell liquor to members for household should be required to provide themselves with a license.]

Comments on the resolution issued by the Government of India on the subject of the Webb case.

In alluding to the resolution of the Government of India on the subject o the Webb case, the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 17th November says :—We cordially approve of the spiri which has prompted the resolution. The Native pres has cried itself hoarse over the miscarriage of justic in this case, and we are glad the Supreme Governmen has recognized the truth of the cry. We wish Government had expressed its displeasure with Mr. McLeod in a more effective manner than by means of a mere rebuke. [The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 16th November complains that favour is shown to European offenders by European judges, and says that for the sake of justice Mr. Webb's case should either be sent up for re-trial before an impartial magistrate or committed to the criminal sessions.]

Comments on the Government resolution regarding the payment of the costs incurred by Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth, an interpreter of the Court of Small Causes at Bombay, in defending himself from the charge of corruption brought against him by the local police.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 17th November says :—We have great pleasure to note that Government have done justice, though somewhat stingy justice, to Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth. Mr. Bápuji was, as our readers may remember, lately put upon a most unjustifiable trial by the Bombay police. The evidence was so weak as not to support even a primâ facie case, and the result was an acquittal. The conduct of the Bombay police was, as we observed some time ago, extremely hasty and short-sighted, and the general opinion was that Mr. Bápuji was the victim of the ignorant revenge of a Pardeshi and of the credulousness and thoughtless action of an otherwise clever official of the Bombay police force. It was generally felt that Government should make some reparation to Mr. Bápuji for the wrong thus caused to him. The anxiety and annoyance he suffered could not possibly be repaired or assessed at a money value, but the pecuniary loss he incurred in defending himself could properly be recouped. The Judges of the Small Cause Court supported Mr. Bápuji's prayer for recoupment of the costs incurred by him, and Government have graciously acceded to the prayer in part. Mr. Bápuji's bill of costs amounted to Rs. 2,700 of which Rs. 1,700 were counsel's fees. Government grant the prayer to the extent of Rs. 1,000, holding that counsel was not necessary to conduct the defence. We fail to understand the grounds on which Government have come to this conclusion. Mr. Bápuji's was eminently a case which at the outset required all the powers of the best legal practitioner. After the case broke down it may be easy enough to say that no counsel was necessary to defend it, but those who have watched it from the beginning will agree with us in thinking that it was Mr. Inverarity's clever cross-examination which broke it down. The case commenced with all the prestige and terror of a police prosecution, with police officers as witnesses, and it was not surprising that Mr Bápuji, a Government officer of more than thirty years' standing, should have employed the best available legal assistance to protect his character. We trust Government will have regard to these considerations and will not mar the effect of their generosity by untimely thrift. [The Yajdán Parast (121) of the 16th November expresses similar sentiments.]

Comments in connection with the petition addressed by the people of Waduth in the Sátára Collectorate to the Governor General of India appealing against the orders of local officers in the matter of the interference of certain Mahár converts with the religious feelings of the petitioners.

In continuation of the article reported at page 14 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 15th November 1884, the Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 17th November says :—There is one observation which the European officia in this country is never tired of making, and with which especially he taunts a Bráhman subordinate The Bráhman subordinate is always suspected of using his official power and influence to favour his kith an kin in the first instance, and secondly his co-religionists at the expense of all others, whether Hindu or Musalmán. As there are black sheep in every flock all th world over, so there may be, and probably are, some Bráhman subordinates i whose case the observation might hold good, but nothing can be more unjust than to generalize from such stray and rare cases. And unjust and ungenerous as such suspicion is, the average European official carries it in his breas and, we are afraid, believes in its truth as though it were an article of his cree

Now people belonging to this class must not be surprised when we tell them th the people in this country entertain similar suspicion against themselves. this particular Waduth case the popular mind believes that if the decisi in such a case had rested with authorities who were not of the Christian pe suasion it would have been different. The petition is full of such suspicio which primâ facie at least appears to be well founded and correct. We for o part cannot be expected to say anything positively about it; all we can say that if the facts be really what they have been represented to be by the Wadu petitioners, there can be no doubt that the district authorities did, however u consciously, allow their own religious prejudices to sway their decision. Ar now granting that the popular suspicion is well-founded and correct, and even proved to be so, what would the European officials as a class say if fro such a case as this the popular mind ran up to the conclusion that almost a European officials in this country were partial to their own co-religionists ar unduly favoured them at the expense of those who professed other rival religion Would they not resent it most indignantly and set down as fools those wh from isolated cases drew such generalizations? We have not the slightest dou that they would do so. And yet this is precisely the logic which an avera European official is never ashamed of applying in the case of others but whi when applied to himself he would most indignantly resent.

Requests Government to take notice of a case in which Mr. Cappel, Assistant Collector, Sholápur, prosecuted a school-boy on a charge of attempting to obtain money by false representation.

The Sholápur Vritt (62) of the 13th November gives the particulars of case in which Mr. Cappel, Assistant Collector, Shol pur, prosecuted before Mr. Hughes, Huzur Depu Collector, one Vishnu Rámchandra Gokhale, a schoo boy, on the charge of attempting to obtain mone from him by false representations, but in which t accused was discharged for want of evidence to su tain the charge, and remarks:—Mr. Cappel's condu did not become an officer of his position. If he doubted the faithfulness the representations made by the boy, his best course would have been, aft obtaining reliable information as to the facts, to give the boy some wholeson advice. Moreover if, as is admitted, the boy committed an offence again Mr. Cappel in his capacity of a private individual, it was an unjust procedu for the latter to make use of his magisterial powers to arrest and imprison t boy without a warrant. If the prosecution in this case had been against a we to-do person he would have taken legal steps to obtain damages, but t accused being a poor and helpless student it is not possible that he will reso to any such remedy. It is therefore necessary that Sir James Fergusson shou call for all the papers in the case and administer such rebuke to Mr. Capp for his imprudence as might prevent the recurrence of such acts in the future

Comments on the promotions and transfers made by the Commissioner, S. D., consequent on the death of Ráo Sáheb Dinkar Trimbak Waidya, Mámlatdár of Panvel.

Referring to the promotions and transfers of Mámlatdárs made by the Co missioner, S. D., consequent on the death of R Sáheb Dinkar Trimbak Waidya, Mámlatdár of Pan in the Kolába District, the Dhárwár Vritt (26) of t 13th November observes:—During the administrati of Mr. Crawford all rules are adjudged to be inoper tive. During the short time that Mr. Moore was charge of the division he had with the view of sile cing all complaints sketched out a just line of conduct, but we must say that did not meet with the approval of Mr. Crawford. Mr. Moore had prepared a l of candidates eligible for Mámlat arranged in the order of their claims, a in accordance with that list Mr. Rájáchárya Bidáchárya ought not to ha been thrown aside. The ways of Mr. Crawford are however quite differe It is not clear how Mr. Govind Gangádhar Sáne should have come up for pr motion on this occasion. But even leaving out of consideration Mr. Sán appointment on the ground that he is a graduate and is serving immediate under the Commissioner, it is not understood how the head clerk of the Kolá Collector, Mr. Náráyan Malhár, should have come to the front. For our part see all confusion in the work of the Commissioner.

A complaint against the Acting Political Agent of Mahi Kántha.

The Hitechchhu of Ahmedabad (73) of the 20th November quotes an or issued by Major Salmon, Acting Political Ag of Mahi Kántha, directing the Mukhis, Matáda Havaldárs and other officers of villages under Mahi Kántha Agency to procure sheep for the use the Political Agent at the cash price of Re. 1 per head whenever asked, a observes:—The tenour of the order shows that it has not the slightest founc tion of justice. Is it not tyranny to require the poverty-striken shepherd, w has not enough clothes to cover his nakedness nor enough corn to allow of eating bellyful, to sell for the nominal price of 1 rupee sheep that ordinarily fet a price ranging between 3 and 4 rupees? If however it is maintained that rupee is the just price per head, where is the necessity of issuing an ord authorizing village officers to obtain sheep at that price? Moreover Sádra, from which place the order has been issued, there are several butche shops which supply the demand of the flesh-eating population of the place, and it possible that they should have declined to answer the call of an officer of t position of a Political Agent? The people had once raised their cry agair this oppressive practice, but as nothing came out of it they have been submi ting to this sort of treatment. Nearly three quarters of a century have elaps since the Agency was established, but the administration of justice has not y been placed on a sound footing. If such high-handed acts of political offic are not expressed, and if anarchy similar to that prevailing in ancient days hol its sway under the rule of the just British Government in spite of all the r forms that have followed in the train of the civilization of the 19th centur when can the people repect to be happy? It behoves the Commissioner, N. I and the Bombay Government to take steps with the view of putting a stop the injustice complained of.

Suggests that Government should call upon Dr. Prabhákar, Honorary Assistant Surgeon in the Sir Cowasji Jehangir Ophthalmic Hospital, to furnish an explanation of the points noted in the report which Dr. Maconachie is said to have made to Government.

The Jáme Jamshed (98) of the 20th November says:—We hear that I Maconachie, Ophthalmic Surgeon, Sir Cowasji Jehan Ophthalmic Hospital, has made an unfavourable repo against Honorary Assistant Surgeon Prabhákar a has asked Government to nominate a paid assista instead of an honorary one. Considering Dr. Mac nachie's general behaviour towards Natives his r commendation does not surprise us. With the e perience we have gained in the recent controver regarding the Honorary Surgeons of the Gokulc Tejpál Hospital we are constrained to request Government before coming to decision in the matter to ask Dr. Prabhákar to furnish his explanation.

Says that the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, should publish his reasons for dispensing with the services of Mr. Collett, Inspector in the Bombay police force.

The Yajdán Parast (121) of the 16th November says:—The Comm sioner of Police, Bombay, has given notice to M Collett, Inspector in the Bombay police force, who w reinstated after having been acquitted of the char of corruption brought against him, to quit the servi As the head of the police force Sir Frank Souter m have the power of dispensing with the services o person employed in it. But this action of the Co missioner looks very strange when Government have ordered the re-emplo ment of Mr. Collett in the police force and have paid the whole amount of t salary due to him for the period he was suspended from office and the co incurred by him in making his defence. The complaint made by the Bomb Gazette is just, and if Sir Frank Souter furnishes any explanation in connect with it the public will have some ground upon which to form their opinion.

Suggests the advisability of establishing editor's tables in different parts of the presidency.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 17th November, referring to a rec despatch of the Secretary of State of India impre ing upon local Governments and Administratio the necessity of enforcing the orders of the Gove ment of India in the matter of communicating offic papers to newspapers, points out the inutility of present system of placing official papers on an editor's table in Bombay, suggests the advisability of organizing similar institutions in different parts this presidency.

Complains of the difficulty of cashing stock notes issued by the Government of India.

The Akhbáre Sodágar (77) of the 22nd November complains of the difficulty of cashing stock notes issued by the Government of India and says that this difficulty gives ris to unfavourable sentiments regarding the credit o Government amongst the poor and illiterate classe of people. When these notes were issued it was given out that they were meant to enable poor persons to invest their savings in some form of security and that every facility would be afforded for exchanging and cashing them. Nothing of the kind has yet been done and the poor people have to suffer. It is to be hoped that the Government of India will pay attention to this complaint.

Stranding and loss of a vessel near the mouth of the river Nerbudda at Broach.

The Broach Vartamán (85) of the 17th November refers to the stranding and loss of a vessel in the Megásam channel near the mouth of the river Nerbudda, and says that though many vessels have come to grief near this place it has neither been improved nor has a buoy been placed there to mark the dangerous spot. Once a steamer coming to Broach from Bhávnagar was wrecked near the same place. It is to be regretted that no measures have yet been taken for the safety of vessels. [The Deshi Mitră (89) of the 20th November expresses similar sentiments.]

Landing and shipping of ferry passengers at Carnac Bandar, Bombay.

The Rást Goftár (108) of the 16th November does not approve of the proposal made to Government by the Bombay Port Trust in the matter of levying a fine of Rs. 100 per day from the owners of steamers plying in the harbour in the event of their failing to take proper measures for landing and shipping passengers, and says that the measure is likely to cause more hardship to the owners of coasting steamers than comfort to passengers. Moreover the proposal is vague. Instead of this the Port Trustees ought to frame a scheme for adopting certain measures for landing and shipping passengers in accordance with the suggestions made by the Collector of Kolába. The owners of steamers might then be compelled to act in accordance with the measures that might be approved.

A complaint regarding the Government Book Depôt at Ahmedabad.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitră (72) of the 16th November points out the inconvenience suffered by students in Ahmedabad on account of their being unable to procure English text-books from the Government Book Depôt in the city, which sells Gujaráti books only, and recommends that Government should order district and branch book depôts in important places to keep for sale such English books and maps as are required by students of Anglo-vernacular and High schools.

Complains of delay in the delivery of letters in the city of Poona.

The Shiváji (61) of the 6th November complains of unnecessary delay in the delivery of letters in the city of Poona. Letters are delivered as late as 11 A.M. and 7 P.M. and this puts the public to much inconvenience. The delay does not appear to be the consequence of late arrival of the mail trains inasmuch as the letters do not bear the stamp of "train late." It is therefore clear either that the delay takes place in the post offices or that the number of delivery peons is short of the requirements of the city. We suggest that the authorities should take proper steps to remove all cause for complaint.

Complains of delay in the delivery of letters in villages.

A correspondent of the Dhárwár Vritt (26) of the 20th November, writing from Hirebudehal in táluka Bankápur, complains of the inconvenience caused to the people residing in villages by the delay in the delivery of letters and newspapers, and requests the attention of the authorities of the Postal Department to the matter. In some villages in which no newspapers are received there are branch post offices and the rural messenger pays visits on alternate days, while in others in which several newspapers are received there are no branch post offices and the rural messenger pays only two visits in a week. It is nearly two years since furniture intended for the branch post offices which it was contemplated to establish in the villages of Ingalgi and Hulgur has been lying in the Shegaon post office, but no steps appear to have yet been taken to start those offices. It will be well if the Post Master General takes subject into consideration after so much delay. The editor of the p endorses the remarks of the correspondent.

Legislation.

Legislation in connection with the draft Railway Bill.

In an article headed "The efforts of Mr. Hope to enact a new law Indian Railways" the Din Bandhu (6) of the 1 November says:—Though we are constrained admit that the gradual development of railw communication in India has served as a sort of stimulus to the trade of country and has afforded a great convenience to the travelling public, and th it must so far be regarded as a boon for which the people have to thank t British Government, still comparing the present condition of things with th existing before the British rule we can say without fear of contradiction th railways have aggravated the miseries of the labouring classes instead ameliorating their circumstances. Moreover the want of proper convenienc for the different classes of people who contribute to the profits derived by t several railway companies serves as an additional source of trouble. T Honourable Mr. Hope has thought of enacting a law with the object of removi the inconveniences at present suffered by passengers, but will Governme make arrangements with the view of enforcing that all railway employés sh be recruited from the natives of the country who mainly contribute to t success of railway undertakings, and will they enact a provision in the law which the hours of work of all railway employés will be shortened? M Hope will perpetuate his memory in this country by obtaining for the railw employés the privileges of leave allowances and pension. In conclusion request Mr. Hope to give a fresh hearing to the complaints against railw companies from different quarters before proceeding to legislate in t matter.

Local Self-government.

Comments on the recent resolution of the Government of Bombay in the matter of local self-government.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 16th November says:—It is gratifying observe that the Government of Bombay has profit so well by its experience as to the working of t local self-government scheme in the districts. recent order to the subordinate executive is all th could be wished, and if the Government only kee an eye on how this order is being obeyed, it will have little cause for complai so far as the public are concerned. Official co-operation with the efforts public bodies is certainly necessary to educate the masses; equally necessary the distribution of pamphlets. But what we look upon as perhaps the m important part of the present order is that Government has strictly prohibit official underlings from either meddling with popular elections or influenci them in any way. Electors must know that they are their own masters a that the magistrate is not going to send them to jail if they return oth candidates than those of the magistrate's choice.

Makes certain remarks and suggestions in connection with the recent resolution of the Government of Bombay in the matter of local self-government.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 17th November says:—The Government Bombay has issued a resolution calling upon revenue officers to explain to the people in the districts the object and methods of self-governme and to popularize the scheme among the masses every means in their power. We have always insi ed upon the supreme importance of the executi officers of Government exerting themselves in making the scheme of local se government familiar to the people and of their working it with sympathy a moderation. Self-government in a certain sense is not unknown to our peop but the modern methods of election, votes and meetings are not familiar, a will require to be well explained before they get into proper working ord We are glad our Government has pointedly drawn the attention of its offic to this most important duty. In connection with this we cannot help rema ing that Government would have ensured greater consistency and success the scheme of self-government if an officer specially qualified ha ed to supervise the work of local boards and municipalities presidency.

Approves of the recent resolution of the Government of Bombay in the matter of local self-government.

In an article headed "Local Self-Government" the Subodh the 16th November says:—The rece the Bombay Government drawing the district officers to the duty of interpre ing and object of the coming elections Boards Act to the people of the distri Sir James Fergusson earnestly desires that the scheme of lo ment should meet with a fair trial in this presidency. There is as we can see, no positive hostility to the scheme in the districts just a possibility of there being some lukewarmness and indi resolution above referred to is calculated to drive away half-hear ever it may exist, and as such deserves to be highly commend like most in it is the direction it gives to district officers to operation of any associations or private persons who should be w in the work. Such honest recognition of the help which publ give to Government in various ways as the accredited interprete rulers and the ruled is very rare in the annals of administrati less it is a comforting sign of the present times. Altogether we lution appears in right good time and is quite in character wit tone which pervade our present administration, but which contra with those which guide the actions of Governments in the siste [The Yajdán Parast (121) of the same date says that the action Government is praiseworthy. It will restore confidence amo some of whom think that the Bombay Government wishes for t scheme of local self-government. The Pársi Punch (106) of the approves of the action of the local Government, says that Sir Ja has done very good work, and expresses a hope that his zeal an show good results.]

Railways.

Does not approve of the policy of importing from Europe iron sleepers for Indian railways.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 16th November says:—It is that while the Government of India are tions directing the purchase as far as po articles in preference to European, all giving practical effect to them are allowe The policy of importing such of the mat for railway construction as are not procurable in India is indee able, but why should wooden sleepers for railways be imported when the pine tree forests on the Himálayas are capable of demands of the whole country? Sleepers made of pine trees have the Multán State railway and the authorities are able to vouch fo the sleepers for a period of 20 years. In the face of this fact iro recently been imported from Europe for the Ferozpur railway, an that the authorities have determined upon following a similar cou the Pishin and Sind, Panjab and Delhi railways. It is also rep sleepers are estimated to cost twice as much as wooden ones. I it shows an inconsistency between the orders of the Governme the conduct of their officers in the Railway Department. [The of the same date makes similar comments.]

Gives further particulars of the injustice done to Native engine-drivers and firemen employed on the B. B. & C. I. Railway.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 18th November says:—T the Government of India has at last be the complaint we made about four week the injustice done to Native engine-dri on the B. B. & C. I. Railway (vide pp. the Reports on Native Papers for the 25th October and 1st and 15th Novemb ively). We hear that the Supreme Government has asked for subject. If this be true our respect for the noble Lord Ripon is gre even at the time of his approaching departure he manifests so much anxiety for ing justice to the Natives. We beg leave to mention a few more grievances Native engine-drivers on this line. While a Eurasian youth can become a driver the B. B. &. C. I. Railway line after serving for four years, a Native can only atta to that position after serving for seven years. What is the reason of this d tinction? Can the Locomotive Superintendent show that Native youths do n learn as much of engine-driving within four years as European and Eurasian yout do within that period? Certainly he cannot. Moreover while a European fi man is paid Rs. 1-8-0 per diem in the beginning, why should a Native fireman paid only half a rupee? A European engine-driver is paid Rs. 4 per die which allowance rises to Rs. 8 in the course of three years. A Native firem becomes a driver after serving for seven years and draws Rs. 4 per diem as t maximum amount of his wages. Similar injustice is done in the matter extra allowances. Why should Europeans be paid three times as much as th remuneration enjoyed by Natives at the cost of the shareholders? Some lib rality towards drivers ordered out from England is excusable, but why shou Eurasians who are born and bred in this country be unnecessarily favoured? W still hope that Mr. Wood will before retiring from the country do justice to th Natives by redressing their grievances before the Viceroy takes any stron measures in the matter.

Complains of the inconvenience caused to passengers to Pandharpur on the occasion of the last Kártiki fair.

The Kalpataru (35) of the 16th November says:—The pilgrims to Pa dharpur on the occasion of the last Kártiki fair ha to suffer much at the hands of the G. I. P. Railwa Company. They were packed like sheep in carriag intended for horses in which there were no lights, an they were carried as far as Poona with the speed ordinary goods trains. The railway authorities are blind to these things, b will not Government look into them?

Want of a dharmashála at Hotgi.

The Rámdás (59) of the 16th November points out the inconvenien caused to the passengers by the Hotgi-Bijápur lin by the absence of a dharmashála at Hotgi, and r quests the attention of the railway authorities to th matter.

Complains of the annoyance caused to certain female passengers by the station-master at Vartej on the Bhávangar-Gondal Railway line.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (73) of Ahmedabad of the 20t November says:—A few days ago I was going Vartej by the train from Wadhwán. Amongst peop who alighted at this station was one Khoja woman wi a child aged two years and another woman of th butcher caste who had some quantity of wool wit her. After the train started from the station the station-master began to colle tickets from passengers. After I had gone some distance I heard a woma crying. On returning and making enquiry I found that the Khoja woman wa weeping as the station-master had asked for the ticket of her child of two year of age. As she had no money with her I paid the fare for her. The quantit of wool that the female butcher had with her weighed 4½ Bengáli sers. Thoug a passenger is allowed by law to carry free of charge luggage weighing up 14 Bengáli sers she was asked to pay the charge for the 4½ sers of wool she ha with her. As she had no money she was detained in custody. I do not kno what became of her afterwards. The object of detaining the Khoja woma at the station was, according to what I learnt, very discreditable. I canne state it in writing, but it would be well if some police officer were to enquire in the matter.

Municipalities.

Necessity of extending the municipal market at Bhuleshwar, Bombay.

A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (108) of the 16th November says:- In the municipal market at Bhuleshwar, Bomba meat, &c., is not allowed to be sold and therefore hig caste Hindus repair there in large numbers to purcha vegetables. The number of vegetable-sellers ha therefore increased, but the accommodation in the market being who do not possess stalls in it have to sell their vegetables on the road. Mud and dirt accumulate on this road and offensive smel nate from it. If the municipality were to buy one or two house rear of the market and one or two on the Bhuleshwar road a market, great good would be done. If the dirty condition of the were improved a source of infectious diseases would also be remo

Says that the managing committee of the Poona Municipality do not deserve censure for having acceded to the suggestion of the president to remove the proposition for the presentation of a farewell address to Lord Ripon from the list of business before the municipal commissioners.

Referring to the article in the Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the reported at page 17 of the Report on for the week ending 8th November, t
of the 14th idem says:—On enquiry the accusation laid against the membe aging committee of the Poona M having yielded to the Acting Collect who refused to place on the list of the municipal commissioners a prop presentation of a farewell address to L unfounded. The president suggeste mittee the advisability of calling a special general meeting for order that it may bear special significance, and he further advise ject should be deferred for future consideration when the qu Ripon's visit to Poona was settled. The managing committee the suggestions of the president were considerably weighty agreed to them.

Native States.

Does not approve of the appointment of Mr. Nána Moroji to the post of Diván of the Indore State.

The Yajdán Parast (121) of the 16th November disapproves
ment of Mr. Nána Moroji as Diván
State and says:—Mr. Nána possess sagacity. He does not know how to and to detect intrigues. He was u Government servant and did not suc satisfaction to Government. His career as a magistrate was a fa ment had to remove him from the magisterial bench and the pub also very strong against him. His decisions were very objection accordance with the principles of justice. We do not know w can do as Diván. Though Sir T. Mádhav Ráo is an accompli
the people of Baroda were not satisfied with his managemen State. What satisfaction then will Mr. Nána Moroji be abl subjects of Máhárája Holkar? When some Europeans have bee inclined towards the State, it was very essential that a bette Nána should have been selected for the post of Diván.

RAOJI BHAVANR

Acting Reporter on th

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
25th November 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Âbkári:
  Comments on the resolution issued by the Bombay Government regarding sale of liquor on club premises 17
  Disapproval of the policy of exempting from duty liquors sold on club premises 17
Ammunition: Advocacy of the policy of placing restriction on the possession of — by soldiers in the army 14
Appointments: Approval of the appointment of Prince Harbhamsinhji to the Statutory Civil Service and advice to Government to induce Native princes to take to agricultural studies 16
Colonial defences: Comments on the decision of the Home Government in the matter of dividing the cost of the defences of the Eastern possessions of England between the several parts of the empire ... 5
Destruction of wild animals in India: Suggestions for the encouragement of the— 16
Forests:
  Comments on the policy of publishing rules regarding forest matters in Thána in the Government Gazette 17
  Comments on the stringency of the forest laws 16
Free trade and railway extension: Comments on the Government policy of railway extension 5
Government Book Depôt at Ahmedabad: Complaint regarding the— ... 21
"Indian Dangers": Comments on the views of the St. James' Gazette on the prospects of a mutiny in India 3
Judicial matters:
  Comments on the Government resolution regarding the payment of the costs incurred by Mr. Bápuji Dinánáth, an interpreter of the Court of Small Causes at Bombay, in defending himself from the charge of corruption brought against him by the local police 18
  Comments on the resolution issued by the Government of India on the subject of the Webb case 18
Landing and shipping of ferry passengers at Carnac Bandar, Bombay: Disapproval of the proposal made to Government by the Bombay Port Trust in connection with the — 21
Land revenue: Comments on the views of Mr. L. Ashburner on the system of revenue survey and assessment in vogue in this presidency 14
Native army:
  Necessity of revising the present scale of pay allowed to Native sepoys 12
  Restrictions on marriage among Native soldiers and on certain other matters connected with their private life 13
Petition addressed by the people of Waduth in the Sátára Collectorate to the Governor General of India: Comments in connection with the — appealing against the orders of local officers in the matter of the interference of certain Mahár converts with the religious feelings of the petitioners 18
Postal matters:
  Complaint regarding the delay in the delivery of letters in the city of Poona 21
  Complaint regarding the delay in the delivery of letters in villages in the Dhárwar District 21
Public service:
  Comments on the promotions and transfers made by the Commissioner, S. D., consequent on the death of Ráo Sáheb Dinkar Trimbak Waidya, Mámlatdár of Panvel ... 19
  Complaint against the Acting Political Agent of Mahi Kántha ... 20
  Expression of opinion that the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, should publish his reasons for dispensing with the services of Mr. Collett, Inspector in the Bombay police force 20 Request to Government to take notice of a case in which Mr. Cappel, Assistant Collector, Sholápur, prosecuted a school-boy on a charge of attempting to obtain money by false representations... 19

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—continued.

Public service (continued) :

Suggestion that Government should call upon Dr. Prabhákar, Honorary Assistant Surgeon in the Sir Cowasji Jehangir Ophthalmic Hospital, to furnish an explanation of the points noted in the report which Dr. Maconachie is said to have made to Government 20
Stock Notes: Complaint regarding the difficulty of cashing — issued by the Government of India 21
Stranding and loss of a vessel near the mouth of the river Nerbudda at Broach: Comments on the — 21
Supply of official papers: Suggestion regarding the advisability of establishing editor's tables in different parts of the presidency ... 20

Part II.—Legislation—

Railway Bill: Suggestions in connection with the draft — 22

Part III.—Local Self-government—

Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the matter of Local Self-government:

Approval of the recent — 23
Comments on the recent — 22
Remarks and suggestions in connection with the recent — ... 22

Part IV.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway: Injustice done to Native engine-drivers and firemen employed on the — 23
Bhávnagar-Gondal Railway line: Complaint against the annoyance caused to certain female passengers by the station-master at Vartej on the— 24
G. I. P. Railway: Complaint regarding the inconvenience caused to passengers to Pandharpur on the occasion of the last Kártiki fair ... 24
Hotgi-Bijápur Railway line: Want of a dharmashála at Hotgi ... 24
Iron sleepers for Indian railways: Disapproval of the policy of importing from Europe — 23

Part V.—Municipalities—

Bombay: Necessity of extending the municipal market at Bhuleshvar — 24
Poona: Expression of opinion that the managing committee of the — Municipality do not deserve censure for having acceded to the suggestion of the president to remove the proposition for the presentation of a farewell address to Lord Ripon from the list of business before the municipal commissioners 25

Part IV.—Native States—

Indore: Disapproval of the appointment of Mr. Nána Moroji to the post of the — State 25

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 29th November 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	750
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	281
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	275
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	160
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
37	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	4,350
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
39	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
40	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*41	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
42	„ Mahárashtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
43	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	400
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	450
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*54	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
66	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
67	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	300
68	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	250
69	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
70	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	500
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
71	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
72	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	475
73	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	485
74	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
75	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	200
	GUJARA'TI.
76	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
77	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	850
78	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	394
79	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
80	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	415
81	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,175
82	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	500
83	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	50
84	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	700
*85	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.	200
86	„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly	585
87	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,025
88	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	300
89	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
90	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	450
91	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	984
92	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
93	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	300
94	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*95	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
96	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	800
97	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,350
98	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	125
99	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	810
*100	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
101	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	925
*102	„ Mangal Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
103	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	250
104	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.	350
105	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
106	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
107	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
108	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,750
109	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
110	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
111	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	327
112	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
113	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	620
114	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	1,700
115	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	423
116	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Do.	Quarterly	500
117	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
118	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	85
119	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	778
120	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
121	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
122	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	180
123	„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do.	300
124	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	915
125	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	115
	URDU.
*126	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
127	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
128	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	500
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
129	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	327
	SINDI.
*130	The Muin-ul-Islam	Karáchi	Weekly	200
131	The Sind Sudhár	Do.	Do.	500

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

In an arti

Says that the
of Mr. L. Ashburn
ing the easy cir
of the people of In borne out by facts.

their way to th
the value of the even in years
It was only d
brought to the minds these fi
out the countr
to draw upon t
and soul togeth known and it i yet it cannot be quantity of the
of the other ric
sent to the villag
those whose pro
ed from the st gauge of the large room for

The Sind

Comments on th
situation of the Br
ernment with r
Russia and Afghan

Russian Commis
and bless the mission. The noble art of tri
They know how strongly excited
that their occup
But the tempta
quietly occupie scheme of mar
advancing tide
was in earnest
voured to deter
is generally do
nance war give
does not preven
this respect the sued by Russia
hostile and pred
cause. Her na feared and res
neither feared
Their prestige
morrow the Ru
out of ten of the towards Englan
ally wrung out o
tribes has, we b
the English Gov

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that the statements of Mr. L. Ashburner regarding the easy circumstances of the people of India are not borne out by facts.

In an article headed "The Poverty of the People" the Subodh Patrika (15) of the 23rd November says:—Mr. Ashburner who has lately been very eloquent in the pages of the Nineteenth Century on the simple wants and easy circumstances of our ryots will no doubt be able to give some explanation of the enormous quantities of silver in the shape of ornaments which annually find their way to the melting pots in our mints. Leaving aside the famine year when the value of the silver ornaments so treated amounted to 124 lákhs of rupees, even in years of comparative prosperity it was as high as 10 and 4 lákhs. It was only during the past two years that the annual value of the ornaments brought to the mints for coinage came down to half a lákh. To ordinary minds these figures unmistakably tell of general poverty and distress throughout the country. For they show what large numbers of people have annually to draw upon their savings of former years of prosperity to keep their body and soul together. The universal love of ornaments among Natives is well known and it is only under pressure of distress that they are parted with. And yet it cannot be said that the figures above quoted tell the whole tale, for a large quantity of these ornaments surely falls into the coffers of the money-lender or of the other richer classes, where they either remain for an indefinite time or are sent to the village gold and silver smiths to be turned into new ones for the use of those whose property they have become. If accurate statistics could be obtained from the stalls of these artisans we should be in possession of an accurate gauge of the circumstances of the people. In its absence there is no doubt large room for explanations and arguments.

Comments on the political situation of the British Government with respect to Russia and Afghanistan.

The Sind Times (5) of the 25th November says:—General Zelenoy, the chief of the Russian Commission for the delimitation of the Afghan frontier, is not expected to reach the scene of operations until the end of December. The Indian Commission will have soon reached their destination, and until the leisurely appearance of the Russian Commissioner they may live on the freezing winds of those wild regions and bless the wisdom of the Government that sent them on such an important mission. The Russian authorities have by this time become adepts in the noble art of trifling with the solemn intentions of the English Government. They know how to divert and amuse public opinion in England whenever it is strongly excited against their fresh advances towards India. They were aware that their occupation of Sarakhs would meet with great opposition from England. But the temptation was too strong. They could not wait any longer and quietly occupied it. When England protested they were ready with this fine scheme of marking off the high tide level in order to set a limit to the advancing tide of Russian conquests towards India. The English Government was in earnest to arrive at an amicable settlement. It has all along endeavoured to determine by peaceful measures what among despotic governments is generally done by menace, war and bloodshed. Those who do not countenance war give England great credit for her peaceful intentions. But this does not prevent them from blaming her for her deficient statesmanship. In this respect the English policy compares very unfavourably with the one pursued by Russia. Russia has succeeded in bringing under her allegiance the hostile and predatory tribes of Central Asia and in making them friendly to her cause. Her name among all the barbarous tribes that inhabit Central Asia is feared and respected and her prestige knows no bounds. The English are neither feared nor respected by the tribes inhabiting the Afghan frontiers. Their prestige instead of gaining ground has gradually suffered, and if tomorrow the Russians were to appear in Afghanistan we feel certain that nine out of ten of the frontier tribes who are either neutral or profess to be friendly towards England would join the standard of Russia. The money which is annually wrung out of the Indian Exchequer to pay subsidies to the chiefs of the several tribes has, we believe, failed to attach them to the English cause and has lowered the English Government in the estimation of the warlike people who regard it as a tribute from the hateful Feringhees. The English have not succeeded in intimidating them; they have only whetted their covetousness for Indian gold. No impartial observer can therefore deny that the English policy in dealing with the warlike tribes on the north-western frontier of India has proved a most defective and shortsighted one. It has failed to win for the English that respect which it is of essential importance that the hardy mountaineers should entertain for their powerful neighbours. A more decisive policy can to a certain extent even now remedy this unsafe and regrettable state of things. We do not know what vigour and wisdom Lord Dufferin's advent will infuse into the policy of the Government of India towards the tribes dwelling on the western frontier. It is also doubtful whether the Afghan Delimitation Commission will succeed in achieving anything definite and important. The Russian Government does not seem to be in a hurry to proceed in the matter; and probably when the operations are fairly begun they will try to make them as ineffective and futile as possible.

Comments on the Government policy of railway extension.

In continuation of the article headed "The economic results of the Public Works policy" reported at pages 5—12 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 22nd November 1884 the Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha (4) for the month of October 1884 but received on the 15th November 1884 says:—A more minute consideration of the various plans adopted from time to time by the Government to give effect to the policy laid down by Lord Dalhousie may not be here out of place, especially as there is reason to apprehend that the tide of English public opinion after a temporary reaction is again running high in favour of guaranteeing private companies. The Government of Lord Dalhousie was as anxious as the present Government of India is to entrust the construction of railways to private agency. No private company however would undertake the work without important concessions. The concessions demanded at first were: that the lands required should be given free of charge, that the company's lease should extend to 99 years, with the power of purchasing after 25 or 50 years at the mean value of the shares for three previous years, and above all that 5 per cent interest should be guaranteed and in return the surplus, if any, should be divided equally till the payments of interest made by Government had been recouped. After 25 years we find that English capitalists are still as diffident as ever of risking their money in Indian railway enterprise, and all the advantage which Government has secured consists in the reduction of the guaranteed interest from 5 to 4 or 3½ per cent. The guarantee system, it need hardly be said, is the most recklessly expensive method of encouraging foreign capitalists. Under this system the cost of construction per mile has been about 16 or 17 thousand pounds. There was no motive for economy as Government had to pay the bill. The power of purchasing railways before the full term of 99 years expired was under the circumstances of no great advantage. The power of control and supervision was also nominal. The interest of the railway companies at head-quarters has oftentimes proved too great even for the Government of India, which had on many occasions to solicit the London directorates for a remission of rates, and, as in the famine crisis of 1877, this solicitation was often unsuccessful. Over and above the evils represented by this extravagance and want of control the absence of unity in management was felt by Government to be a serious hindrance in the success of its military operations, especially on the frontiers of India. The writer explains with the help of figures the net results of the work done from 1853 to 1870 by the guaranteed railway companies and proceeds:—The evils of the guarantee system led Lord Lawrence on the eve of his retirement from office in 1868 to suggest the expediency of substituting direct State agency in the development of State railways, and on the strength of this recommendation a change of policy was brought about between 1868 and 1870. From this year and fourteen years after the State borrowed on its own credit vast sums for railway construction. This plan of direct State construction was in some respects a decided improvement upon the guarantee system. It is true Government had to pay interest to its creditors in England, but the rate of this interest was never so high as 5 per cent. Moreover the management remained in the hands of a State organization which secured a complete unity of purpose and greater responsibility to local opinion. Lastly the surplus profits, if any, belonged to the public treasury instead of being shared, as under the guarantee system, with private companies. Above all no powerful foreign vested interests were created adverse to the interests of the people. Against these advantages the usual drawbacks of departmental action and control by a central bureau were found to entail considerable disadvantages. There was but little direct incentive to saving or economy, while uniformity and mechanical supervision ensured less efficiency in management and the works taken up were too often interrupted or starved for want of funds, which were diverted elsewhere by a change of policy or management. The inconveniences attendant upon this system of centralized State action could only be properly remedied by decentralizing railway management and handing over to the different provincial and local authorities the power of initiation and management and thereby interesting local knowledge and enterprise. Some steps in this direction have been recently taken, but as yet no definite change of policy has been inaugurated. The plan followed in America of assigning a certain proportion of the cost of new railways to the town communities and allotting unowned town-lands as security for this payment is not feasible in this country where unowned waste-lands do not exist, but some modification of the American system may be adopted here with advantage by interesting local district boards in the construction of small sections and by encouraging them to make arrangements with the State to share a portion of the cost and charge the payment of interest on local rates and in return participate with the State in the net receipts. In the absence of such a provision lines of State construction are less cheap and efficient than guaranteed railways, while State agency is equally open to the objection that it is not attended by the educational advantage of training the people to take direct interest in railway undertakings. As the net results of railways undertaken by the State between 1869 and 1879 we find that in all fifty-four lines were commenced chiefly as branch feeders to the guaranteed railways of the previous regime. Against the 260 miles costing five millions a year in construction, which was the annual rate of development under the guarantee system, we had only 218 miles a year constructed by the expenditure of two or three millions of borrowed capital. These State lines were mostly on the narrow gauge and the cost of construction per mile was about half the average cost under the guarantee system. In all about 24 krors of rupees were spent in ten years on the construction of 2,118 miles. After 1879 there was again a reaction in favour of the guarantee system in a modified form. It was found that the powers of the State to borrow large sums for so-called productive public works were practically limited and the choice of particular works was not always a happy one. Moreover the pressure of the famine crisis of 1876-77 diverted all the available resources of the State to famine relief, and the increasing loss by exchange compelled Government to restrict its annual expenditure within two or two and a half millions sterling a year. To supplement the State resources new taxation had to be imposed. The Government under these circumstances found it necessary to limit its direct agency to protective lines intended to provide for famine areas. All other lines had to be left to the initiation of private companies whose assistance was secured upon more favourable terms. The new Deccan Railways, as also one or two lines in eastern Bengal, are the outcome of this modified guarantee system. Under the three different systems we have noticed above in all 10,300 miles of railway have been constructed throughout India by an expenditure of 145 krors of rupees, and the net earnings on these lines at present exceed 7 krors after deducting maintenance and working charges. About 40 krors have been paid as arrears of interest during the same period, and adding this amount to the capital expenditure the proportion of net profits is about 4 per cent. The railways give employment to about 141,000 Natives in the subordinate service and to about 6,000 Europeans and Eurasians in the higher grades. While the total volume of foreign trade has increased fourfold the excess of exports over imports, instead of showing a proportionate decrease, has increased nearly fivefold. It is this excess which represents the indebtedness of the country and the measure of the tribute paid to the foreign capitalists. The railway interest represents in fact a vast monopoly in the hands of foreigners. While their services in facilitating transport and preventing distress in times of famine must be frankly accepted as great gains, it cannot at the same time be denied that the parties most benefited are those interested in the foreign trade of the country. This expansion of foreign trade has been a very questionable advantage as it has disturbed in an abnormal manner the national system of economy and industry. What was wanted in the interests of the nation was that simultaneously with these facilities of transport the States would have provided proper economic conditions of varied industrial life in the country, which alone would have enabled it to turn this advantage to national account. In the absence of such a provision this one-sided development has had the effect of paralyzing national activity at its centre. Industrial progress after all rests much more on the basis of increased production than on that of increased facilities for international exchange. The Government of India has in its too exclusive devotion to railway enterprise lost sight of this fact. Increased foreign trade by itself affords no indication of increased domestic production. Trade only distributes produce and does not in all cases necessarily create a new supply. The increase in the volume of the Indian trade has, as we have shown above, simply displaced national industry by withdrawing the artizan population from local industries and forcing them to resort to agriculture as their only resource. It is true the Government has tried in a half-hearted way to encourage the development of agriculture by undertaking the construction of great irrigation works. However its interests as the great landlord of the country have interfered with its freedom of action and obliged it to limit its assistance only to the negative forms of help. The magic sense of property which turns sand into gold can alone induce the cultivating classes to freely embark their capital in the improvement of agriculture. The Government has all along, except in Bengal, set its face against the concession of permanent rights in the land to the cultivating classes. It is hardly to be wondered at therefore that the ryot, tilling his land under a system of tenure so insecure, cannot fairly be expected to help himself or to improve the soil. This insecurity of tenure is probably the chief cause of the stagnation of agricultural industry in India. Government has, it is true, spent large sums on irrigation works, but they are like drops in the ocean of sun-parched land, many million acres of which lie beyond the reach of canal irrigation and are exposed to constant risks of drought which might be prevented if they were adequately supplied with wells. Well irrigation constitutes in fact the solution of the agricultural problem. Wells can only be provided by the people themselves, and these they will not be induced to dig unless their enterprise is secured by the concession of a permanent settlement. Until very recently, however, Government would give no such assurance and confined its direct help to the construction of large irrigation works. The total cultivated area in British India is about two hundred millions of acres. About one-seventh is under irrigation, and of the irrigated area about seven million acres are watered by canals. This represents a large proportion, although it is clear that there is still much room for extension. This form of State activity in the promotion of the material wealth of the country has been attended with the happiest results, especially as affording protection from famine. It would certainly have been more appropriate if the Chambers of Commerce in Bombay and Calcutta had raised a cry for more canals instead of for more railways, which has been the burden of their recommendations for the past few years. If more money is to be borrowed for public works canals have a prior claim upon the State's resources over railways. The Famine Commissioners in their report have also stated that as protective works the first place must unquestionably be assigned to irrigation canals. As far as this form of State intervention is concerned there is on the whole little ground for complaint except that other and more important measures ought to have accompanied it with a view to develop the manufacturing activity of the country. The Government have indeed adopted measures to start new forms of agricultural enterprise represented by the cultivation of cinchona, tea, coffee, tobacco and sericulture. The plan hitherto adopted by Government has been to start the enterprise on its own responsibility, and when its success was secured to hand it over to foreign adventurers. The State has further parted with its rights in the soil by selling its waste lands outright for nominal prices and creating freehold estates in favour of the planter class, while steadily refusing to grant the same boon to the Native population. The Famine Commissioners in their report state that they regard these foreign in ments and settlements as likely to be of great benefit to the country and that will provide new occupation to the labouring classes. We fully endorse this s ment, except that we object to the arrangement by which these industries immense areas of virgin soil are permanently transferred to the hands of for

ers. The planter community represents the germs of a foreign landed aristoc of the worst sort, for the planters do not settle permanently in the country combine in their person all the evils of alien domination and are at once racking stewards and absentee landlords. With all due deference therefore to views we join issue on this point with the Famine Commissioners and th our duty strongly to protest against this transfer of the State rights to planter class as simply ruinous to the nation whose interests it is the bou duty of Government to regard and promote. If such new industries are i first instance started by the application of national resources we submit th is but just that they should be handed over eventually to the natives o country or should be, if that course was deemed impracticable for a tim served in the hands of the State as a sacred trust for future transfer to nation in due course, but in no case should they be given over to the forei who has done nothing to help their growth or has run no risk with resp them and has therefore no moral right whatever to get possession of them.
a transfer of State-created industries to foreign hands is not only an act justice to the nation at whose expense they have been helped into growth taken along with the free transfer of land is a very high-handed spoliati the nation's most secure wealth. The foreign capitalist should at least be to pay the market price when he buys over the concerns and he should b quired to recoup and return to the State, and through the State to the n the whole cost of the experiment up to date. When this is not done he vir gets free of charge the monopoly of a national field of investment which not in the interests of the children of the soil that he should be thus suffe get. It is indeed true, and we fully admit the fact, that these foreign in ments give employment to Native labour and that foreign capital laid o
the country is so much an addition to the wages fund, the effect of wh either to increase the rate of wages or to provide food and work to an inc ing labouring population which multiplies under the stimulus. This latter alone is apparent in India, for the rate of wages shows as yet no sign of stantial increase, and what slight increase in the money rate of wages i ceptible is scarcely proportioned to the rise in prices and to the fall i value of money. Apart from this consideration we put it to the defende this policy whether it is a sufficient return for all this State expenditure scanty employment should be provided for Native labour. Should we be fied with such a result? Is it not at the same time just and necessary th whole of the profits of these national fields of investment should belong nation? It is not of course to the import of foreign capital into the co that we object. We on the contrary heartily welcome its most unrestricte port. But what we earnestly protest against in the name of national just the action of the State in encouraging and directly bribing the growth of fo enterprise in the country at national expense by concessions which it refu make in favour of indigenous production. The number of such foreign m polies in the country is already large and is on the increase. There is the guaranteed railway monopoly representing the formidable investment guaranteed interest of over 150 millions sterling; then comes the ba monopoly with its 140 working joint-stock companies having a paid up c of several krors; and next we have the smaller but by no means less prof investments in tea, jute, indigo and other concerns. Add to these the shi and mercantile interests, which together control the sea-borne trade o country, and we have a total sum of 300 krors of rupees investe monopolies created at national expense and charged on national resou
After all foreign monopolies represent so many anti-national interests we strongly hold that the growth of such interests in the country
guaranteed profits is undesirable both on economical and political gro Economically such a growth intensifies the evils represented by the fo occupation of so much of the total national field of investment which be

by every moral right to the nation and to none else. It amounts in fact to a virtual reduction of the natural heritage and provision for the varied wants of posterity, if not of the present generation. And if it is not intended to convert the whole nation or the majority of it into a dead level mass of labourers, hewers of wood and drawers of water, looking to the foreign monopolists to give them food and work, we think it argues on the part of Government a very narrow view of State responsibility in a country like India to permit or assist by direct interference such a result. Politically again it seems to us that such a growth of foreign interests in the country is a source of grave future danger. It would no doubt appear to short-sighted politicians who are easily misled by false historical parallels to be a distinct political advantage, highly conducive to the stability and strength of British rule in India. But it must not be forgotten that these foreign interests represent a strong foreign party in the country, who, themselves irresponsible for the peace and order of it, will ever seek to dominate and distort the action of the responsible Government with a view to promote their own selfish purposes. John Stuart Mill was right in thinking that in a dependency like India it was the foreign adventurer who must ever be a source of trouble to the Government and one which would be always difficult to deal with. Lord Lawrence feared the same danger and in Lord Ripon's time we have seen this calamity realized in all its potency. State intervention, however, in this direction is as yet limited, and we earnestly hope that before the evil gets past cure the grievous blunder will be rectified. Here we conclude this hurried review of the economic policy of the Government of India. As regards the policy itself it will be clear, we trust, from the foregoing review (1) that it is based on a view of the country's wants, in some respects lamentably erroneous, in others only partially correct; (2) that it is dominated by the influence of free-trade doctrines which do not apply in all their thoroughness to the economic conditions of India; (3) that the basis of State action is not sufficiently comprehensive, being restricted solely to the promotion of foreign trade; (4) that its economical results have been very detrimental to the varied growth of the nation's industrial activity; and (5) that a new departure is necessary on lines which a truer and more statesmanlike appreciation of the wants of the nation would seem to suggest. This new departure must minimize the tendency to create foreign monopolies, must encourage agriculture by conferring rights of property in land, and above all by the spread of technical education and by the help of judicious subventions train the nation to resume its old place as the home of arts and manufactures.

Points out the necessity of exercising greater caution in extending the cultivation of wheat.

In an article headed "Indian Wheat Trade" the Indian Spectator (1) of the 23rd November says:—Now if we have in these columns insisted upon one thing more than another in connection with the development of the wheat trade it is the extreme caution needed in extending cultivation of wheat. To superficial observers it may seem that the greater the growth the greater the prosperity of the ryot. Optimists like Mr. Lionel Ashburner may try to hoodwink the British public by such specious reasoning. But we hold that under present conditions, which are scarcely likely to mend unless the whole fiscal policy of the State in its relation to the ryot is altered on principles formulated by such an expert in agriculture as Sir James Caird, there is nothing but harder toil and greater pinch of poverty for the wheat-growers of this country. The peasant can never profit by it. As he borrows in cash he has to give up his corn measured by the value of the rupee. So that the cheaper the wheat the greater the pinch for ready cash which he feels. And the sorer the pinch the greater the temptation to borrow more. He has less money under the conditions stated above to satisfy his other domestic wants with. Either he must practise the utmost self-denial and forego the less pressing wants or succumb to his inevitable necessities and widen the extent of his debts. He may go for a year without buying the few yards of cloth needed to cover his loins. He may go without a few grains of salt per day. If not there is the sávkár or the middleman next door who must be propitiated. This aspect of the matter must never be lost sight of. What is true of the American farmer's financial straits is more forcibly true of the Indian ryots, whose lot compared with that of the former is decidedly harder.

Suggests that the recent resolutions introducing certain reforms in the present land revenue administration should be embodied in the form of rules having the force of law.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 27th November says:—Lord Ripon h long recognized the advisability of formulating the whole of India a system of land revenue admini tration similar to the permanent settlement of Beng and he had been much exerting himself in that conne tion. The Government of Bombay also has durin the last two years published resolutions which are keeping with the policy of the Government of Ind above indicated and in which it has been declared that assessments on lan already settled will not be subjected to a process of revision. It is estimat that the Survey Department will take eight years to complete the work of luation and Government has evinced its desire to abolish that department the expiration of the period specified. We have already said that this desi of Government is laudable and that if it is practically enforced it will pro very beneficial to the ryots, but we reiterate our opinion that such resolutio will not be appreciably useful. They will receive some strength and firmne if they are embodied in the form of rules having the force of law by means a special legislative enactment. Government resolutions do not possess t same force as rules having the force of law and the circumstance th the present executive officers have embodied their views in Governme resolutions only leaves a loophole for their successors to act as may best s their own inclinations. What we urge therefore is that rules calculated suit the conditions and requirements of different parts of the country should framed and given the force of law. It has transpired that the Secretary State has countenanced the view of the Government of India in the matter fixity of assessment. It appears that the Secretary of State has also adopt the view taken by us that a tax on improvements effected at the cost of lo funds would be tantamount to a tax on improvements effected at the cost private capital. The circumstance that the Secretary of State has express himself in favour of collecting the land revenue demand in kind instead of money as at present will give the quietus to a much vexed question and ca general satisfaction. The reforms proposed by the Secretary of State have approval and if promptly introduced they will serve to soothe the distress cultivator. [The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 24th November expresses satisfacti at the circumstance that the reforms in the administration of land reven proposed by the Government of India have met with the approval of the Sec tary of State.]

Corrects certain statements made in a previous issue.

In a paragraph headed " Revision of Assessment in the Kaládgi Distric the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 24th November says In our article headed " Revision of Assessment in Kaládgi District," which appeared in our issue of 6th ultimo (vide lines 18—20 on page 12 of the Report on Native Papers for week ending 11th October 1884) we remarked:—" Great injustice is done to public by Government not publishing along with the resolution all the pap on which the resolution is based." We find however that we were unde mistaken impression when we remarked as above and that as a matter fact Government did place on the Editor's Table the papers on which resolution commented upon by us in the article in question was based.

Some grievances of the zamindárs in Sind.

The Sind Sudhár (131) of the 22nd November 1884 publishes a le received from the zamindárs of dehs Karani, Dera, Bodo-dero, Sameta, Khairo Jetal, Gangarki, who say:—The Land Revenue Code has inflic great hardship on us in several respects. The Government does not recog our right over lands which are not actually in our possession. No for government, nor even the British Government prior to the introduction of Land Revenue Code, ever deprived the subjects of their right in this way. Code is wholly opposed to the interests of the subjects. No history or anci record furnishes a single similar instance of a subject population being depri of their rights over their own lands by the reigning power. All lands compri within each deh have been settled twice. On both occasions the landhol had to pay all expenses connected with the measurement of lands and the e tion of boundary marks and Government did not bear any share of the cost. The settlement is made for the benefit of Government while the cost of erecting and repairing boundary marks of both cultivated and waste lands is from year to year borne by the zamindárs, who cannot understand why they should be deprived of their right over waste lands they formerly enjoyed. If any of the survey numbers recorded in the name of an occupant become unfit for cultivation from any cause the occupant usually gives notice of relinquishment, but when at a future period the same numbers become arable Government sells them on their own behalf and thus ignore the right of the original holders. This is prejudicial to the interests of zamindárs. The original holders should be asked whether they would take up those numbers again and if they refuse then only should the lands be sold. All other waste lands are entered in the name of Government in settlement registers although zamindárs have many claims over these lands. But now Government have proposed to make over all such lands to the Forest Department, who will sell wood grown thereon and credit the proceeds to Government. The authorities should kindly consider how far this will affect the interests of the ryots. Wherever there are forest officers people have been reduced to poverty. Forests should be grown only in places where there may be continuous strips or patches of waste land without any cultivable land intermingled with them. No such strips can be found in these tálukas. The rights of the people over such lands should therefore be continued. Wood is constantly required for agricultural as well as for building purposes. The right of cultivators to the use of wood without the payment of any charge should not be interfered with. In every village people have a certain proportion of cultivable numbers. To bring them under cultivation it is necessary to enclose them, and wood-cutting from the adjoining jungle for this purpose should not be prohibited. Cattle have hitherto pastured over waste numbers without any payment. This privilege should be continued. All passages in the waste lands used by cattle on their way to the jungle should remain open. It is every now and then necessary to excavate canals through waste lands to supply cultivable lands with water. There ought to be no prohibition against excavating canals through waste lands. Zamindárs have many old wells and patches of fallow lands within these waste numbers. They should be allowed the use of these lands for purposes of cultivation, if necessary. Villagers always require fuel for domestic purposes. They should as before be allowed to cut wood for their use without any payment. Government will thus see how many inconveniences the people labour under. The rates of assessment are exorbitant and this circumstance has produced much discontent. Under the temporary settlement lands of all classes were assessed equally, but now in some cases the rates have been increased to five or six times the original rates. Many separate functionaries such as Tappadars, Mukhtiarkárs, Munshis, peons, police sowárs, constables, engineering officers (consisting of Sazawalkars, Mukádams, Beldars), civil officers (including Názars, bailiffs, chaprasis) and forest officers have been created by Government, and all these exercise some kind of power over the cultivators, who are thus put to much inconvenience and trouble. The ryots have to bear with all these officers and they find it hard to satisfy them all. In old times only one high official administered all these departments, and the English Government followed the old rule in the beginning of their regime. Although the subjects do not pay these officials directly, still they find it difficult to satisfy them all. If for instance any of the subject population cannot appear before any of these officers the latter report them to competent authorities and the subjects are at their wits' ends. There are many more grievances but they will be given expression to in future letters.

Comments on the last Administration Report of the Registration Department.

In an article headed "The Registration Department of Bombay" the Indian Spectator (1) of the 23rd November says:—The deficit under the head of "unprofitable offices" was Rs. 49,060 while the surplus under the head of "profitable offices" was Rs. 99,858, the net gain being Rs. 50,798. Says the Inspector-General:—"I trust that the financial results of the year may be deemed satisfactory by Government, especially when it is borne in mind that in only two previous years (1866 and 1872) has a larger surplus been secured." This may be deemed satisfactory by Government, but it is scarcely so from the tax-payers' point of view. It is something fearful to find that a department which yields a pittance of half a lákh of net revenue to the State treasury should eat away in cost fully 82 per cent. of the gross receipts. We doubt whether the cost of collection of land revenue, opium, salt and excise absorbs so large a percentage. The cost of collection of land revenue is only 15 per cent. of gross receipts; of opium, only 22 per cent.; of salt, 6 per cent.; and of excise, 3 per cent. only. Surely the Bombay Government ought to revise the general cost of the Registration Department. Again the mean average proportion of cost to gross receipts of the "profitable offices" is 63 per cent., while we find that the cost of some offices is as high as 70—71 per cent. The Sholápur office seems to be an extraordinary office, absorbing almost 90 per cent. of its receipts! It is clear that notwithstanding the exceptionally good financial results for which the Inspector-General takes credit some of the large offices are scarcely remunerative. It is a question for the Bombay Government whether some more economical arrangement cannot be devised. If it be asserted that the Registration Department is in its very nature more an unprofitable than a paying department, then the sooner the head office and all the sub-offices are subordinated to the Bombay Collector's office the better. But if that is not possible, then the next best plan would be to abolish the Inspector-Generalship and one or two subordinate posts. The Collector of Bombay or the Superintendent of Stamps and Stationery might be requested to take charge of general superintendence at a little extra cost, say Rs. 500 per month. We are of opinion that registration fees need to be reduced all round. The State should not make this department a burden on those who are compelled to go to it. It levies heavy fees in order to show that it is self-supporting. Why charge two annas for a folio when you should charge only one-fourth of that sum? Two annas may not be a great thing for the town or city man, but to the impoverished villager who has to resort to registration it is a considerable sum. He may buy that necessary of life, salt, somewhat freely with that money. Unfortunately the State never sees anything behind the outer veil of village life. What with your cesses, your salt duties, your heavy scale of fees for stamp and registration, apart from increased assessments at "slightly better rates," you deprive the poor man of his minute savings. These if left to him may do much good. Let it be remembered, as Rája Shivprasád pertinently observed in the Viceregal Council at the time of the passing of the Bill for reducing the salt duty in 1882, that 8 annas which a poor ryot may save per annum by the reduction is a sum considerable enough to enable him to buy a loti and a dhoti. We have left untouched the results of registration in the various agricultural districts. But it may be observed here that what the stamp revenue report has proved regarding the ryots of cotton-growing Khándesh has been corroborated by the registration report. So here is a second authoritative contradiction of Mr. Lionel Ashburner's complacent assertion touching the prosperity of the Khándesh ryots who grow cotton.

Points out the necessity of framing a new Insolvency Act for India.

The same newspaper refers to the success achieved during the first year of its existence by the Bankruptcy Act of Mr. Chamberlain passed last year in England and remarks:—It is very much to be wished that the Government of India may call for returns from the High Courts of the several provinces of the empire showing the average percentage of law costs paid to lawyers by Official Assignees and the mean average of dividends paid on bankrupt and other estates liquidated by those officials, as also the duration of each liquidation or bankruptcy. A return giving these statistics for the last 10 or even 15 years will show at a glance how wofully the moneys of creditors have been frittered away in fees to lawyers, and how unconscionably long is the period which Official Assignees under the present conditions of the law take to wind up an estate under their charge, not to say anything of the "beautifully small" dividends generally paid. "Mr. Chamberlain's Act has acted," says the Pall Mall Budget, "as a great deterrent to fraudulent bankruptcies." That is precisely what is wanted in India. We must stamp out or make impossible these fraudulent bankruptcies and thus place more money in the pockets of boná fide creditors. These must be the two principal aims of a new Act which the Supreme Government may introduce for checking the growth of commercial immorality. The statistics given by the same journal as to the number of bankruptcies since the Act came into operation in the United Kingdom are very telling and instructive. India sadly needs a Draconian code of bankruptcy. Given such a drastic piece of legislation like that of Mr. Chamberlain and a stern and impartial Judge like Mr. Scott, we may soon see the purviews of the Insolvent Courts in India generally empty. Bombay could not have forgotten the reign of terror established among the legions of insolvents during the period (1865) that the late Mr. Anstey sat on the bench. It is a fact tha the was mortally dreaded by dishonest bankrupts. Had he continued on the bench for a couple of years more as an Insolvency Commissioner the commercial atmosphere of Bombay might have been infinitely purer to-day. The low commercial morality to be daily seen in the city is, we boldly assert, the direct outcome of the days of that stupid Act known as "Act XXVIII. of 1865." Though its operation was limited to two years it did much mischief. It was a most unwise piece of practical legislation that poor Sir Bartle Frere, stricken with the collapse of trade in 1865, was led into passing. We very much wish that the Honourable Mr. Ilbert may follow Mr. Chamberlain. Bombay at any rate sorely needs such legislation. Refined business has made roguery a fine art amongst us.

Comments in connection with the views of Mr. Blunt on the subject of race hatred in India.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 24th November refers to the second series of Mr. Blunt's "Ideas about India" which has appeared in the Fortnightly Review for October last and observes:—The term "race hatred" does not in our opinion appropriately express the real feeling which rules the mutual relations between Anglo-Indians and Natives. There is no race hatred on the side of Natives. Their real feeling is one of fear, dissatisfaction and diffidence. Anglo-Indians on the other hand show contempt, hauteur, distrust, and even hatred towards their Native fellow-subjects. Thus Mr. Blunt's observations as regards class-hatred are strictly true with respect to the Anglo-Indian disposition towards Natives. Frequent exhibitions of unaccountably savage temper have unmistakably marked the prevailing Anglo-Indian animosity towards Natives as a class. But as regards the Native feeling we can confidently say that there is not only no hatred of the English race, as Mr. Blunt rightlyexplains it, but none even of the Anglo-Indians as a class. The dislike in most instances attaches to individuals. There is yet deep seated in the Native mind a feeling of honour and respect for Anglo-Indians as a class. However wronged by individuals the Native mind is too discriminating to charge the whole class with individual sins. There is therefore no chance of a revolution such as is prognosticated by Mr. Blunt. On this side of India at least the attitude of Natives towards Anglo-Indians is one of uncomplaining, respectful submission. There is no active dislike, and the conduct of Anglo-Indians here has been, we are happy to say, usually such as not to give cause for any active dislike. In other parts of the country however, notably in Bengal and Assam, the relations seem to be anything but cordial. The prevailing tone is one of active hostility. But even there the unequal strength of the parties puts a revolution quite beyond the range of possibility. It is however unsafe to predict in politics and the best security of our Government lies in recognizing the evil and attempting to cure it. To us it seems quite hopeless to expect a return of the cordiality and fellow-feeling of old. The utmost that we think possible to get, and what we shall have great reason to be thankful for, is the absence of active animosity, and this end can only be attained by a long course of good government. The description of Native feeling about Lord Ripon's Government as sketched by Mr. Blunt cannot be surpassed by a Native writer. It reflects in the truest colours the genuine sentiment of personal confidence and loyalty which Natives of India feel for the present Viceroy and which found remarkable expression at the time of the Ilbert Bill compromise. It is by such sympathetic government that the hearts and affections of Natives can be won and British rule made secure and esteemed by all classes of Her Majesty's subjects. When the head of a government is firmly benevolent, upright and liberal his temper gives a sympathetic tone to the whole administration. One of the peculiar blessings of Lord Ripon's rule is that not only has His Lordship himself been uniformly earnest, sincere and just, but his earnestness and sincerity have induced a similar temper in subordinate administrations. The peculiar deference to public opinion now-a-days exhibited by our Government and the condescension shown in asking for the opinions of leading Native citizens on questions of State policy are, we think, due to the influence of Lord Ripon's example. If therefore we succeed in getting sympathetic, sincere and just Viceroys and Governors we may look forward to a corresponding change of tone in the subordinate service and a gradual assimilation between Anglo-Indians and Natives. The task of sending us good Viceroys and Governors devolves upon the English nation, and it is to them that we ultimately look for protection. [The Bakul (20) of the 23rd November expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Comments on Mr. Malabari's notes on infant marriage and enforced widowhood.

In an article headed "Infant Marriage Statistics and Preventive Remedies" the Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha (4) for October 1884 but received on the 15th November gives statistical information compiled from the Bombay Census Report of 1881 which gives for each of the territorial divisions of the presidency the number of single, married, widowers and widowed, boys and girls in each of the two age periods, viz. under 10 years and above 10 but below 14 years, as also the proportion of married boys and girls under 15 to the total number of boys and girls under that age, and after summarizing the results to be deduced from that information remarks:—It will be seen from the information above given that early marriages are most prevalent in Berár and Bengal and that both Madras and Panjáb show very fair results. In Bombay the percentage of girls married under 10 is rather high as compared with Madras, North-West Provinces, Panjáb and Central Provinces, but is much lower than in Bengal and Berárs. Another interesting fact to be gleaned is that in Bengal, Madras and Berár there is an excess of girls over boys, while in the remaining provinces the excess is in favour of boys. We shall not stop here to inquire what important bearing this latter fact has upon the practical working of this social problem in the respective provinces. It will be quite clear from the foregoing that even if we confine our attention to the Hindu community only cases of early marriages among boys are not quite so general as one is led to infer from the perusal of Mr. Malabari's notes. The extent of the evil,—for evil it is, and we yield to none in regarding marriage before 20 for boys and 12 for girls as an evil all the same,—is limited though real, and we must not on any account allow our minds to be carried away by any exaggerated notions on the subject either one way or the other, either denying the practice to be evil or asserting it to be more extensive than it really is. We have unfortunately not got full marriage statistics in the Census Report of 1872; otherwise we could have shown by the production of infallible evidence that early marriages are now less frequent to howsoever small an extent than they used to be before. We do not mean to convey an impression that the necessary reform has been widely introduced in all the sections of the Hindu community; all we say is that slowly but surely such marriages are becoming less frequent every year. Our own experience points in that direction and we have no doubt that the experience of others is of the same character. We have next to consider the remedial measures proposed by Mr. Malabari and his correspondents. These remedial measures may be classed under several heads. There are those who think that the system of child marriages as it exists among us is in itself a very necessary safeguard against greater evils and that being prescribed by the institutes of religion and sanctioned by custom we must quietly let things alone. There are others who think that the custom is a sign of our national corruption and that it derives no sanction from the old texts but that the evil such as it is can only be cured by reforming our religion. A third set think that this change can only be accomplished by the spread of education and by nothing else. A fourth set would go further and think that the growth of a healthy social opinion is the only cure and that we must try to bring the pressure of this opinion to bear upon individual members and never think of resorting to executive or legislative changes. A fifth set have no objection to executive measures of relie but feel shy of seeking legislative help in the matter. Lastly there is a small section which welcomes all these agencies—social opinion, religious reformation, education, executive and legislative measures—directed so as to conserve all that is living and strong in our body politic. Mr. Malabari appears to belong to that section which advocates executive measures of relief. In his note on infant marriage he suggests that the universities should rule that after due notice they will confer their degrees on unmarried students only, and further that Government authorities should rule that they will prefer unmarried to married candidates in disposing of their patronage. As regards the first suggestion we regard it to be quite practicable and one which our universities might reasonably be expected to adopt. We do not think there is much force in what Mr. Lee-Warner says about such a suggestion being outside the legitimate province of the functions of an university. Until very recently English universities, which have served as models for our own institutions here, did impose such a condition in respect of their fellowships and degrees, and we further understand that a few of them have to this day retained such a restriction. If these are the traditions of English universities we fail to see how it would be ultra vires for our Indian universities to follow the same example, of course after giving a reasonable warning to avoid all injustice to those who may now be aspiring after university honours under existing conditions. Again such a rule, if enforced by our universities, would, we should think, be in full accordance with the accepted principles both of the Hindu and Moslem religions. The time-honoured Hindu principle is that so long as a boy is under instruction he should remain Brahmachári, i.e. an unmarried student while the Mahomedan religion enjoins, as we understand, that no Mahomedan girl should be married before she has reached the age of puberty, thus necessitating that no boy should be married before he has completed his minority As a general rule candidates for university distinction take their degrees before 21, and there can therefore be no hardship in the rule proposed. Thus fa we agree with Mr. Malabari. But we are afraid that Mr. Malabari is greatl mistaken if he supposes that such a ruling on the part of our Indian universities can produce any appreciable effect whatever on the masses. The class o people that come under the influence of our universities is so small that it wil be no exaggeration to say that it is a mere drop in the ocean. If we confine our attention to the Bombay University we shall find that the number o candidates who appear for the Matriculation Examination every year comes u to about 2,000 and that of this number one-fourth on an average is every yea successful. Of those that pass all do not go to the colleges, the great majorit being prevented by force of circumstances from availing themselves of th higher education given in those institutions. Let Mr. Malabari for instance tak any particular period, say 1872-73 to 1880-81, and find out for himself ho many of the total number of those that matriculated during that period attende colleges or succeeded in taking their degrees. We are not at all opposed to ou Indian universities framing such a rule as the one suggested by Mr. Malabari but it should not be forgotten that the adoption of it would produce no reall appreciable effect on the deplorable system of early marriages. Such a rul would be desirable on purely educational grounds. We must however add her that even without such a rule we are gradually and in the natural course o things progressing towards the attainment of the great object in view. Som fifteen years back it was not quite an unusual sight to come across, among those who were then studying for their degrees in our colleges, some undergraduates who had already had one or two children, but we feel almost sur that such cases are now almost conspicuous by their absence. We feel sur that the foregoing circumstance is a proof positive of the advance we hav already made and it furnishes a solid ground for the hope we cherish tha during the course of the next twenty years we shall make further progres even without resort to any special expedients. As regards Mr. Malabari' second suggestion we are afraid that it will in practice be found to be quit unworkable. Applicants for situations in the public service are as a genera rule persons who have attained their majority, that is, persons who have com pleted their twenty-first year. We do not think it will be quite p pose any condition of the kind suggested by Mr. Malabari upon people. Besides this objection the suggested expedient is also open objections as those urged against the last-named proposal; for if the number of those that will be affected by such a rule with th that will never come under its operation the remedy suggested to be simply inoperative. We have no sympathy whatever advocates of the "let alone" school, and it is hardly necessary to d views on this important question. They ignore history and they n their own traditions. The incubus of a decaying civilization ha their strength and benumbed their sensitiveness to the many admi

this and other practices in regard to which our duty to strive afte existence is clear, more especially as in so doing we are really wal footsteps of the sages whom we venerate and re-invigorating the r their true inspiration and example. In the same way we have no with those who advocate legislative interference in such social ma the existing circumstances. The existing constitution of our Legisl cils is not such that they can be safely entrusted with such a p advocates of this school contemplate. If our Legislative Councils popular in their constitution it would be different. But as it is we n to entertain the proposal for legislative interference. It will thus b our sympathies are with the representatives of the remaining scho
above, and we have no doubt that those who advocate religious refo education and the growth of sound social opinion as the only remedi under the existing circumstances for effecting the needful reform that full consideration for their several proposals which their imp mands. We have also very little doubt that if they will only realiz selves adequately their responsibility and act with moderation and fully abstaining from doing violence to the public feeling and i inspiring confidence among the masses, the representatives of thes we for our part regard it as one school only—will at no distant their efforts in the direction crowned with complete success. The has thus far attended the efforts of the representatives of this schoo which they certainly deserve to be warmly congratulated, is an earn may be expected in the immediate future from the uninterrupted and, if possible, renewed energy of similar efforts. During the years a good deal has been effected in the direction of discountena marriages, so much so that as justly observed by the learned Baroda Census Report the average marriage age for girls among is now between 10 and 12 whereas only twenty years ago it was qui All this change which has been silently effected is due to the civilizi at work, and being the result of conviction rather than of coercio have no doubt, endure and lead to further change. During the twenty years we shall see a still greater progress in the same direc
Hindu mind, which is very conservative and impatient, nay suspic external influence, does not undergo any revulsion of feelings in co any outside pressure, howsoever benevolent in itself. There is a evidence to show that we have gone from bad to worse; on the co is ample evidence to show that we have certainly made some real
the proper direction to howsoever small an extent. [The Shivāj
24th November, the Satya Shodhak (58) of the 25th November, th
(65) of the 24th November and the Prabodh Chandrika (51)
date are opposed to the policy of invoking Government aid for re customs of infant marriage and enforced widowhood, while the Di of the 23rd November says that it is as much the duty of the p for Government aid as it is the duty of Government to compl request.]

Recommends a relaxation of the provisions of the Arms Act.

In a paragraph headed "Destruction of Wild Animals and S
Native Opinion (11) of the 23rd Nove
The last issue of the Gazette of India con
lution on the destruction of these beasts o
it it appears that during the last year tho

large number of them was destroyed, the total number of persons killed rose from 22,125 to 22,905. Of these 20,067 died from snake-bite and 985 were killed by tigers. It is sad to observe that this loss of life should rise in proportion to the stringent enforcement of the Arms Act in the mofussil, and should this stringency continue for ever it is possible that an increasing number of human beings and domestic animals will fall victims to these wild depredators. In the teeth of this loss to humanity the Arms Act is a standing blot on a civilized administration, and yet it is maintained in all its glory as if the loss already caused is not enough to convince the Government of its inutility. One of the beauties of the Act is that well-to-do people in towns and cities are granted licenses for the possession of arms, while those in the far mofussil, where protection of men and domestic cattle from wild beasts is of prime importance, possession of arms is vigorously restrained. Is this statesmanship on broad principles? We have cried ourselves hoarse but Government is wedded to such queer notions about our loyalty that they seem to be prepared rather to look quietly upon this loss than repeal an enactment which is gradually but surely undermining the well-being of the mofussil people. [The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 27th November expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Suggests that the opinions of tobacco manufacturers in Great Britain and Ireland regarding the tobacco grown and cured in Nadiád should be translated into the vernacular languages of this presidency and freely distributed.

The Gujarát Mitră (72) of the 23rd November says:—We have to thank Mr. Monteath, Acting Secretary to the Government of Bombay, for furnishing us with a copy of the opinions of certain tobacco manufacturers in Great Britain and Ireland and of the agents at Gibraltar of the Chamber of Commerce, Bombay, to whom samples of the tobacco grown and cured last year at Nadiád in the Kaira district were sent for examination and opinion as to their quality and market value. It was a useful step to have invited foreign opinion, for our tobacco industry is in its infancy and great attention is required to be paid to it in order to make it profitable. The opinions which Mr. Monteath has kindly sent us might well be translated into the vernacular languages of the presidency and freely distributed among agriculturists and farmers interested in the industry.

Says that the orders of the Government of India in the matter of providing medical assistance to Government officers should not be allowed to be in operation in presidency towns only.

The Satyă Shodhak (58) of the 23rd November understands that the resolution of the Government of India in the matter of providing medical assistance to Government officers in receipt of small salaries and their families is held by the Bombay Government to be applicable to Presidency Surgeons only, and remarks that it would have been better if the latter Government had allowed their servants in all parts of the presidency to take advantage of the orders. All Government servants have been gratified at the orders of the Government of India and the Bombay Government should not disappoint them.

Recommends that the orders of the Government of India regarding free medical attendance should be extended to peons, orderlies, &c.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 23rd November says:—We wish the resolution had been made a little more comprehensive so as to include orderlies, peons and the minor fry. Of course in their case neither the Civil Surgeon nor his lieutenant need attend under all circumstances, but their attendance at least in cases of emergency and a free supply of medicines to them wherever possible should have been made compulsory. On the whole the arrangements made are judicious and the thanks of the services are due to Government.

Suggests that Government should provide counsel to assist poor offenders in all cases.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 24th November, while thanking His Excellency Sir James Fergusson on behalf of the poor populations for the resolution recently passed in the matter of providing counsel to offenders charged with capital crimes, says that the measure is a half-and-half one. It is not understood why the concession should extend to cases of murder only and not to others. We hold that it is incumbent on Government to provide counsel in all cases in which an offender, of whatever description, is pecuniarily unable to secure assistance think that compliance with our recommendation will entail co ditional expense on Government. The measure already sanctione to cost Rs. 5,000 annually, and if our suggestion is adopted it expenditure of Rs. 8,000 at the utmost, which is an insignificant compared with the total expenditure under "Law and Justice." We quest His Excellency to extend the scope of the concession alre

the lines suggested above so that many a helpless creature mig
[The Satyă Shodhak (58) of the 23rd November expresses similar

Some remarks regarding the official conduct of Mr. Whitworth, C.S.

The Rást Goftár (108) of the 23rd November says:—If what be true, we are very sorry that th
the well-known and worthy civilian M
some time Under Secretary to the G Bombay, has given rise to discussion an be taken notice of by Government. We have no authoritative i the subject. It is said that Mr. Whitworth has contributed an Pall Mlal Gazette complaining of and commenting on some oppressiv of the local A'bkári and Forest Departments. Some officials have Government to take notice of this conduct as it involves disobe standing orders. We wish that this piece of news were false. It wa an attempt to deprive Government officers of the liberty of freely ex honest opinions should have been made during the regime of Sir Ric but we cannot believe that this is possible during the regime of Sir Ja unless an officer openly insults Government by being excessively
We have not read Mr. Whitworth's article in the Pall Mall Ga know that Mr. Whitworth is not a man to disobey the orders of nor is Sir James Fergusson a Governor to act arbitrarily in an Praja Mitră (107) of the 26th November, in referring to the same su
Have not experienced Indian officers the right of publicly comm oppressive legislative measure? Does Government wish to prevent of opinion on such a harsh measure as the A'bkári Act?]

Suggests that Mr. S. N. Tagore should be appointed to one of the vacancies that are likely to occur on the High Court bench during the next year.

The Sholápur Vritt (62) of the 27th November says:—Mr.
goes to Egypt in January next. Messrs
Pinhey are also going to retire during t
There will thus be three vacancies on th bench. The choice of a successor to places is sure to fall on Mr. Birdwood.
place the nomination of Sir W. Wedderb most appropriate. For the third place
Dr. Pollen is on the cards, but we are not in favour of his appoint ground that he is a very junior officer and is not fitted by exper such a responsible post. The appointment of Mr. S. N. Tagore much creditable to Government as being a boon to the Nati
as it would be a reward for the long and meritorious services of M

Comments on the reply given by Sir James Fergusson to the address presented to him by the Sátára Municipality.

The Kesari (37) of the 25th November says:—While replying presented by the Sátára Municipality S
gusson gave utterance to some disagreeab
We know full well whether Sir James b Tory or the Conservative party. Where sity then of his saying it in so many words have now acquired considerable kno ways of conservative Governors and Governors General. Sir Jame that could be expected of a conservative Governor and for this we to him. But when he indulges in disagreeable utterances on i sions like the one under advertence the public esteem for him suffers. We hope that His Excellency will not give vent to any sions in the future.

Complains that the Sind Times is not favoured with official communications.

In a leader headed "The Government and the Press" the S
of the 25th November gives the details
in which official information was withh
Morning Post by the Patronage Secr
Treasury, and in another paragraph ob instance of a ministerial boy-cotting in England reminds us of a little negle certainly not so serious, with which we can reproach the Bombay Governme While the Panjáb Government has the courtesy to send us all administrati and other reports, the Bombay Government, under which we happen to liv thinks it proper to keep us in blissful ignorance of all that is happening in th part of the world. That the Bombay Government is doing good work w have no doubt, looking at the two or three humane and most praiseworth resolutions which were published in the columns of our Bombay contemporarie but we should like, and we think we have a right, to know something about th internal administration of the Bombay Presidency. And unless and until w get the administration reports we can know nothing of the doings of Governmen [The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 26th November does not understand why it shoul have been excluded from the list of newspapers that are to be favoured with officia reports. Has the Jáme Jamshed drawn upon itself the wrath of the Bomba Government by the severe though honest and just strictures made by it on som of its objectionable acts? We refuse to believe that this can be the case, bu at the same time we cannot help being surprised at the omission. In th administration report of this presidency for 1882-83 it is stated that the Bomba Samáchár (81), the Jáme Jamshed, the Gujarát Mitră (72) and the Rást Goftá (108) occupy a prominent position among the Gujaráti papers. What is the reaso then of this omission? It is amusing to find that the Kesari (37) of Poona, whic is stated in the abovementioned administration report as being unfriendly in it tone towards Government, is now included in the list of newspapers to be supplie with official reports. From the experience we possess of the resolutions issued b the present administration we are not surprised at this conduct. Whether th Jáme Jamshed receives official reports or not it will not fail to guard the publi interests. It cares more for public opinion than for that of Government. W know that independent writers frequently displease Government. The Akhbár Sodágar (77) of the same date is sorry to find that Government has not take any pains to know what other papers besides those mentioned in the resolutio regarding the supply of official reports to newspapers command influence The Akhbár received a permit ten years ago allowing its reporter access to th editor's room in the Secretariat. This circumstance has evidently been los sight of in framing the resolution now issued.]

Complains that the orders of the Secretary of State and the Government of India in the matter of communicating official reports to the public press are not fully carried out.

The Bakul (20) of the 23rd November says that the recent order of the Secretary of State in the matter of communicating officia reports to the public press has only led the Bomba Government to enlarge a little the very limite circle of newspapers which heretofore enjoyed the privilege. The indifference of our local Government i the matter in the face of repeated orders of the Government of India and the Secretary of State is indee inexplicable. We do not know what the practice in other presidencies is, but th wishes of the Government of India do not appear to be acted upon in thi presidency. It is the desire of Government that the press should discus political and social subjects, and the occasions for such discussion are als increasing day by day. In these circumstances it behoves Government to mak all the necessary materials available to the conductors of the different organs o public opinion in every possible way, and it is hoped that the subject will soo engage the attention of the local Government.

Complains of the bad condition of some of the ginning factories in the Surat district and requests the Factory Commission to inspect the small factories in the whole of Gujarát.

The Gujarát Mitră (72) of the 23rd November says:—There are severa old ginning factories in the Surat district and thei number is increasing every year. The proprietors o these factories, which work during the cotton seaso care only for their profits. They do not care to spen money on keeping the engines, boilers and machiner in good order. The boilers have become very ol and give rise to fearful accidents. Several lives wer lost a few years ago by the bursting of an old boiler at Kim. Several old factories continue working in such a wretched condition. Moreover the engines of some of them are looked after by carpenters and blacksmiths instea of being in charge of qualified engineers. Some of them are situated in thickly populated quarters. The Factory Commission must not be aware of the fact that the poor labourers are obliged to be at work for nearly twenty-four hours and that work is exacted from them by offering the inducement of increased wages. The members of the Committee ought to visit the several factories in the whole of Gujarát with a view to acquaint themselves with their condition, with the state of labourers employed in them during the cotton season and with the qualifications of persons in charge of the engines. When the condition of some of the factories in Bombay has not been found to be satisfactory, it is highly necessary that a personal inspection of the factories in the cities and villages in the mofussil should be undertaken.

Says that the scheme of appointing honorary surgeons to hospitals has not failed and recommends the Bombay Government to give it a further trial.

The Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 29th November says:—It was generally expected that the resolution of the Bombay Municipal Corporation regarding the advisability of re-appointing honorary surgeons to the Goculdás Tejpál Hospital would be acceded to by Government, but the recent resolution of the latter on the subject does not realize that hope. The new resolution is hasty and will prolong the controversy. Government state in it that the resolution adopted by the Municipal Corporation is brief and somewhat wanting in respect towards them. It is true that it is brief, but that is no argument against it. Brevity is convenient to some extent in public business. It would be a waste of time to adopt long resolutions on petty subjects. We do not find any indications of disrespect in the resolution of the Corporation. As much politeness as could be shown in a short resolution has been used. It is surprising that Government should ask for proofs of the success of the experimental measure of appointing honorary surgeons to hospitals. At the beginning of the controversy Government themselves denied that the scheme was a failure and re-appointed the honorary surgeons to the Goculdás Tejpál Hospital. The latter resigned and then at the time of making fresh appointments Government began to look upon the scheme as having failed. Government have therefore to establish their position. The experiment has not completely failed and it is useless to ask for proofs in support of this statement. The public press has given sufficient proofs. The action of Government will therefore prolong the controversy and give rise to useless discussion. If Government are really doubtful of the success of the measure there should be no objection to giving it a further trial for one year. The best course for Government at the present juncture is to give the scheme a further trial for a short time.

Want of rain in Kaládgi.

The Hitechchhu of Kaládgi (31) of the 23th November says:—Rain is very badly wanted. Its absence has caused an enormous rise in prices and there are chances of a further rise. Jowári is selling at the rate of 15 sers per rupee and it is apprehended that if rain does not fall at an early date prices of corn will be as high as 10 sers per rupee. We are of opinion that Government should take immediate measures in the matter.

Complains of the injustice of an order prohibiting those who have simply passed the Maráthi Sixth Standard Examination from entering the Customs Department.

A correspondent of the Din Bandhu (6) of the 23rd November complains of the injustice of an order issued by the Customs Department providing for the employment of persons who have passed the English Public Service Examination and the Matriculation Examination to the total exclusion of persons who have passed the Maráthi Sixth Standard Examination, and requests the attention of Mr. Pritchard to the matter.

Local Self-government.

Makes certain suggestions for making the people thoroughly acquainted with the scheme of local self-government.

Referring to the recent resolutions of Government on the subject of local self-government, the Bakul (20) of the 23rd November says:—Resolutions are often issued impressing upon Government officers the necessity of taking interest in movements of the nature of local self-government and the motive underlying such resolutions is also most praiseworthy. But it nevertheless often happens that the object of Government is not fulfilled either owing to other demands on the time of the local officers or their carelessness. Very few Government officers will be found who have taken the pains to know correctly what local self-government means and what the arrangements are which it is contemplated to make in order to introduce the scheme, and in all or most cases the orders of Government are perfunctorily carried out. But for this we cannot blame the local officers. They have already been burdened with so many duties that there is no probability of their finding time to make themselves acquainted with the subject of local self-government. It was suggested in some quarter that a special officer should be placed in charge of a special department for some time in order to work the new scheme, but no steps have yet been taken in that direction. We have no mind to discuss the question of the magnitude of the good that might result from the appointment of one or two special officers for the whole of India. But we think that the appointment of a special officer for each district and of another for each táluka until such time as the elections are completed will without entailing appreciable cost on Government lead to satisfactory results and save the already over-worked local officers an amount of trouble. Although Sir James Fergusson appeared in the beginning very indifferent towards the new scheme, still he has on several recent occasions given proofs of his desire to see the scheme realize the best hopes of its originators and the resolutions under advertence are an index of the same desire. Officers of the Educational Department having more leisure than those of the Revenue Department are generally better acquainted with current topics, and as they constantly read the resolutions of Government and the comments of the press on them their knowledge is many-sided. Moreover these officers being teachers by profession are eminently fitted to acquaint the public with the subject of local self-government. It is therefore indispensable that the agency of these officers should be utilized by Government.

Comments in connection with the elections in Karáchi.

The Sind Times (5) of the 21st November says:—There is a rumour in the town that in recommending nominations of municipal commissioners the Collector has not selected the representatives of considerable and influential sections of the community and has selected too many to represent certain minorities. We admit that it is always a difficult task to satisfy all parties. But we trust that before sanctioning the nominations the Commissioner in Sind will satisfy himself that the men chosen are real representatives and that too many representatives are not given to one section to the exclusion of several other equally deserving sections. He can ask the Collector to state what communities he thinks ought to be represented and by how many members, and then decide whether the proportion is fair and reasonable. We trust that every endeavour will be made to carry out the express and repeated promises of Government made during the debates on the Municipal Bill and that no section of the population of any importance will be left unrepresented.

Recommends the appointment of an educational officer to every táluka board.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 29th November, signing himself "A Mehtáji," points out the advisability of appointing school-masters to all táluka boards and observes that such an arrangement would prove very beneficial to the village public and schools.

Railways.

Points out the necessity of fencing the Dhond and Manmád line of railway.

The Sholápur Vritt (62) of the 27th November understands that the Dhond and Manmád line of railway is not fenced, points out the danger to life consequent on the unfenced condition of the line, and requests the attention of the authorities of the G. I. P. Railway to the matter.

Municipalities.

Points out the necessity of preserving and cleaning old tanks and wells in Bombay and of taking in hand the construction of the Tansa lake.

The Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 25th November, in referring to the destruction of the water-supply of Madras by a severe storm, says:—Bombay will do well to profit by the startling lesson taught by the destruction of the Madras water-supply. Since the construction of the water-works for this city many wells and tanks have been filled in and the remaining are being kept in a filthy and ruined state. Whenever there is a break in the local water-suppl have to resort to old tanks and wells and then a complaint is raised r diseases and deaths from the use of the water of these tanks a Notwithstanding this no attention is paid to the cleaning and keeping in good condition. This conduct of the authorities is blameworthy. struction of the Tansa lake or any other source of water-supply wi away with the necessity of preserving and cleaning the several t wells in the city. The old and even useless tanks and wells sh preserved and cleaned once a year. This will save the city calamity similar to that which has recently overtaken Madras. [T Jamshed (96) of the same date urges the speedy construction of t lake, and says that after the lesson Bombay has derived from struction of the water-supply of Madras and from some of the disastr which have broken out in the city it is advisable that encouragement s given to the sinking of wells. It is true that some of the existing well poisonous water, but if the authorities concerned exercise supervis manage to have them cleaned at fixed intervals and if they are covered a mended by Dr. Hewlett they will prove of great use. Will not the M Commissioner now strike the iron while it is hot? The Akhbáre Sodá of the 26th November also urges the construction of the Tansa lak cost. A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (108) of the 23rd Novem plains of the filthy condition of the water of the Mumbádevi and Bh tanks and requests the municipal authorities to take steps to ke clean.]

Fire on the Duncan Road, Bombay.

The Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 25th November says:—The rece the Haidri Press on the Duncan Road gives an a proof of the weakness of the local fire-brigad ing to the large amount of money spent on i too much to expect that it should be able to save buildings on fire and them to be destroyed. The supply of water at the time of the fire wa Notwithstanding this the building could not be saved. This fact sh there is some defect in the management of the fire-brigade. No time s lost in remedying this defect. If the police cannot efficiently manage brigade, it ought to be entrusted to the care of other officers. If comp cannot be got here they ought to be ordered out from other plac Prabhákar (12) of the 29th November expresses similar sentiments. Th Sodágar (77) of the 26th November says:—According to the infor have received the fire-engines received water one hour after the breaki the fire. If the supply of water had been immediate no great dama have been done. We do not know how far our information is correct much is certain that a complaint regarding deficient supply of water i Bombay. It is very necessary that stringent measures should be ad removing the cause of this complaint.]

Complaints of unsatisfactory sanitary and lighting arrangements in the town of A'landi in the Poona district.

A correspondent of the Shiváji (61) of the 21st November compla inconvenience caused to the pilgrims visiti in the Poona district on the occasion o nual Kártiki fair by want of satisfactory and lighting arrangements in the town and the attention of the municipal authoritie matter.

Native States.

Requests the attention of Government to a circular which is being widely circulated in Bombay and in which the Thákor of Bhávnagar and his Government are accused of various crimes.

The Prabhákar (12) of the 28th November says:—A circular in is being widely circulated in the city of B which the Thákor of Bhávnagar and his Go are accused of crimes of various kinds fro and poisoning downwards. The circular is a Hindu mendicant but the object of issuing bably best known to himself. He does not aim at causing injury to the Thákor by mean political intrigue and even if he does there is no chance of even th prejudice to the Thákor from such writings. But it is not safe to allow such circulars to be printed and distributed. The object of the Thákor's assailant appears to be to extort money, but it does not appear easy of accomplishment. [The Káside Mumbai (101) of the same date has also received a copy of the circular above referred to and observes that it would be well if the Bombay Government made some investigation in the matter.]

Berár Affairs.

Says that Dr. Little has transferred Mr. Shrinivásráo, Hospital Assistant of the Amráoti Camp, against the orders of the Resident.

A correspondent of the Vaidarbh (16) of the 22nd November says:—The Sanitary Commissioner Dr. Little's orders regarding the transfer of Mr. Shrinivásráo, Hospital Assistant of the Amráoti Camp, was cancelled by the Resident and the First Assistant Resident had to convey the censure of the Resident to Dr. Little for this piece of Anglo-Indianism. Immediately on his return from England it has pleased the Sanitary Commissioner to undo what the Resident only 2 or 3 months ago thought best to do at the request of the official and non-official residents of the Amráoti Camp. Poor Shrinivásráo is now sent to an out-of-the-way station, Daryápur, on a much reduced remuneration.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
1st December 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Addresses: Comments on the reply given by Sir James Fergusson to the address presented to him by the Sátára Municipality 17
Appointments: Suggestion that Mr. S. N. Tagore should be appointed to one of the vacancies that are likely to occur on the High Court bench during the next year 17
Arms Act: Recommendation for a relaxation of the provisions of the —. 15
Customs Department: Complaint regarding the injustice of an order prohibiting those who have simply passed the Maráthi Sixth Standard Examination from entering the — 19
Factory Commission: Complaint regarding the unsatisfactory condition of some of the ginning factories in the Surat district and request to the — to inspect the small factories in the whole of Gujarát ... 18
Free trade and railway extension: Comments on the Government policy of railway extension... 4
Honorary Surgeons: Expression of opinion that the scheme of appointing — to hospitals has not failed and recommendation to the Bombay Government to give it a further trial 19
Indian Insolvency Act: Necessity of framing a new— 11
Infant marriage and enforced widowhood: Comments on Mr. Malabari's notes on — 13
Judicial matters: Suggestion that Government should provide counsel to assist poor offenders in all cases... 16
Land revenue:
  Correction of certain statements made in a previous issue of the Indu Prakásh regarding "revision of assessment in the Kaládgi district" 9
  Grievances of the zamindárs in Sind 9
  Suggestion that the recent resolutions introducing certain reforms in the present — administration should be embodied in the form of rules having the force of law 9
Medical assistance to Government officers:
  Expression of opinion that the orders of the Government of India in the matter of providing — should not be allowed to be in operation in presidency towns only 16
  Recommendation that the orders of the Government of India regarding free — should be extended to peons, orderlies, &c. ... 16
Political situation of the British Government: Comments on the — with respect to Russia and Afghanistan 3
Poverty of the people of India: Expression of opinion that the statements of Mr. L. Ashburner regarding the easy circumstances of the people of India are not borne out by facts 3
Public service: Remarks in connection with the conduct of Mr. Whitworth, C.S., in having contributed an article to the Pall Mall Gazette commenting on the administration of the A'bkári and Forest Departments of Government 17
Race hatred in India: Comments in connection with the views of Mr. Blunt on the subject of— 12
Registration Department: Comments on the last administration report of the— 10
Supply of official papers to the public press:
  Complaint that the orders of the Secretary of State and the Government of India in the matter of communicating official reports to the public press are not fully carried out 18
  Complaint that the Sind Times, the Jáme Jamshed and the Akhbáre Sodágar are not favoured with official communications ... 17
Tobacco: Suggestion that the opinions of tobacco manufacturers of Great Britain regarding — grown and cured in Nadiád should be translated into the vernaculars of the presidency and freely distributed ... 16
Want of rain in Kaládgi: Complaint regarding— 19
Wheat trade: Necessity of exercising greater caution in extending the cultivation of wheat... 8

Part II.—Local Self-government—

Elections in Karáchi: Comments in connection with the —... ... 20
Scheme of Local Self-government: Suggestions for making the people thoroughly acquainted with the— 19
Táluka Boards: Recommendation for the appointment of an educational officer to every — 20

PART III.—Railways—

Dhond and Manmád line of railway: Necessity of fencing the— ...

PART IV.—Municipalities—

Bombay: Necessity of preserving and cleaning old tanks and wells in — and of taking in hand the construction of the Tansa lake ...
Fire on the Duncan Road, Bombay: Complaint regarding the inefficiency of the fire-brigade ... ...
Poona: Complaint against the unsatisfactory sanitary and lighting arrangements in the town of A'landi in the — district ... ...

PART V.—Native States—

Bhávnagar: Notice of a circular which is being widely circulated in Bombay and in which the Thákor of — and his Government are accused of various crimes ... ...

PART VI.—Berár Affairs—

Public service: Expression of opinion that Dr. Little has transferred Mr. Shrinivásráo, Hospital Assistant of the Amráoti Camp, to Daryápur against the orders of the Resident ... ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

47775
INDIA OFFICE
31 DEC 1884

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 6th December 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	1,000
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	281
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	275
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	160
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
37	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	4,350
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
39	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
40	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*41	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	400
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	450
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*54	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 942

Politics and the Public Administration.

Comments in connection with the views of the St. James's Gazette regarding the possibility of a mutiny in India.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 30th November says:—There is danger to India in England itself. In magnitude it will surpass the danger to India from the Russians or the danger arising from the disaffection of Natives. The mutual jealousies of the political parties in England will one day bring the British Indian empire into serious danger. While it ought to be the duty of Liberals and Conservatives, Whigs and Tories, to forget their differences and to adopt one uniform method of ruling India, it is very often found that party feelings make the leaders of both the parties forget the importance of hiding from the people of India the party feuds which, however beneficial their effect on the politics of England, are certainly injurious to Imperial interests. In their anxiety to bring their opponents into discredit the leaders of each party misconstrue, misrepresent and without solid grounds condemn the Indian policy of the party in power. Some real and many imaginary faults are constantly dwelt upon in eloquent terms either in the press or on the platform, and good actions are absurdly misinterpreted. There was perhaps not a period in the history of British India when Natives were so loyal to the Queen of England as at present or so strongly attached to her representative. And yet the opposition is not afraid of telling the British public on the authority of "the undoubting, anxious judgment of the most authoritative and most responsible servant of the Crown in India" that "we are on the brink of disastrously troublesome times in India," that "as events march it seems quite upon the cards that in a year or two we may be in the thick of a storm to which that of 1857 was a joke," and that "the spirit of disloyalty has become far more general, much more open and threatening, than it ever was before." Can there be a greater calumny or a more indecent misrepresentation of the real state of things than is contained in the words last quoted? It would not be advisable at any time for any of the English parties to proclaim that there is discontent and disaffection in India, that British rule is hated by Natives, that India must always be governed by means of the sword, and that the loyalty of Natives can never be trusted, even supposing that all or some of these allegations were facts. It is folly, no matter what party commits it, to make such a declaration when vigilant, ambitious and powerful semi-barbarians like the Russians are anxiously watching for a convenient opportunity to disturb the peace of India. But when such a declaration is made at a time when actual facts give the lie to every word of it, we are simply disgusted with the unrighteous and dishonest motives of the party calumniators, who in their anxiety to bring about the downfall of their opponents weaken the foundation of the empire by their false and grossly exaggerated writings published at the most ill-advised and inopportune time. It is neither safe nor proper to be blind to the real danger that is likely to befall this country from what is called the "civilizing mission" of Russia to Central Asia. In these days no sane man doubts that that country has long been making preparations for an invasion of India. We are not alarmists ourselves, but at the same time we do not like that indifference to real danger which some men take great delight in. We must take all reasonable precautions to oppose Russia successfully in case she shows any disposition to fight with us. But can this be done by proclaiming to the world at large, to friends as well as to enemies, as the writer in the St. James's Gazette has done, that "we are on the brink of disastrously troublesome times in India," &c.? Such declarations are simply suicidal and more so when they are not founded on facts. We have neither will nor time to refute the altogether false assertion that the spirit of disloyalty has become far more general, much more open and threatening, under Lord Ripon's reign than it ever was before. The sincere affection with which His Lordship is being received from town to town, the great reverence that is manifested in every address that is presented to him, and the universal enthusiasm by which the whole nation has been moved to do honour to him, are clear indications of the loyal attachment of Natives to the sovereign people. As to the inefficiency of the Native army it is no use dilating over it even if it be a fact. The best course would be to silently try to cure the defect without giving our enemy the slightest scent of it. And in this connection we recommend to the notice of authorities in this country the valuable suggestions made last Times of India. All regiments must in turn be given a chance t themselves on the battle-field and to win military honours. As th

we have no wish to depreciate the valour of the Gurkha and the S it not be forgotten that the Maráthas, the Rájputs, the Parde Patháns may also come up to their level if properly encouraged.
remembered that the devoted and trustworthy people, assisted by
and courage the great Bhonsla founded the Marátha dominion, lost all their martial instincts so soon.

Says that the system of revenue settlement obtaining in Sind has prejudicially affected the zamindárs in that province.

In a series of articles headed "The rights of Zamindárs in Sin Times (5) reviews the position of the
that province from the early to the mo
the British rule, and in its issue of the 28 quotes extracts from the correspondence between the Government of India and ment of Bombay in 1875 on the subject o indebtedness of zamindárs which is said to have been brought on by
of the Survey Department, and observes:—The reply of the Governme the Bombay Government strongly commented on the fact that the of the Government of India had not been observed, and wit pointed out that if they had been observed "this most unfortu things" brought to their notice by the Government of Bombay wo come into being. The Government of India described the conditio of the full assessment as one "impossible to fulfil" for the zamin ring to the alternatives offered by Colonel Haig to the zamind resigning their waste lands or paying the full assessment the Gover said:—"With that attachment to their hereditary lands which is of the people of India many chose the latter alternative and gra themselves involved in greater and greater difficulties; while it ma from the extract from Colonel Lambert's report quoted at the end 8 of the despatch that those who were compelled to resign th
they had enjoyed under Native rule and under our Governme introduction of the settlement resented deeply the deprivation as which has 'alienated from us all the oldest and most influe amongst the zamindárs.'" In the October number of the Ninet
Mr. Lionel Ashburner informed the public that no settleme duced until it had been carefully criticised and reported on lectors and the Commissioner of the Division and thoroughly re Government. His Excellency Sir James Fergusson also assure deputations that waited upon him recently at Karáchi that the ra fully considered before they were sanctioned. It is therefore not a to find the Bombay Government admitting that the alternative o Settlement Officers, an alternative distinctly in contravention of the Government of India, was "generally lost sight of when r Settlement Officers' proceedings." Mr. Ashburner may say what there is no denying the fact that the settlement proceedings in have seldom evoked any very intelligent interest or vigilant att part of the local Government. It was therefore quite a surprise t lency Sir James Fergusson to be told that the Bombay system ha astrous to the zamindárs. Had he been apprized of the previo settlement operations in this province he would never have felt t prise at this remark. His predecessors and the Government admitted its truth long ago. The latter went even so far as to thorough reversal of the Bombay policy not only in the future but We cannot praise too much the just and generous instincts which this measure. But we cannot shut our eyes to the sad moral whic reads this article will fail to deduce. Surely something must be mode of administration when such damning confessions are ma of Settlement Officers, "the unintelligible Sáheb, the wily Ba grasping Amin, with all their instruments of torture, chains, scale theodolites, with their mysterious methods of calculation, their de ledge of arithmetic, and their inexplicable ignorance of the value as that veteran journalist, Robert Knight, puts it, are let loose where the people are poor and illiterate, where cultivation d capricious river and where a tenure subsists to which the Bomb settlement is admittedly unsuited. The Government of India introduction of the system obtaining in the North-West Prov Bombay Government, infatuated with its own system, refuses

Then the Government of India lays down specific directio allotment and assessment of waste, and the first thing the Settl do is to break them altogether. Then proceedings pass throu missioner to the Bombay Government, but neither the one nor the the non-observance of the orders of the Government of India. T are at one fell swoop divested of their hereditary rights in waste and told either to pay for them or to resign them. Th pay for them and become insolvents. Then the Government and hastens to remedy its errors. The Supreme Government w
the fullest reparation, but the Bombay Government thinks it wou prestige to do so. Instead of neutralising the undoubted mischi Settlement Department a makeshift is resorted to, a two-penny b is passed to suspend free contract, to reduce the zamindárs to a sta to deprive them of all power of action regarding their lands, ar this power to a Government official endowed with the fullest auth all their creditors except the Government at arm's length and to r demands to one half at least if not to something still less. The India looked the facts full in the face and did not quail before t sufficient moral courage to recommend an honest course of re reparation. But the local Government would not hear of this cou and could not but make some concessions, but these concessions
the root of the matter. The fundamental and radical mistake extending the Bombay settlement system to a province where meant the confiscation of the ancestral rights of numerous zamin persons whose interests were noway antagonistic to those of ext
tion, who had inherited their lands from generation to generat been confirmed in their rights by Sir Charles Napier, and who tribal heads or feudal chieftains held in high esteem among t
This fundamental radical mistake, we emphatically say, has reta
gress of Sind and will continue to retard it until it is remedied.
remarked by a great philosophical historian that civilization amongst men who have no leisure. The cultivator of the soil in leisure. The assessment is too high to permit him to enjoy it. is too impecunious to know the value of leisure. The trader a have to earn their bread with the sweat of their brow. We have a who are not altogether engrossed by the cares and anxieties of but their number is very small. Their number may increase, bu well replace a hereditary landed gentry.

Comments on the reply of Sir James Fergusson to the address presented by the Sind Sabha.

A correspondent of the Indian Spectator (1) of the 30th Nov
from Karáchi says:—His Excellency reply to the address of the local Chambe was on the whole satisfactory. His E assured the deputation of the Sind S regarded the improvement of the Kará
a matter of Imperial concern and that he would do his utmos affairs of our port on a satisfactory footing. His Excellency address of the Sabha was however very disappointing. They the extension of the Bombay settlement system had not proved the zamindárs of Sind and that there was no general complai revenue assessment in Sind, because if there had been any such such general complaint His Excellency would have heard of i were told that the provision in the Bombay Land Revenue Code
the excess of revised settlement rates retrospectively was not ext because the revised settlements left no trace of the old occupancie
the old rates could not be levied in the year during which a se be introduced. This, I confess, is quite a novel argument. If a ment really unsettles all old boundaries, then where is the neces enacting such a provision at all in the Code? If it is unworkab you rescind it the better. It is in full force in the rest of the pres the only provision not in force in Sind out of the whole Bombay Code. If the people complain that the settlement unsettles eve are met by the reply that the settlement conserves their rights upset them. If they complain that excess rates are levied from th cultivated before the introduction of the settlement they are met that the settlement has so unsettled the limits of their occupancies assessments cannot possibly be fixed. These are rather hard nuts f swallow. Are they not?

Points out the necessity of further reducing the duty on salt.

The Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 2nd December says:—Sin
tion in the duty on salt there has been the consumption of this article of da consequently in the amount of Govern under that head. The reduced rate of d very heavy that poor people cannot afford to use salt in suffici
There is much room for further reduction in the duty.

Comments on Mr. Malabari's proposals for reforming the customs of infant marriage and enforced widowhood.

In an article headed "Social Reforms" the Sind Times (5)
November says:—We are glad that does not want "Government interferenc venture to say that State legislation of th
Mr. Malabari at first suggested is tanta ercion. The Government Act that legalise riages was co-operation. But a Government Act that would close the university and Government service against married people would
It is against such legislation that we protest, and it appears to us th bari has also been persuaded to be of the same opinion. We ha accorded him our hearty sympathy and have expressed our regret the Calcutta journalists should constantly carp at him. And we a glad to learn that the Bombay Government is taking an active in matter. Any active interference on the part of Government is But reformers should certainly seek the co-operation and counte State. The evils of early marriage and perpetual widowhood are tural but demonstrable. And the burden of proving them lies o would introduce a healthier form of society. Now statistical retu the large number of young widows in India are not a conclusive a Indian widows are very miserable. But the statistics of their their unhappiness, if we could be allowed such an expression, weighty reason for the need of reform. We do not mean to s details are not forthcoming, nor have we any doubts as to the m dition of young Indian widows, but we are simply trying to look side of the question. Granted that the two social evils which proposes to do away with really exist. Does Mr. Malabari aim and golden state of Indian society? He does no such thing.
humanity must be always imperfect. Every section of society placed on equal ground. But it is possible that the fire may b for the frying pan. And this is what Mr. Malabari is so strenuo for. We shall watch with great interest the further progress of in his good cause. We do not conceal from him that we are more the association that he proposes to form than in any sort of co-operation. It is useless to conceal the fact that Government has ed to feel the pulse of Indian society and is not qualified to min diseased society. Let Government assist earnest reformers like and it will have deserved all our gratitude.

Does not approve of the action taken by Government in respect of Mr. Malabari's notes on infant marriage and enforced widowhood.

The Shiváji (61) of the 28th November does not approve taken by Government in respect of M
notes on infant marriage and enforced Government deserve the thanks of the pub
given this proof of their desire to do th surely there are far more important subj
which has already engaged the attention

ment, and the expression of a similar desire in connection with being calculated to redound to the credit of Government, is sure beneficial results. The statistics collected on the occasion of clearly show that the custom of infant marriage is not prevalent to a considerable extent and therefore the alarm raised by Mr. others is unfounded to a degree and does not deserve special att over this is a question intimately connected with religion and Go on more than one occasion declared their policy of non-interference matters. We cannot therefore understand why Government sho the bounds of their declaration with the view of giving a hearing sals of Mr. Malabari. Again if Mr. Malabari had been a Hindu been some argument for vouchsafing a consideration to his writin a Pársi and it is a great injustice, calculated to cause considerabl the interests of Government, to interfere with Hindu customs a In conclusion the writer exhorts the members of the Hindu co may have been asked to favour Government with their opinio bari's notes to treat the request of Government with contempt, a in spite of such treatment Government continue in their course th must be prepared to take adequate steps for the protection of thei [Referring to the same subject the Pandhari Vaibhav (49) of the ber says that it would have been better if Government had com substance of Mr. Malabari's notes to all táluka magistrates and cal ticated opinions of the Hindu population so that they might hav judge whether the opinions given were the opinions of individu generality of the people.]

Recommends the appointment of the Honourable Badrudin Tyebji to a Judgeship in the Bombay High Court on the retirement of the Honourable Mr. Justice West and the Honourable Mr. Justice Kemball.

The Rást Goftár (108) of the 30th November says:—The H Justice West and the Honourable Mr. J will shortly vacate their seats on the be High Court. Cannot a worthy Nati permanently appointed to the High C this occasion? The Honourable Mr. B has long since established his claim t Bombay High Court and the recogniti by Government will be a matter of the entire public. [The Arunodayă (18) of the 30th November als advantage should be taken of this opportunity to appoint a Judge in the High Court.]

Expresses satisfaction at the appointment of Mr. Rehamtula Mahomed Sayáni to the shrievalty of Bombay for the coming year.

The Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 6th December express at the appointment of Mr. Rehamt Sayáni to the shrievalty of Bombay f year and says:—We congratulate Mr. entire Mahomedan community on thi Sir James Fergusson deserves credit for the public voice and that of the press f ment of a Mahomedan gentleman to the post. This appointment give satisfaction to Mahomedans but to the entire Native public dency. [The Jáme Jamshed (96) and the Akhbáre Sodágar (7 date express similar sentiments.]

Disapproves of the great honour done to Sir James Fergusson by the Native princes of Káthiáwár during his recent tour in that province.

The Yajdán Parast (121) of the 30th November in an "Slaves of Flattery" says:—Sir James made free use of flattering complime recent tour in Káthiáwár. He appears succeeded in winning the good opinio princes of Káthiáwár by his sweet t flattery, but there is nothing surpri the friendship of Native potentates Governors and other high officers all that is necessary is Officers in high positions have frequently tried this experiment The Káthiáwár princes appear to have been blinded by the the Governor has lavished on them and have adopted measure his memory. Nobody will envy this complete success achieved b but the painful exhibition which the princes of Káthiáwár h their fondness for false flattery is worth nothing. When will Nativ free from this vice? There is little hope of their freeing themsel grasp. Such a condition of things is painful and calculated to do interests of the subjects of Native States. What have they shown works in honour of a Governor like Sir James, who obstructs the a of Natives and screens the injustice done to them? They have si that they do not care for the interests of their Native subjects a honour to those who do not deserve it. We wish that the Native p become conscious of the sorry figure they were making in the eyes jects by such conduct. [The Gujaráti (92) of the same date Governors' tours in Native States are undertaken with a view to quaintance with their real condition Sir James Fergusson's rec Káthiáwár has not satisfied that expectation. There is a loud c garding want of protection to life and property in Native States turbances raised by the Maiyás and the Makránis owed their or circumstance. If Sir James had paid some heed to this complain have earned the blessings of the people of Káthiáwár. The Pársi of the same date expresses sentiments similar to those of the Yaj

and illustrates them by means of a cartoon representing two casks
the names of Gondal, Navánagar, Bhávnagar, Karáchi, Cutch and E engraved on them, with a person standing between them.]

Approves of the conduct of Mr. Whitworth, C.S., some time Under Secretary to the Government of Bombay, in the matter of freely expressing his opinion against the oppressive working of the ábkári and forest laws.

The Gujarát Mitră (72) of the 30th November, in referring to contributed by Mr. Whitworth, C.S., some Secretary to the Bombay Government, on the oppressive working of the ábkár laws, praises him for his independent a disposition and says:—We have ourselve given instances of the harshness of ábká
and it is natural that a man of Mr.
disposition should not have been able to maintain silence on Several arbitrary and self-willed officers of the Bombay Governmen annoyed with him and are said to be using their endeavours to get
ed. We do not think that he has in any way disobeyed the orders ment in having freely expressed his opinion with a view to r awkward defects of the law and to do good to the public.

Comments on the recent resolution of the Bombay Government on the subject of the appointment of Honorary Surgeons to the Goculdás Tejpál Hospital.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 30th November says:—The of Bombay is evidently of belief that now and then be "dictatorial" and according to the prevailing mood and Secretaries: that in fact what may be blasphemous in the sergeant is only ch
captain. Government can be "dictatori suits its turn to "dish" some less powerful outside public body o
but the latter should be so far "courteous" as to take every prec wound its dignity. The Government can give curt treatment to all but will not in its turn brook similar treatment from those who ha it on public affairs. In its latest resolution touching the Honor ships of the Goculdás Tejpál Hospital it complains of the very rude the Bombay Corporation some weeks ago gave to its "dictatorial"
the scheme of the appointment of Honorary Surgeons had fail
"dictatorial" advisedly. For can the Government adduce pro of its sweeping statement? We are loth to take up the controver to this unfortunate matter. But since the Government now co
"dictatorial" character of the resolution passed by the Corporati as well to remind it that it treated that body with scant cou declined to give proof of the alleged failure of the scheme. It pas on two honest and hardworking Surgeons without giving them a defence. It based that judgment on the opinions passed by General in a hole-and-corner report. There can be no two op thus condemning the scheme the Government acted on one-si

It had no business to say in that oracular fashion that the scheme was a failure. And why should it now complain if the Corporation gives the retort discourteous that in its opinion the scheme is not such a failure as the Surgeon-General would have the Government believe? The credulity of the Government was then taken advantage of. But as an impartial administration it ought to have first obtained clear evidence by putting the two Honorary Surgeons on their defence to enable them to corroborate the ex-parte statements of their superiors. And has the Government of Bombay forgotten the attitude it maintained towards the Corporation for nearly three years in reference to its just grievance about the withholding of a portion of its police contribution on account of the lock hospital in Bombay? Fortunately the Secretary of State has already given his unbiassed opinion on the question and we have therefore not to depend on the public verdict, though it must be said that that verdict was quite in harmony with his own. The Secretary of State decided last year that the action was unjustifiable. The Corporation as representing the general body of citizens had more than once declared in positive terms that on principle it was opposed to the introduction of the Contagious Diseases Act in the city, however desirable it might be for the Government to protect its troops in military cantonments. How was that emphatic verdict of the Corporation, affirmed and reaffirmed, treated? It will not do even for a Government to throw stones from a glass house. In this respect, we are afraid, Government has been the worse offender of the two, though that would be poor reason for the Corporation to urge in self-defence if it really erred. [The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 1st December says that the resolution adopted by the Bombay Municipal Corporation is not wanting in courtesy and hopes that the Corporation will not be behindhand in performing its duty. It should respectfully ask Government to supply it with all the papers and reports connected with the subject to enable it to properly represent its case. The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 1st December says:—Few would look upon the discussion which has been going on on the subject of the appointment of Honorary Assistant Surgeons to the Goculdás Tejpál Hospital with anything like satisfaction. The discussion does not stop and as days pass it goes on widening in its scope. It has now reached a stage which threatens to destroy the harmony that has prevailed between the local Government and our Municipal Corporation on the one hand and between the official section of the medical profession and the Native medical practitioners on the other. Sir James Fergusson's Government cannot be too careful on this occasion to steer clear of the prejudices which are prevailing on this subject and by which it is being apparently influenced. The Government must, we think, be held responsible for all that has occurred. In the first place it passed its first resolution on the Honorary Assistant Surgeons of the Goculdás Hospital without calling upon them to explain the charges that bad been brought against them by Dr. Hojel. In the second place it did not take care to keep the resolution private. The sad mistake so committed led to a controversy which has benefited none but has damaged a cause from which it was at one time hoped that the public would derive much benefit. The controversy was unnecessarily prolonged and after having been quieted temporarily it again comes before the public, and that too in a more unfortunate aspect than it had ever assumed before. The Government resolution dated the 24th ultimo shows how a misunderstanding has again arisen between the Government and the Municipal Corporation. The resolution commits the very mistake for which it takes the Municipal Corporation to task. The Government considers that "it is scarcely reasonable for the Municipal Corporation to request Government to reconsider its resolution of the 3rd October without assigning any reason for the request." The Municipal Corporation may as well ask in its turn whether it is reasonable for the Government to condemn the tone of the Corporation's resolution as being "more dictatorial and less courteous than Government has a right to expect" without assigning any reason, to use the phraseology of the Government resolution, for the condemnation. The resolution of the municipality which has roused the indignation of the Government does not pretend to say that Government is bound to reconsider its decision. As it is, the Corporation has been found fault with without being told where lies the error. After this breach of harmony it is to be doubted whether the Corporation will succeed in bringing the Government round to its way of thinking. It would seem being made as far as possible to prejudice the Government aga of Honorary Surgeonships. The Bombay Medical Union rece presentation to Government on the subject in which they requ scheme should be tried again at the Goculdás Hospital and success of a similar experiment made in Sir Cowasji Jehan Hospital. The Government having therefore enquired of Dr. Surgeon in charge of this latter hospital, he has, we hear, re scheme has proved a failure, although on former occasions he vourably of the Honorary Assistant Surgeon, Dr. Prabhákar. may well ask what does all this mean? How is it that an expe is reported upon in this inconsistent manner at different times? ment of Bombay is perhaps not so much to blame as those who counsels in this matter. The belief prevails that the Surgeon- his face against the scheme and hence these inconsistent report controversy is wearing an unfortunate and unsatisfactory aspe ment could avoid all this by the exercise of patience and watchf

Disapproves of the arrangements for admitting gentlemen to His Excellency the Governor's levées.

The Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 5th December says:— some gentlemen who ought not to hav at His Excellency the Governor's levée instant were there and that measures to prevent a similar occurrence in futur Secretary to His Excellency the Go Frank Souter, the Commissioner of Police, are examining the present at the levée and will intimate either verbally or in writi ought not to have been there to discontinue their visits in futur that the public will pity the poor souls that will receive such would very much like to know the standard of qualification determined upon as entitling gentlemen to admission.

Comments in connection with a recent collision in the Dábhol creek between two coasting steamers of the Bombay Steam Navigation Company.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 30th November says:—The in the Dábhol creek between two coast the Bombay Steam Navigation Comp as it does so close upon a similar accid points to the necessity of some precauti being taken by Government to ren along the coast safe and easy. Duri years there has been an immen passenger traffic in that part. All through the week there a thousand passengers carried up and down the coast eve published report of the late accident shows that the two stea and Shastrie carried between them no less than 1,300 souls this enormous traffic, so far as appears, must go on increas with the increase in the facilities of navigation. A collision like last, if sufficiently far from the shore, may result in serious loss high time therefore that Government should take the subject int consideration with a view to take what measures may be necess as much as possible the chances of such accidents. The ma follow will bring to light the quarter where the blame lies. Bu blame be fastened in this particular instance, whether on the inc negligence of the men employed or in the difficulties of the place of proper signalling and whistling, we think these are subjects i and all of which Government ought to issue some adequate ru regulate the traffic in the interests of the large numbers of journey from place to place in these coasting steamers. [The B 30th November and the Dnyán Prakásh (9) and the Suryoda 1st December express similar sentiments.]

Suggests that the circle of newspapers favoured with official reports should be enlarged.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 30th November says:—T may congratulate itself on having elici from Government regarding the su and other documents to the local pr ernment of Bombay deserves thanks sion. But we wish it extended the the principal papers, and especially to the dailies. This might cost more, but what is the cost compared with the amount of good to public and the amount of mischief averted by the supply of correct cannot too often repeat our conviction that whatever mischief is don newspapers or the authorities is done more in ignorance than Government would do well to reconsider the matter, and if nece might levy a small subscription all round. [The Gujarát Mitră (72) November is sorry to find that the list of papers to be supplied reports includes one or two that command no influence, while the Ka

(99), the Akhbáre Sodágar (79), the Jáme Jamshed (96) and other Bombay papers have been omitted from it. It is to be hoped that will issue a fresh resolution in which well established papers will favour, while those undeserving of it will be denied it. The Satyă of the 30th November and the Praja Mitră (107) of the 3rd Decemb
the resolution is defective and manifests ignorance on the part of concerned in issuing it.]

Complains of want of rain in Bijápur.

A correspondent of the Mahrátta (2) of the 30th November, w Bijápur, says:—There is no rain here.
are leaving this district with their cattle f
and Belgaum. Great distress prevails prices of grain are very high. Government have not as yet made a ments for providing relief-works. The crops are withering for wa
The new Collector has arrived. He does not seem to be active an enough to grapple with the distress. I hope you will use your inf Government for affording relief to the people of this district.

Legislation.

Comments in connection with the draft Railway Bill.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 1st December says:—The R which has been introduced into the Legisla of the Governor General by the Honourabl will when it passes into law prove a ver measure. We notice with particular approval those provisions of th are directed against the over-crowding of passengers in railway carri has been a long standing complaint and little, if any, attention has to it by the railway authorities. We hear constantly that third partments in the mail train from Raichur to Poona on the G. I.
line are generally so over-crowded that passengers are huddle like sheep and on that account inconvenience is at times caused to the who occupy second class compartments.

Municipalities.

Suggests that medical men should be appointed to the vacancies on the inspecting staff of the Health Department of the Bombay Municipality.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 30th states that two vacancies have occurred on ing staff of the Health Department of Municipality and suggests the advisability ing medical men to the vacancies.

Berár Affairs.

Points out the necessity of constituting a High Court for Berár.

The Pramod Sindhu (13) of the 1st December says:—The pres
of the Berár High Court and its consti
been the cause of a continuous public
Some time ago when a proposal was m
Resident to constitute a distinct High Berár and to locate it at Hyderabad the local papers strongly prote the proposed arrangement. Fortunately for the people of Berár t ment fell through. The location of the High Court of the pro province itself will satisfy all requirements and will be a real province. If those holding the reins of the Government of the their hands would be a little more liberal with the public money a grievance would be removed. An additional expenditure of month will give us two judges for our High Court. We are n suggestion will be approved by the authorities, but as the British empire and the welfare of the people principally depen administration of justice the Government of India must see i the strings of its purse. There is certainly a show of reform about some of our institutions, but real progress is yet far from

Requests the Resident to make a personal inquiry into the disputed municipal cases at Akola.

In an article headed "The local Municipal cases" the Va
(17) of the 1st December says:—We the Resident is coming to Berár in o
of the Christmas holidays. If the visi
a fait accompli we earnestly request Berár administration to pay a visit nothing else for forming a practical judgment on the municipal pending in the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction.
hearing of the applications were fixed at Akola matters would beco solution to such a shrewd Judge as Mr. Cordery. It is said th while he was Deputy Commissioner at Akola rarely decided off in which a personal inspection of the spot was likely to throw the subject-matter in dispute. We would appeal to the learned J the same test to the present cases. As the applications are express no opinion one way or the other, but we can say witho personal inspection of the verandas which the municipality space and which according to the shopkeepers are their own p will convince the Judge of the intrinsic worth of the claims put parties. The decision in this case will set at rest a long standin the municipality wins the bazár will not prosper as the shopke be able to hire the premises. If the shopkeepers succeed th give a fresh stimulus to the prosperity of the bazár. By the request the local municipality to take into consideration the renting the open space in front of a row of shops close to the ba long been deserted for want of proper accommodation. We onc
the municipality to open its eyes and take the matter into it deration.

RAOJI BHAVANR
Acting Reporter on th

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
8th December 1884.

INDEX.

Page

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Addresses: Comments on the reply of Sir James Fergusson to the address presented by the Sind Sabha 5

Appointments: Recommendation for the appointment of the Hon'ble Badrudin Tyebji to a Judgeship in the Bombay High Court on the retirement of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice West and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Kemball 7

Bombay Steam Navigation Company: Comments in connection with a recent collision in the Dábhol creek between two coasting steamers of the— 10

Governor's tour: Disapproval of the great honour done to Sir James Fergusson by the Native princes of Káthiáwár during His Excellency's recent tour in that province 7

Honorary Surgeons: Comments on the recent resolution of the Bombay Government on the subject of the appointment of—to the Goculdás Tejpál Hospital— 8

"Indian Dangers": Comments in connection with the views of the St. James's Gazette regarding the possibility of a mutiny in India ... 3

Infant marriage and enforced widowhood:

Comments on Mr. Malabari's proposals for reforming the customs of— 6

Disapproval of the action taken by Government in respect of Mr. Malabari's notes on— 6

Land revenue: Expression of opinion that the system of revenue settlement obtaining in Sind has prejudicially affected the zamindárs in that province 4

Levées: Disapproval of the arrangements for admitting gentlemen to His Excellency the Governor's— 10

Public service: Approval of the conduct of Mr. Whitworth, C.S., some time Under Secretary to the Government of Bombay, in the matter of freely expressing his opinion against the oppressive working of the ábkári and forest laws 8

Salt: Necessity of further reducing the duty on— 6

Shrievalty of Bombay: Expression of satisfaction at the appointment of Mr. Rahimtula Mahomed Sayáni to the—for the coming year ... 7

Supply of official papers to the public press: Suggestion that the circle of newspapers favoured with official reports should be enlarged ... 10

Want of rain in Bijápur: Complaint regarding— 11

PART II.—Legislation—

Railway Bill: Comments in connection with the draft— 11

PART III.—Municipalities—

Bombay: Suggestion that medical men should be appointed to the two vacancies on the inspecting staff of the Health Department of the—Municipality 11

PART IV.—Berár Affairs—

High Court for Berár: Necessity of constituting a distinct— ... 11

Municipal cases at Akola: Request to the Resident to make a personal enquiry into the disputed— 12

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

809
DIA OFFICE
7 JAN 1885

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND B

For the Week ending 13th December

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Week
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Month
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quart
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-we
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Week
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-we
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Week
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Week
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortn
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Week
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Week
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortni
25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Week
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortni
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekl
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.
37	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.
39	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortni
40	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Month
*41	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekl
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Month
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekl
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Month
*54	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekl
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Month
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortni
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekl
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Month
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekl
62	„ Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.
	MARA'THI—continued.
66	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly
67	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.
68	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.
69	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.
70	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
71	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly
72	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.
73	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.
74	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.
75	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.
	GUJARA'TI.
76	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly
77	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily
78	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly
79	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.
80	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.
81	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily
82	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly
83	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.
84	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly
*85	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.
86	„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly
87	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.
88	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly
89	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.
90	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.
91	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.
92	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly
93	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly
94	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.
*95	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly
96	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily
97	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly
98	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly
99	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.
*100	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly
101	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly
*102	„ Mangal Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly
103	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly
104	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.
105	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly
106	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.
107	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.
108	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.
109	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.
110	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.
111	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly
112	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.
113	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.
114	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.
115	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.
116	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Do.	Quarterly
117	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly
118	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly
119	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly
120	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.
121	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly
	KA'NARESE.
122	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly
123	„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do.
124	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.
125	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.
	URDU.
*126	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly
127	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.
	PERSIAN.
128	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
129	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly
	SINDI.
*130	The Muin-ul-Islam	Karáchi	Weekly
131	The Sind Sudhár	Do.	Do.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the paper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the nu in these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that or d) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well know with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Gover the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that the system of revenue settlement obtaining in Sind has prejudicially affected the zamindárs in that province.

In continuation of the article reported at pages 4 and 5 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 6th December 1884 the Sind Times (5) of the 5th December says:—We suppose we have a right to rely on the Queen's Proclamation as a still subsisting valid document. This may be said to be the net result of the controversy that followed the Ilbert Bill. If our rulers do not wish to quote it we will at once hold our peace on the subject. But Lord Ripon most solemnly assured us that the Proclamation was not a dead letter, and we have no doubt no honest ruler can assert that it is. Taking for granted then that the Queen's Proclamation is not null and void, we venture to call the attention of the authorities to the following passage which we are afraid has been often grossly ignored. "We know and respect," wrote Her Gracious Majesty, "the feelings of attachment with which the Natives of India regard the lands inherited by them from their ancestors, and We desire to protect them in all rights connected therewith, subject to the equitable demands of the State, and We wish that generally in framing and administering the law due regard be paid to the ancient rights, usages and customs of India." It is a matter of history that the resumption proceedings under the Inám Act were among the pre-disposing causes of the Mutiny of 1857. The passage we have quoted was inserted to quiet men's minds by assuring them that the Government would not follow any revolutionary policy regarding land. And yet we have shown that in Sind at least a revolutionary policy was followed. We have shown how, notwithstanding the express directions of the Government of India, the Settlement Officers took it upon themselves to ignore the rights of zamindárs in their waste lands and to charge full assessment on them. In Upper Sind the Settlement Officers gave the occupancy right to the Maurusi Hari generally and settled the land revenue with him. It was quite natural for a set of officers unused to any system of tenure except the ryotwári and strongly prejudiced in favour of that system to do so. At one time Sir Bartle Frere was inclined to combine the Government dues and the zamindári dues in the assessment, and to satisfy the zamindárs' demands by paying their dues through the Collector. In other words he considered it right to follow the Queen's Proclamation and to substantially protect the zamindárs in their rights. But other counsels prevailed and the idea was totally given up. The Maurusi Haris, finding the Government ranged on their side and willing to give them a heritable and transferable occupancy and to treat them as proprietors for the purpose of land revenue, refused in several instances to acknowledge the rights of the zamindárs, and the result was ruinous litigation. In most of the suits decided the zamindár's right to Malikano was established, but the Maurusi Hari resorted to a dodge which often made the decree a nullity. In one season or other he refused to pay the Government assessment and thus had his holding sold by the revenue authorities free of all encumbrances, charges and liens. The new occupant by purchase was either the Maurusi Hari himself or some one else from whom the Maurusi Hari speedily managed to buy his holding. The zamindár sued the new occupant, but he had to contend not against his hereditary tenant but against an individual who was armed with new rights under a revenue sale. The Survey and Settlement Act made no provision for this state of things and in several cases the zamindár was defeated. In their despair many of his class sold their rights, whatever they were, to persons who could well afford to fight for them in the civil courts. But there were several Maurusi Haris, who notwithstanding the unjust attitude taken up by Government continued to respect the hereditary rights of their zamindárs, and to this day some of them continue to do so. But the temptation offered by the Settlement Officer on the one hand and the civil court on the other has generally proved too strong for the force of custom and habit, and we are afraid no little mischief has been already consummated.

Comments in connection with a case in which a European in Assam was acquitted of the charge of rape on a Native girl.

The Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 7th December gives the particul case reported in a paper published at Sylhet in which a European planter was charged wit committed rape on a Native girl but was dis by the magistrate on the ground that the cha not proved, and observes :—Most probably th culars of this case have not been faithfully inasmuch as European gentlemen can never be guilty of such offenc even supposing that the case has a foundation of truth there is no much surprise. How can Europeans, who tear themselves from their and relations in undertaking a sojourn in this distant country, sati animal passions if not by such means? It is true that such incid calculated to create disgust for the present administration in the Natives, but what is the remedy? The Government is meant purely happiness of Europeans and it must needs do that which prom object.

Says that the fullest opportunity should be given to the public to celebrate Lord Ripon's visit to Bombay with the greatest eclat.

The Kesari (37) of the 9th December says :—It appears from the papers that the arrangements made by the local ment for the reception of Lord Ripon are c to cause great disappointment to the pub think that Sir James Fergusson should on this allow himself to be guided by public opinio attempts at throwing obstacles in the way of t celebrating the occasion of Lord Ripon's visit to Bombay with the grea are not only calculated to wound the susceptibilities of the people and Lord Ripon but are likely to seriously affect the favourable impression been created on the public mind by Sir James Fergusson. [Th Prakásh (9) of the 11th December expresses somewhat similar sentime Suggests the release of a few prisoners from jails in honour of Lord Ripon.

The Akhbáre Sodágar (77) of the 9th December heartily supp suggestion made by one of its correspondent release of a few prisoners from jails in h Lord Ripon, and says that this would be a ni perpetuating the memory of the noble Lo departure from India is looked upon by the people as an event of v importance.

Approves of the reply given by Lord Dufferin to the address presented to him by the Municipal Corporation of Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 9th December says :—The reply Lord Dufferin to the address presented to hi Bombay Municipal Corporation will give sa to the entire Native community. The f ments expressed by him regarding the retiring and the promise given by him of followin footsteps of Lord Ripon were highly g Every well-wisher of India sincerely desires that Lord Dufferin shoul the hopes entertained of him by the people. No Viceroy has assu reins of office under more favourable circumstances, and it remains to how the hopes he has excited are fulfilled. He will have to submit h a crucial test because the people of India have been so very happ Lord Ripon's regime and have seen so much of the virtues of an inde Viceroy that they will not be pleased with anything save the manifes similar virtues by his successor. We only wish that he may act dependence and impartiality and strive for the good of the country in measures he may have to undertake. If by his well-known diplo succeeds in convincing haughty Europeans that India is not to be gove their interests only, in developing the sympathy of the entire class of E with Natives, and in cementing the breach between these two com he will have achieved a great success. [The Bombay Samáchár (81) of date says that Lord Dufferin is very fortunate in having succeede Viceroyalty of India at a time when the people are quiet and conte expresses a wish that when he retires from the country he may be abl her in a better condition than at present.]

Expresses satisfaction with the reply given by Lord Dufferin to the address presented to him by the Anjumané Islám of Bombay.

The Káside Mumbai (101) of the 12th December, in referring to t given by Lord Dufferin to the address pres him by the Anjumané Islám of Bombay, say promise given by Lord Dufferin to look interests of the Mahomedan community doubtedly be regarded with great pride by th munity. From the speeches delivered by from the anxiety shown by him for the welfare of the people entrust charge it appears that he will not fail to improve their condition. Lor had not sufficient time to do much for the Mahomedan communit Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 11th December expresses satisfaction replies given by Lord Dufferin to the several addresses presented to hi his stay in Bombay and says that the anxiety displayed by him for the condition of the Mahomedan community will give satisfaction no that community but to all classes of people. Lord Ripon took import in the advancement of the Mahomedan community and similar actio part of the new Viceroy will do it much good.]

Condemns the conduct of the Anglo-Indian planters of Bengal who insulted Lord Ripon on his return to Calcutta and advises Government to take notice of their conduct.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (99) of the 7th December, in an article headed Indians as Fenians or Nihilists," condemns duct of the Anglo-Indian planters of Benga sulted Lord Ripon by hissing and hootin return to Calcutta on the 29th November says:—When Natives from all parts of I vying with one another in doing honour Ripon the base minds of some of the Ang planters of Bengal have taken quite a different direction. The in course the result of preconcerted measures. Some influential Europe have instigated the planters. Until now there has been some limit to the prevailing among these Anglo-Indians, for which however more cred to the fear of punishment at the hands of the State than to their good s however the pressure were relaxed a little the planters would not stop raising an open rebellion. The Nihilists of Russia, the Socialists of and the Fenians of Ireland did not turn rebels all at once. Fr beginnings they have at last become the declared enemies of their Gove If these unworthy beginnings of these Europeans were looked upo lenient eye they would in course of time even think of blowing up the and palaces of their rulers by means of dynamite. If Natives had these tactics their conduct would have been stigmatised as rebellious a would have been kept ready for punishing them. But now the questic do not the authorities take measures to prevent civilized Europeans fro ing the illiterate Natives this new method of manifesting disloyalty?

Insists upon more earnest action in the matter of encouraging Native arts and industries.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 7th December says:—In spite of several on the part of the Government of India private enterprise by way of directing Go servants to purchase country-made article industries seem to be languishing day by d O'Conor tells us that the imports of boots a have doubled, those of malt liquor have increased by 37 per cent., and woollen goods have very nearly doubled in value. What is the good resolutions after resolutions if the imports are thus increasing at a rapi If Government really desire that our industries should prosper they m more earnest efforts still. Words have but little value in this civilized is action alone that can succeed.

Complains of the prevalence of the vice of drinking.

The Shiváji (61) of the 5th December requests the attention of th ities concerned to certain objectionable adopted by liquor sellers with a view to dra into the meshes of the vice of drinking. It observed that an attempt is made to attract people to the shops whe and other intoxicating substances are sold by means of some musical e ment provided for the purpose, while some vendors do not hesitate to their commodity gratis simply with the object of throwin way of people and bringing them within their clutche other similar devices have been and are being invente idea of the evils that attend on the policy of granting li indiscriminately, and the reports of magistrates on the s the number of offences caused by drunkenness will throw this view. We admit that thirst for money is an inconq government that proclaims itself as the saviour of people that passion. The A'bkári Department was originally st providing the means of checking the growing vice of dri become a means of lawfully developing that vice.

Complains that liquor is sold at unreasonably high rates in Sátára.

The Bodh Sudhákar (22) of the 10th December columns that the drinking publ liquor at reasonable rates on ac employing unpaid liquor sellers contractors. The writer say conversation between a liquor seller and his customer that liquor sellers suffered much for want of remunerat trick of charging high rates in order to recoup themselv peons in order to secure themselves from punishment, an magistrate is not taking measures in the matter.

Points out the necessity of starting relief works in Kaládgi.

The Hitechchhu of Kaládgi (31) of the 7th Decembe rain and requests the attenti cerned to the cry for relief wo in all quarters.

Approves of the policy of forest conservancy in India.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 11th December exp policy of forest conservancy Government and says:—Tho against the Forest Departmen newspapers, those who have given special attention t the anxiety of the Government of India to preserve fo policy is calculated to enhance the prosperity of the coun forests has considerably increased of late. Though the Government in preserving forests has proved prejudicial poor classes of people, and though some mean officers of exercise undue severity on those classes, it is an undoub of the forest laws is the present and future good o Officers were to explain to the poor classes of people the ving forests and the disadvantages resulting from thei would soon be brought round to recognise the necessit many frivolous complaints would cease.

Complains that the acquisition of lands for forest purposes in the Dápoli Táluka is calculated to prove injurious to the interests of cultivators.

A correspondent of the Arunodaya (18) of the 7th Dápoli in the Ratnágiri Distri acquisition of certain lands i reserves is calculated to pr interests of the cultivating cl táluka is annually cultivate have not been set apart in s policy of reserving forests at the risk of causing inconve trenching upon the area available for ráb cultivation w even to Government.

Makes certain suggestions in connection with a letter addressed by the Director of Agriculture to the Khetiwádi Patrak of Nadiád on the subject of the liability of wheat and jowári to the attacks of a kind of smut.

In a paragraph headed "The Department of A Patrika (15) of the 7th Decem Government Gazette publishes the Director of Agriculture Khetiwádi Patrak of Nadiád i useful information of an agric pears from the letter that whe to the attacks of a kind of s grains in the ears to black pow the disease to the seed. The information is very useful, but bei English is, we are afraid, lost to a majority of the persons who account. Why was not this letter of the Director of Agricultu office of the Oriental Translator to be rendered into the vern presidency? Information of this sort which is meant to reach the of the people should always be published in all the languages pr districts and circulated among the Collectors, from whom it down to subordinate officers and from the latter to the ryots ge is the regular channel of communication between Government and it should be invariably employed whenever the Director of A to give any useful information relating to agriculture. We also this matter a duty lies on public bodies and public-spirited gen mofussil. They too can be of great use in disseminating usefu

And if the Director of Agriculture is open to queries from th agencies can from time to time bring to his notice whatever agriculturist, solicit information and advice, and publish what in obtaining in their neighbourhood. In this way much usefu be done to justify the existence of the newly created D Agriculture.

Does not approve of Government interference in the matter of reforming the customs of infant marriage and enforced widowhood.

The Suryodayă (65) of the 8th December quotes the o
Justice Scott of the Bombay High Malabari's notes on infant marriage widowhood and says that it is distres learned judge should have given coun proposals of Mr. Malabari. It is not a that representatives or officers of the Q who has declared in unmistakable terms in her Proclamation of 1
of non-interference with religious matters, should think of refo Native customs at the instance of men of Mr. Malabari's coterie.
any number of Scotts and Malabaris will not avail to reform the customs of the country. We therefore warn Government agai the poison of interference in such matters. Things are in a sa as they are, and we do not undertake to prophesy the result of tide of their current. [The Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 7th Dece somewhat similar sentiments. The Bakul (20) of the same date favour of legislation in the matter.]

Approves of the nomination of Mr. Rahimatulla Mahomed Sayáni to the shrievalty of Bombay.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 7th December says:—Sir Ja has, as usual, deferred to the voice of
in making his selection for the office Bombay for the coming year. Mr. Sa dered useful service to the public as Town Council and Municipal Corpora various other capacities. He is the first Mahomedan gentleman high office. In making this selection out of the Mahomedan Bombay Sir James Fergusson's choice has no doubt fallen o representative of that community. Mr. Sayáni's nomination w received with universal satisfaction not only for the honour which the first time on our Mahomedan brethren but for the apprec shows of an efficient and useful, though quiet and unobtrusive, at the hands of Government. [Several other Anglo-Maráthi papers and all the Gujaráti papers express satisfaction with the
Mr. Sayáni. The Indian Spectator (1) of the 7th December says ment be assured that the entire Native community appreciates it might perhaps have preferred it falling on an older Musalman sol

Approves of the nomination of Mr. Dayárám Gidumal Sháháni to the Statutory Civil Service.

The Gujaráti (92) of the 7th December approves of the a Mr. Dayárám Gidumal Sháháni, B.A., Statutory Civil Service. Perhaps no be have been found for the province of S pointment of Mr. Narsingráo Bhol Statutory Service of this presidency w
last year has also proved a success. He has come out first in the L

Departmental Examination, standing at the head of three Covenanted
This result is very creditable to Mr. Narsingráo, and we feel confiden Sháhání's nomination will also prove a similar success. If Governmen to make such appointments the clamour raised against the objectiona of the nominations to the Statutory Civil Service will subside.

Makes certain remarks in connection with the levées of Governors.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 7th December says:—Governor at least in Bombay, have now reached a which there is no descending. And it is na the authorities should think of a plan to useful little institution within the bounds of
As to officials it seems to us that heads of departments would be a su large number for presentation. The difficulty is about non-officials.
class we now and again hear of men attending levées and Governme parties whose proper place would be in very much less comfortable
But apart from such persons the number of idlers is generally so grea honest citizen has often to forego the privilege of paying his respec Majesty's representative. There are men who would never care shoulders with staring upstarts. It would be better if His Excelle audience to a select few from each section, men worth knowing and t in the public interests. The rest might be relegated to a side roo
His Excellency could salute them once for all as he retires instead o
the long-faced gentry taking up a minute or two by his elaborate
If Sir James thinks of shaking them off altogether he mistakes his me love moving amongst the sáhibs, and there may be some few of them a living out of official chits and smiles and nods of recognition. Th pirates ought to be shunned. Besides swindling a simpleton here a they bring discredit on officials against whom there need not be of suspicion. These are vested interests, and Sir James Ferguss love of the good and the pure is his highest title to our esteem, m put them down had he but known how to do it. But he could not the legion of respectable elderly men whose sole ambition in life known to local magnates. What will they not give to be in the p some great officer? What means, what arts, what tricks they e obtain an interview! We know one of these men whose love of is so intense that he might commit suicide to-morrow if he was as the Governor would attend his funeral! Who could have the heart such a one from going to the levée? Be kind to him, ye powers tenderly turn away the shears from his name! Cut him off from and life is over with him. [The Yajdán Parast (121) of the s says that the Governor's levée is a farce, the absurdity of which is al enhanced by His Excellency the Governor fixing a standard of qu
for the right of admission.]

Does not approve of the proposal to name the new College at Poona after Sir James Fergusson.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 7th December says that the circ that the new College which it is proposed t Poona is to be named after Sir James Fergu not fail to create surprise in every quarter.
hear that the idea was received with surpris
the European members of the University S Considering the extent to which Lord Ripon's administration en such educational institutions and the degree of enthusiasm with people of the whole of India are manifesting their affection, grat veneration for the retiring Viceroy, we are at a loss to understand Poona friends have selected Sir James Fergusson for the honour t done him. On the contrary have our friends forgotten the punishme prisonment to which two of them were unnecessarily subjected? La James Fergusson appears to have followed the course of gaining popu sweet speeches, and is it possible that the high praise bestowed by H lency on the proprietors of the New English School last year on the o the distribution of prizes has altogether overpowered them? Wha cause we look upon the conduct of the proprietors as improper and gible. [The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 11th December does not appro sentiments expressed by the Subodh Patrika.**]

Requests Sir James Fergusson to take measures for preventing the silting up of the Gulf of Cambay.

The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 7th December says:—His Excellency the Governor of Bombay, when addressing the Nawáb of Cambay and his people at the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the boys' school in that city, said:—"It is a matter of regret that your State is no longer one of the chief seats of Indian and foreign trade. Its decline in that respect is the result of the altered condition of the railway system and the silting up of the Cambay Gulf, which has transferred the trade largely to parts lower down the coast." It was certainly very good of His Excellency to have thus sympathised with the Nawáb and his people on account of the misfortune which has befallen the State of Cambay. But let us see if Sir James Fergusson could not do something more than sympathise merely. The silt is mainly caused by the deposits brought down by the rivers flowing into the gulf. That silt not only ruins Cambay but other States of Káthiáwár also. The mischief is preventable in a great measure. The planting of trees along the banks of the rivers, the dredging of the harbours at their mouths, and devices to keep clean the channel of the sea would go far to check the misfortune the effects of which Sir James Fergusson has deplored. If His Excellency will but give some earnest thought to the subject, the clever engineering staff in the services under him will not be long in suggesting feasible plans for mitigating, if not entirely preventing, the sad change in the condition of the important historic ports on the Gulf of Cambay. Let the Government of Bombay take the initiative in the matter and we feel sure the Native Chiefs immediately concerned will be found ready to support any reasonable proposals for carrying out the works calculated to check the mischief to which their States are a gradual prey. Let Sir James Fergusson think of crowning the closing year of his administration of the affairs of this presidency by some practicable scheme for checking materially the silting up of the Cambay Gulf, and he will have added considerably to his claim to the gratitude of the Chiefs and people of Western India.

Suggests that the Bombay Gazetteer should be translated into Sindhi.

The Sind Times (5) of the 5th December says:—The Bombay Government has directed the translation of Mr. Campbell's Bombay Gazetteer into Gujaráti, Maráthi and Kánarese for the benefit of the population at large. It is characteristic of the present Government's known apathy towards Sind that no Sindhi translation of the Gazetteer should have been ordered. Sind is perhaps as large a division of the presidency as any other and decidedly more in need of enlightenment. We hope a Sindhi translation will be added to the others already sanctioned.

Distress of the villagers of Mohopa in the Panvel Táluka of the Kolába District.

The Suryodayă (65) of the 8th December describes the destitute condition of the villagers of Mohopa in the Panvel Táluka of the Kolába District consequent on the devastation committed by a recent fire, and points out to the Collector of Kolába the necessity of assisting the helpless people by free grants of timber for building houses and by remission of the Government demand.

Comments on the resolution of Government in the matter of supplying official reports to newspapers.

The same newspaper says that the recent resolution of the Government of Bombay in the matter of supplying official reports, &c., to certain newspapers causes deep regret by falling short of the full measure of generosity which was expected of that Government. The resolution provides that newspapers which are not included in the favoured circle should be furnished with official reports on payment of charges varying between 4 and 8 annas. Government should in justice have supplied such reports gratis to all newspapers without distinction, but if they were not prepared to be so liberal they should at least have granted the concession to such of the newspapers as do not command the convenience of easy access to such reports. It is to be hoped that Sir James Fergusson, now that His Excellency's administration is drawing to a close, will issue a modified resolution. It is true that he will have for a moment to take leave of his conservative propensities, but a little patience will enable him to throw a veil over his vacillating administration and to lay the p deep obligations. The newspapers in the mofussil are a mo of giving publicity to Government measures than those in the and Bombay. The establishment of an "Editor's room" in be in contemplation, but why should not similar institutions zilla stations? [The Nyáyă Darshak (105) of the 7th De somewhat similar sentiments. The Deshi Mitră (87) of th urges its claims to Government patronage.]

Complains of want of a dharmashála and well near the Jalgaon station on the G. I. P. Railway line.

The Prabodh Chandrika (51) of complains of the inconvenience caus of a well and dharmashála near the
on the G. I. P. Railway line and requ to do the needful in the matter.

Legislation.

Suggestions in connection with the draft Railway Bill.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 7th December says:—B
Mr. Hope's Railway Bill, for which t to be very thankful to that gentle useful to publish a statement from a of the G. I. P. R. Company. The statement is prepared fro point of view. Mr. Hope, to whom we regret having done som matter of his minute on the church establishment question, wil sider the points raised by our humble correspondent. To the tration the public owe much of the improvement observable i the railway department, and only the other day a friend showe Lord Ripon has been to notice every detail with which the com nience of passengers and employés are concerned. In hi Minister he has had an indefatigable worker and a trustworthy station clerks and the clerks of all departments of the G. I. P.
ten days' leave on full pay in a year. No other leave can be except sick leave, which is granted on half pay on the producti
from the Railway Surgeon or one countersigned by him.
Licentiates should be considered valid by all railway compa
of granting leave. (2) Some provision should be made for g case of death of very near relatives, such as father, mother an month's privilege leave and twenty days' casual leave in a y necessary to such a hard-worked staff. (4) Grant of free pass ployés on other railways is not allowed at present, and the sys change of passes should be adopted by all the railway compa
the Native employés should have the indulgence of taking se when travelling with free passes on any railway while on leave.
statement should appear in the yearly report showing the disposa
of each railway company. (6) According to the present Prov for the G. I. P. Railway 5 per cent. are deducted from the sala while only 2½ per cent. are deducted from that of a Native, that a Native employé does not derive that advantage which a
It is therefore proposed that the rate of percentage in the should be raised to the level of that in the case of Europeans, so t prove equally beneficial to all. (7) The hours of attendance of t staff should be fixed; at present they have to work for ten, hours. (8) The railway yearly report should show the numbe European employés on each railway and the lump amount both should be separately shown. (9) Some scale should be fix of Natives. Native guards and firemen doing the same sor European compeers receive lower remuneration than their E
(10) Some distinct provision should be made for giving pecun men who die or who are incapacitated by accidents while in s niary aid given to disabled Europeans and Natives shoul separately. (11) In cases of summary dismissal a subordinate option of appealing to the Agent direct. (12) Responsible p for which no special or technical knowledge is required should to the Native employés of all railways. This would be advan
the companies and the poor Indian tax-payer. (13) A Na leaving one department and joining another should be allowe
on the former post for some time.

Recommends that the period of time allowed to the public to bring forward their objections to the draft Railway Bill should be extended.

The Maháráshtră Mitră (43) of the 4th December, while ap object of Government in framing the Bill, says that the circumstance that been allowed to the public to inform G their objections to the Bill than was rea sary will interfere with the possession b of full information regarding the obje new measure. It will be better if the period of time is extended a measure is passed with the approval of all concerned.

Local Self-government.

Comments on the recently published rules regarding municipal elections.

The Shiváji (61) of the 5th December says:—The last Gover contains some rules regarding local fun cipal committees. The rules regarding m tions have been generally framed on the rules sanctioned on the occasion when election was first conceded to the Poona Municipality and ther need any comment. The rules however contain a provision em president to select the officer who should collect votes at t place and time, which in our opinion is calculated to interfere with of the committee. Such a power should be vested in the general committee. With this exception we do not think that the ru modification.

Education.

Suggests that the lectures in connection with the new Law School in Poona should, instead of being delivered at the Deccan College, be delivered at a place situated midway between the College and the city.

Alluding to the prospect of a La Poona the Kesari (37) of the 9th Decemb the inconvenience that would be caused b being delivered at the Deccan College, an advisability of selecting for the purpose way between the College and the city arrangements may prove convenient to a

Complains of insufficient remuneration and slow promotion to school masters.

A correspondent of the Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 7th Decemb of the insufficiently small remuneration school masters and the very tardy promo in the department, and requests the at authorities concerned to the desirability their claims to places in the Registration, Forest and A'bkári Depa correspondent of the Arunodayă (18) and the Din Bandhu (6) of the make a similar complaint.]

Railways.

Points out the necessity of constructing commodious buildings on the Dádar station of the G. I. P. Railway line.

The Suryodayă (65) of the 8th December complains of the nature of the accommodation for passe Dádar station of the G. I. P. Railway li ing the vast traffic commanded by the requests the attention of the railway the necessity of erecting more commo buildings.

A suggestion to the authorities of the G. I. P. Railway Company.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 13th December, in supporti of the periodical ticket-holders on the G. line for a reduction of the present charge tickets, says that if the authorities of line would follow in the footsteps of th B. & C. I. Railway and increase the number of local trains run Bombay and Kalyán, build three or four new stations between the and make a moderate reduction in the present rates of periodica the public and the Railway Company would be benefited.

Municipalities.

Disapproves of the conduct of the president of the Nadiád Municipality in throwing obstacles in the way of the presentation of an address to Lord Ripon.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 7th December says:—When uninterrupted preparations for presenting addresses to Lord Ripon are being made in all parts of India the municipality of Nadiád has found it difficult to present an address to his Lordship owing to the unreasonable obstinacy of its president. At a general meeting of the municipal commissioners it was resolved, subject to the approval of the president, to spend Rs. 400 for the presentation of an address to Lord Ripon. The president however declined to sanction the expenditure of such a large sum and set down the limit of Rs. 20 within which the expenses should be defrayed. The municipal commissioners were sadly disappointed and the idea of presenting an address in the name of the municipality was allowed to drop. Some citizens are moving in the matter of presenting an address on behalf of the public of Nadiád, and it remains to be seen whether they succeed or not. It is not difficult to get an idea of the extent of the ill feeling cherished by some of the presidents of municipalities against Lord Ripon on account of his having inaugurated the scheme of local self-government. [The Praja Mitrá (107) of the 10th and the Deshi Mitrá (87) of the 11th December express disapproval of the conduct of the president of the Nadiád Municipality.]

Native States.

Comments on the punishment inflicted on Sultán Nawáz Jung by the Nizám of Hyderabad.

The Bombay Samáchár (81) and the Akhbáre Sodágar (77) of the 12th December approve of the decision passed by the Government of His Highness the Nizám in the case of Sultán Nawáz Jung. The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 9th December says:—If Sultán Nawáz Jung is really guilty the punishment inflicted on him is light. But the way in which the Commission conducted its enquiry gives rise to some doubts and we wish that the Sultán had been allowed every opportunity to defend himself. Great injustice has been done to the Sultán in this respect and we wish that in order to redress it a re-trial were ordered by the Nizám with the advice of the British Government.

Berár Affairs.

Does not approve of the reduction recently made in the remuneration of village servants called Jaglias.

In an article headed "Who cares for the poor Jaglia?" the Vaidarbh (16) of the 6th December says:—It appears to be not generally known that at present under the orders of our local administration a crusade is being undertaken against those poor and almost insignificant servants of the State, the village Jaglias or chowkidars. Early in the beginning of this year the fiat went forth that the extravagance which characterized the expenditure under this head of State charges ought to be put a stop to and that henceforth a Jaglia should be paid the handsome salary of Rs. 25 a year! It was pointed out that to pay Rs. 5 a month, i. e. Rs. 60 a year, was a lavish waste of public money. Rs. 2 a month were amply sufficient. For has not the Jaglia ample leisure and can he not utilise that leisure in producing something to supplement his income? It was of course forgotten that almost every Jaglia and certainly the majority of them was liable to be called at any moment to look to the Sarbardi (supply of provisions) of this or that officer, to run with the post of the Commissioner to the nearest post office or attend upon the Deputy Educational Inspector or Inspector of Police and a countless host of officials, not to mention the innumerable duties he might have to do under the orders of the Patel. It appears never to have struck the framers of this most just order that nobody would care to employ a man who is liable to be disturbed at any moment and called upon peremptorily to leave the task of one master to undertake that of another, nor was it perceived that such a man could not well undertake any business on his own account. If he were to set up as a cultivator on his own account is it not likely that just at the time of sowing his fields he might be ordered to do Government service and thus be kept away from his plough for days until the proper time had passed away? And where is he to find a substitute for himself at th

There was a vague impression that the Jaglia had not much work that there was a good opportunity for curtailing expenditure. On poor friendless persons we ask the district and táluka offic Jaglia is so lightly worked as is represented in the Resident's thing is that while much is made of the little that great men do, to notice the work of the lower order of servants, private or Gove most curious feature of the circular is that if a Patel cannot g
Rs. 25 a year it is suggested to him that he might take the amo his own arrangements. We have taken some pains to make enc matter, and from our own knowledge we can satisfy the pu manner in which the orders are carried out. Many Jaglias ha serve under these terms. Many Patels have confessed their inab Jaglias on the splendid terms offered by Government, but at many have submitted to the order. From some persons of the l ever we have heard a curious tale. A Patel said openly in the pre number of people and two officers of Government that he knew it to secure a man on Rs. 2 a month, but he asked what he was that the only way open to him was to take what Government gave a remainder from his own pocket. Such statements as these reflect credit on Government. And then how is the Jaglia maintained perial or Provincial revenues? No. There is a distinct cess call It has not been stated that the amount raised by means of this ce than sufficient to maintain the required number of Jaglias.
as if Government were going to make a profit out of this c priate what was raised for one purpose to another purpose.
profusion bordering on extravagance a large number of Extra A missioners and Attachés are employed, by a feat of penny-wi foolish policy it is sought to effect saving by reducing a Chaprasi
This is economy with a vengeance.

Comments on the Report on Public Instruction in the Hyderabad Assigned Districts for the year 1883-84.

Reviewing the Report on Public Instruction in the Hydera Districts for the year 1883-84, the P
(13) of the 8th December says:—Mr.
at all been singular in holding that th
spects of public employment to edu
will be a very desirable encouragement
The Education Commission is of the same opinion. The Resid is pleased to differ from both, and we differ from the Resident.
in his review observes that "it would be a mistaken policy artificial or direct stimulus to a motive which has quite sufficie force inherent in it already." If we are not mistaken the Re observation means that education in its present stage in Berár without the assistance of any artificial or direct stimulus such as ing out prospects of public employment to educated Natives.
to assert that education in Berár is as yet in such a state of helples
it needs to be stimulated not only by one act of artificial or di but by all imaginable acts, direct or indirect, artificial or Bombay Presidency, which has been ahead of us by many years, need of such aids. The Government of Bombay has made tardy, concessions in keeping with the principle which Mr. Jatár advocated, and graduates have been taught to look upon M almost as their birth-right. Not only this but there is what is ca service examination, which is a test which it is compulsory on all wh ployment in the lower grades of public service to pass. In fact all kn have been studiously applied to quicken what would otherwise b stage of education. So much for the theory of direct and artifici
Now let us see if the other observations made by the Reside
Mr. Jatár's position are more substantial. It is urged that the h prospects of public employment to educated Natives would rais in the nature of things must in a very large majority of cases b disappointment, and that this has a tendency to create evils wor which it is meant to cure, except in countries where other su and careers are open to the students who cannot be provid appointments. We quite agree with the Resident in holding cannot possibly hope to provide employment for all educated N

the majority of them must look out for other outlets and ca also aware that many for whom the state cannot provide must b and perhaps discontented. But Mr. Jatár's contention, as we is not that Government holds itself responsible for the employm pass a particular test but that Government takes none into have not passed it.

Makes certain suggestions in connection with the draft bye-laws of the Akola Municipality.

A correspondent of the Varhád Samáchár (17) of the 8th Dec
the period of time allowed to the public state their objections to the draft bye-la Municipality is very short. The bye been published in the manner in whic have been, and therefore have not a notice. The vice-president of the municipality will do well period of time originally allowed and to cause Maráthi translatio to be published in newspapers and distributed as widely as po bye-laws have to be finally sanctioned the Committee should not

RAOJI BHAVANR
Acting Reporter on th

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
15th December 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Ábkári:
- Complaint regarding the prevalence of the vice of drinking ... 5
- Complaint that liquor is sold at unreasonably high rates in Sátára ... 6

Addresses:
- Approval of the reply given by Lord Dufferin to the address presented to him by the Municipal Corporation of Bombay 4
- Expression of satisfaction with the reply given by Lord Dufferin to the address presented to him by the Anjumané Islám of Bombay. 5

Agriculture: Suggestions in connection with a letter addressed by the Director of — to the Khetiwádi Patrak of Nadiád on the subject of the liability of wheat and jowári to the attacks of a kind of smut ... 6

Appointments: Approval of the nomination of Mr. Dayárám Gidumal Sháháni to the Statutory Civil Service 7

Bombay Gazetteer: Suggestion that the — should be translated into Sindhi 9

Fires: Distress of the villagers of Mohopa in the Panvel Táluka of the Kolába District consequent on the devastation caused by fire ... 9

Forests:
- Approval of the policy of forest conservancy in India ... 6
- Complaint that the acquisition of lands for forest purposes in the Dápoli Táluka is calculated to prove injurious to the interests of cultivators 6

Infant marriage and enforced widowhood: Disapproval of Government interference in the matter of reforming the customs of— ... 7

Judicial matters: Comments in connection with a case in which a European in Assam was acquitted of the charge of rape on a Native girl.. 4

Land revenue: Expression of opinion that the system of revenue settlement obtaining in Sind has prejudicially affected the zamindárs in that province 3

Levées: Remarks in connection with the — of Governors ... 8

Native arts and industries in India: Advocacy of more earnest action in the matter of encouraging— 5

New College at Poona: Disapproval of the proposal to name the — after Sir James Fergusson... 8

Public Works: Complaint regarding the want of a dharmashála and well near the Jalgaon station of the G. I. P. Railway 10

Relief works: Necessity of starting — in Kaládgi 6

Shrievalty of Bombay: Approval of the nomination of Mr. Rahimtulla Mahomed Sayáni to the— 7

Silting up of the Gulf of Cambay: Request to Sir James Fergusson to take measures for preventing the— 9

Supply of official reports to the public press: Comments on the resolution of Government in the matter of the— 9

Viceroy of India:
- Condemnation of the conduct of the Anglo-Indian planters of Bengal who insulted Lord Ripon on his return to Calcutta and advice to Government to take notice of their conduct 5
- Expression of opinion that the fullest opportunity should be given to the public to celebrate the occasion of Lord Ripon's visit to Bombay with the greatest eclat 4
- Suggestion for the release of a few prisoners from jails in honour of Lord Ripon 4

Part II.—Legislation—

Railway Bill:
- Recommendation that the period of time allowed to the public to bring forward their objections to the draft — should be extended 11
- Suggestions in connection with the draft— 10

Part III.—Local Self-government—

Municipal elections: Comments on the recently published rules regarding— 11

PART IV.—Education—

Law School in Poona: Suggestion that lectures in connection wi the new — should instead of being delivered at the Deccan Colleg be delivered at a place situated midway between the College a the city... ... ...
School masters: Complaint regarding insufficient remuneration and slo promotion to— ... ...

PART V.—Railways—

G. I. P. Railway line:
  Necessity of constructing commodious buildings on the Dádar statio of the— ... ...
  Suggestion to the authorities of the— ... ...

PART VI.—Municipalities—

Nadiád: Disapproval of the conduct of the president of the — Mun cipality in throwing obstacles in the way of the presentation of a address to Lord Ripon ... ...

PART VII.—Native States—

Hyderabad: Comments on the punishment inflicted on Sultán Nawa Jung by the Nizám of— ... ...

PART VIII.—Berár Affairs—

Bye-laws of the municipality of Akola: Suggestions in connection wi the draft— ... ...
Remuneration of village servants called Jaglias: Disapproval of the r duction recently made in the— ... ...
Report on Public Instruction in the Hyderabad Assigned Districts f the year 1883-84: Comments on the — ... ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL]

R.
537
OFFICE
AN 1885

REPORT

ON

NATIVE PAPERS

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 20th December 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	1,000
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	„ Vaidarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	281
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	275
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	160
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
37	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	4,350
38	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
39	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
40	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*41	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
42	„ Mahárashtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
43	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	400
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	450
*51	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*54	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.
	MARA'THI—continued.
66	The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly
67	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.
68	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.
69	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.
70	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
71	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly
72	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.
73	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.
74	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.
75	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.
	GUJARA'TI.
76	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly
77	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily
78	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly
79	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.
80	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.
81	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily
82	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly
83	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.
84	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly
*85	„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.
86	„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly
87	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.
88	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly
89	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.
90	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.
91	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.
92	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly
93	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly
94	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.
*95	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly
96	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily
97	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly
98	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly
99	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.
*100	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly
101	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly
*102	„ Mangal Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly
103	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly
104	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.
105	„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly
106	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.
107	„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.
108	„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.
109	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.
110	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.
111	„ Saurásthră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly
112	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.
113	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.
114	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.
115	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.
116	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Do.	Quarterly
117	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly
118	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly
119	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly
120	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.
121	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly
	KA'NARESE.
122	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly
123	„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do.
124	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.
125	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.
	URDU.
*126	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly
127	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.
	PERSIAN.
128	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
129	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly
	SINDI.
*130	The Muin-ul-Islam	Karáchi	Weekly
131	The Sind Sudhár	Do.	Do.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report u
which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the n
paper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the num
in these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that w or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the s absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well know
with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Govern
the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Makes certain remarks in connection with the progress of the Afghan Boundary Commission.

The Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 14th December says:—The fact that the Afghan Boundary Commission has travelled with safety over a great portion of Afghanistan has led some persons to indulge in several complacent notions. They say that a portion of the country is capable of being colonised and that its climate is agreeable to European constitution. This would appear to be a hint to Government to take over this portion of territory under some pretext or other. There is nothing astonishing in the circumstance that Afghanistan appears to have fallen a prey to the customary British policy of introducing the thin end of the wedge in the beginning. We wish success to our Government under any circumstances.

Complains of the decay of Indian art.

In an article headed "Decay of Native Art" the Subodh Patrika (15) of the 14th December says:—A propos of the exhibition of Indian and colonial products to be held in London two years hence, Major Keith, late Assistant Curator of Indian monuments, in a letter addressed to the London Times calls attention to the rapid decay of genuine Native art in India. While acknowledging the influence of other causes Major Keith lays the greater portion of the blame on the present generation of Europeans in India. Living as they do in constant communication with Europe, Major Keith says that they do not cherish that fellow-feeling and sympathy with the Native population around them which characterised their predecessors. Hence they do not evince any interest in Native art. There is undoubtedly much force in this statement. Our district officers can, we believe, do much to revive Indian art if only they set about it with a will. Apart from the patronage which it is in their power to extend to it, they can use their immense influence to encourage it in a variety of other ways and bring it to the notice of others. At the same time no small service can be done to the cause of Indian art if Government and men of capital co-operate with each other to secure its proper representation in the international exhibitions that are held from time to time in all the great countries of the world. There is nothing from which our art suffers so much as want of publicity. If proper steps are taken to make it known there is every likelihood of its creating a demand for itself in the markets of the world. And yet the change in circumstances under which Native art flourished in the past and the inability of our artisans to adapt themselves readily to the necessities of the present would seem to require a systematic and deliberate effort to rehabilitate Indian art in its former glory. Government has officers to look after the preservation of the ancient monuments of India and the collection of its ancient literature. A separate department has the care of the interests of Indian agriculture. Will it not be advisable to make it the duty of somebody to look to the revival of ancient art? While the whole country from one end to the other cries for a diversity of employment and Government are anxious to see it brought about, it may be the better part of prudence to seek to revive art in the country. For it goes without saying that the people themselves, whether artisans or capitalists, will not do it by their spontaneous efforts. The former are too ignorant and the latter too cautious to embark capital in a novel enterprise. But Government might, if they pleased, clear the ground and assist in bringing about the co-operation of art and capital.

Does not approve of the action of the Government of India in having voted five lákhs of rupees towards the South Kensington Exhibition of 1886.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 14th December says:—Mr. Keith, in his letter to the London Times, says that the Government of India have voted five lákhs towards the South Kensington Exhibition of 1886 with the view of resuscitating the industrial arts of India. Exhibitions in their own way do no doubt contribute towards the development of the industrial arts of a country. But they are not the primary step towards the attainment of that object. Five lákhs is not a small sum, and to expend it on a mere exhibition in the absence of anything real and permanent to encourage Native arts and tures is undoubtedly pure waste. These five lákhs, we think, could h more properly utilized if spent in establishing a permanent industrial in in the country. The difficulties in the way of the revival of Native i are already too numerous to mention, the most discouraging of then according to Mr. Keith, the apathy of the Anglo-Indian community. ernment really desire to do something for the revival of arts and indus them not thus fritter away India's money uselessly.

Remarks on the character and views of Lord Dufferin.

The Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 14th December says:—The ey people are now directed towards the new Until now there has been no occasion for the to form an estimate of the views and characte new Governor General and there does not appear to be much in the in drawn by some people. The few incidents connected with his recent Bombay tend to show that he has a leaning towards the cause of Europe Eurasians. And this is natural. Lord Ripon was the only exception general rule.

Departure of Lord Ripon from India.

The Gujaráti papers of this week refer to the great enthusiasm d by the Native public of this country in acc suitable reception to Lord Ripon on the ev departure to England, say that he has prove a very good Viceroy and has won the hearts of his subjects, express de at his departure from India, and hope that he will hereafter continue after the interests and welfare of India.

Requests Lord Ripon to explain for the guidance of his successors and of the presidential Governors the method by which he succeeded in getting a faithful idea of the poverty of India.

In an article headed "An appeal to Lord Ripon" the Subodh Pat of the 14th December says:—Lord Northbr recently deputed by the English Cabinet t for the purpose of reporting on its finances read in the papers that his Lordship after a the villages of the country was convinced poverty of the country and has accordingly measures for the relief of Egyptian finance this same nobleman was once our Governor General and had to d our finances, but he listened to the clamour of the powerful Anglo-Ind abolished the income tax, and the result was the multiplication of ro and tolls which transferred the burden from the urban to the rural po Then again we have had and have Governors, Lieut.-Governors, Me Council, who necessarily pass and repass through the country many m than did Lord Northbrook through Egypt, and yet fail to witness any of which the people complain and from which they suffer, and w Councillor in Mr. Ashburner, who on his return to England after 30 years in this country is found to assert that the latter is richer than the for we can make no other sense from his statement that while fam occurs occasionally in India it is chronic in England. The retiring Vic his late Finance Minister, however, perceived what none of their pre and the presidential Governors or few of their subordinates who c move in the country ever saw, viz., the poverty of India. This pove not only distinctly admitted by Lord Ripon's administration, but measures were taken with a view to mitigate it. Now what was the the key by which Lord Ripon and the Honourable Major (now Sir) read this fact, not between but rather underneath the lines of the offici submitted to them? We are aware both the statesmen are possess ordinary degree of sagacity and generosity, which must undoubtedly ha ly helped them to achieve this feat, but even the possession of these valuable as they are, does not seem to us sufficient to explain h divined the real condition of things and the true state of the feelin masses from glowing official reports which mislead even the local Gove as witness his Lordship's action in respect of the Bombay Mhowra a Bills. There must surely have been some method or plan or scheme this apparently difficult task was unerringly performed, and what we Excellency now is that he should leave behind him, if he has not alr an explanation of this method or scheme for the information and gu his successors, of the presidential Governors, and indeed of all supervising authorities. He will thereby add one more to the many services already rendered by him to the Government and the people of India.

Approves of the appointment of Lord Reay to the Governorship of Bombay.

The Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 16th December says:—The appointmen of Lord Reay to the Governorship of Bombay wil come to many as a surprise. As he is unknown i Bombay it is not possible to pronounce any definite opinion on his nomination to the post of Governor o this presidency. It is however satisfactory to find that the appointment has been conferred not on an Indian civilian but on a politician brought up in the free atmosphere of England. India in her present condition stands in need of such Viceroys, Governors and Judges, and it is from them that she chiefly expects independent and liberal action in the administration of public business. We have been frequently disappointed with the nomination of Indian civilians to the post of rulers. Not only Governors of presidencies but also Lieutenant-Governors should be selected from amongst those who have had no connection with this country. Such a policy would be very beneficial. Although such officers may have very little experience of India, their liberal views, their love of justice and upright conduct will make amends for that defect. We think that Mr. Gladstone knows this well and has therefore nominated an English Lord to the Governorship of Bombay instead of an old Indian officer. [The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 16th and the Akhbáre Sodágar (77) of the 17th December also express approval of the appointment of Lord Reay.]

Comments on the career of Sir James Fergusson as Governor of Bombay.

The Yazdán Parast (121) of the 14th December, in alluding to the approaching retirement of Sir James Fergusson from the Governorship of Bombay, says:—Bombay has been quite disappointed in its last five Governors. While Sir Seymour FitzGerald was inactive, Sir Philip Wodehouse was simple-minded, weak and devoid of administrative capabilities. Then followed Sir Richard Temple who pleased the people of Bombay by the use of flattery and sweet language. Some of his actions were so high-handed that they were well-nigh tyrannical. After him Sir James Fergusson has unfortunately proved himself to be a weak-minded and an irresolute ruler. Thoug there is yet time for thoroughly reviewing his career, we do not in the meantime hesitate to say that the people are not at all sorry to hear of his approaching departure. During his regime the severity of the A'bkári Act has increased He was instrumental in passing the Mhowra Bill through the local Council in spite of public opposition, which however Lord Ripon respected by withholding his assent to the measure. He came in the way of an important concession to the public by opposing the scheme of local self-government and by framing unsuitable laws in connection therewith. He passed the Game Bill without caring for the interests of his poor subjects. But these instances are not enough to illustrate the true nature of the administration of our present Governor. His weak-minded and irresolute policy has come to light on several occasions, the latest specimen of which was furnished by the resolution on Dr. Banks' case The people had formed great expectations of him and they were not slow to give the fullest expression to their feelings of sympathy with him on the death of his wife. But unfortunately nothing but disappointment has confronted them at the close of his career. Their only hope now is that his successor may prove a resolute, straightforward, just and kind ruler.

Comments in connection with the report on the foreign trade of India for 1883-84.

Reviewing the report on the foreign trade of India for 1883-84, the Indian Spectator (1) of the 14th December says:—The Government of India is bound to offer some reasonabl explanation why Government stores, the value of whicl was as low as Rs. 2,09,26,701 in 1882-83, have gon up by nearly half a million sterling during 1883-84 We may not be able to manufacture the greater portion of railway materia which is imported. But is it established beyond doubt that other article manufactured here cannot be bought cheaper than those imported from th United Kingdom?

Draws attention to the necessity of looking to the defences of the Bombay Harbour.

In a paragraph headed " The Defences of Bombay " the Bombay Chr (71) of the 14th December says:—No point to in the addresses of the Municipal Corporation
the Bombay Chamber of Commerce to Lord Du could be said to be of greater importance than which related to the undefended state of our ha and city. The new Viceroy could not better please the people of the ci Bombay and the presidency of which it is the capital than by paying early earnest attention to the representations of the two most important public b on the subject of the urgent and paramount necessity of constructing w which are considered absolutely necessary for the defence of our city harbour against any hostile naval attack. We earnestly trust that his Lor will take the earliest possible opportunity to do what may be practicabl relieve the Bombay community from the anxiety and apprehension to w they are naturally subjected by the neglect of the local authorities. The c quences of any further delay in the matter would be grave and tremendous, no wise ruler ought to lose any available opportunity for precluding the po lity of delay. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (77) of the 19th and the Bombay Sam
(81) of the 20th December make similar remarks.]

Approves of the abolition of stamp duty on joint stock debentures.

The same newspaper says:—The removal by order of the Governor G
ral in Council of the stamp duty on joint s debentures is a common sense concession to requirements of the joint stock enterprise in country. The incubus thus removed served w it lasted to render it extremely inconvenient to several companies to money on loans for the reasonable development of their useful undertak
What thus proved mischievous in practice was evidently iniquitous in princ
The Governments of Bombay and India are entitled to the thanks o public for the favourable response made by them to the representatio
Mr. Kittredge on the subject.

Says that the question of the sanitary requirements of villages deserves early consideration.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 15th December says that it is a matte deep regret that the question of affording medica to villagers should not hitherto have engaged the a tion it deserves. Municipal and local fund bu contain handsome provision for the constructio roads, wells, dharmashálás and schools, but scarce item is to be seen which provides for medical relief to poor villagers. V large sums of money are expended on the comforts and conveniences o public in cities like Bombay and Poona, is it creditable to Government tha lives of villagers should be left uncared for? Leaving municipal revenues o consideration for a moment, it is not clear why Government should hesitat devote local funds to meet the sanitary and other requirements of villagers—f which are in the main contributed by the village population. If schools established in villages for the convenience of a dozen or two dozen boys, not more indispensable that there should be a dispensary for the conveni of a hundred or a hundred and fifty villagers? The magnitude of the incon ence ordinarily suffered by villagers owing to the absence of dispensaries is visible when epidemics like cholera make their appearance. We admit tha these special occasions the district officers do all in their power to alleviate sufferings of the poor, but the relief falls short of their full requirements. T indeed a very unsatisfactory state of things and must engage the attentio our Government as well as our social leaders. We suggest that the pr arrangements under which three-fourths of the proceeds of the local fund are devoted to public works and one-fourth to education should make wa a new system under which five-twelfths of the local fund revenues shoul devoted to public works and one-third to the sanitary requirements of vill leaving one-fourth to be devoted to educational purposes as hitherto. Su system is calculated to prove beneficial to the interests of the rural popul and at the same time to redound to the credit of Government. If kind benevolent officers like Lords Ripon and Dufferin had witnessed the suffe of poor villagers they would not have been slow to take measures of r

But is it possible for such high authorities to witness the real condition of ou villagers? Our Governors' and Viceroys' tours do not extend beyond the limits of fashionable resorts like Simla and the capital cities of Native States. When at these places these officers are thoroughly occupied in receiving addresses and in partaking of feasts, and their natural inference is that the whole country is happy. During the past three months Lord Ripon travelled through a great portion of India and our local Governor has returned after a tour in the northern parts of the presidency, but did they make any attempt to know the real condition of the masses? The account of their travels that have been published do not show that they did any such thing. All the celebrated rulers of old such as Bájiráo I., Peter the Great, Frederick the Great, Alfred the Great, &c., used to travel incognito in order to know the real condition of their subjects and thereby succeeded in doing substantial good to the latter. These are historic facts and are known to our rulers, but cui bono when they do not care to utilize their knowledge? We are sure that many of the inconveniences which the people suffer during the present administration are traceable not to the negligence of the authorities but to their ignorance. The period of the sojourn of high officers in this country is indeed very limited, but surely it is possible to utilize it to the best advantage in the manner indicated if only the officers are so inclined.

Complains that great annoyance is caused to the people by military troops while moving from one place to another.

The Bakul (20) of the 14th December says:—It is usual for Native and European troops to move from one place to another either for change of climate or for military reasons. The zamindárs or Native Chiefs in whose territory the troops encamp have to look to their comforts and conveniences. It is not proper that under the just rule of a government like that of the British the burden of providing for the requirements of troops should fall on the rayats. On receipt of orders from Government officers the zamindárs are generally required to spend considerable sums of money in the first instance in purchasing the necessary provisions, and they are put to much annoyance when their account is settled. On many occasions the articles purchased by these people are returned as useless and they lose much in disposing of such articles. Until now the zamindárs have been doing their duty without demur, and even if they did raise their voice in the matter who would care for their remonstrances? As the district and divisional officers have no regard for the miseries of the people, how is it possible that the complaints should reach the higher authorities and elicit from them some measures of redress? Indeed one shudders to think of the annoyance caused to the people residing in villages adjoining these encamping grounds by these moving troops and especially the European portion of them. The announcement that military troops will pass through a particular village is enough to cause the greatest consternation among the people. It creates apprehensions regarding the safety of their houses and property and the protection of the honour of their women. Civil and police officers are not able to preserve order. It is very disgraceful that those who are employed for the purpose of protecting the people in times of trouble should be the occasion of such miseries to the rayats in times of peace. Government must sift the matter thoroughly and take effective measures for suppressing the evil.

Approves of the appointment of Mr. Sháháni to the Statutory Civil Service.

The Sind Times (5) of the 16th December says:—The visit of His Excellency Sir James Fergusson to Karáchi has resulted in at least one direct benefit to the people of Sind. We are exceedingly gratified to learn that His Excellency with the consent of the Governor General of India has appointed Mr. Dayárám Gidumal Sháháni, B.A., LL.B., Registrar of the Sadar Court, a probationer in the Statutory Civil Service. This is the first occasion that such an honour has been bestowed on a native of Sind. We congratulate the Government on its choice, for we have not the least hesitation in saying that a better man than Mr. Dayárám Gidumal could not have been found in the whole province. He comes of a very high and distinguished family, and his eldest brother is a very successful and influential zamindár. In the case o

Mr. Dayárám Gidumal family consideration is the very least. We are glad that in appointing him to the Statutory Civil Service the Bombay Government has recognised the claims of merit.

Scarcity of rain in the Sholápur District.

A correspondent of the Sholápur Vritt (62) of the 18th December complains of scarcity of rainfall in the Mádha Táluka of the Sholápur District, and requests Government to grant remissions to the extent of their demand for the current year. The editor of the Vritt observes that the cry is general throughout the district of Sholápur and points out the necessity of opening relief works. [A correspondent of the Pandhari Vaibhav (49) of the 14th December makes a similar complaint.]

Makes certain suggestions in connection with nominations to the shrievalty of Bombay.

A correspondent of the Yajdán Parast (121) of the 14th December points out the advantages of making the shrievalty of Bombay an honorary post and says:—The post is certainly not more responsible and important than those of Chairman of the Municipal Corporation and member of the Legislative Council, which are honorary. Moreover many citizens are willing to accept the shrievalty without receiving any remuneration. Many think that the expenditure of the large amount of Rs. 10,000 a year is pure waste. The sheriff has very little work to do; the deputy sheriff manages everything. Neither the public nor the Government will lose anything by making the shrievalty honorary. The same paper in another article takes exception to the present system of conferring the shrievalty on Europeans every alternate year. Looking to the proportion which the European population of Bombay bears to the remaining sections of the community, it would be just if Europeans were nominated to the post every fourth year, Hindus, Pársis and Mahomedans being successively appointed to the post during the interval.

Comments in connection with the recent resolution of Government on the subject of the appointment of Honorary Surgeons to the Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital.

The Sind Times (5) of the 12th December says:—The controversy between the Bombay Government and the Municipal Commissioners respecting the appointment of Honorary Assistant Surgeons to the Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital threatens to end in an open breach. A Government resolution of the 24th ultimo publishes an account of the misunderstanding that has arisen between the Government and the Municipal Corporation. This reminds us of the curious letter of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to Mr. Harrison, the Chairman of the Calcutta Municipality, in which the latter gentleman was charged with official discourtesy towards Mr. Rivers Thompson. It is said on behalf of the Bombay Corporation that the censure contained in the resolution applies to the Government as much as to the municipality. It is a noticeable feature of these controversies between municipal bodies and local Governments that the Government always ends by making a personal affair of a public question. The Bengal Government, when pressed to the wall, sought refuge behind offended dignity and censured where it could not convince. The present attitude of the Bombay Government towards the city corporation is not at all satisfactory. We cannot look upon these indications of either overt or covert opposition to local self-government without apprehension. The greatest measure of Lord Ripon's Government is the boon of local self-government, which is no innovation but the natural outcome of the line of policy laid down by the Queen's Proclamation. Sir James Fergusson thinks that the best form of government in India is a sort of benevolent despotism, and he said so in as many words here and elsewhere. It is therefore no wonder that his Government should view with suspicion the scheme of local self-government. It rests with the local authorities whether self-government will grow as an independent power side by side with the supreme authority, acting in harmony with it, or whether it will be stifled in its infancy by official strangulation. Lord Ripon has not yet left these shores, but still cruel misgivings rise in our minds as to the scheme of local self-government turning out a reality or a farce and fiction. And this will decide whether the British rule in India will make an advance in the estimation of the people or whether it will go back a quarter of a century.

Does not approve of the employment of a punitive police force at Sholápur.

Referring to the employment of punitive police at Sholápur with the view of punishing the Mahomedan population of that place for their riotous conduct on certain recent occasions the Kalpataru (35) of the 14th December says that the Mahomedan community of Sholápur are in very poor circumstances and deserve to be treated with more leniency. The circumstance that the last Moharram and other processions passed off quietly is indicative of the beneficial result which the sentences passed by the Judicial Court have produced on the community, and moreover many respectable persons have given security for future good behaviour. In these circumstances the Kalpataru thinks it inadvisable to punish them further by the imposition of a punitive police force.

Suggests that the records known as the "Poona Daftar" should be printed and published.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 18th December, while approving of the appointment of Mr. Forrest to the special duty of examining the old records lying in the archives of the Secretariat, points out the importance and utility of printing and publishing the old records known as the "Poona Daftar" and which are at present in charge of the Commissioner, C. D. These records must contain a vivid description of the several exhibitions of prowess, of several political feats and of several tumultuous battles of the days of the Marátha rule. With the same liberality as characterized the action of Government in conferring the boon of education thirty years ago we request them to issue a general order for the printing and publication of these old records. The publication of these papers is not likely to prove prejudicial to the interests of Government inasmuch as nearly half a century has rolled over them and they are not likely to be of any but historic use. May the interest which the Governor of Bombay has all along evinced in the cause of education receive special significance by his taking measures in the direction indicated and may His Excellency thereby crown the last days of his administration! The writer concludes by making certain suggestions regarding the selection of records and the appointment of officers for carrying out the work.

Retracts the remarks made in its issue of the 7th December on the conduct of the proprietors of the New English School, Poona, in proposing to name the new College in that city after Sir James Fergusson.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 14th December expresses regret for having inserted in its issue of the 7th idem the article reported at page 8 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 13th December 1884, which contained animadversions on the conduct of the proprietors of the New English School, Poona, in having proposed to name the new College in that city after Sir James Fergusson, and retracts the remarks made in that article.

Local Self-government.

Comments on the election rules for municipalities.

In an article headed "The Election Rules for Municipalities" the Mahrátta (2) of the 14th December says:—Certain rules to be called "The District Election Rules" have been published in the Bombay Government Gazette and objections to them have been invited. The first objection we have to urge is against the name. We think these rules should be cited as the "Municipal Election Rules" and the word "District" omitted. The second rule refers to the division of a municipal town or city into divisions called "wards." The same rule confers upon the municipality the power of determining how many of the total number of elective commissioners shall be elected in each ward. This is too vague, and we would therefore suggest that the rule should be modified and should run as follows: "The municipal district shall be divided into as many wards as there will be elective commissioners on the body." The reason of the objection is plain enough. Supposing a municipality has under orders of Government fifteen elective seats and the city is divided into twelve wards only and the municipality decides that three of these shall have two seats assigned to each, the result will be that whereas a few voters in the city will have the priv two persons each, the voters in the other wards will have the naming only one. This anomaly was pointed out by the Times case of the presidency town, and we think the mistake ought not and perpetuated. To the second clause of the same section w add "provided also that due notice of the contemplated change w residents and objections, if any, heard." In Rule 3 we would su word "municipality" be substituted for the word "Collector" in 5 gives the qualifications of voters. Voters are grouped into those possessing the intellectual qualification; those satisfying t test, and others such as holders of titles of distinction; Gover and pensioners and servants of companies paying Government Between these three groups, however, it has pleased Governm distinction. The first and the third require the residential qualifi tion, while the second has been exempted altogether from this te distinction is made between the first and the third by requiring t of voters to be residents of the district for not less than six mont date of the publication of the list of voters. We understand t must have led Government to exempt rate-payers from the resid

we do not know why a distinction is made between the first and th and we therefore urge that the further distinction be removed. In R like to see a clause inserted providing that the decision of the mana should be communicated to the person concerned. This being prescribed for an appeal to the Collector should be counted fro communication and not from the date of decision. The informa in the voting card as published under Rule 13 is, we think, in card should show the age, the caste and the qualifications of should also contain a declaration from the voter that to the best o and belief he is entitled to vote and that the particulars written b the card are correct. The rules regulating the receiving of votes and require thorough revision. The work of receiving or refusin not be left to the discretion of the polling officer. The rules lay procedure should be clear and concise, otherwise the interests o be at the mercy of the polling officer, and there are chances th abuse of power. The polling officer should only record his ob card, and the municipal commissioners at their special meeting on the objections so recorded. The polling officer should be honest man, and if his appointment is left to the managing co municipality we think the choice will be better than under any ment. While on this subject of election rules we may as well a to pronounce its decision in the matter of the value of the s to enable a man to employ a proxy. A decision on this questio nounced in the case of elections to local boards, and we see no same should not have been made applicable to the case of muni have one more suggestion to make. We think the rules shou municipal servants should have nothing whatever to do with th votes on behalf of particular candidates or with facilitating elections. The reports about the conduct of municipal servants recent elections are very scandalous, and we hope a repe scandals will be prevented. Before we conclude we have to pensioners of Native States are added to the list in clause (m), S is no danger of swelling the list of voters.

The Kesari (37) of the 16th December says:—Before we d municipal election rules we suggest that rules and resolutions of should, instead of being published in English in the Gover
be published in vernacular newspapers so that they mig fullest discussion. The very circumstance that the rules we discuss relate to municipalities is enough to raise expectations t be more liberal than the rules relating to local boards. Th work of municipal committees is more limited than that of loc
while the people in municipal towns are in advance of villagers political education. We therefore had confidence that Gov classify municipal committees on some principle and would elastic nature of its laws by practical measures. But instead thing in the rules to meet our expectations we perceive that G impressed upon the committees that in its opinion it is only de

the concession of electing half the total number of members Rule 2, which relates to the division of towns into wards, is rathe concession of the right of voting should be granted to conciliat Native States, pensioners and honorary servants of public order that the defects in the qualifications of voters might be re amendment is necessary in the rule which disqualifies person non-compoundable offences in the light of the fact that even framed the rule precludes persons convicted of minor offences ment of the right of voting. The powers conferred on polling 18 are said to be enormous and have given rise to complai public. We therefore suggest that for Rule 19 should be substi framed by the Poona Committee. The authority of appoint prepare lists of voters is vested in the Collector, while the p committee is empowered to appoint polling officers. We thi confer all such powers on managing committees or municipalitie

Says that the qualifications for commissioners of municipal and local boards should be lowered.

A correspondent of the Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 14th Dec
the qualifications at present fixed fo of local and municipal boards are p
to be useful for the purposes of sma recommends that the money limits sh
by half while social and other tests sh
to suit the requirements of villagers.

Education.

Complains that no separate institution exists in Sind for the education of Mahomedans.

The Muin-ul-Islám (130) of the 28th November says:—O causes of want of education among Mah poverty. There are several Maho desirous of educating their children do so for want of funds. It is a pity vince like ours (Sind) where Mahomedans form the chief part o public there is no separate institution for their education. Na which the latter pay to Government by way of taxation is appli of persons of other religions. Educational officers should notic

Railways.

Points out the necessity of constructing a light railway between Purána Dero and Mithani in Sind.

A correspondent of the Sind Sudhár (131) of the 6th De
Some time back it was rumoured tha would be a ferry steamer plying on light railway running between Pu Mithani. Nearly 8 months have p matter was first mooted, and we have the rumour was not without foundation, but that it has now die
the Government officials of the Hyderabad District did not agre Superintendent of the railway in his proposal to construct a l am of opinion that the officials of the Hyderabad District rightly.

Municipalities.

Complains of unequal assessment of municipal taxes in Sholápur.

A correspondent of the Poona Vaibhav (50) of the complains of the annoyance caused Sholápur by unequal assessment of since the nomination of elected memb
municipal board, and says that re municipal authorities have been of no avail while strict orders to the servants of the municipality to serve notices on defaulte

Native States.

Remarks in connection with the unsatisfactory state of the finances of Mysore.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 18th December says:—The dition of the State of Mysore is not the burden of liabilities on account other causes is so great that nearly of the State revenues is absorbed in t account of interest. English officers always proclaim to the tention of cultivating friendly relations with Native princes an their rights, but a glance at the history of the political rela princes with English officers will show that the treatment latter to the former is not just. An attempt to see through th embroglio elicits the fact that political intrigue was at the botto Notwithstanding the fact that considerate Englishmen fully well-being of Native princes is a source of great strength to the is found that political officers generally strive to weaken the said that the Mahárája of Mysore is determined upon represen to Lord Dufferin, and we hope that his Lordship will do justice

Comments in connection with the sentence passed on Sultán Nawáz Jung of Hyderabad.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 15th December says:—The
on Sultán Nawáz Jung by His Highn Government for complicity in the seems severe, but the severity was pro
by the circumstances of the case. Th tion of the State must be taken into sidering the nature of the sentence, which though severe in its a warning for the future. The procedure which was followed sion in not allowing the accused to appear by counsel has ho mended itself to public approval. The enquiry must therefo one-sided, but the readiness with which the fine has been paid a given by Sultán Nawáz Jung to quit the State within a month defect in the investigation. The firmness shown by the Minist at the present juncture deserves praise. [The Subodh Patri Yajdán Parast (121) of the 14th December express similar Gujaráti (92) and the Gujarát Mitră (72) of the same date appr of His Highness the Nizám in this affair and say that the sente Sultán Nawáz Jung is just.]

Berár Affairs.

Suggests that the registration work of Asegaon should be transferred to the Sub-Registrar of Tákarkheda.

A correspondent of the Varhád
of the 15th December points out th transferring the registration work o
Sub-Registrar of Tákarkheda.

RAOJI BHAVAN
Acting Reporter on t

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
23rd December 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Afghan Boundary Commission: Remarks in connection with the progress of the— 3

Appointments:

  Approval of the appointment of Lord Reay to the Governorship of Bombay 5

  Approval of the appointment of Mr. Sháháni to the Statutory Civil Service 7

Bombay defences: Necessity of taking measures for carrying out the defences of the Bombay Harbour 6

Exhibition: Disapproval of the action of the Government of India in having voted five lákhs of rupees towards the South Kensington — . 3

Honorary Surgeons: Comments in connection with the recent resolution of Government on the subject of the appointment of — to the Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital 8

Movements of military troops: Complaint that great annoyance is caused to the people by the — from one place to another 7

Native arts and industries in India: Complaint regarding the decay of — 3

New College at Poona: Retraction of the remarks made in the issue of the Subodh Patrika of the 7th December on the conduct of the proprietors of the New English School in proposing to name the — after Sir James Fergusson 9

Police: Disapproval of the employment of a punitive — force at Sholápur 9

Poverty of India: Request to Lord Ripon to explain for the guidance of his successors and of presidential Governors the method by which he succeeded in getting a faithful idea of the — 4

Public service: Comments on the career of Sir James Fergusson as Governor of Bombay 5

Records: Suggestion that the — known as the "Poona Daftar" should be printed and published 9

Report on the foreign trade of India for 1883-84: Comments in connection with the — 5

Sanitation: Expression of opinion that the question of the — of villages deserves early consideration 6

Scarcity of rain in the Sholápur District: Complaint regarding — ... 8

Shrievalty of Bombay: Suggestions in connection with nominations to the — 8

Stamp duty on joint stock debentures: Approval of the abolition of — . 6

Viceroys of India:

  Comments in connection with the departure of Lord Ripon from India 4

  Remarks on the character and views of Lord Dufferin 4

Part II.—Local Self-government—

Local Boards: Expression of opinion that the qualifications for commissioners of municipal and — should be lowered 11

Municipal election: Comments on the rules for —

    The Kesari 10

    The Mahrátta 9

Part III.—Education—

Education of Mahomedans: Complaint that no separate institution exists in Sind for the — 11

Part IV.—Railways—

Railway between Purána Dero and Mithani in Sind: Necessity of constructing a light — 11

Part V.—Municipalities—

Sholápur: Complaint regarding unequal assessment of municipal taxes at— 11

Part VI.—Native States—

Hyderabad: Comments in connection with the sentence passed on Sultán Nawáz Jung of— ... ...

Mysore: Remarks in connection with the unsatisfactory state of the finances of— ... ...

Part VII.—Berár Affairs—

Registration work: Expression of opinion that the — of Asegaon should be transferred to the Sub-Registrar of Tákarkheda ... ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

C. R.
2406
INDIA OFFICE
20 JAN 1885

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 27th December 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	600
2	,, Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	460
3	,, Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
4	,, Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	1,000
5	,, Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,650
7	,, Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,300
8	,, Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	,, Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	500
10	,, Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	950
11	,, Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	,, Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	,, Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	350
14	,, Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	900
15	,, Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	700
16	,, Vaïdarbh	Akola	Do.	350
17	,, Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Do.	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
18	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	574
19	,, A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	125
20	,, Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	664
21	,, Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	281
22	,, Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	375
*23	,, Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
24	,, Daïvadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
25	,, Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	275
26	,, Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	610
27	,, Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	100
28	,, Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	250
29	,, Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	,, Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	,, Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	,, Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	,, Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	335
34	,, Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	160
35	,, Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
36	,, Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	240
37	,, Kesari	Poona	Do.	4,350
38	,, Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
39	,, Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
40	,, Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	265
*41	,, Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
42	,, Mahárashtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
43	,, Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	,, Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	245
45	,, Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	150
46	,, Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	400
47	,, Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	175
48	,, Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	400
49	,, Pandhari Vaïbhav	Pandharpur	Do.	100
50	,, Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	450
*51	,, Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*52	,, Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	,, Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*54	,, Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
55	,, Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
56	,, Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	250
57	,, Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
58	,, Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	220
*59	,, Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	,, Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	735
*61	,, Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	,, Sholápur Vritt	Sholápur	Do.	200
63	,, Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	125
64	,, Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	,, Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 1000

Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
MARA'THI—continued.
The Telagu Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	300
„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	250
„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	500
ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	475
„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	485
„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	200
GUJARA'TI.
The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	850
„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	394
„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	415
„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,175
„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	500
„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	50
„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	700
„ Chamanistáne Hamesh Bahár	Bombay	Do.	200
„ Dátardun	Do.	Weekly	585
„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,025
„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	300
„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	450
„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	984
„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	300
„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Quarterly	200
„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	800
„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,350
„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	125
„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	810
„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	925
„ Mangal Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	250
„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Do.	350
„ Nyáyadarshak	Ahmedabad	Weekly	200
„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
„ Praja Mitră	Surat	Do.	700
„ Rást Goftár	Bombay	Do.	1,750
„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	327
„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	620
„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	1,700
„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	423
„ Trimásik Tikákár	Do.	Quarterly	500
„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	85
„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	778
„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
KA'NARESE.
The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	180
„ Karnátak Patră	Do.	Do.	300
„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	915
„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	115
URDU.
The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	200
PERSIAN.
The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	500
ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	327
SINDI.
The Muin-ul-Islam	Karáchi	Weekly	200
The Sind Sudhár	Do.	Do.	500

---

es.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, re printed in italics.

The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the News- the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, aced at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be ly necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed nark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in eral Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

In an articl

Requests Lord Du treat Anglo-Indian contempt and acc
treatment to Natives

sions to the priv
government inau
fere with the priv
equilibrium inas
of the status of scheme as much claims to the righ proval of these A mence. That the
are calculated to will be able to re
desire to govern
not countenance
In such circumst critical. Those w
pire is in danger
Viceroy like Lor
avoid a fall unle
conquered subjec truth. However handed treatment
ances and comm
to atone for it. E
like Wásudev Ba
these men have n
the rainy season
showers first appe
spotlike cloud beg to it. The former latter are thrown illustration from e stance that men li
should try to men
should not despise
the people have th
if our Government
the whip, the peop
in this country ha
in their true light.
opposed they try
But a Viceroy wh
British rule in In people cannot affo
according to thei
Dufferin is a wise
do everything afte
make this request,
Russian embroglio
tion and the haute overcoming that h
follow the example
Anglo-Indians and
(9) of the 25th Dec
College Magazine fo

Politics and the Public Administration.

Requests Lord Dufferin to treat Anglo-Indians with contempt and accord fair treatment to Natives.

In an article headed "A request to Lord Dufferin" the Shiváji (61) of the 19th December says:—The several incidents of the administration of Lord Ripon have fully exposed the fact that the Anglo-Indian community cannot bear the sight of a Viceroy taking measures founded on principles of justice and calculated to serve as concessions to the privileges of vast masses of people. The scheme of local self-government inaugurated by the late Viceroy, though in no way likely to interfere with the privileges of Anglo-Indians, was enough to disturb their mental equilibrium inasmuch as the new measure was conducive to the improvement of the status of local bodies, and they set about the task of nullifying the scheme as much as lay in their power. The Indian people advance their just claims to the right of trial by jury, but the demand does not meet with the approval of these Anglo-Indians and they cry it down with unnecessary vehemence. That the Anglo-Indians watch with a jealous eye any measures that are calculated to secure the advancement of Natives is a fact which everybody will be able to realize to himself. Anglo-Indians now make no secret of their desire to govern the Natives as a conquered people, and a Viceroy who does not countenance their views is looked upon as an enemy and held in detestation. In such circumstances the position of an Indian Viceroy has become very critical. Those who should assist him throw obstacles in his way, and the empire is in danger of receiving a terrible shock at the hands of a short-sighted Viceroy like Lord Lytton. However powerful the conquerors, they cannot avoid a fall unless they accord an affectionate and just treatment to their conquered subjects. History furnishes several instances illustrative of this truth. However mild and humble the conquered races, unjust and high-handed treatment at the hands of the conquerors is sure to give rise to disturbances and commotions. The Musalmáns used us very roughly and they had to atone for it. Even the English have begun to treat us unfairly and men like Wásudev Balwant have begun to appear on the stage. It is true that these men have not yet been able to make their mark. The clouds that during the rainy season overcast the skies and delight the whole creation by heavy showers first appear like little spots. A wise man as soon as he sees a small spotlike cloud begins to take measures for the future, while fools pay no heed to it. The former on account of their foresight suffer no hardship, while the latter are thrown into misery and trouble. Our rulers should not allow this illustration from everyday life to be lost upon them. Looking to the circumstance that men like Phadke have begun to appear in this country our rulers should try to mend their ways. Trusting to the advice of Anglo-Indians they should not despise the Natives. Our rulers have hitherto acted with justice and the people have therefore borne the yoke of foreign sway without demur. But if our Government begin to think of us lightly and serve us with a stroke of the whip, the people will not be slow to throw off that yoke. The Europeans in this country have been blinded by elation and are incapable of seeing things in their true light. They therefore preach very strange things, and if they are opposed they try to gain over the opposition by adopting a hostile attitude. But a Viceroy who is swayed with a desire to strengthen the foundations of British rule in India and to accomplish the welfare of the Indian and English people cannot afford to lend his ear to these mad people. He should treat them according to their desert and despise their unreasonable preachings. Lord Dufferin is a wise and farsighted statesman and there is no doubt that he will do everything after mature consideration. Nevertheless we have thought fit to make this request, considering the peculiar position of our Indian Viceroys. The Russian embroglio would prove the greatest hitch in his Lordship's administration and the hauteur of Anglo-Indians would be a great obstacle in the way of overcoming that hitch. We therefore respectfully pray that his Lordship will follow the example set by Lord Ripon by punishing these rude and haughty Anglo-Indians and by treating Natives with fairness. [The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 25th December, in reviewing an article in the issue of the Christian College Magazine for the month of November from the pen of Colonel Osborne contrasting the administration of India by the successors of Ta

by the British Government, expresses similar sentiments in reg treatment received by Natives at the hands of the present ruler

Comments in connection with the paper on "the mutual connection between England and her Indian Empire" read by Sir Orfeur Cavenagh before the East India Association.

In reviewing the paper on "the mutual connection betwe
her Indian Empire" read by Sir O
before the East India Association, t
of the 21st December says:—But l India has to get. She no doubt buys liberty and education from England.
price? Our firm belief is that poor
the loser. She has to deal with a pow
He dictates his own terms and she has no voice in the bargain.
to import from England judges, barristers, collectors, heads o
one departments, not because there is want of them here but be creatures of the ruling nation must be fed. She is unable to tra account for want of capital. She is everyday growing poor.
says there is peace. We grant that there is peace. But what is To protect English trade, and not to protect the dumb mill everyday see that the interests of Natives are always sacrificed of the ruling race. He tells us that the former is no longer req seed and at the same time to be ready with a matchlock in his his harvests. But who is to protect him, we ask, from the offi ment at the time of collecting the revenue? He must pay the has enormously been increased. There is no option, no mercy the hands of the Collector. There are no Pindáris and no wily But there is not much to be lost. The Hindus are judged under a minal Code when both the parties are Natives. But do not case when one of the parties happens to be an Englishman? We kn the Anglo-Indians treat us. It was only during the benign gov Ripon that the local self-government scheme was introduced on a br are one or two solitary instances in which Natives have been ap on the benches of High Courts. Native members of Legislati nominated and not elected. The members nominated do not as a generally represent public opinion. It is unnecessary to say th Ráo Bahádur Khanderáo Ráste and the Thákor of Limbdi do n public. The history of the Gagging Act of Lord Lytton fairly the Indian Government does not at times object to fair criticis looks to the reduction of military expenditure as a source finances of India on a sounder basis. But we do not know why pay his brethren so absurdly high salaries. Then comes the ite not a slight worthless drain assuredly. The numerous lines of and other public works would no doubt show the material prosp the capital spent on them were Indian capital. The writer say has the more important task of fitting the people of India for
But in the very next sentence he adds that the classes now edu to enforce order. We do not know what he understands by the

Says that Sir James Fergusson deserves the title of K.C.S.I., which it is understood will be conferred on him for his Indian services.

The Kesari (37) of the 23rd December says:—It is und
James Fergusson will be rewarded w
K.C.S.I. on account of his valuable his stay in India. Whatever the p there is not the slightest doubt that been making the close of his career Latterly he has paid considerable spread of education, which is looked up tion of all true civilization. In a recent resolution the Bomb has expressed its full concurrence in the views expressed by th
India in their resolution on the report submitted by the Educa
The great honour done to Sir James during his recent tour in no doubt about the popularity he has achieved. Of course he of acts which do not become him, but these naturally merge in good deeds. We therefore think that the title which it is pro on him will become him well.

Comments on Lord Dufferin's visit to a village in the Khándesh District on his way to Calcutta.

The Sind Times (5) of the 23rd December says:—S should be attached to the following a portion of a telegram describin journey from Bombay to Calcutta:
having expressed a desire before dency to inspect a typical Bomb and the villagers' dwellings, the train was stopped at Páchora to enable him to do so, this being the last opportunity, as the Berárs and Central Provinces before morning," &c. We d Excellency was actuated by a feeling of curiosity alone. We good reports of our present Viceroy, and this remarkable epis ship's first railway journey in India should be characteristic c are not aware that any other Viceroy ever did what Lord D Viceregal tours are generally so well organised affairs that seldom, if ever, any opportunity of seeing anything of true vill Royal visits and Viceregal tours are merely triumphal proce town and every village thus honoured turns out in holiday at for the time its natural squalor and misery. The little vi Dufferin honoured with a visit could have been scarcely prepar tion, and His Excellency may congratulate himself upon having sight that he may not see again. But His Excellency fairly everything for himself.

Makes some suggestions for the consideration of Lord Dufferin.

The Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 27th December says:—
draw the attention of Lord Dufferi measures which Lord Ripon could n
want of time and on account of th were thrown in his way. The Ar injurious to the inhabitants of the country. Lord Dufferin w satisfaction by its repeal as that caused by the abolition o Press Act. He ought also to do away with the license tax.
now free from famine and war, and this is a suitable opportuni that odious tax. There is also much room for further reduci salt. The forest and ábkári laws ought to engage his Lord
The cry against them from the people of the Bombay Pres become very loud. No other legislative measures have discontent among the public and drawn so much discredit
Unfortunately the complaints against them did not reach t Ripon; otherwise he would certainly have taken some steps in mitigating the distress caused by them. [The Akhbáre Sod same date requests Lord Dufferin to further reduce the d readjust the license tax, to fix the rate of duty on spirituous l into the country according to the prices at which they are sold importation of unwholesome spirituous liquors like brandy, rights of Natives, and to encourage indigenous industries.]

Comments in connection with the public demonstrations in Bombay in honour of Lord Ripon.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 22nd December says:—The made in Bombay in honour of the
during three days of the last w
Friday and Saturday—amply testifie of regard and gratitude entertaine public of this presidency towards the
and to the intensity with which that public entertains thos demonstrations in Bombay had a feature of their own, to which is rendered necessary by the fact that we owe that delighting feature to His Excellency the Governor, Sir James Fergusso strations in Northern India were absolutely independent, un sympathy. But in Bombay Sir James Fergusson gave the support and assistance, for which he deserves the thanks of t
The Native public and the Government took each other into co are expressing, we believe, the opinion of that public when we
the presentation of addresses on Thursday last in the Tow Fergusson rose to open the proceedings by a short preparator
ing his gratification at the manifestations of regard for Lord about him the heartiest gratitude of all present. Nothin happier than the idea which prompted His Excellency appreciated by the Native public. The Government of B difficult task in arranging for the reception by Lord Ripon of tations and addresses, and the arrangements made were re satisfactory. The Governor's speech in the Town Hall befor of the addresses came upon the Native public as a very agre altogether added to the imposing character of the scene whic presented on that day. That speech showed, as it were, that of Bombay, as represented by His Excellency Sir James Fe Native public on a common platform, laid aside for a mo

due to its position, and freely expressed its gratification feelings aroused in the minds of the Native public b visit. We hope all alike, whether the Government or the our Anglo-Indian friends, will lay the lessons these demonstra to their hearts. The Native mind is receptive and under progressive influences which are at work it cannot but impro morally. Ten years ago such popular demonstrations as witnessed in honour of Lord Ripon from one end of the co could hardly be heard of. The Natives could gather in crowd no doubt heard of. But the crowds on the occasion of the honour of Lord Ripon have this to distinguish them from sim had gathered in the past that the former entered heartily int work, understood what they were about and showed an intelli of the services of Lord Ripon to India in right oriental style recalling to our minds the accounts of receptions of the gods
the Rámáyana and the Mahábhárata. The statesman cannot these events. England can no longer treat them as ephemera no meaning about them. These demonstrations show tha seeing and feeling; and nothing better shows the wisdom an policy which Lord Ripon pursued than the joyous movem
[The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 21st December says:—The only must have been gratifying to the illustrious noblema meant but, as Mr. Justice West remarked at the University other day, it reads a lesson to succeeding Viceroys which the fully lay to heart. For it demonstrates in a way which i mistake the existence of a political feeling among the people to drop all differences of race, creed or caste to unite for affecting them all. This circumstance will henceforth have t by all our future administrators. At the same time we can indifference, nay in some cases even petty obstruction, whi
the European community, who have hitherto been justly rega of the rest in most demonstrations, have generally displayed adopting this procedure they have only manifested their pet looked small in the eyes of all. Such mistakes of policy, it i not be repeated in future both in their own interests and other classes. Nonetheless it cannot be denied that thei occasion has allowed the Natives an opportunity of showing without the prompting or the assistance of the European Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 21st December expresses se
those of the Indu Prakásh.]

Comments on the conduct of Sir James Fergusson in connection with the public demonstrations in Bombay in honour of Lord Ripon.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 21st December says:
gusson's remarks while introduci deputations to the Viceroy, as also University, were characterised by
ing. We have heard a great dea cellency with regard to the nationa
last week. But whatever the merit to be made out against him, we cannot help observing that given to an administrator who shows himself to be such an ad
Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 24th December says:—The Munic
Bombay has honoured itself by adopting a resolution thanking

son for the part he took in the reception given to Lord Ripon in thi has shown that even a Conservative Governor can act in harmo Liberal administration. A Governor like Sir James Fergusson suppressed the agitation that prevailed in Bengal last year. If he errors committed by him last year the Bombay public will not fai their gratitude to him when he retires from the administration of this in April next. He has not shown any regard for the respecta of the Native press. He must have seen from the recent demon honour of Lord Ripon what influence the Native dailies exercise on We only request Sir James to supply the vernacular dailies with news and information regarding the movements of Government as the Anglo-Indian press.]

Disapproves of the conduct of the European officer of Government who ordered the removal of the flags with which the High Court was decorated during Lord Ripon's stay in Bombay.

The Yajdán Parast (121) of the 21st December, in an arti
" Public Buildings and Public Decoration
We are very sorry to hear that several officers of Government ordered the remo flags with which several public buildings i were decorated during the recent demons honour of Lord Ripon. It is rumoured question of removal of flags from the High to be brought to the notice of His Excellency the Governor. Khá Mancherji Cowasji Murzbán deserves thanks for decorating public on the occasion. We understand that a special resolution on the subje rating public buildings on such occasions is in existence. It is surprising that a European officer should have been so very indi insolent as to have the flags removed from the High Court Government ought to enquire into the affair and should declare th the power enjoyed by the Public Works Department in the matter of public buildings on public occasions.

Expresses regret at the circumstance that Government offices were not allowed a half holiday on Thursday and Saturday in connection with the demonstrations in honour of Lord Ripon.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 21st December says:—The G
of Bombay deserves thanks for the efficien rendered to the spontaneous public dem
in honour of Lord Ripon. The circums Government offices were not generally half holiday on Thursday and Saturday marred the success of its efforts. The pub ed that the Government would not fail t much generosity on such an occasion, but they were disappointed.

Requests Lord Ripon to represent to the Queen Empress the grievances of the people of India.

The Vártáhar (67) of the 20th December contains the followin
Lord Ripon:—Pray, Lord, when you go vered Mother, our Gracious Queen and Em
we actually die for want of proper fo clothing, and we are utterly destitute of means of defence. This is all on acc misrepresentations of Anglo-Indian officials, who fatten at ou Pray tell her to abolish obnoxious and crushing taxes. Salt is People are dying for want of it. Tell her, pray, O Lord, that not a bough, not a twig, nor even a leaf is allowed to be felled or picke forest guard is after us like a dog, the ranger is after us like a tig bara sáheb before whom we are hauled up is certainly the god Yan Death). As there is no fuel, there is no cooking and no eating.
Lord, how then are we to live? May it please your Lordship to Mother Queen Empress that the Protestant missionaries cause ha cities, towns and villages; they boldly denounce our gods, convert boys, increase bitter hatred against each other, and thus cause sever smart in the midst of the whole Indian nation. They may preach churches, within their compounds, but not on thoroughfares defen policemen. You have tried to do what a single man could do. W thank you for your sincere motives and good intentions. We high of the reforms you have been bold enough to carry out. But y not over when you leave our shores. You have been a staunch of our rights and liberties. Do you prove so ever after, bearing in m you have yet to do much for us. We have no champion, no voice, no we are deaf and dumb masses. Eurasians and Anglo-Indians are bred us. They eat, they sleep, they earn their livelihood along with us. I invade our rights with impunity, treat us as slaves, set aside the promi tained in the glorious Proclamation of 1858 as if it were a waste paper their opinion on the authority of men like Sir James Stephen, depri our ancestral lands and create discontent and discord where concord a piness prevailed in the days of Elphinstone, Bentinck and Canning.

Comments on Lord Ripon's speech at the Town Hall, Bombay.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 21st December says:—To us perl
most valuable part of Lord Ripon's addres Town Hall was his exhortation to educated gentlemen for the better education of their
That brief but touching appeal could be ex almost indefinitely. But Lord Ripon is over-scrupulous in dealing w somewhat delicate problem. However he said as much as could be sai the question on such an occasion; and it is very far indeed from our in to add one word of blame to that expression of generous self-reproach :— been able to do much less than I should have liked." We can hardl with his Lordship when he says "Government can do little, you can do It is true that the people can and ought to do much. But if for one re another individuals fail to do their duty fully, it becomes all the more ne for the State to supplement their efforts and lend them the prestige moral support. Female education is the greatest want of the Without it the education of boys may do harm rather than good to th of social progress. From what we have seen of it reform in India s mean little more than the advancement of the dominant sex. This the State is bound to equalize the spread of education, so equally to bute it between the sexes as to lead gradually to the growth of a natio to enjoy and exercise the privileges of civilised life.

Does not approve of the measures taken by the people of India to honour Lord Ripon on the occasion of his departure from India.

The Arunodayă (18) of the 21st December does not approve measures taken by the generality of the p India to honour Lord Ripon on the occasio departure from India, and says that beyond ex
a desire to do a good many things he h
nothing to deserve the high encomium that h bestowed on him and the extraordinary rega sympathy that have been shown him.

Approves of the appointment of Lord Reay to the Governorship of Bombay.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 21st December says:—As regard Reay Bombay ought to be very thankful Premier for his appointment. He is a man and character. He is comparatively young of a noble family, is very well connected and e exceptionally good position. Lord Reay will be an ornament to Bomba than in the conventional sense of the term. He takes the warmest in education, not the sort of interest that generally ends in suet dumpli weak tea at evening parties, or in vague platitudes which have such a c the reformers of India, but a real abiding interest which will do and suf thing and at all times for the cause at stake. Bombay is really luck present ruler is personally a decided improvement upon his clever pred
His successor will, we trust, be a still greater improvement upon Si
He has everything in his favour and Mr. Lionel Ashburner is gone, t be praised! No more of Game Bill and Mhowra Bill for Bombay.
we undertake to predict that if Messrs. Peile and Melvill will speak out "dumb millions" or even listen to their half-articulate cries, we shall forest and the ábkári laws set right. Have the officials any idea disastrous effect on the masses of the working of these legalised intru torture? [The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 21st December, the Indu
(10) of the 22nd December, the Gujaráti (92), the Kaiser-i-Hind (99)
Yajdán Parast (121) of the 21st December express approval of the app of Lord Reay to the Governorship of Bombay. The Gujaráti however that neither Mr. Gibbs nor Mr. Hope was nominated to the Governorsh

Comments on the resolution issued by the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal regarding the presentation of memorials and petitions to Government.

The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 21st December says:—The Lieut.- ernor of Bengal has promulgated certain new for regulating the presentation of memorials and tions to Government. The effect of the rules wil to stop the direct presentation of memorials to Gov ment by representative associations excepting bo like the British Indian Association, the Plant Association, &c. We confess that there is much reason on the side of the co now proposed for adoption by the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal, which will p ably be imitated by the other Provincial Governments. But we are not q sure whether it will prove universally acceptable to the people. Those at l who are in favour of the existence of popular representative associations on ground that they are necessary for the proper management of local affairs and furnishing information to Government with a view to obtain redress in resp of inconveniences and injuries to which the people of remote districts may subject owing to the careless or arbitrary proceedings of the authorities represe ing local boards or Government will hesitate to accept the new rules with strong misgivings. The way to get over the objections which these peo might urge on the score of fear lest any memorials should purposely be dela in transmission by the local boards or Government officers concerned would to provide by strict orders that no time should be lost in forwarding memor to their destination with the necessary explanation by the local board, district officer, or the commissioner concerned, and that no action should taken to give practical effect to such proceedings or measures as may have b objected to in the memorial except in cases relating to state policy or the saf of the public. Such provisions will tend to disarm all objections to the rules and their trial will be watched with much interest by the public. If t are found to fairly answer the purpose for which they are intended by his Hon the Lieut.-Governor they will deserve to be adopted by the Governments of other presidencies. [The Rást Goftár (108) of the 21st and the Bombay Samác (81) of the 23rd December express disapproval of the resolution, say that unne sary delay will be caused in bringing representations made by public asso tions to the notice of Government and that municipalities will have to discha a duty which is quite out of their line of business. The resolution sh therefore be cancelled. The Samáchár adds that if the Bengal Governm does not withdraw the resolution of its own accord Lord Dufferin ough interfere.]

Expresses satisfaction with the selection of Messrs. J. Nugent and P. M. Mehta for the title of C.I.E.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 23rd December says:—We hear on g authority that Mr. J. Nugent, Secretary to the ernment of Bombay, and Mr. Phirojshah Merw Mehta are to receive the title of Companion o Indian Empire on the occasion of the anniversar the assumption of the title of "Kaisar-i-Hind" by Queen. No one can say a word against the selection of the gentlemen for honour. The public will not fail to congratulate the Government of Sir Ja Fergusson on thus recognising the services of an independent and benevo citizen like Mr. Mehta. Every educated Native will think himself honou thereby, for Mr. Mehta is a bright gem amongst educated Natives. But we l that the list of new Companions of the Indian Empire will also contain names of Messrs. Dinshájí Máneckji Petit and Dádábhái Navroji. injustice which has been hitherto done to these gentlemen should no longe left unredressed.

Makes suggestions in connection with the failure of crops in the Sholápur, Ahmednagar and Kaládgi districts.

The Din Bandhu (6) of the 21st December says:—This year there general complaint about damage to crops by unsea able and insufficient rainfall. Wheat, gram and jo are badly in need of more rain. Apprehensions entertained that if rain does not fall in a week or night more the famine of 1877 will be repeated. nearly a month past great difficulty has been experienced in procuring fo for cattle. The Collector of Kaládgi has ordered the Mámlatdárs to mak forests in the district available for grazing purposes, and the adoptio similar measures in the Sholápur and Ahmednagar districts would go a way in protecting cattle. If rain does not fall agriculturists and l classes will be reduced to a state of starvation. It is therefore neces some relief works should be opened to enable them to earn their li

We suggest that Government should call for a detailed report on the p of crops in the Sholápur, Ahmednagar, Bijápur and other districts an take the necessary measures after due consideration. There should not difficulty in meeting this contingency by drawing upon the Famine I Fund, but all depends upon how far the authorities realize the gravit situation. [A correspondent of the Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 22nd D writing from Karmála in the Sholápur District complains of failure of c want of sufficient rain and of scarcity of water for drinking purposes.]

Suggests that the number of Presidency Magistrates in the city of Bombay should be increased to five.

The same newspaper complains that the number of Presidency Magistrates is not s for the requirements of the public of the Bombay and suggests that the number sh increased to five.

Requests the Bombay Government to give greater publicity through the medium of the Native press to its desire to purchase articles of Indian manufacture for use in Government offices.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 22nd December, in noticing the ment resolution on the annual report of the Sta
Department of this presidency for 1883-84,
Government quote the opinion of the Superin
of Stationery that many articles of Native m
ture will in a short time take the place of imported from Europe. We wish for the Government revenues and the promotion o genous industries that such may be the case. But we cannot now Government for not encouraging Native artizans. The anxiety shown James Fergusson in this matter is creditable to him and he will lay the under further obligations by giving through the medium of the Nativ greater publicity to this noble desire than has been the case hitherto.

Complains of delay in the review by the Army Sanitary Commissioner of the report of the Sanitary Commissioner for the Government of Bombay.

The same newspaper says:—The last issue of the Bombay Gov
Gazette contains the review by the Army S
Commissioner of the report of the Sanitary C
sioner for the Government of Bombay for t 1882. Though it is a very useful essay an valuable suggestions it is to be regretted should have been published after the report Sanitary Commissioner for the succeeding y been out. It therefore loses much of its importance. The Army S Commission may have much to do, but at any rate the review oug published within six months of the publication of the report so that the S Commissioner may have an opportunity to attend to the suggestions it or to give his remarks on those suggestions in his next report.

Requests Government to publish all the papers connected with the cancellation of the appointment of Dr. Prabhákar as Honorary Surgeon, Cowasji Jehangir Opthalmic Hospital.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 23rd December says:—It is notified last issue of the Bombay Government Gazette t appointment of Dr. Prabhákar as Honorary S Cowasji Jehangir Opthalmic Hospital, has be celled with effect from the 17th December notification does not specify the reasons for ca
the appointment. It does not state what mis Dr. Prabhákar was guilty of or what faults we with his work. It also does not state whether this action has been ta the Government of Sir James Fergusson on the recommendation of the mic Surgeon or that of the Surgeon-General. It is very surprising fault was found with Dr. Prabhákar in the course of the last 20 mo that he should now suddenly be found fault with. It is necessary for t of justice that an explanation should be forthcoming in this matter.
quest Sir James Fergusson to publish all the papers connected with t with a view to let the public judge for themselves. No injury will be Dr. Prabhákar by the publication of the papers, as his appointment has been cancelled. We beg leave to remind Sir James Fergusson that he eve of his retirement from office and that even a single act of injustice a time will mar many of his virtuous deeds.

Observes that the 2nd Bombay Grenadier Regiment has been on active service for a long time and recommends its removal from Quetta to Ahmedabad by rail.

A correspondent of the Military Instructor (129) of the 21st D who appears to belong to the 2nd Bombay dier Regiment now serving with the Zob Va
pedition, observes that for the last seven y regiment has been on the march from one another, gives the particulars of the services pe
by the regiment since 1879, says that the h
the men has been much affected by hard and expresses a hope that the authorities will order the removal of the r to Ahmedabad by railway and allow it to enjoy peace and quiet f time.

Comments in connection with the scheme for the employment of old and worn out Native soldiers.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 21st December says:—The sch taking old and worn out sepoys into civil em
on its fair trial now, and it is sanguinely hop
it will ultimately prove a success. We hearti pathize with the movement; but if the present is meant to hold out an inducement to the free restricted enlistment of recruits in the army, then we have our doubts success. Compared with European soldiers in respect of the rates of pay provision for physical comforts the Native soldier is very badly off, and perhaps the one and only reason why people do not take kindly to service. This point has at different times been placed before the aut but unfortunately for the Native sepoy it does not seem to have attrac attention. We look upon the new scheme as a half-measure not likel vance the object aimed at. To popularize enlistment among people a reform in respect of the rate of his salary and his future prospects has a necessity, and we hope the present Commander-in-Chief will take a view of this question rather than be satisfied with the new scheme.

Supports the prayer of the inhabitants of the villages of Manori, Gorái, Utan and Dungri of the Salsette Táluka for the construction of a bridge over the river running between Borwáli and Gorái.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (99) of the 21st December, in an article head appeal to the Collector of Thána," supports tion of the inhabitants of the Manori, Gorái, U Dungri villages of Salsette for the construc bridge over the river that runs between Bor Gorái, and says:—It is said that the petitio some time ago sent a petition to the Supreme ment urging the necessity of constructing the in question. The Supreme Government ordered a survey to be mad order was carried out but nothing further has been done. Governmen to comply with the prayer of the petitioners, for the construction of th will not only benefit the commercial community but Government as toll may be levied on articles carried over the bridge and Governm thereby be able to recoup the expenditure of construction. We hope Collector of Thána will grant the prayer of the petitioners.

Does not approve of the rumoured transfer of the customs house at Bilimora to the village of Bháth.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (81) of the 24th Decemb out the inadvisability of removing the custom at Bilimora to Bháth, which according to ru in contemplation, and says:—Bháth is a sma inhabited by fishermen, is about seven mi
Bilimora and is not connected by a metall
Access to the village of Bháth is so very difficult that if the rumour pro merchants will be put to much inconvenience. They will then send the by rail instead of by sea. The port of Bilimora will lose its importa Government will not be benefited by the contemplated measure. It is to that the Customs Collector of Surat, with whom this idea has origina abstain from taking this hasty step. The local merchants ought to pet Collector on the subject. They ought also at the same time to peti Gáikwád of Baroda to interfere in the matter.

Points out the necessity of improving the postal arrangements in Sind.

The Sind Times (5) of the 23rd December says:—It would hav bright idea to have memorialized Lord Duffer he was in Bombay upon the miserable postal a ments just now obtaining in this part of th dency, but the state of somnolence into wh Karáchi Chamber of Commerce appears to have passed after its supreme in the audience chamber of Sir James Fergusson during his brief stay Government House of Karáchi precludes the possibility of such activity it is not the interests of the Chamber of Commerce alone that suffer disgraceful postal arrangements between Bombay and Karáchi. We ha so long accustomed to receive our letters and papers only twice a week t hope of hearing from the capital of Western India everyd\y appears an e gant one. And yet the distance is not at all very great. Nothing easier than to establish a daily postal communication between Bomb what is fast becoming the second city of the presidency. Sir James Fer has perhaps done quite enough for Karáchi, and it is needless to mak further demands upon him since his time is almost up. But when Lor takes up the reins of office it should be the first duty of every public b Karáchi to point out to the new Governor that as regards postal arrang the third or at least the fourth seaport of India is no better off th Andaman Islands and that if no improvement is possible the old o things may be restored.

Complaint against the change recently made in the working hours of telegraph offices.

Referring to the change recently effected by the Director General working hours of telegraph offices, the Bakul (the 21st December complains of the inconve that is likely to be caused to the servants of th graph Department and also to those of the Department to which it is in contemplation to t the work of telegraphs, and points out the necessity of either shorteni hours of work or of increasing the emoluments of the employés.

Education.

Some suggestions to Sir James Fergusson regarding the employment of educated Natives.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 26th December, in noticing th number of students who have this year pas Matriculation Examination of the Bombay Uni and alluding to the general cry of want of emplo says:—Sir James Fergusson has made some for the spread of education. He ought als something for the employment of educated Natives. Many young m willing to receive agricultural education, but they are deterred from so d the example of those who have received similar instruction but who comp want of encouragement. If Sir James Fergusson were to issue a resolution ing that Government would give free of charge for a certain period plots in villages for cultivation to those who would study in the agricultural tions recognised by Government, that a certain amount of money would to them by Government at a certain rate of interest and that they w provided with agricultural implements, hundreds of young men woul forward within a decade to take to this pursuit. Thousands of acres of was would thus be brought under cultivation and the Government revenu be permanently increased. The money advanced to them will not go and the agriculturists will be encouraged to follow civilised methods of the land. Such a procedure on the part of Sir James will, we venture be the best work done by him during his career as Governor of this pres It is to be hoped that Sir James will pay due attention to this sug The Government should also do something for the employment of e Natives in Government offices on a larger scale than at present. It will great blessing on educated Native youths by issuing a circular directi vacancies in Government offices shall hereafter be filled up as much as pos the employment of Natives who have passed University examinations does not Sir James Fergusson follow in the footsteps of the noble Lord Rip order the employment of clerks after subjecting them to a competitive e tion? [The same newspaper of the 27th December requests Government to educated Natives in the Indian Marine Department, and says that a are not appointed to posts higher than that of boatswain, which car highest a monthly salary of Rs. 37 only, educated Native youths hesit this service unless better prospects are held out to them.]

Points out the necessity of taking steps to improve the prospects of school masters,

A correspondent of the Native Opinion (11) of the 21st December, to bring to the notice of Government the def present system of education, observes:— education is the main stay of all public i and the maintenance of training colleges i keeping with this view. The recipients of the instruction imparted in thes are also fulfilling the expectations formed of them in a great measu qualifying phrase "in a great measure" is used advisedly because the with which teachers in public schools begin their work are never sust want of frequent promotion in service. As a safeguard against such un consequences the Honourable J. B. Peile, late Director of Public Ins inauguarated the system of granting special allowances to school maste was attended with very good results in its first stages. Gradually, how the allowance rules were subjected to a thousand and one excepti became nearly useless. The simultaneous effects of this state of thi been want of zeal on the part of school masters and detriment to the education. But this is not all. The number of teachers at present turn the training colleges is not enough for the growing requirements of th going public. Such teachers are available only for teaching the highe of primary schools which comprise about one-third of the total number of while the remaining two-thirds are committed to the care of persons v studied up to the Maráthi sixth standard and who receive the re salaries varying from 3 to 8 rupees per mensem! Can such tea expected to lay a firm foundation of true education? Is not the that is raised on such frail basis likely to tumble down after a very sh That a man who is expected to lay the foundation of education shoul Rs. 3, while a Pattáwála is allowed Rs. 8 per mensem! Is this encou to education or mockery? The prospects of school masters are very li uncertain, and the majority of them are obliged to end their care maximum salary of Rs. 25. What a deplorable state of things! Govern the authorities of the Educational Department have thoroughly blig prospects of a class of people whose mental powers are taxed to the ut may be argued that Government pay Rs. 3 and 4 to school masters bec are available on such low remuneration. This is quite true, and so l aggrieved party do not raise their voice we have no desire to espouse th But their want of zeal is telling very horribly on the cause of educat country and therefore we ask for redress at the hands of Governn conclusion we request Government to transfer old and experienc masters to places in the Revenue, Judicial, A'bkári and Forest departm to admit new and zealous men to their posts. If however the authorit Educational Department are opposed to this proposal they should try the interests of their old and disappointed servants by creating fat app in their own department.

Comments on the failure of the Gujarát College to pass a single student at the last First B.A. Examination of the Bombay University.

The Gujarát Mitră (72) of the 21st December says:—The Gujará has not succeeded in passing a single stu year in the First B.A. Examination. W blame for this result? We admit that Mr. Principal of the College, is a learned ma the students must be dull or Mr. Best mu devoting his entire energies and time to his his system of imparting knowledge must be defective. All the studen be dull and therefore for the present we conclude that Mr. Best's imparting instruction is unsatisfactory. The people of Ahmedabad request Government to transfer Mr. Best to some other place and t a man like Mr. Jamshedji Dalál in his stead. [The Nyáyă Dars of the 22nd December says:—We hear that Mr. Best on one or two applied for an increase to his salary on the ground that the duties of had become more laborious than when the College was first establish request has not been allowed and it may be inferred that he has l in his work. We think that this is one of the causes why not a sin from the Gujarát College has passed the First B.A. Examinatio

We think that Mr. Best should either be allowed to retire on pensio be transferred to some other place.]

Railways.

Complains of the inconvenience caused to passengers owing to the absence of lights in third class carriages on the Sind Railway.

A correspondent of the Sind Sudhár (131) of the 13th Decembe
of the inconvenience caused to passengers Railway owing to the absence of lights in carriages, and observes:—It is proper t arrangements should be made to protect from being robbed. Railway servants d care to see whether there is sufficient ligh carriages. You will be kind enough to point out to the railway s necessity of examining all the carriages at every station and of seei any of them is in need of a light. If this suggestion is acted up gers will be greatly benefited. It is a pity that although very few p into the first or second classes these classes are provided with tw lamps each, while only one lamp is provided for a third class carr is full of passengers.

Municipalities.

Complains of the insanitary condition of the town of Sehwan in Sind.

A correspondent of the Muin-ul-Islám (130) of the 12th Decemb
from Sehwan says:—The Mukhtiárkar of t
very particular about the cleanliness of th
the people appear to be bent upon keepin
There is no outlet for filthy water. All d is thrown in courtyards in front of houses, whence it finds its wa streets where it is allowed to stagnate. The bad smell which this w out is injurious to the health of the occupants of neighbouring hous
as to that of passers by. It would be well if, as in other towns, system were introduced here at the cost of municipal funds. The stre not on the same level throughout; in some parts they are high, in The old and the weak find it very difficult to pass through these stre ally at night time. They are always in fear of falling down. Mun missioners would do well to remove this inconvenience. People of depend solely on the Aral for their water supply both during su winter. In the hot months the water of the Indus finds its way int and the water consequently rises. In these months the water is ve drink, but during the cold season the stream is so very low that it ca without the aid of a boat. During these months water changes its becomes tasteless. It is very injurious to health to drink this wa time of the year. The coldness of the weather and the prevalen added to the injurious state of the water prove prejudicial to the he public. The Pancháyat and the municipal commissioners will con boon on the public if they order one or two wells to be dug near t on one of the several pieces of land lying useless in the town.

Berár Affairs.

Makes certain suggestions for the readjustment of the salaries of the high schools and inspecting staffs in Berár.

In an article headed "Assistants to Deputy Educational In Berár," the Pramod Sindhu (13) of the 22
ber says:—We hear that about 400 ne schools are to be opened in Berár and tha are to be given to the Deputy Educational where necessary in order to inspect the n
We are further told that as an experimental measure such assistan at first given to the Deputy Educational Inspectors of Amráoti and A are much advanced in point of education and consequently have a la of schools in each. From the recent appointment to the post of the Inspector it may be inferred that the inspecting staff and the teachi considered two separate bodies so long as men qualified by their i hard work are to be found in the respective lines. This d gether a bad one, but to avoid dissatisfaction among t

we think some changes must be made in the present syst ment of Educational Inspector is the highest goal to an i the appointment of head master of a high school to a mem
staff. And if it is desirable that each and every memb should put his heart and soul into the noble but onerous taken, we are of opinion that the highest object of amb lines should be equally attractive. The two high schools i be of two grades; the salary of the head master of the 1 should rise from Rs. 350 to Rs. 500 and of that of the 2n from Rs. 250 to Rs. 300. The salaries of the assisting sta raised a little in proportion. If such changes are not e probable that competent, hard-working and promising you attracted to the department, and we are afraid that m will feel the want of encouragement. It may be conf functionaries are entrusted with a charge which is as sponsible as that of an extra Assistant Commissioner in and there is no reason why the former should not get as m their labour as the latter. So much for the high schools.
say as regards the Anglo-Vernacular schools, as they together. But we want to show how they should be schools. As a general rule the head master of a first gra school should be competent to hold a higher appointment
now his goal of ambition was the appointment of Deputy I but in future according to our scheme that goal should be second assistant of a high school. In fact these schools high schools in respect of teachers as they are in re assistants to Deputy Educational Inspectors will be th Deputy Educational Inspectorships as they will have rece in inspection and will have acquired experience. In fact t will be the same as those of Deputy Educational Inspecto scale. We therefore propose that there should be thre Deputy Inspectors—1st grade drawing a salary of Rs.
grade of Rs. 75, and 3rd grade of Rs. 60. In the experim plated by the department one assistant should be placed the other in the second. Thus an Assistant Deputy Educ mencing with Rs. 60 or 75 may aspire to rise at least time by steady work and perseverance. He will have gradual progress. Thus we have set forth our schem aware will entail additional expenditure upon the Gover to the good that will result from this arrangement the in is trifling. And as provincial revenue has been, or is ab great extent of the charges on account of primary educat ment will not hesitate to spend a small amount from the
of higher education.

RAOJI BHA
Acting Report

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
29th December 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Politics and the Public Administration—

Administration of India:
  Request to Lord Dufferin to treat Anglo-Indians with contempt and accord fair treatment to Natives 3
  Some suggestions for the consideration of Lord Dufferin ... 5
Appointments: Approval of the appointment of Lord Reay to the Governorship of Bombay 8
Bridge over the river running between Borwáli and Gorái: Support to the prayer of the inhabitants of the villages of Manori, Gorái, Utan and Dongri of the Salsette Táluka for the construction of a — ... 11
Customs house at Bilimora: Disapproval of the rumoured transfer of the — to the village of Bháth 11
Employment of old and worn out Native soldiers: Comments in connection with the scheme for the— 11
Failure of crops: Suggestions in connection with the — in the Sholápur, Ahmednagar and Kaládgi districts 9
Grievances of the people of India: Request to Lord Ripon to represent to the Queen-Empress the— 7
Honorary Surgeons: Request to Government to publish all the papers connected with the cancellation of the appointment of Dr. Prabhákar as Honorary Surgeon, Cowasji Jehangir Opthalmic Hospital ... 10
Judicial matters: Suggestion that the number of Presidency Magistrates in the city of Bombay should be increased to five 10
Lord Dufferin's visit to a village in the Khándesh District: Comments on — on his way to Calcutta 5
Lord Ripon's speech at the Town Hall: Comments on —, Bombay ... 8
Memorials and petitions to Government: Comments on the resolution issued by the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal regarding the presentation of— 9
Military movements: Observation that the 2nd Bombay Grenadier Regiment has been on active service for a long time and recommendation for its removal from Quetta to Ahmedabad by rail 11
Mutual connection between England and her Indian Empire: Comments in connection with the paper on the — read by Sir Orfeur Cavenagh before the East India Association 4
Postal matters: Necessity of improving the postal arrangements in Sind.. 12
Public honours:
  Comments in connection with the circumstance that Government offices were not allowed a half holiday on Thursday and Saturday for witnessing the demonstrations in honour of Lord Ripon. 7
  Comments in connection with the public demonstrations in Bombay in honour of Lord Ripon 5
  Comments on the conduct of Sir James Fergusson in connection with the public demonstrations in Bombay in honour of Lord Ripon.. 6
  Disapproval of the conduct of the European officer who ordered the removal of the flags with which the High Court was decorated during Lord Ripon's stay in Bombay 7
  Disapproval of the measures taken by the people of India to honour Lord Ripon on the occasion of his departure from India ... 8
  Expression of opinion that Sir James Fergusson deserves the title of K.C.S.I., which it is understood will be conferred on him for his Indian services 4 Expression of satisfaction with the selection of Messrs. J. Nugent and P. M. Mehta for the title of C.I.E... 9 Report of the Sanitary Commissioner for the Government of Bombay:
  Complaint regarding the delay in the review by the Army Sanitary Commissioner of the— 10
Stores: Request to the Bombay Government to give greater publicity through the medium of the Native press to its desire to purchase articles of Indian manufacture for use in Government offices ... 10
Telegraph offices: Complaint against the change recently made in the working hours of—... 12

PART II.—Education—

- Employment of educated Natives: Suggestions to Sir James regarding the— ... ...
- Gujarát College, Ahmedabad: Comments on the failure of the a single student at the last First B.A. Examination of th University ... ...
- School masters: Necessity of taking steps to improve the prosp

PART III.—Railways—

- Sind Railway: Complaint regarding the inconvenience cause engers by the absence of lights in third class carriages on

PART IV.—Municipalities—

- Sehwán: Complaint regarding the insanitary condition of of — in Sind ... ...

PART V.—Berár Affairs—

- Salaries: Suggestion for the readjustment of the — of the hi and inspecting staffs in Berár ... ...

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY AND RECORDS
1 2 3 4 5 6
Copyright photograph - not to be reproduced photographically without permission of the India Office Library and Records
Reference
~~IOL~~ IOR L/R/5/139